Important from the Mississippi.—Evacuation of Fort Wright.—Chicago, June 6.—Despatches from Cairo state that the steamer Shanghae had arrived from the fleet. At the time she left the flames were breaking out in the barracks of Fort Wright, and the gunboats had dropped down the river. The steamer De Soto was expected to arrive this afternoon with full particulars

Cairo, June 6.—Fort Wright has been evacuated by the rebels.

Our forces occupy the fort.

The enemy burnt everything

A number of guns were found Large mortars had been destroyed.

The gunboats have passed Fort Randolph.

General Negley's Victory at Chattanooga, and its Importance.—General Mitchel has been making another of his lightning dashes from his base line in North Alabama. On this occasion the expedition was intrusted to General Negley, who pursued the enemy from Winchester, the County seat of Franklin county, in South Tennessee, through Jasper, the county seat of Marion, to Chattanooga, the eastern terminus of the Memphis and Charleston railroad. At this latter point, General Negley defeated and utterly routed the rebels, capturing their wagons, baggage, ammunition and supplies.

Destruction of the Rebel Fleet.—Flag Officer C. H. Davis, on Friday last, engaged the rebel fleet, comprising eight rams and gunboats, near Memphis, and in ninety minutes after the first gun was fired, had succeeded in sinking or capturing every vessel of the enemy save one, which, by superior speed was enabled to escape our flotilla, and temporarily prolong its existence. After the engagement, the Mayor of Memphis surrendered the city to our gallant naval commander

Hon Reverdy Johnson It is now positively stated that the Hon Reverdy Johnson, of Baltimore, will go to New Orleans at an early day upon a Government mission

Jackson's Rebel Forces Dispersed.—Only Five Thousand Remaining From General Shields' division state that a scouting party crossed the river at the Columbia Bridge, and went to New Market, [illegible] and had to retreat through there three days before

Jackson's army had been reduced to about five thousand men the remainder having deserted through the mountains to their homes

General Fremont's army had followed them all the way, capturing prisoners, wagons and supplies

A Sharp Fight with Jackson at Harrisonburg, Va.—A telegram, dated Harrisonburg, Va., June 6th, brings information of a sharp conflict near that place, on Friday last, between a portion of General Fremont's forces and a portion of Jackson's retreating army. A body of our cavalry, under Colonel Wyndham, was pushed out on a reconnoissance four miles beyond the town, but went three miles further than ordered, fell into an ambush, and were driven back. General Bayard, with a detachment of the "Kane," or Bucktail Rifles, and the First Pennsylvania Cavalry and a brigade composed of the Eighth and Sixteenth Virginia, went forward to Wyndham's support, and drove a body of the enemy from their position, capturing their camp and stores. Subsequently the Bucktails, one hundred and twenty-five in number, under their gallant Colonel, Thomas L. Kane, of this city, were confronted in the woods by four regiments of infantry and cavalry, and suffered severely, Colonel Kane being wounded and taken prisoner. The whole affair was characterized by the most gallant fighting by the national troops, and the rebels were ultimately driven back

Besides Colonel Kane, Colonel Wyndham was also captured by the rebels. Captains Haines, and Shellmire and Charles are missing Captain Taylor was wounded and captured.

Jackson's train was on the road in confusion, and he had halted his column, it was supposed, for battle. What has taken place since we are not yet informed.

More Good News from General Pope.—The breaking up of Beauregard's army still continues, and so does the advance of Pope and Beall into Mississippi. It is believed that twenty thousand deserters have abandoned the rebels since the fall of Corinth, and the people on the line of their retreat say that Beauregard cannot reach Columbus, Mississippi, with more than one-half his late force. The deserters are from the Kentucky, Tennessee and Arkansas regiments; thus the re-conquest of those States is already bearing its precious fruit in breaking down the rebellion in the Southwestern States.

All the stations on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad from Corinth to Guntown, a stretch of thirty-six miles, are in possession of the National troops. The whole country is full of soldiers, returning to Kentucky and Tennessee, and some of those first captured are ready and anxious to return to their allegiance.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

BOARDING

IN BROOKLYN.

MRS. S. PLANT (formerly Richardson) respectfully announces that she has opened a first-class BOARDING & LODGING HOUSE at No. 97 HIGH STREET, Brooklyn—where she is prepared to accommodate the public on the most reasonable terms

Her house being located in a very pleasant part of the city, and within five minutes' walk of Fulton Ferry, is made thus a very desirable and convenient place.

PERRY & FITZGERALD'S

PROCESS FOR MAKING LIGHT, NUTRITIOUS, AND UNADULTERATED BREAD, WITHOUT FERMENTATION.

The new process of bread making, patented by Perry & Fitzgerald, removes all the obstacles which have hitherto rendered it impossible to manufacture perfectly pure, sweet, and nutritious bread The entire process is performed by mechanical means, and is eminently cleanly

The process consists in mixing the flour in a closed vessel, and the application of pure carbonic gas, under pressure, by which the dough mass is made thoroughly light, and ready to be discharged into pans, for baking, in the brief space of fifteen or twenty minutes. The "charge" is nearly 200 pounds, and each machine may repeat the operation, in all its details, from the putting in of the flour to the discharging of the dough, in from twenty five to forty minutes

The invention of Perry & Fitzgerald effects a revolution in the preparation of bread, by establishing a system of wholesale manufacture not subject to the vicissitudes and evils of human action, but exact and certain in its results Because, by the substitution of mechanical for manual labor, and in the superior value of the article produced, it promises large profits upon the capital employed It throws such improvement of capital, as well as the protection afforded by the patent, gives adequate security against competition. But whilst preventing undue competition it preserves none of the evils of a monopoly, because it leaves the consumer at all times in possession of his former means of supply, to be resorted to, should the monopoly become prejudicial

The application of pure carbonic acid gas, under pressure, to a mechanically kneaded dough-mass, as in the invention of Perry & Fitzgerald, did not occur to Dr Dye though he came to have had a clear foreknowledge of the importance of the artificial use of the gas, since he stated, by-the-by, that "if water, highly impregnated with carbonic acid gas, be used for kneading the dough, the resulting bread will be somewhat spongy Could a light article," he continues, "be produced in this way, then, as the sugar would remain undecomposed, the bread would be so much the sweeter and more nourishing."

What, to Dr. Dye, was evidently a closely comprehended chemical truth, has been practically developed by the brilliant invention of Perry & Fitzgerald. Precisely will bread their means to grateful remembrance, as among the most eminent benefactors of mankind.

IT IS WHOLESOME.—Being free from the deleterious substances which are the product of fermentation, or chemical reaction, by the old modes the bread made by the New Process is easy of digestion, and agrees with the most delicate stomach. "To dyspeptics," says Dr Cox, Jate of the N. Y. Medical College, "it will be invaluable, as they will be able to use it when the fermented manufactured bread has been found to have greatly failed as an article of diet." See the London Medical Times and Gazette:—

"Since the introduction of the new unfermented bread there have already been received from members of the medical profession, who have recommended it in their practice, as well as from non-professional sources, accounts of the really astonishing results that have followed its use in cases of deranged digestion and constipation. Many persons have reported their recovery in a few days after years of suffering and misery by the simple use of the bread as a diet Many cases have also been reported by medical men of position, in which certain distressing forms of dyspepsia, which had remained intractable under every kind of treatment have yielded as if by magic almost immediately after adopting the use of the unfermented bread

"The beneficial effects of the new bread are attributable to two causes. The one to the absence of the prejudicial matters imparted to ordinary bread by the process of fermentation, and the other to the presence in the bread, unchanged, of those elements which are the essential agents of digestion and assimilation."

The most eminent members of the medical profession, both in Great Britain and in the United States, not only speak in the highest terms of the ease with which it is digested and of its rich, nourishing qualities, but especially of its peculiar palatableness, and wonderful keeping properties. The absence of acidity and other strong flavors, which, to a greater or less degree, are characteristic of fermented bread, renders the new bread peculiarly desirable to the taste

V. ITS ECONOMY AND ECONOMY.—By the use of mechanical means, instead of manual labor, a barrel of flour is converted into baked loaves in forty-five minutes; whereas, by the ordinary process, four or five hours are occupied in the formation of the "sponge," and a further time in kneading, rolling, and baking the dough

"The cheapness of the new description of bread," says a correspondent of the Journal of the Society of Arts, "renders it an article peculiarly suitable to be prepared and supplied by a public company. And since the new process removes all the mechanical manœuvres, and the expense of the machinery gives a comparative monopoly, the supply of bread to places of resort in the same category with gas, water, or other articles of prime necessity"

VAN RIPER & CAMP,

EXCLUSIVE MANUFACTURERS,

Corner of Broad and Buttonwood Streets,

PHILADELPHIA.

ITS SUPERIORITY.—The superiority of unfermented bread to by no means new. Dr Cullen, who wrote more than seventy years ago says:

"In Scotland, nine tenths of the lower class of people, and that in the greater part of the whole, live upon unfermented bread, and unfermented farinaceous in other forms; and there are not a more healthy people anywhere to be found In the regions of Africa, and I have myself passed among them, I have had occasion to know this, and have hardly met with a disease, of any consequence, that I could impute to the use of unfermented farinaceous."

At a later period, Professor Thompson, of Glasgow, in his work on the "Food of Animals," after alluding to the facts referred to above by Dr Cullen, and other kindred facts, observes

"Such, then, being well-known evidence in favor of the wholesomeness of unfermented bread, it becomes important to discover in what respects it differs from fermented bread The result gained by this process (fermentation) may be considered to be merely the separation of the portion of which the loaf is composed, so as to render the same more readily divisible by the peristaltic organs of digestion. But, as this object is gained at a sacrifice of very considerable portion, it becomes a matter of interest to ascertain the amount of the loss sustained in the process"

The result of Professor Thompson's experiments showed a difference in favor of unfermented bread of nearly seven per cent. more than made by the ordinary process. In other words, there was a loss of nearly one sixteenth of the nutritive properties of the flour which, by the process of fermentation, was driven into the air and lost.

We come now to a more particular consideration of the superiority of the bread made without fermentation, or the use of chemical agents, over the bread made by the ordinary process. Although from what has already been said, this superiority appears in most vivid contrast, yet the public will be better satisfied to have the points stated specifically, for it only needs that the advantages secured by this method be clearly understood in order to its universal introduction to the manufacture of bread

I. ITS CLEANLINESS Instead of the dough being mixed by the naked hands or feet, the bread from the sifting of the flour to the completion of the baking, is not, and need not be, touched by any one. "One desideratum obtained in its manufacture," says Dr Willard Parker, "is its entire cleanliness" Says Dr Wetherby: "The process is not only purely chemical, but preeminently cleanly."

II. ITS PRESERVATION OF ALL THE NUTRITIVE PROPERTIES OF THE FLOUR.—As the raising of the dough is by the mechanical introduction of pure carbonic acid gas, under pressure, in a closed vessel, no moisture, it takes a perfect cast-iron or spongy texture. All the constituents of the flour remain wholly unchanged, while the process of raising bread by fermentation inevitably sacrifices some of them, as has been already shown

III. ITS UNIFORM CHARACTER.—Bread made by the New Process is uniformly light, sweet, and nutritious The conditions being simple, and not liable to variation, no failure can occur in always producing bread of the same quality as relative its moisture much longer than fermented bread, and may be eaten warm with impunity The process also insures a perfect freedom from all acidity, even in the hottest weather See the London Times:

"The objection made against sour bread, that it becomes dry sooner than sweet bread, is entirely removed by the use of the new bread, which remains moist for a much longer period than the ordinary bread, and is therefore more economical."

IV. ITS ECONOMY.—Being free from the deleterious substances which are the product of fermentation, or chemical reaction, by the old modes the bread made by the New Process is easy of digestion, and agrees with the most delicate stomach. "To dyspeptics," says Dr Cox, late of the N. Y. Medical College, "it will be invaluable, as they will be able to use it when the fermented manufactured bread has been found to have greatly failed as an article of diet." See the London Medical Times and Gazette:—

"Since the introduction of the new unfermented bread there have already been received from members of the medical profession, who have recommended it in their practice, as well as from non-professional sources, accounts of the really astonishing results that have followed its use in cases of deranged digestion and constipation. Many persons have reported their recovery in a few days after years of suffering and misery by the simple use of the bread as a diet Many cases have also been reported by medical men of position, in which certain distressing forms of dyspepsia, which had remained intractable under every kind of treatment have yielded as if by magic almost immediately after adopting the use of the unfermented bread.

"The beneficial effects of the new bread are attributable to two causes. The one to the absence of the prejudicial matters imparted to ordinary bread by the process of fermentation, and the other to the presence in the bread, unchanged, of those elements which are the essential agents of digestion and assimilation."

The most eminent members of the medical profession, both in Great Britain and in the United States, not only speak in the highest terms of the ease with which it is digested and of its rich, nourishing qualities, but especially of its peculiar palatableness, and wonderful keeping properties. The absence of acidity and other strong flavors, which, to a greater or less degree, are characteristic of fermented bread, renders the new bread peculiarly desirable to the taste

V. ITS ECONOMY AND ECONOMY.—By the use of mechanical means, instead of manual labor, a barrel of flour is converted into baked loaves in forty-five minutes; whereas, by the ordinary process, four or five hours are occupied in the formation of the "sponge," and a further time in kneading, rolling, and baking the dough

"The cheapness of the new description of bread," says a correspondent of the Journal of the Society of Arts, "renders it an article peculiarly suitable to be prepared and supplied by a public company. And since the new process removes all the mechanical manœuvres, and the expense of the machinery gives a comparative monopoly, the supply of bread to places of resort in the same category with gas, water, or other articles of prime necessity"

VAN RIPER & CAMP,

EXCLUSIVE MANUFACTURERS,

Corner of Broad and Buttonwood Streets,

PHILADELPHIA.

ITS SUPERIORITY.—The superiority of unfermented bread to by no means new. Dr Cullen, who wrote more than seventy years ago says:

"In Scotland, nine tenths of the lower class of people, and that in the greater part of the whole, live upon unfermented bread, and unfermented farinaceous in other forms; and there are not a more healthy people anywhere to be found In the regions of Africa, and I have myself passed among them, I have had occasion to know this, and have hardly met with a disease, of any consequence, that I could impute to the use of unfermented farinaceous."

At a later period, Professor Thompson, of Glasgow, in his work on the "Food of Animals," after alluding to the facts referred to above by Dr Cullen, and other kindred facts, observes

"Such, then, being well-known evidence in favor of the wholesomeness of unfermented bread, it becomes important to discover in what respects it differs from fermented bread The result gained by this process (fermentation) may be considered to be merely the separation of the portion of which the loaf is composed, so as to render the same more readily divisible by the peristaltic organs of digestion. But, as this object is gained at a sacrifice of very considerable portion, it becomes a matter of interest to ascertain the amount of the loss sustained in the process"

The result of Professor Thompson's experiments showed a difference in favor of unfermented bread of nearly seven per cent. more than made by the ordinary process. In other words, there was a loss of nearly one sixteenth of the nutritive properties of the flour which, by the process of fermentation, was driven into the air and lost.

We come now to a more particular consideration of the superiority of the bread made without fermentation, or the use of chemical agents, over the bread made by the ordinary process. Although from what has already been said, this superiority appears in most vivid contrast, yet the public will be better satisfied to have the points stated specifically, for it only needs that the advantages secured by this method be clearly understood in order to its universal introduction to the manufacture of bread

I. ITS CLEANLINESS Instead of the dough being mixed by the naked hands or feet, the bread from the sifting of the flour to the completion of the baking, is not, and need not be, touched by any one. "One desideratum obtained in its manufacture," says Dr Willard Parker, "is its entire cleanliness" Says Dr Wetherby: "The process is not only purely chemical, but preeminently cleanly."

II. ITS PRESERVATION OF ALL THE NUTRITIVE PROPERTIES OF THE FLOUR.—As the raising of the dough is by the mechanical introduction of pure carbonic acid gas, under pressure, in a closed vessel, no moisture, it takes a perfect cast-iron or spongy texture. All the constituents of the flour remain wholly unchanged, while the process of raising bread by fermentation inevitably sacrifices some of them, as has been already shown

III. ITS UNIFORM CHARACTER.—Bread made by the New Process is uniformly light, sweet, and nutritious The conditions being simple, and not liable to variation, no failure can occur in always producing bread of the same quality as relative its moisture much longer than fermented bread, and may be eaten warm with impunity The process also insures a perfect freedom from all acidity, even in the hottest weather See the London Times:

"The objectionable ropiness occasion of fermentation being avoided, the constituents of the flour are left both unchanged and unconstituted, the resulting loaf being absolutely pure."

THE YOUTH'S EVANGELIST

Is published twice every month and is prepared expressly for use in the Sabbath Schools of the United Presbyterian Church. It is printed on clear, white paper, and embellished with fine engravings in every number

Every number has a Psalm, or part of a Psalm, set to Music suitable for use in Sabbath Schools

THE TERMS ARE FOR PAYMENT, AS FOLLOWS

[illegible]

We have secured the services of a number of [illegible] when the first number will be issued [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

Advertisements.

THE DAUGHTERS OF HOPE GRAND UNION Temperance Society met, it being the thirteenth convention, April 10th, 1861. Representatives from Lodges are as follows

From Garnet Union No 4, D. of T.; from Phœnix Union, No. 8, D. of T.; from Northern Union, No. 16, D. of T.; Webb's Union, of Chambersburgh, Pa.; from Dr Blas' Union, of Carlisle, Pa.; from Mount Olive Union, No. 19, D. of T.; from Vanbrackle Union, No 55, D. of T., of Norristown, Pa

Officers installed to their several positions are as follows

Grand P., Sister Bennet; Grand Associate, Sister Borrin; Grand Treasurer, Sister Faucett; Grand Conductress, C. Thompson; Grand Sentinel, A. E. Dukhart, Grand Chaplain, Sister Hall

G. P. P., Sister E. Bennett, G. P. P. Sister Associate, " " E. Bowen, " " J. P. Black, " " M. M. Bundy, " " E. A. Clark, " " A. Newman, " " White, " " S. Davis, " " S. Hall.

THE DAUGHTERS OF CORNISH SOCIETY

The STATED QUARTERLY MEETINGS of the Society are held on the first Wednesdays of February, May August, and November

The meetings of the Board are held on the Wednesday previous to the regular stated meetings of the society.

Mrs. SARAH CARTER, President.

Mr. L. R. SEYMOUR, Sec'y.

THE BOOK DEPOSITORY OF THE AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH, No. 619 Pine Street, PHILADELPHIA.

We keep on hand, in connexion with our other books, Sabbath School books of various kinds, Question Books, Catechisms, Nos. 1, 2, and 3. We have a good assortment of such books as are generally used in the Public Schools Also, Stationery, Inks, Pens, Paper, Envelopes and Blank Books.

THE DEATH-BED OF THE REV. JOHN WESLEY.

Wanted Canvassing Agents for this splendid large engraving which should be in every house of every admirer of that great and good man The work [illegible] Send for Catalogue and terms to them. WM. SMITH, PUBLISHER, 202 South Third St., Philadelphia

WANTED.—The charge of a Public School. References as to ability can be given. Apply to J. W. A.,

LETTER FROM UNCLE JEREMY.

Sober Cottage, June, 1867

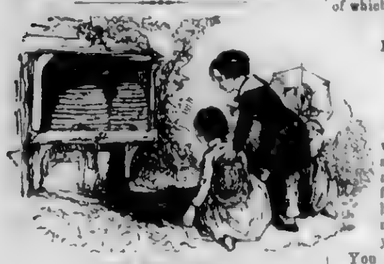
DEAR LITTLE CHILDREN:—You came very near missing a letter from Sober Cottage in this number of the YOUTH'S EVANGELIST. Having some of the inclinations possessed in time past by such great men as Walter Scott and Daniel Webster, I started off a day or two ago on a fishing expedition. The sport delighted me so much that I staid away longer than I at first intended, and there is barely time to send you this word of greeting. Perhaps some of you think it was not a proper employment for one so old and serious as Uncle Jeremy. You ask me how I will answer for such conduct? Really, I don't know any better way than to quote the lines—

"A little nonsense now and then
Is relished by the best of men."

I will be candid enough to tell you, that though I enjoyed my trip, it was not very profitable; for none but small fish would allow me to catch them. If I had not taken provision along, I must have starved; for the stream furnished me with nothing substantial. This reminds me of a description of fishing you will find in Thomson's Seasons, when you are reading of the sheep-washing to which I directed you two weeks ago. He tells of just what I observed during my trip—the readiness with which the little fish bite, but the caution exercised by the older ones. You have read some accounts in the Bible of men fishing. Some of Christ's disciples were fishing when he first called them to follow him. And you recollect what a wonderful load of fishes he assisted them to catch at one time, after they had labored in vain. But there is another kind of fishing of which we read. Christ told them he would make them fishers of men. They were to start out in the world to endeavor to catch sinful men and save them. Now you know we have a rod, and line, and bait, when we go to fish. These fishers of men have these—the gospel of Christ. They could not make the men lay hold on the bait, but they could continually present it, so that they could get it if they wanted it. So it is yet. Ministers present the bait, but they cannot make men bite. Most men swim off into the deep waters of sin, but some take hold and them are drawn on shore.

That was a terrible storm we had last week—Sober Cottage groaned as though it was in pain.

Farewell, UNCLE JEREMY.



THE BEE HIVE.

In this picture you see a little boy and his sisters looking at a bee hive. I hope none of them will get stung. I remember, when I was a child, our bees were the one great terror of my life. I dared not go near them; but after some time I ventured, and soon made good friends with them. They seldom sting unless provoked to do so. Let them alone, and they will let you alone, seems to be their motto. What useful, provident, busy little creatures they are! As you eat some of their nice honey, you cannot help feeling kindly towards them. The Egyptians cultivate bees to a great extent. They place their hives upon rafts, and float them about from one district to another on their rivers. Rafts containing thousands of hives may be seen going from one region where the season for flowers has passed to one where the spring is later. "The little busy bee improves each shining hour." You have heard this often, I know. Now, dear children, you should imitate the bee. You should not waste a moment of your precious time—time lost can never be regained. An hour idled away, with no duty performed to mark it, is just so much of your life wasted. Hours pass away so fast. Days braid themselves into weeks, weeks into months, and months into years. The longest life on earth is but short. As the busy bee improves each hour of the long summer's day in laying up store for the future, so ought we to employ each hour of our day of life, in laying up treasure in heaven, where the moth cannot corrupt, nor thieves break through and steal.

The way to do this is to love God and keep his commandments. That our God may guide, guard, and direct us all through the journey of life, and when our days on earth are numbered, that he may take us to himself in heaven, where all is joy unending, is the sincere and earnest prayer of your friend, RENA.

LITTLE GEORGIE'S MISSION GARDEN.

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—I am going to tell you about little Georgie and his mission garden. Little Georgie lives in a white farm house not far from Philadelphia. Meadow Brook is the name of the place. It takes this name from a dashing, sparkling brook down at the foot of the meadow. Georgie has a kind father and mother, and is surrounded by all the comforts of life. Every day he thanks God for them, and asks him to bless his dear parents, and help Georgie to be a good boy. One morning Georgie looked very thoughtful, as he sat on the broad stone step of the front door eating his bread and milk: so busy was he with his thoughts, that he did not see his friends, the chickens, flocking about him in expectation of their usual treat. They at last became very impatient, and one old hen more daring than the rest, almost hopped into his lap; but it was no use, the old hen might have saved herself the trouble. What can Georgie be thinking of to forget his pets? I will tell you. The Sabbath before, a gentleman had addressed their school in behalf of the missing cause. He told so many sad stories of the ignorance of the poor heathen that little Georgie's heart was touched, and now he was trying to think if there was any thing he could do to help in sending the gospel to these poor human beings, and immortal souls to be saved. His mamma came along from the garden, and asked her little boy what he was looking so sober about. Georgie gave her an account of what he had heard about the heathen, and ended with an earnestly expressed wish that he could do something for the cause. Now, his mamma had just come in from the garden, you know, and, perhaps, this suggested her plan. After a moment's silence she said, "Georgie, how would you like to have a mission garden?" and then explained to him how he might raise flowers, and when Mike (one of the farm hands) went into the city every week, with things to offer for sale in the market, he could take bunches of Georgie's flowers with him, and the money so procured would be saved up, and when he had a nice little sum, Georgie might give it to his minister for the mission. Georgie was a happy boy when he heard this, and nothing would do but mamma must take him directly to choose his mission garden. His flowers are now all planted, and I do hope he will meet with all the success his heart desires.

Now, my dear children, can you not do something to help the great work of missions? I know that many of you cannot have gardens; but surely you can do something. Think over it as little Georgie did, and I know you can hit upon some plan. Did you never hear the good old saying, "Where there is a will, there is a way?"

RENA.

DOING THE BEST FIRST

Little folks have good ideas as well as grown persons, and sometimes better. A little girl commenced to piece a quilt for herself. After a great deal of labor she finished it. As soon as done she said to her mother, "Mamma, may I not give this quilt to the missionaries?" "O, no!" replied the little girl's mother, "you may piece another for them." "But," said the little girl, "I may not live to finish another; I would rather give this to God." This was desiring to do the best thing first. Could not some of our little readers do something for the missionaries?

WHEN the most insignificant person tells us we are wrong, we ought to listen. Let us believe it possible we may be wrong, when any one supposes we are, and enter into the true littleness which consists in receiving correction like a child.

WE may perform acts to day, the consequences of which may not be realised until eternity.

NOW I LAY ME DOWN TO SLEEP.

"Now I lay me down to sleep.
I pray the Lord my soul to keep.
If I should die before I wake,
I pray the Lord my soul to take."

Who are you, man or woman, for whom this prayer has not old, sweet associations; who, hearing its words, hear not, too, the "memory bells" ringing up from the golden plains of your childhood, and felt not the soft gales from the morning land of your life sweeping over your soul?

You may be a man now, in the pride and strength of your years; you may have carved out for yourself an honorable name and destiny in this world—may hap you are the owner of broad lands and proud homes, and your heart has grown hard in its battle with the world

But stop a moment, and listen to this little verse—so simple that the merest babe who learns to lisp the words can comprehend them, and so grand in its sublime significance and faith, that the wisest shall only have learned fully the true lessons of life when the soul utters them as it did in its infancy

Let us see! how many years ago was it? twenty, thirty; no matter, at the old sound of "Now I lay me," they have rolled open their massive doors, and you go down through them to the old, red, one-story house where your life first took its morning. You see the little window on the right side, close under the rafters; ah! you slept a sounder slumber, and dreamed sweeter dreams in that old garret than you ever did in your lofty chambers, with the gilded ceiling and snowy draperies; and what matter if your bed was a straw one, and your coverlet made of red and yellow "patches" of calico, you never snuggled down so contentedly under your spring mattresses and Marseilles counterpanes.

"Now I lay me,"—how softly sleep would come, and weigh down your eyelids, as you repeated the words after her; ah! you may hear her very tones now stealing across her heart, though it is so many years since death silenced them; you feel the soft touch of her head on your pillow, and the tender lingering of her kiss upon your lips—you break down here, proud man as you are—this memory of your mother is more than you can bear. If she had only lived, you would not have been what you are now; but thanks be to God, she left you something holy and beyond all meaning; something that cannot grow old and dim, not even in the "unspeakable brightness" beyond the shining gates—the memory of a loving, praying, Christian mother.

A CURE FOR CARE

Trust in Him at all times.—PSA. 62: 8.

The Christian life has its trials and sorrows; but we cannot help thinking that these would be far less numerous—or, at least, much easier to be borne—if there were more trust in Christ, who is not only our Saviour from sin, but has also undertaken and promised to deliver us, either from encountering trials, or else from experiencing their dejecting and disastrous effects. Many believers accept to go limping and groaning beneath oppressive burdens which there is no earthly reason why they should carry, because Christ is the great burden-bearer of his people, and has declared in many precious promises that he is able and willing to relieve his followers from their trials, and to support the weak one at strength to endure them without murmuring or inconvenience. O, that Christians had a clearer view of the work of their Master! then there would be fewer "ready-to-halts," full of uneasiness and despondency in the Church causing the unhealthy shadow of their influence upon those around. Let Christ now prosperity to their graces, and sweep clean away the unbelief of thy heart!

We must change our lives if we desire to change our hearts. God will have no regard to the prayers of those who have none to his commands.

THE YOUNG CUCKOO IN THE HEDGE SPARROW'S NEST

A cuckoo laid an egg in the nest of a hedge-sparrow; then she flew away and thought no more of her egg. This was not at all a singular thing, as these birds are in the habit of leaving their eggs in the nests of other birds, especially that of the hedge-sparrow. By and by the egg was hatched; and when the little cuckoo cried out for food, the good little mother hedge-sparrow saw it was not her own. She opened her eyes in astonishment; but she was not so cruel as to turn out poor little cuckoo. She thought to herself, "Though my nest is not very large, yet by crowding a little, we may all get along with comfort; and it will take me to work harder to provide food for my own little ones as well as poor cuckoo; so I will let it stay here and be kind to it." So this good mother hedge-sparrow never grudged the cuckoo a worm, or thought the labor too hard, when she had to go out and gather food for her family. But, soon the cuckoo showed that it only cared for itself. It always was the first to stretch itself up for the worm, or other food brought for the family, and to devour the larger share, and by and by it began to push the young sparrows out of their warm nest; so that the little sparrows and the mother were very glad when they could leave the nest to the selfish cuckoo. We hope our little readers will learn a lesson of kindness and unselfishness from the conduct of the hedge-sparrow, and try to avoid the selfishness of the cuckoo. Let us all be kind to one another, and love one another, even as Christ has loved us.

MARTIN GRAFF:

OR, THOU SHALT NOT STEAL.

"Who says I steal? Tom Williams, you had better be careful what you say about me. That is a mean way of doing, calling one a thief behind his back. Besides, you know you are not speaking the truth."

"I know that I am, Martin Graff; and you only add lying to stealing by denying it. You took my nice, new penknife, when I went to speak to the master. Ned Warner saw you do it; and Allen White says you were whittling, at recess, with a new knife just like mine."

At that moment Mr. Blair, their teacher, made his appearance. With a look of surprise, he exclaimed, "What, boys, quarrelling instead of enjoying this beautiful day! Hush those angry voices, and go to your desks, as it is school time."

The boys obeyed, but their looks showed that feelings of anger and revenge still raged in their hearts. This scene occurred in school-room, at noon. A group of boys had been talking of the events of the morning, when Martin Graff suddenly joined, and heard the accusation against himself. It being a true one made him quite wrathful, as innocent people are not so likely to be affected by such declarations, or so earnest in endeavoring to prove their innocence as guilty ones. Martin had become quite in the habit of taking the boys' pencils, pens, and portions of dinner from their baskets. At home, also, he indulged in this sinful practice, by taking apples from the store-room, pennies from his mother's portmonnaie, &c. One instance of suffering for his conduct occurred the following Wednesday. There being then a half holiday, his parents had promised him a visit to a favorite aunt, who lived a few miles in the country. The preceding afternoon, his mother being out, he took down the key of the pantry, slyly unlocked the door, and went in, being very much afraid Martha, the cook, would discover him. Reaching a jar of very rich preserves, and no one coming to disturb him, he helped himself to a large quantity. When his mother returned, he complained of illness, and indeed he looked so, with his pale, guilt-stricken countenance. The next day he became worse; but felt sorry only for his disappointment, as the day was very bright, and the birds were singing joyously. He did not get well for a long time, and seriously of his offence against the good God. He seemed much affected, and promised to do so no more; but that promise, like all which are made in our own strength, was easily broken, and soon forgotten. On his return to school, he continued in his old ways of pilfering. At last Mr Blair decided to have no longer such an example among the boys, and informed Mr Graff of his desire to have Martin removed. Martin now felt thoroughly ashamed of himself, and thinking after all, that "honesty would be the best policy," decided to try that path. His father not knowing what to do with him, Martin remained at home some time. His Uncle John, in New York City, proposed taking him into his counting room. When there, he seemed to be quite reformed, which filled the hearts of his friends with joy. By degrees he became acquainted with young men, who spent their time in drinking, gambling, or at the theatre. When he had been there two or three years, he began to draw small amounts from the drawer, to pay his gambling debts. Some months after, he drew a very large sum, was suspected, and taken to jail to await his trial. There being strong evidence against him, he was condemned for the theft; the punishment being hard labor for some years in the penitentiary.

The first time Martin had stolen was, to take a pin from the coat of a studious boy who sat next to him. From this small beginning he had gone on, till now in the midst of heart-broken parents, and grieving friends, he was taken away to live among the vicious in the penitentiary. Had he resisted the first temptation to sin, and asked God to help him keep the Eighth Commandment, how different would it have been with him

Dear children, it is only in your heavenly Father's strength that you can conquer sin and resist temptation. Will you not ask him for aid? He has said, "Ask, and ye shall receive."

MYRTA.

BE GRATEFUL

Dear children, are you truly grateful? Do you ever regret the lot that is yours, or find fault with what you have, or fret because you have not more? Do you never say, O, I wish I had such a nice hat or coat as Tommy Johnson, or such a beautiful bonnet as Mary Williams." Or do you never say, "I wish I was like James Martin—his father and mother are rich and he has as much money as he wants and can do as he pleases." Dear young readers, be grateful to God for what he has given you. Be grateful that you are at Sabbath School this Sabbath morning, and that you have kind teachers who come here to tell you about Christ, and instruct you in the way of salvation, for there are many little boys and girls who have no Sabbath School to go to, and no kind teachers to tell them about Christ. Be grateful for your parents, for there are many little boys and girls who have no parents to take care of them. And, perhaps some of our readers have lost their father and mother. If so, dear little reader, take God as your Father. He will take care of you; for has he not said in his holy Word, that if your father and mother forsake you, he will take you up? Be grateful for health, and strength, and food, and clothing; for there are many good little boys and girls who are lying on beds of sickness and pain, and many who have very little to eat and very little to wear. This thought should teach you to be kind to the poor, and to remember the suffering. You have a great deal to be grateful to the kind God for. Be ever ready, then, to thank him for all his goodness and mercy to you, and to praise his name for what he has done for you.

THE LOST CHILD.

As we were sitting at a front window the other afternoon, we saw, trotting along on the other side of the street, a little white-headed boy of about four or five years of age. The child seemed bright and cheerful; but we were certain, from the fact that we knew all the children about the neighborhood, he had wandered away from his home. Passers by did not notice him, thinking he belonged to the neighborhood; but we knew better, and were about taking active measures to bring the little wanderer's afternoon walk to a close, at least in that direction, when a woman rushing up the street made our interference unnecessary. The poor woman looked very much frightened. Her hair had fallen down in her haste, and streamed in the wind. Presently she saw him in the distance and called him. Her voice reached us, but we could not distinguish the name. The little boy turned and saw her. Which ran fastest—mother or child—we cannot tell! Very soon she had him in her arms, and came down the street with him clinging to her neck. Now, dear children, this little incident aroused a train of thought in our mind. As this child wandered from the home of its earthly parents, so are we wandering, O, how far! from our heavenly Father and the glorious home he has prepared for us. Just as this child was amused by all the strange sights he saw about him, so are our minds and hearts filled with worldly thoughts and cares, and we have no time, nor inclination, to remember the home beyond the sky, the home not made with hands. This is no with us in the broad daylight of health and prosperity; but when the dark night of death comes upon us, when our feet almost touch the dark waters of the river of death, and the dim shores of eternity lie spread before us on the other side, then, then will we turn with shuddering from worldly things, and try to think of the home so long forgotten. Dear children, the Saviour calls you: will you not hear his voice? He knocks at the door of your hearts: will you not let him enter? When your last hour comes, you will strain your ear in vain to catch the sound of that voice. It may then be too late. Turn to him now. Take him for your Lord and Saviour. And when you reach the end of the strait and narrow pathway, which leads to life everlasting, and arrive at the golden gates of the heavenly city, the sweet notes of that gentle voice will again fall upon your ears, pronouncing the blessed words, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter into thy reward."

God grant, dear children, this may be the portion of us all

A NAUGHTY BOY

As Rev. Alex Clark was going down the Ohio river last summer, he saw in a beautiful garden in one of the villages along the river, a very naughty boy. We hope none of our boys would be so unkind to their sisters as this boy was to his. You should be kind and loving to all, especially to your loving little sisters; and we want our little girls to be kind to their brothers. But here is the story as related in Clark's School Visitor:

"His little sister had made a nosegay of choice flowers for her mother, and, seeing her brother enter the garden she ran gladly up to him, and said, 'See what a pretty nosegay I have made for mother!' He was pleased with the flowers, and pretended to admire them; but when she put her hand into the bouquet to show him one more beautiful flower, he struck it rudely down, and said with great anger, 'You have spoiled them!' Poor little girl! she had been taught to be kind to her brother, and she could not understand why he was angry with her. She tried to soothe him, and said, 'I am sorry I have spoiled them, but I will run and get you some more.' But he was angry still, and struck her with his hand. She ran away crying, and he threw the flowers on the ground, and trampled them under his feet.

"Some days after this, the mother of these children was taken very ill, and died. Then the little girl, who had been so unkindly treated by her brother, showed how much she loved him. She was constantly with him, and tried to do everything she could to please him. She would sit by his bedside, and fan him, and bring him water to drink, and do all she could to make him comfortable. Was not this kind of her? Do you not think that her brother felt ashamed of himself when he remembered how he had treated her? I am sure he must have felt very sorry that he had been so unkind to her. Do you ever know such another?"

THE INFLUENCE WE EXERCISE WHEN LEAST WE THINK OF IT

Riding round the neighborhood recently on business about noon I called at the house of an acquaintance and was invited to dinner. A little boy, three years and a half old, was dining at the table when I had done, and on leaving the table said with a look of [illegible] "Father, I am going to ask God to bless my dinner." Knowing the parents were professors of religion, I remarked to the mother, how sweet it was that family worship was not the only time that

O! says she, one time before you were here for dinner, and asked a blessing, and after you were gone S——y asked me what was that you said, as he would like to say that too. I told him I could not mind the exact words, but I could tell him something he might always say if he wished, when he had done with his meals

What is that, mother?—Would it be as good as what Mr. M—— says?

Always when you have done say, "I thank God for my breakfast, or dinner, or supper"

Ever after, whether at home or in a neighbor's, he fails not to thank God for whatever meal he has partaken of.

Little readers of the YOUTH'S EVANGELIST, do you whose parents set you the example—do you who attend Sabbath School regularly, and learn the causes from your teachers why you should express gratitude to God—do you thank God for your every blessing, especially for that great gift, the gift of his beloved Son to die for us? If you do not, then learn from little Sandy to do so from this time forward. M

ACROSTIC

Father, Son, and Holy Spirit,
Rich in mercy, peace, and love,
Living, reigning through Jesus merit,
Every blessing from above.
Now let peace, and joy, and gladness,
Dwell within this happy home
Sorrow, sickness, pain and sadness,
Here among us never come
In his protect, be ever nigh.
Prepare us for a home on high

Clark's School Visitor

DANGER AHEAD.

The river was placid and beautiful, as it murmured through a wild forest away in the northwest. The little fishes played in its cool waters, the willows bent overward to tip their branches in its pure current, and the wandering sphyrx rippled its surface into circles of day, laughing waves

The arrowy bark canoe of the Indian had often darted across the bosom of the beautiful river, from shore to shore, and sped in sportive angles around the green islands.

One day a party of Indians embarked in their canoe, shoved out into the current, and floated listlessly down the stream, admiring the ever changing magnificence of the shores. They were happy for the moment, and thought not of the future, nor dreamed of any danger. On they floated, down and farther down the river.

But suddenly as they came to a curve, half hidden by a point of land, the current became rapid, and they heard the roar of a great waterfall. They were near a cataract: the terrible truth flashed upon them, and they trembled with fear. Instantly every muscle was bent upon the oars. Only in quick and desperate action could there be an escape from destruction. See them on the very brink of ruin!

Voices of good cheer from the shore call to them—"Courage!" They ply the oars with renewed energy. The canoe quivers on the precipice. One more last strain at the oars. The frail bark is checked in its career. Again—O, strength! It nears the solid rocks on the shore. There, now it touches the rock! It is safe!

But O—what an escape! How nearly were the poor Indians to their death!

Young man, there is a river of pleasure, bordered by all beautiful things. It may seem a place of safe enjoyment. You have already stepped into the frail bark, and it is leaving the shore! Beware! there is a gulf before you. You will be dashed to pieces, unless you ply the oars for the rocks. Pull for your life. Quick, quick, for your soul! —Clark's School Visitor.

A BEAUTIFUL PICTURE.

The following touching stanzas are from the Ballad of the Old Apple Tree, by Lucy A. Sias:

Ah! well I mind me of a child,
A gentle, loving maid,
Whose mute, but eloquent step betrayed
Its earnestly pure spirit mild.
And I could hear its fairy melody,
And positively prayed
That—if when [illegible] I marked
That one in her train
Who [illegible]
Should [illegible]
And kept with great sincerity.

I [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Published by the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, for the Dissemination of Religion, Morality, Literature and Science.

Rev. Elisha Weaver, Editor. PHILADELPHIA, JUNE 21, 1862. Vol. II.—No. 25.—New Series.—Whole No. 76

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

Is published every Saturday on behalf of the

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,

BY

REV. ELISHA WEAVER,

General Book Steward,

No 619 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

Notice.—All letters and matters pertaining to the Book Concern subscribers, sale of papers, and all moneys belonging to Book Concern or the paper must be directed to Rev. Elisha Weaver, Box No. 45, Philadelphia, and all matters sent by express, and to our city, must be directed to E. Weaver No 619 Pine St.

All articles or matter of the Christian Recorder, must be directed to E. Weaver, Box No 45, Philadelphia.

TERMS.

Two Dollars a year, payable in advance. Single copies, five cents

ADVERTISEMENTS.

We solicit Advertisements of all descriptions suitable for a religious newspaper, which will be published at the following

Cards or Advertisements, inserted for one year, provided they do not exceed eight lines, ten dollars, paper included; or, eight dollars without the paper. Six months, for not exceed paper included three months, four dollars, one month, $1 50, paper in each case included.

CORRESPONDING EDITORS OF CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Rev. J. P. CAMPBELL, Rev. A. W. WAYMAN,
" J. M. WILLIAMS, " E. T. WILLIAMS,
" G. H. GRAHAM, " C. BURCH,
Rev. L. ROSS.

Poetry.

THE ANCHOR WITHIN THE VAIL.

Amid the shadows and the fears
That overcloud this home of tears,
Amid my poverty and sin,
The tempest and the war within,
I cast my soul on Thee,
Mighty to save even me,
Jesus, thou Son of God!

Drifting across a cureless sea,
Cold, heavy mist encurtaining me;
Telling along life's broken road,
With scarce around, and foes abroad,
I cast my soul on Thee,
Mighty to save even me,
Jesus, thou Son of God!

Mine in a day of fear and strife,
A needy soul, a needy life,
A needy world, a needy age:
Yet in my perilous pilgrimage,
I cast my soul on Thee,
Mighty to save even me,
Jesus, thou Son of God!

To Thee I come—ah! only Thou
Canst wipe the sweat from off this brow;
Thou, only Thou canst make me whole,
And soothe the fever of my soul;
I cast my soul on Thee,
Mighty to save even me,
Jesus, thou Son of God!

On Thee I rest—Thy love and grace
Are my sole rock and resting-place;
In Thee my thirst and hunger sore,
Lord, let me quench for evermore.
I cast my soul on Thee,
Mighty to save even me,
Jesus, thou Son of God!

'Tis earth, not heaven: 'tis night, not noon;
The sorrowless is coming soon,
But till the morn of love appears,
Which ends the travail and the tears,
I cast my soul on Thee,
Mighty to save even me,
Jesus, thou Son of God!

SIMON PETER.

"Simon Peter saith unto them, I go a fishing."—John xxi. 3.

I like those words rough Peter spake,
That summer evening by the lake,
When all the rest their work forsake,

And only wander to and fro,
With oozes, along the beach, to show
By outward motions inward woe.

All this, thought Peter, in hot vain:
We cannot call to earth again,
The king who has gone home to reign

Not thus should we lament Him dead,
Who, ere he died, at parting, said,
"Be ye not sad, but comforted."

With honest labor, day by day,
I'll seek to drive this grief away,
Until the Master points the way.

"I go a fishing," then quoth he;
His searching look struck through them; "We,"
They answered, "also go with thee."

And so unto their toil they went,
And, ere the night was wholly spent,
Joy took the place of discontent.

For just at dawn, upon the sand,
They saw their risen Saviour stand,
And hear Him call them to the land

That voice it is so loved of yore;
He works a miracle once more:
He eats with them upon the shore;

He tells them of the coming years:
He feeds their hopes, He chides their fears;
His love shall wipe away all tears.

* * * * * * *

Like those disciples, sometimes I,
When storm seem heavy, danger nigh,
And only clouds athwart the sky—

Stand still and say, Now all is o'er,
My life goes wrong, my heart is sore,
For me there can be joy no more

But then I seem to hear anew,
Those words of Peter, brave and true,
And stout at heart my way pursue

My way pursue, though dark it be,
And oft, ere morning light the sea,
My Master comes and calleth me

Church Monthly

PLEASANT FEATURES OF OUR TRIP.

During the time we spent in visiting the Eastern Conference, we had so many things to attend to, and found so much to occupy our attention, regarding financial matters and other incidental duties, that we found it quite impossible at that time to give our readers as full a statement of things in general as we could have desired; but, now that the "bustle of business" has somewhat subsided, we shall in this number endeavor to present a more full and satisfactory account of all the proceedings of general interest to our extended circle of readers.

The New York Conference was presided over by Bishop Payne, and during the time we tarried there, there seemed to be considerable order and decorum observable among the brethren. Bishop Payne discharged the duties of his office with a calm and graceful dignity and gravity of manner that at once won for him the respect of all. Bp Payne showed himself both the Christian and scholar—small in stature, but of a giant mind. In the discussions among the brethren he allowed no interference, except when deemed necessary to preserve order, until the speakers had said all they desired, during the time allowed each one. There were several of the brethren who wrote for the prize essays. Among them were Revs. D. Dorrell and A. C. Crippen, and the Secretary of Conference, and Rev. R. H. Cain. Bishop Payne informed us that they were all quite respectable productions indeed. We were much gratified to receive such encouraging information, demonstrating as it does the rapid improvement of the members of the New York Conference—at least among some of them; and we would say to them, Go on in the good old way, brethren, and God, we trust, will bless you in your efforts to improve yourselves, in order that you may be better enabled to instruct those who may be under your charge from time to time.

As we have before stated, we could not remain during the entire sessions of that Conference, but were compelled most reluctantly to take our departure.

Before proceeding farther, and while in this connexion, we would just say that the members of the Second Street (Bethel) Church, New York, have purchased a splendid five-story church edifice, owned by the M. E. Church in Sullivan St., between Bleeker and Amity Streets, in a good neighborhood, with two first-rate dwelling-houses, which they say will bring seven or eight hundred dollars per annum. This is right, sisters and brethren, for the Church in Second Street is only a door or two from a slaughter-house, and of course it is thus, in consequence, in a very unpleasant location

We will now speak of the New England Conference, held in New Bedford, Mass. We have never spent a more pleasant time at any Conference than we did while present at this one. The brethren all acted very courteously towards their General Book Steward and Editor, and there was not a harsh word spoken among them, but all seemed to look forward to the glory of God. We have never been anywhere where we were treated better than by the members and also the citizens of New Bedford. Invitation after invitation, not only for the ministers, and their wives, if present, but to all the strangers visiting the Conference, were sent in profusion. They were not afraid of giving away a meal's victuals, but rather did they prove themselves to be open-hearted and generous people.

The Daughters of Conference were on hand also to cheer the hearts of God's ministers by helping them in a pecuniary sense. The New Haven and the Newport Daughters cheered the hearts of many of the brethren, notwithstanding the fact that a little misunderstanding prevailed as to the manner in which it was distributed, though the Daughters were not to blame for it. The superannuated preachers, and the General Book Steward, when present, are as much entitled to it as any one; and the Daughters seemed to be much hurt when they found that such names had not been given them.

The Daughters of New Bedford seemed to have understood this matter better, as they were informed by their pastor, and hence they gave us the sum of $3 65, for which they have our best wishes, as well as those of the other recipients. We returned to New York on the day that Conference adjourned, when we found that the Daughters there had not forgotten us in their distribution; and, in calling the names, they called ours, and we found, on opening the paper, that it contained $2 00. May the good Lord bless these Daughters.

In conclusion, we would say that Bp. Payne, after Rev. Wm. Moore had prayed, called him to the stand, and spoke of his long standing in the church, and how he had always filled any appointment assigned him, and that, too, without grumbling, and of his travelling both in the New York and Philadelphia Districts, and that he was now referred back to the Philadelphia Conference, where he would likely end his days. Perfect solemnity and silence prevailed throughout the entire audience, many of whom were shedding tears, after which Conference adjourned.—Ed.

For the Christian Recorder.

THE MISSION OF WOMAN.

The mission of woman is a noble and meritorious one; and not one that places her in the position of a menial, as some have asserted. It is one that is fruitful with good deeds. In her creation the Almighty intended her for a messenger of peace, comfort, and happiness to the world.

The first and most important step of her mission is that of a fire-side angel; she is there, humble though it be, to shed around it a halo of light and cheerfulness, that shall penetrate the darkness that is caused by the continual sorrows and trials of this life. She is to go forth and bind up the wounds of the broken-hearted, to alleviate the sufferings of the afflicted, to cheer the weary prisoner in his lonely cell, by imparting to him the healing words of consolation, to exercise her powers to their utmost capacity in loosing the fetters of the oppressed, and to glorify her Creator by an upright walk and exemplary demeanor before the world.

It is her mission to seek for knowledge in the various departments of science, art and literature, that she may unfold to the youthful minds the leaves of intellectual development, and lead their tender feet into nature's garden, where they may pluck here and there a bud from among her choicest flowers, which shall bloom forever in the Paradise of God.

It is her mission to be found at the couch of the dying, administering not only to the necessities of the body, but whispering sweet words of hope to the soul, and pointing it to the "Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world," and to that bright land where joy forever reigns, to close the glassy eyes when the spirit has fled, and to turn to those bereft, with, "Hope thou in God, for thou shalt yet praise Him."

Say not, then, the mission of woman is a trifling one; for all are to some extent indebted to her for her many acts of kindness, self-denial and devotion. And we hope the day may speedily arrive when she shall receive the reward due to her merits, when all will exclaim in the language of the poet:

"Woman! blest partner of our joys and woes!
E'en in the darkest hour of earthly ill,
Untarnished yet thy fond affection glows,
Throbs with each pulse, and beats with every thrill.
When sorrow rends the heart, when feverish pain
Wrings the hot drops of anguish from the brow,
To soothe the soul, to cool the burning brain,
Oh! who so welcome, and so prompt as thou?"

* * * * * * *

"'Tis woman's smiles that lull our cares to rest,
Dear woman's charms that give to life its zest;
'Tis woman's hand that smooths the affliction's bed,
Wipes the cold sweat and stays the sinking head"

SALLIE.

We copy the following from the Pacific Appeal:

"The Colored Methodist Society, worshipping in Seventh Street, commonly known as the 'African Methodist Episcopal Church,' have purchased the property known as Grace Church, on Powell Street, near Jackson, for the sum of Fifty-five hundred dollars. They expect to take possession about the middle of this month. The Rev. T. M. D. Ward is their pastor."

We hope that the good Lord may bless Brother Ward in the great missionary work, and hope that he will give us a communication every week, or at least every other week; and if the Society needs books, forward us the money for as many as you want, and they will be sent on without delay. We are looking forward to the day when a Bishop shall visit you. Bishop Nazrey says that whenever there is money enough raised for him to go to California, he is ready to go. The Lord be praised.

For the Christian Recorder.

MAN'S RESIDENCE.

MR. EDITOR:—Permit me to present a few thoughts on man's residence, namely, the earth. Since I have read the New Testament through some four times in four years, and also the Old Testament, (of which I am near through, and making it my prayerful study) I find that the natural state of the earth casts a light upon the spiritual condition of its inhabitants. Amidst a thousand beauties that indicate what it was when God pronounced it very good, and as the original also imports very beautiful; amidst the ruins which form the varieties of our smiling landscapes and romantic prospects, can an impartial inquirer help taking notice of a hundred, yea a thousand striking proofs, that a multiplied curse rest upon this globe, which darkens man's pathway while passing onward to his spiritual home. Since the Lord pronounced this earth good, sin has entered, and has caused it to groan from centre to circumference. The earth has been crimson with human blood. Sin, the monstrous serpent of creation carries with her poisonous and deadly wounds; namely, pride, covetousness, lust, intemperance, envy, anger, sloth—these dark angels throng the air, and crowd the lower world, and obstruct the Christian pathway.

I will here notice the earth again. The miry impassable roads or inhospitable, sandy deserts, endanger our life. In one place, we are stopped by stupendous chains of rocks and mountains, broken into frightful precipices, or hideous caverns; and again we meet with valleys, cut deep by torrents and waterfalls, whose tremendous roar stuns the astonished traveller. I now notice thorns, and thistles, and noxious weeds growing spontaneously in every part of the earth, yielding never-failing crops; while the best soil, carefully ploughed by the husbandman, and sown with precious seed, frequently repays his expensive toil with light sheaves or blasted harvest.

History informs me of another part of this earth, which lies between the tropics; that it is often parched up by the scorching beams of the vertical sun. Whilst writing, I fancy I see the tawny inhabitants fanning themselves in vain; they pant, they faint on their sultry couches, and, like the birds of night, dare not appear abroad till evening shades temper the insufferable blaze of day. I think next of those countries around or near the poles. In summer, the sun just peeps upon the inhabitants with his feeble, horizontal rays; in winter, he totally deserts them, and they lie bound with vigorous frost, and buried in continual night. There, the torpid inhabitants know neither harvest nor vintage; the ocean seems a boundless plain of ice.

The temperate zones are of milder climate, but their seasons are irregular. If we go no farther than this favorite country, we see the foresight by which the ice of a winter's evening is laid in to temper the ardors of July or August, and the burning minerals are stored in June to mitigate the frost in the winter months. If heaven seems to dissolve into waters in one place, in another it is like brass; it yields neither fruitful rains nor cooling dews; and the perishing cattle loll out their parched tongues, where they once drank the refreshing stream. When the earth was pronounced good, at that time the very air blew gently with her balmy breezes, ventilating the garden of Eden. But by the subtility of the serpent, man's residence was much disturbed; the winds have blown their furious gales continually—the terrifying effects of the air agitated into roaring tempests and boisterous hurricanes. Before their impetuous blast the masts of ships, the tall cedars of the forest are like broken reeds; and the sturdy oak that defies the tempest, and the groaning forest has had her bosom searched by the lightning that precedes the thunderbolts from the blue arch above. And the sky has been obscured with clouds of whirling sand, and there they plough up the liquid foaming plains, and with sportive fury turn up mountains for ridges, or cut valleys instead of furrows, as they pass along the confounded elements, dreadfully roaring under the mighty scourge: the rolling sea tosses herself up to heaven, and the solid land is swept with the besom of destruction. To heighten the horror of the scene, thunder, which is the majestic voice of an angry God and the awful artillery of heaven, bursts in loud claps from the lowering sky. Distant hills reverberate and increase the alarming sound with rocking edifices, declaring to man, that vengeance belongeth unto God. WM. H. WINDER.

Freehold, N. J.

(To be continued.)

GENERAL BOOK STEWARD'S REPORT CONTINUED No 4

AMOUNTS PAID OUT

1862

February 3.	Mr. Griffee, for book-binding,	1 80
	5. Stamps,	[illegible]
	6 Stamps,	25
	10. Valentines, &c.,	50
	11. Post-stamps,	35
	13. "	10
	14 Combs, brushes, &c.,	45
	14 Post stamps,	51
	15. Mailing,	20
	19 Books,	20
	20. Ticket for post-office,	25
	21. Ink,	62
	28. Post-stamps,	25
		$7 46
March 6	Books for store,	85
	6 Stamps,	51
	6 Pencils,	18
	7. Books,	20
	7. Books,	15
	8. C. K in store,	50
	12 Books,	35
	13. Bibles and Testaments,	15 00
	17. Chalk,	40
	17. Adams' Express,	1 60
	19 Books for store,	1 25
	20. Stamps,	50
	21. Mailing,	20
	22. Mr. Griffee, for binding hymn-books,	17 00
	28. Mailing,	20
	29. Store,	40
		$38 49
April 1.	Express from Vincennes, Ind.,	75
	3. Certificates,	43
	5 Mr Griffee, for book-binding,	6 00
	7. Stamps,	15
	8. Cards for store,	40
	11. Mailing,	20
	18. Mailing,	6
	24. Messrs. Peck & Bliss, for books,	17 91
	24. Spelling books,	85
	24. Mr. Griffee, on account,	10 00
	25. Expressing paper,	26
	26. On an express,	75
		$37 76

The sum total paid from July, 1860, to the 1st of May, 1862, for store alone, is $1149 47.

Remember this fact.

O thou! for whom I am, my help, my shield,
My all: thy will is law to me:
So God our Lord ordains as I from obedience
Grows my pride and happiness.

This sentiment will not be likely to be very well relished by some of your strong minded women. It is far too old-fashioned for the present state of things.

Permit me to say, not in jest, but in good earnest, that it is my conviction that a large amount of the domestic troubles that so extensively prevail at the present time, proceed from the new ideas that have been adopted on this subject. As a Californian I am ashamed to tell the number of divorces that have been asked and granted in this State. It seems as if family government itself was passing away.

BEGINNING OF ESTRANGEMENTS.

No stream flows so smoothly but that somewhere on its surface a ripple appears, and no married life but has here and there moments of disagreement. Two human beings who have not yet become perfect cannot be perpetually together without sometimes thinking differently and willing in opposition to one another. I know that there are here and there a husband and wife who are conscious of no such opposition, who can look over possibly years of uninterrupted communings and undivided purposes, and who might easily suppose that it is because they evermore are the same in thought and purpose. But, I take it, it is rather that, impelled by a mutual affection and a keen-sighted wisdom, they have unconsciously learned to allow nothing for a moment to stand between their hearts. To accomplish this a husband and wife must guard against the beginning of estrangements. The lasting alienations, the separations, the divorces do not spring at once out of some great violation of conjugal duty, but are the perfected fruit of little estrangements. A word, or even a look, sometimes, like a small break in a dyke, becomes a vast crevasse through which pours a flood of unhappiness. Nay, it may be a positive nothing, only a neglect, which may be the foundation-stone of untold misery. It is noticed and felt, but pride forbids any explanation or any questioning. Each notices the other's coldness, but neither can come to the point of asking what is in the way. Meanwhile the peaceful consciousness of mutual agreement is broken up, and each is unhappy; and, I may add, each conscious of wrong. In this state of mind a new offence is easily given, and more easily taken, and the breach is wider and wider. The process may go on till wife or husband, perhaps both, begin to seek in the society of others what they have lost in their own; and at last, embarked on a troubled and rapid stream, in some dark hour they are hurried into crime, and are lost to each other forever.

A something light as air—a look,
A word unkind or wrongly taken—
Oh! love that tempests never shook,
A breath, a touch like this has shaken,
And ruder winds will soon rush in
To spread the breach that words begin;
And eyes forget the gentle ray
They wore in courtship's smiling day;
And voices lose the tone that shed
A tenderness round all they said;
Till fast declining, one by one
The sweetnesses of love are gone;
And hearts, so lately mingled, seem
Like broken shells, or like the stream
That sunless left the mountain's brow,
As though its waters ne'er could sever,
Yet ere it reached the plain below
Breaks into floods, and parts forever.

I may speak to some who understand me fully, and have known too many days of misery not to appreciate what I say. If you are conscious, and as soon as you are conscious that there is anything of alienation or estrangement, lose not an hour before you seek a reunion of your hearts. If conscience tells you that you have been in the wrong, do not be too proud to acknowledge it; if you are sure that you have been unkindly or unjustly treated, do not stand on your dignity or sense of justice, but be the first to seek a reconciliation. Let the magnanimity of love move you. Do not wait until your husband or your wife approaches you, but do you hasten to do love's work. You will find, perhaps, another heart reaching out after yours in the dark, and it will not be long before you both are walking side by side and hand in hand.

THE BIBLE AND TRACT CAUSE IN FRANCE

The Bible cause is hopefully advancing. More than fifteen thousand Bibles and about ninety-one thousand copies of the New Testament have, during the year, been circulated by the two French societies; and, altogether, within eighteen years, three millions of copies of the Scriptures have been disseminated in France. The change of the sentiments of the higher and educated classes of the French people in consequence is encouraging. The school of Voltaire is fast dying out; and a work like the French Cyclopedia would meet at present with little, if any, success. Hundreds of the greatest French writers have borne witness to the divine origin of the Bible, and found, in the pure Bible religion of the Protestant countries, the chief cause of their greater advance in civilization. Eminent Roman Catholic writers—as Sylvester de Sacy, a member of the French Academy, and for a long time editor-in-chief of the "Journal des Debats"—have recommended to their co-religionists the daily reading of the Scriptures, and even men like Renan, the chief French advocate of the pantheistical school, and Jules Simon, the most talented deistical writer of the present time, have, in eloquent terms, acknowledged the sublimity of the doctrines of the Bible. Facts like these simply illustrate how the larger circulation of the Bible has already changed public opinion in France, and what a blessed agency the Bible societies have already become.

Side by side with the larger circulation of the Bible goes the astonishing increase of Protestant literature. The Religious Tract Society pursues its useful mission with ardor. 1,105,000 copies of its little works have been issued from the depots of the committee; 200 000 copies of its religious almanacs have been sold; its monthly magazine, "L'Ami de la Jeunesse," published by the committee, has nearly 10,000 subscribers. The biographical works published by the society are particularly popular. The last issued volumes are the lives of Luther and of Coligny; and prizes for the life of Calvin have been offered. These statements, taken together with the rapid multiplication of Sabbath-schools, and the great success of the colporteurs of the two societies for evangelization (the Evangelical Society of France, and the Central Protestant Society for Evangelization) explain the alarm felt by the Ultramontane party, who lament that Protestant tracts can be found in almost every village; and who, after endeavoring in vain to have the sale of Protestant tracts prohibited by the Government, have been compelled to try to counteract their influence by means of a Roman Catholic Tract Society.

A BAKED BIBLE.

The Religious Telescope says:—"There is a Bible in Lucas county, Ohio, which was once baked in a loaf of bread. It now belongs to Mr. Schebolt, who resided near Maumee City. Mr. S is a native of Bohemia, and the baked Bible was originally the property of his grandfather, who was a faithful Protestant Christian in the times which tried men's souls. During one of the cruel persecutions which have been so common in Bohemia, an edict was passed that every Bible in the hands of the peasants should be delivered up to the authorities and destroyed. Various expedients were resorted to by the Bible-loving Protestants to preserve the precious word of life. Mrs Schebolt, grandmother of the present owner, placed hers in the centre of a batch of dough, which was ready for the oven, and baked it. The house was carefully searched, but no Bible was found; and when the tools of priestly tyranny had departed and the danger was past, the Bible was taken uninjured from the loaf."

THE SABBATH BREAKER AND HIS END.

About twenty-five years ago a very wealthy but a very wicked merchant, was doing a prosperous business in the city of New York. Among his other sins against God, that of Sabbath-breaking seemed most manifest, and he appeared to take a delight in violating the sanctity of the Lord's day. As he did business on a very large scale, he at one time gathered up one million and a half of money, all in old Spanish milled dollars, which was considered the best currency to send to China, to which his trade had been directed; and as several vessels would be required to bring home the return cargo, he divided his million and a half of dollars into seven parts, and putting it into seven ships, sent them to China; but to show his contempt for God and his law, he determined to send them to sea, on seven consecutive Sabbaths, intending, perhaps, in this way to test the question as to who should rule, he or Jehovah. The ships went out safely with the money, and returned with the merchandise. They were neither engulfed in the ocean nor wrecked on a lee-shore, but when the voyages were settled up, there was a loss of one third of the money, one million being returned, and five hundred thousand sunk in the enterprise. Loss after loss succeeded, and in about four years after, the rich merchant died a bankrupt.

Now, was this providence? Was it God's controversy with a wicked man? Or was it a "chance thing" that happened?—Presbyterian.

A MIDNIGHT VISITOR.

The following is taken from Dr. Macfarlane's Life and Times of Dr. Lawson:—His wonderful knowledge of Scripture was illustrated once in a way alike surprising and graphic. As the friendly light-house in the ocean is a guide to the bewildered mariner, so was he to his surrounding brethren. He was to them alike comment and commentator. In their biblical difficulties they either wrote or rode up to Selkirk, and were never disappointed. On one occasion, Mr. Shanks, of Jedburgh, was much perplexed with a text. He could make nothing of it; but determined not to give way, he ordered his horse, and set off, late in the evening, for Selkirk—a distance of fifteen miles. He arrived about one in the morning. He had to knock oftener than once before he was heard. The door at length was opened, and the servant asked who he was, and what brought him at such an hour to the manse. Having replied to all this he insisted upon seeing Dr. Lawson. "He is in bed, and sound asleep hours ago," said the maiden. "It matters not," replied Mr. Shanks. "I must see him, and you will hold the reins of my horse till I come down." He knew the doctor's bedroom; and having got leave to enter, all in the dark, he told Dr. Lawson his errand. Though somewhat put about, and in a half-dreamy condition, the professor commenced an exegesis upon the text in question, quoted the context, referred to the parallel passages in foregoing and preceding chapters, and cleared up the whole subject to his friend's satisfaction. Mr. Shanks then thanked Dr. Lawson, bade him good morning, quietly slipped out of the room, remounted his horse, and rode home to Jedburgh. In the morning, about five o'clock, Dr. Lawson awoke. "My dear," he said to Mrs Lawson, "I have had a dream, a very pleasant dream, to-night. I dreamed that Mr Shanks, good man, came all the way up from Jedburgh to consult me about a text that troubled him." "It was no dream," said Mrs Lawson, "Mr Shanks was in this very room, and I overheard all you and he had to say." It was with difficulty she could get him persuaded to believe that it had been so. On going down stairs, he inquired of the servant if Mr. Shanks had come during the night, and in what room he was sleeping. The servant assured him that the Jedburgh minister had really been in the house, but added: "He is not in the house, sir; he is at Jedburgh ere this time."

POISONOUS SUGAR PLUMS.

Children are a hardly used generation. Sometimes they are served with mere delusions, and sometimes with what is too strong for anybody's digestion; and sometimes again with a compound of pleasant sound and false sense, which I can liken to nothing but poisonous sugar-plums. Certainly the confectioner has no desire to do mischief, when he adds a very little poison just to give his plums a fine color. Still less has the writer, when for the sake of a well shaped story, or a smooth flowing verse, or a pleasant jingle of rhymes, he admits words whose moral red and blue, are anything but pure love and truth. He may think, perhaps, with the confectioner, that the children will perceive nothing but the sweet; and therein he forgets utterly his own childhood—he vindicates his taste was the true, how tender his constitution. I have thought of this very much lately, in connexion with several of the new children's singing books. Two instances will be enough.

A friend lent me a child's music book, with a very world of prose, which I presume made it the best way to sell. But who could write for children such lines as these?—

"The mites have the blessing,
Receiving our coppers,
Our faith thus expressing,
Our gift we have brought.
Hosts of angels encompass us,
I am [illegible],
As in forfeit the blessing
By giving too much!"

At this rate, disband all the congregations, and never let more than two or three meet together; "too many" might "forfeit the blessing," as well as "too much."

The other example is of a graver character. Some time ago, I happened to be with quite a number of young people, half grown girls, one Sunday evening. And they were singing hymns. One and another—"Shining Shore," and "Brother will you meet us," &c., and then came, "'Tis not so with me." I had never heard it before, and it has rung in my heart ever since. "Some people know Christ," the young voices sang, "but we do not." "Some people hope to go to heaven, but not we."

"Some have sought him,
Some have found him,
'Tis not so with me."

I felt as if I wanted to stand up and preach to them, then and there.

Now, is the fact that a little girl knows nothing of Jesus, does not love him, has no hope in him, is it a thing to be sung by her? And that to a very gay, cheery tune—nothing less than "Comin' through the rye"—of all things in the world? Some super-sensitive body was once much shocked that a child should be taught to sing "I want to be an angel," but I think surely there are worse things than that.

The tune to which I refer was a favorite with these girls, and they threw their voices into it with a will.

"Some have sought him
Some have found him,
From their blind eyes free:
They follow Jesus in the way,
But 'tis not so with me."

Oh, how sorrowful it seemed to me to hear such language in such a tone and in such a connexion!

AS WE ARE ABLE.

Henry Ward Beecher says, in a late sermon:

A man goes to England, and comes back, and says, "I saw a farm of a hundred acres that I really believe had not a weed on it." But think what a capital he has that owns that farm! He is able to hire a hundred laborers, and furnish all the machinery that can be made serviceable in the cultivation of his land. He is able to go to the expense of having every foot of it searched, and completely freed from weeds. You have a hundred acres and no capital except your hands and industry, and you have only ten acres cleared. But when you come to compare what you have to work with, with what that man has to work with, the probability is, that you have put forth more effort, more courage, and more persistence, than he.

There are many men that I look upon with respect, not because I think they are of godly character, not because I think them to be exemplars of virtue—I know they are nothing of the sort; but because I think that they put forth more moral heroism to do a little, than many others do to do a great deal. For you that are worth a million of dollars to have your house handsome, and your grounds all glowing with beauty, is not much, because you have so much to do it with. But there is that poor woman. Between chills and fever she does her daily washing. She carries her burdens to and fro on a back weary from too much toil. She is pale of face and attenuated of head. But there is a restless love for the beautiful in her. And in the morning, while you yet sleep, long before the birds call her, she is up to give an hour or two to the cultivation of her little bed of flowers. She diminishes her sleep and rest that she may have the reward of joy in beauty. And when you pass by her white cottage, and see the jasmine and honeysuckle climbing up about the windows and doors, do you say, "What is that compared with Cushing's garden?" If you know the women, and know what she had to work with, and knew how poor she was, would you not say, "I declare, that is a nobler sight than the stateliest garden that ever king had?" A crown can afford to have a garden, but when it comes from a poor woman's palm, you judge by what she has, and not by what she has not. It was thus that the Saviour judged, when he said that the poor widow who gave but two mites gave more than all the rich folks did,

Now you are like that poor woman. You are trying to plant for God. God is just and kind in judgment, and he says that if according to the powers you have you are endeavoring to serve him, he will take your few flowers, and give you remuneration, not according to what you have given to him, but according to the greatness of the Heart to which you have given.

Take courage. I do not wish to encourage you to think you are Christians when you are not, but I desire that those children who are just beginning a Christian life should not cast away a valid hope because they have an exaggerated idea of what is required of them at the commencement. Go forward, strive, work, do the best you can, remembering that Christ is willing to wait until you can do better, if you are willing to labor on earnestly and patiently.

HETTY MARVIN.

When the British and Tories attacked New London, Conn., in 17—, and set a price on the head of Gov. Griswold, the latter fled to the town of L———, where his cousin, Mrs. Marvin, hid him, for some days, in a secluded farm house. But at length the subtle foe discovered his retreat; and one sunny afternoon in May, he was routed from his hiding-place by the tidings that a band of horsemen were approaching to capture him.

His only chance of escape was to reach the mouth of a little creek, which emptied itself into the Connecticut river, just above the entrance of the latter into Long Island Sound. There he had a boat stationed, with two faithful attendants hidden beneath the high banks of the creek. The distance from the farm house to the boat was two miles by the usually travelled road. But a little sheep-path across the farmer's orchards would bring him to the road only a mile from the boat; and save a quarter's length of his fearful run for life.

Just where the narrow path from the orchard opened into the road, Hetty Marvin sat with her dog Towser, tending the bleaching of the household linen. The long web of forty yards or more, which was diligently spun and woven during the long winter months, was whitened in May, and thus made ready for use. This business of bleaching was well economised, being usually done by the younger daughters of the family, who were not old enough to spin, or strong enough for the heavier work of the kitchen and dairy.

The roll of linen was taken by the farmer or his stout "help" to a grassy plat, beside a spring or meadow brook. There it was thoroughly wetted and spread upon the green turf, to take the heat of the sun by day and the dew at night. The little maiden who tended it, would sit near it during the day, with her knitting or her book, and as fast as the sun dried its folds, she would sprinkle the water over it with her gourd-shell dipper, and make it wet again.

Thus sat Hetty Marvin, the young daughter of Gov. Griswold's cousin, when her hunted friend, sprang past her into the road, to escape his pursuers. Hetty was a timid child of about twelve years; yet thoughtful and wise beyond many of her elders. She was frightened by the headlong haste with which the fugitive rushed across the meadow; but she quickly recognized the scene, and instantly guessed the truth. Towser, who, though a friend of the family, was guest, thought it becoming to bark loudly at his hurried steps.

Her wise forethought arrested the Governor's attention, and suggested a scheme to elude his pursuers. "Hetty," he said, earnestly, "I am flying for my life; and unless I can reach my boat before I am overtaken, I am a lost man. You see the road forks here. Now I want to run down this way to the river. But you must tell these rascals who are chasing me, that I have gone up the road to catch the mail wagon which will soon be along, you know. Then they will turn off the other way."

"Oh! cousin," said the little girl, in an agony of distress, "I cannot tell a lie; indeed I cannot; why did you tell me which way you were going?"

"Hetty, my child, surely you would not betray me to my death? Hark!—they are coming—I hear the click of their horses' feet. Oh! Hetty, tell them I have gone up the road instead of down; and Heaven will bless you."

"Heaven never blesses those who speak falsely, cousin! But I will not tell them which way you go, even if they kill me; so run as quickly as possible."

"It's of no use; unless I can deceive them, I am a dead man."

"Cousin, cousin, hide under my web of cloth; they'd never think of looking here for you. Come, get down as swift as you can, and I'll cover you, and stand sprinkling my linen."

"It's my only chance; child I'll get down, as you say." And suiting the action to the word, the Governor was soon hidden under the ample folds of the cloth.

Angry that their expected prey had escaped from the house where they hoped to secure him, the six mounted Tories, headed by a British officer, dashed along the road in swift pursuit. At sight of the little girl in the meadow, the leader of the party paused.

"Child," he said sternly, "have you seen a man running away hereabouts?"

"Yes, sir," replied Hetty, trembling and flushing.

"Which way did he go?"

"I promised not to tell, sir."

"But you must, or take the consequences."

"I said I wouldn't tell if you killed me," sobbed the frightened girl.

"I'll have it out of her," exclaimed the furious officer, with an oath.

"Let me speak to her," said his Tory guide; "I know the child, I believe. Isn't your name Hetty Marvin?" he asked, pleasantly

"Yes, sir."

"And this man who ran by you a few minutes ago, was your mother's cousin, wasn't he?"

"Yes, sir; he was."

"Well, we are friends of his. What did he say to you when he came along?"

"He—he told me—that he was flying for his life."

"Just so, Hetty; that was very true. I hope he won't have to fly far. Where was he going to try to hide? You see, I could help him if I knew his plans."

Now, Hetty was not a whit deceived by this smooth speech. But she was willing to tell so much of the truth as would consist with his safety, and she wisely judged that her frankness would serve her kinsman better than her silence. So she answered her questioner candidly: "My cousin said that he was going down this way to the river, where he had a boat; and he wanted me to tell the men that were chasing him, that he had gone the other way to catch the mail wagon."

"Why didn't you do as he bid you, then, when I asked you where he had gone?" thundered the officer, fiercely.

"I could not tell a lie, sir," was the tearful answer.

"Hetty," again began the smooth-tongued Tory, "you are a nice child. Everybody knows you are a girl of truth. What did your cousin say when you told him you couldn't tell a falsehood?"

"He said he shouldn't think I'd betray him to his death."

"And then you promised him that you wouldn't tell which way he went, if you was killed for it?"

"Yes, sir."

"That was a brave speech; and so, I suppose, he thanked you for it, and ran down the road as quickly as possible?"

"I promised not to tell where he went, sir."

"Oh! yes, I forgot. Well, tell us his last words, and we won't trouble you any more."

"His last words were, 'It's my only chance, child, and I'll get down as you say.'" And overcome by the fright, and the sense of her kinsman's danger, should they rightfully interpret the language which she had reported, she sobbed aloud and hid her face from sight.

Her tormentors did not stay any longer to soothe or question her. They had got, as they supposed, the information which they wanted, and pushed rapidly on down to the river. Now, the Governor had arranged a signal with his boatmen, that a white cloth by day, or a light in the night, displayed from the attic window of his hiding-place, which was just visible at the mouth of the creek, should inform them if he were in trouble, and put them upon the alert to help him. As soon, therefore, as he started from his cousin's, the signal floated from the window to warn them. And when they saw the pursuing party dash madly down toward the river, and recognised the British uniform of the leader, they pulled swiftly out to sea. The horsemen reached the shore only in season to see the boat, with two men in it nearly out of sight, and supposing their destined prey had escaped, relinquished the pursuit.

Meanwhile the hunted victim lay safe and quiet, where the simple shrewdness of his little cousin had hidden him, until the time came for her to return to the house for supper. Then he bade her pass usual to her home, telling her to ask her mother to place the signal-lamp, as soon as it grew dark, in the window for the boatmen, and to send him there some supper, with his valise, which, in the hurry of his departure, he had left behind.

The signal recalled the boat, which after twilight had ventured in sight of the shore and the farm house; and the Governor quietly made his way to the river in safety. When he rejoined his family in a secure home, he named his infant daughter, which had been born in his absence, "Hetty Marvin," that he might be daily reminded of the little cousin whose truth and shrewdness had saved his life.—Sunbeam and Schoolmate.

GOD GOVERNS BARNS.

A wealthy capitalist, who had made the most of his own fortune, and what was harder, taken care of it, gives the following as the secret of his success: "Honour the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of all thine increase; so shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses burst forth with new wine." The philosophy of the matter is simply this, God governs barns. We are willing to allow that he governs nations, and guides parliaments, and directs battle-fields. But Solomon, moreover, knew that he presided over wheat-fields, stables, and wine-presses. We acknowledge that God is to be worshipped in churches with prayers and psalms; but Solomon will have it that he is to be praised also with threshing implements and grain wagons. Reader, do you act as if you agreed with him?

Mr. M———, of Moline, Illin

The Christian Recorder.

Philadelphia, June 21, 1862.

NOTICE.

There will be a Quarterly Meeting of the West Chester Circuit's Quarterly Conference at West Chester, June 28, 1862, at 2 o'clock.

Quarterly Meeting, June 29th, at West Chester; July 6th, at Lamberton; July 13th, at Thornbury; July 20th, at Unionville; July 27th, at Media; August 3d, at Westtown.

J. W. STEVENSON,
Preacher in Charge.

REV. J. P. CAMPBELL, Elder.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

Mr. James Tharp, of Newark, New Jersey, per Rev J. M. Brown, . 2 00
Mrs. Susan Chew, of Media, Pa., per Rev. J. W. Stevenson, . . 1 00
Rev. William H. Hopkins, of Havre de Grace, ... 1 00

ADVERTISEMENTS.

We would call special attention to our advertising department. There is no weekly paper of the same character as the Recorder that advertises on more reasonable terms, and those of our people keeping boarding houses in the various cities and towns of the Union, and in fact any manner of business, would do well to send in their advertisements. Churches and business-places should remember this fact.

BOARDING.

We call special attention to the advertisement of Mrs. Plant's Boarding House, located in Brooklyn, New York—No. 197 High St. We stopped with Mrs. Plant when we were on there, and can recommend her establishment to all those who go to New York with the intention of remaining a few days. For farther particulars we refer our readers to her advertisement, which may be found on our third page.

THE WEATHER.

The weather has been so cool here on the 16th, 17th, and, we might say, 18th, that many families have had fires in their dining rooms, and some in their parlors.

NOTICE.

We would say to the brethren, that we expect to have some of the Minutes from our different Annual Conferences for sale at our office in a few days. We shall have those from the New England Conference. We also have the Minutes of the Philadelphia Conference to sell by the single copy to any one.

CHURCH.

Last Sabbath was the first Sabbath that we have spent in Philadelphia for some time past. In the morning we heard Rev. A. L. Stanford on the subject of entering into the closet for prayer. It would have done the careless and prayerless professor good to have been present. At 8 o'clock, P. M., we heard the Rev. J. P. Campbell preach. We confess that Professor Campbell was lofty and eloquent in his elucidations. His text read thus: "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him."—James, first chapter and twelfth verse.

BOOK NOTICE.

Professor Bassette has just put upon our table a copy of the Annual Report of the Board of Managers of the Institute for Colored Youth. We find from a perusal of the document that the average number of students attending is one hundred and twelve (112.) This Institution ranks among (if not) the best seminaries of learning wherein colored youth may acquire a thorough and classical education, that is to be found within the limits of our land.

LECTURE.

Doctor Brown, of Burlington, a gentleman of much distinction, and whose wide-spread reputation has been in a great measure self-made, who was to have lectured at Zoar Church, in Brown Street, between Fourth and Fifth, on the subjects of "Physiology and Phrenology," giving the laws of health and the disposition of characters, was unfortunately prevented from carrying out his design by the extremely inclement state of the weather on the evening set apart for the purpose. But, nothing daunted, and with that spirit of perseverance so characteristic of our distinguished friend, Dr. Brown has fixed on next Wednesday night, the 25th instant, as the occasion for the delivery of his lecture. He hopes to, and should have, a full house. It will be a rich treat. Be sure to go.

Dr. Brown lectured before the New York Conference, and his discourse was considered a very commendable affair by Bishop Payne and the brethren present.

☞ The Lecture will commence at 8 o'clock, precisely.

HEARING FROM OUR BRETHREN.

We should like to hear from Rev. John A. Warren, of Detroit, and his church. Brother Warren claims to be a friend to the church and the Recorder. Will he not prove it by sending us some fifty, sixty, or more, subscribers? We would also like to hear from Brother Tibbs, of Cleveland, Ohio, Rev. Edward Davis, of Union Seminary, Rev. J. Divine, and Dr. Watts, of Pittsburgh, in giving every week or two the movement of things to the Recorder. Brethren, wake up! for I assure you, as ministers, you have a great work before you. Will you do it, as the heralds of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ? The country is looking to the movements of the African M. E. Church, as having the largest Christian body of the colored people under our administration, probably, by three-fourths. Therefore, my brethren, we should do all we can for the best interests of them, both as it regards their mental, moral, and religious elevation. We hope next week to find our box crowded with communication and subscriptions: all subscribers obtained between now and the first of September shall have the Recorder to January 1st, 1863, for $1.00. Will not the brethren take hold of it?

The Baptist Religious Societies have held their anniversaries at Providence. The Missionary Union reported an increase of receipts, the Home Missionary and the Publication Societies a decrease. The Missionary Union passed a series of resolutions, in which slavery is designated as the cause of the rebellion, and the opinion expressed that only its abolition will effectually restore peace to the country.

A WORD.

The Christian Advocate and Journal, in speaking of the A. M. E. Church in a recent article, in referring to the Episcopal arrangements and the work being laid off in Dioceses or Districts for each Bishop from General Conference to General Conference. We would just say that this is not the decree of the General Conference, but that the Bishops have chosen to do this themselves to suit their own convenience. Now, this view of the case does not meet our approbation, for good and sufficient reasons. Therefore, we differ with the arrangement.

A CALL FOR A MASS CONVENTION

A meeting of the citizens of New Bedford was held on the 1st instant, over which Mr. John Freedom, Esq., acted as President. The object of the meeting was to take into consideration the propriety and the impropriety of calling a national convention. We were not at home at the time the notice appeared in our paper, and, therefore, could not give attention to it until now, which, though somewhat late, we hope, may yet do good service.

Gentlemen, as I am acquainted with a part, if not all, of the members who composed that body, and if there were nothing more for me to say than to speak of that body which composed that meeting—of the amount of talent and the high respectability which characterised them, we think that that alone would deserve an acknowledgment from us. We would say that the subject to which you desire to draw our attention is one that we have not now to consider its causes and effects.

We have for some time, yes, years, past, made it our duty to study the best interests of our poor, scattered and pealed people. We have guarded against hasty conclusions, but generally allowed our bump of caution to be ever on the alert. In relation to the EMIGRATION subject, we think that there is no man who is possessed with a cool and impartial mind and brain that can arrive at any other conclusion than that of favoring emigration. This has been the case with men, from the sons of Adam up to the present date. But now the question turns simply upon this point—in what way and manner?—this is to be the question. 1. Is it that one particular class of God's creation who ought and is to emigrate to one particular isolated spot? 2. Is it so decreed from all eternity, that one particular class of God's creation, on account of their hue, must emigrate to a particular isolated portion of the country? 3. And, whether the climate is congenial and adapted to his or her constitution, or not, that it is essential for that people to go? We answer, not a bit of it! for we do hold that God is a God of equity, and that all of his attributes are like himself, and willeth that none should suffer, but all should fare alike. Emigration is the choice of the man and the woman, with and at their own free will and accord to go where they please, stay as long as they please, come when they please, as long as they have the strength, health, and the means to travel with. And the men who assume to say that he shall, and he shall not, are popish and tyrannical. For we do believe that God is no respecter of persons, and means that men are entitled to live wherever they may choose, but to serve him with all their heart, mind and body. Now, in relation to a national convention of our people, we think that, if called, it would be productive of two things—either good or evil. If we can get a convention of good, sober, clear-headed men—men willing to make sacrifices for the good of the people—men of moral character, then a national convention of this kind of Anglo-Africans, we think, would be of great service. Such a convention as this we will give our voice for, to be held at such a time and place as may be considered most expedient.

So far as opening the columns of our paper to discussion upon this subject is concerned, we have only to say that the columns of the Recorder are not now, nor never have been, closed to any moral or scientific matter—nor is anything rejected that is adapted to a paper of its character, and which tends towards the best interests of our people. So we say to our friend Freedom, and our friends in New Bedford generally, As you have commenced what you honestly conceive to be a good work, faint not in well-doing.—ED.

EXCHANGES.

On our arrival home, we found upon our table the 22d, 23d, and now the 24th No. of a paper styled the UNION HERALD AND ADVERTISER, published in Springfield, Illinois, the capital of the State. It is edited by Mr. Thomas Lewis, and may be considered a mammoth sheet of the State, and carries with it a fair share of advertisements. It is a well gotten up paper, and deserves the patronage of the friends, and especially the advertisers. It is only $1.00 per annum. We wish the editor and publishers abundant success, and are happy to have the HERALD with our other exchanges.

Also, we found Nos. 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, and 5th, new series, of a monthly periodical of Cincinnati, Ohio, called THE CHRISTIAN LUMINARY, devoted to the temporal advancement and welfare of the whole human family. Edited and published by Mr. John Boggs. We have not had time to peruse it thoroughly, but merely scan over it, and judge it, from appearance, and from what we have examined, to be an excellent monthly periodical, much adapted to the improvement of believers in Christ Jesus the Lord. The price of it is $1.00 per annum, to be paid in advance. May that mind which was in Christ ever characterize that editor.

Also, a paper from San Francisco, Cal., called THE PACIFIC APPEAL, devoted to the interests of the colored people. Edited by Mr. Peter A. Bell. It is one size smaller than the Christian Recorder was when under the administration of Rev. M. M. Clark. We are truly glad to find our friends in the Pacific State doing what they can for the elevation of our people. We hope that they will be able to keep it going, and continue to grow larger as it is published.

A PLEASANT AND CHRISTIAN INTERVIEW.

We had the extreme pleasure of calling upon Dr. Thompson, the Editor of the Christian Advocate and Journal, accompanied by Bishop Payne and Rev. John M. Brown. We frankly confess that we were much disappointed in his stature, as we had never seen the Doctor's person before, and from what we had heard of the Doctor, and especially since he has been promoted to the editorial chair, and the able manner in which he has conducted the great organ and lever of the M. E. Church, our conclusions were that he was a giant or a Goliath; but he is of small stature, a broad forehead, a small and penetrating eye, and a smile upon his countenance. We found the Doctor to be every way a gentleman.

PASS IT AROUND!

SHAMEFUL OUTRAGE.

Rev Mr. Blyden, Commissioner from a Presbytery in Africa to the General Assembly of the U. S Presbyterian Church, and Principal of the Alexander High School in Liberia—a gentleman of high scholarly attainments, was driven from the city cars at the Kensington depot, with a lady late in the evening upon his arrival from New York—an entire stranger in this city of brotherly love, simply because of his color.

In London, Edinburgh, Paris, Liverpool, was he treated as any other traveller, but here with indignity.

What does Judge Sharwood think of this act of injustice?—the judge is a member of the same Church, and from the bench decided lately, that colored men were not entitled to a seat in the cars, because of their color. "Oh, righteous Judge!"

Also, Rev. Alexander Crummel, a graduate of Cambridge University, England, and a clergyman, also, of the Episcopal Church—a gentleman widely known for his talents and learning, was last winter, after lecturing to one of the most refined audiences of white persons in this city, driven from the cars within a stone's throw of the church where a few moments before a refined body of Christian men and women were listening with rapt attention to his eloquent words. Shame on Philadelphia!

☞ Will the city papers please copy.

OUR SABBATH SCHOOL ARRANGEMENT.

We would take the opportunity of saying to all our ministers and Sabbath School superintendents and teachers, that if they intend to comply with the proposition which we have made—to introduce the Recorder into their spheres instead of other Sabbath School papers—we should like to be made aware of the fact immediately. We shall devote once or twice a month, as may seem best, a complete side of the paper to the Sabbath School department. Let the brethren send in their orders promptly. Remember, we promise to let the Schools have the paper at Three Dollars per hundred.

The third lecture of the series on "Christian Relations," in the Wesley A. M. E. Church, Hurst St., will be delivered on Sunday, the 22d, at 10½ o'clock. Theme:—"The Christian in the Family."

INDISPOSITION.

The Rev. Henry Davis, Pastor of Union Bethel, Philadelphia, is much indisposed—so much so, that he has not been able to preach since Conference. May the good Lord, if it be his will, restore his health again.

A RECOMMENDATION

TO THE DISTRICTS OF PHILADELPHIA, NEW ENGLAND, OHIO, INDIANA, AND MISSOURI, OF THE A. M. E. CHURCH MINISTERS.

Dear Brethren:—As we have a number of superannuated ministers on the list in said Districts, therefore it will be expected that the ministers and preachers, on their circuits and stations, will do all they can to collect the two cent money; and we also recommend that the Class leaders be instructed to collect and set the amount on the Class book opposite each member's name, as also all the collections called, per Discipline, for the Annual Conference, and publish the same once every quarter, that it may be seen who they are that work for God and his cause. We think it is time to give credit to those of our people who do work, and that God's name may be glorified.

For the Christian Recorder.

LETTER FROM WASHINGTON.

MR. EDITOR:—There is a very happy state of things in our churches in this city. Our promise for future success is very bright, and if the Lord will be with us, we trust to have a most glorious harvest in the ingathering of souls; souls whose existence must run counter with an never ending eternity. Quite an excitement has been in the city for several days, caused by the constant income of rebel prisoners, which draw on the street a large crowd of curious spectators. And what was equally, if not more curious, was the shaggy, paltry-looking rebel chaps brought in under the nomenclature of Confederate prisoners; for certainly a harder specimen of humanity never existed than they claimed to be the portraiture of. Some soft-headed misanthropists have puffed off a great deal of gas in order to prove that the negro is an emanation of the orang-outang; but I think if they were in Washington at the time when some of the rebel prisoners were coming in, the result of their anthropological investigation would have assigned many of them a place among the baboon species. And as for their uniforms, they are like Joseph's coat of many colors, but the most prominent color was dirt color. One very remarkable peculiarity, however, about their uniforms, which distinguished them from any I ever saw before, was the manner in which their uniforms were fringed and flounced. Many of them were fringed and flounced from head to foot, though it was threadbare fringe and ragged flounces. In consequence of so many wounded and sick soldiers being brought to the city, the Government authorities have seized several churches, and notified others that it is probable they too will be taken as temporary hospitals. It was thought at first that the disloyalty of some of the ministers was the cause of this seizure, but since others have been taken which are known to be loyal. The matter is looked at from an entire benevolent stand-point. Some of our people are apprehensive that our church may be seized. The white friends here are very much put out with General McClellan about his slow movements before Richmond. They think he is waiting for them to evacuate their capital, otherwise he will not move for the next six months.

Rev. Mr Nichols, from Boston, late from Port Royal, is here, and contemplates raising a High School among our people. He is an excellent scholar, and well adapted to the art of teaching. His intention is very cordially approved of among the aspirants for, and admirers of, literature—both white and colored. The greatest obstruction in the getting of a respectable hall or house adapted to the object. We trust, however, that he will be successful in the much needed enterprise.

Quite a sad affair occurred in Georgetown last Monday. It appears that some of our people gave a pic nic not very far from Georgetown, and on their return in the afternoon, some difficulty occurred between Mr Dyer and John Wheeler, which at length resulted in the former shooting the latter. I have not been informed, however, of Mr Wheeler's death, though it was thought to be quite likely. How often does momentary pleasure end in lasting sorrow!

Rev. S W Chase, of Baltimore, paid us a visit yesterday and preached [illegible] large audience in Israel Church, and once on the Island at E. Street Mission. Every one who heard him was exceedingly gratified, and pronounced his ability an incontestable argument of African genius and colored intellectuality.

Last Monday night the members of Israel Church met, and authorized the trustees of said church to repair the basement of their church, which has for many years been standing in a useless condition. They intend to floor, plaster, and bench it in fine order, so as to be appropriated to the use of ; retracted meetings, lectures, and other demonstrations, which are not unbecoming to a Christian edifice. They farther resolved to repair the vestibule, enlarge the gallery, fresco the main audience room, which, when completed, will not only be a magnificent church, but hold at least twelve hundred persons; two hundred more than it now holds; while the improved basement will seat, when done, one thousand. The said church has made quite an improvement on the Sabbath School. Five weeks ago it numbered about twenty scholars, now it numbers two hundred and fifty. The entire afternoon is devoted to the Sabbath School, which consists of children and adults.

Rev. James A. Handy, pastor of Union Bethel Church, is making quite an impression in the upper part of the city. The members of Union Bethel have, though a young man to the ministry, one whom they need to be proud of, as he is not only a very eloquent man, but one of unquestionable ability. H. M. T.

Washington, June 16th, 1862.

[FROM OUR EXCHANGE.]

We copy the following, which will be found interesting to all of our readers, in relation to Governor Stanley's conduct in North Carolina, our old home:

MR. COLYER AND THE NEGRO SCHOOLS AT NEWBERN.

On Sabbath evening, at St. George's Chapel, Mr. Vincent Colyer gave an account of the colored (evening) schools in Newbern, recently closed by Governor Stanley with many other interesting statements. When the military Governor arrived, it became Mr. Colyer's duty, as Superintendent of the Poor, to call upon him. The Governor said there was one thing he did not approve of—the establishment of the negro schools. He said the laws of the state made it a criminal offence, and that his instructions from Washington were to administer the old laws so far as it was possible. Mr. Colyer particularly noticed this language, as he had previously been told that Gov. Stanley's instructions were very indefinite. If called upon, the Governor said he would decide against him. Mr. Colyer had opened the schools under the sanction of Brig. Gen. Foster, and of course he conferred with that official, and that night announced to the public that the schools would be closed. The next day—four days after the arrival of Gov. Stanley—came the rendition of fugitive slaves. The Governor said he gave authority for the man to take the slave wherever he found him. This man had never taken the oath of allegiance, although he promised to do so. He had also been served with Government rations three times by Mr. Colyer. He took his slave—a girl nearly white. There was immediately a great state of alarm through the whole 5000 contrabands. That night two of the colored scouts came in. They had been gone for a week or more through the marshes, through the pickets of rebel regiments, without blankets, without food, except such as they could get by chance; with nothing, in fact, but a few shillings and a good revolver in their breast, furnished them by Government. They were full of information that they had risked their lives to obtain, and it was hard to tell them now that they could not claim protection. Twenty left that night. The instinct of self-preservation told them this was their only course—to go back as soon as possible to those who would afford them the same kind of protection. The next morning the General, upon reflection on the effect of thus sending out men who knew everything about the strength and position of his forces, decided that he would be guided by that act of Congress, which says that no officer of the army shall return a fugitive slave. [Applause.] That night some soldiers went to Master Bray's house and recaptured the slave. Not five minutes before Mr. Colyer left, he saw this same Bray prowling round for the "chattel." A number of instances were related where the blacks had been of great service to the army. In one case 100 soldiers went in a vessel under the entire guidance of a negro, and 200 bales of cotton were found piled up in the woods, covered with brush. All that could be taken on board was carried away.

Dr. Tyng confirmed what he said in regard to the Secretary of War, as he told him in a decided manner that he would not sustain, nor would he belong to a government that would sustain such a course.

THE LATE KING OF PRUSSIA.

The king was in the habit of breakfasting every morning with the queen in her boudoir. On one occasion his Majesty remarked a pretty simple morning cap lying on his royal consort's work-table, and, taking it up, he asked, looking at the queen, "What may be the cost?"

Queen Louisa hesitated for a moment, and then said merrily: "What use is there in telling you? All men think every article of ladies' dress too dear."

Frederick William was only the more stimulated in his inquiry, and the queen in her bantering refusal, till at length the king prevailed, and she laughingly exclaimed: "Well, if your curiosity must be satisfied, it cost four dollars," (twelve shillings sterling.)

"A monstrous deal of money for such a little thing," cried the monarch with affected seriousness; and, as it chanced that an invalided non-commissioned officer passed at the moment the open window of the boudoir, the king called him in, and, after receiving the old soldier's respectful salute, held up the cap, dangling between his fingers and thumb, before the eyes of the astonished veteran, saying: "And how much think you might this affair cost?"

"Begging your Majesty's pardon," began the invalid, in a deprecatory tone, "the like of us does not understand such matters; but much it could not cost, it is so small—perhaps ten or twelve groschens!"*

"Groschens!" repeated the king in a tone of assumed displeasure; "you are quite out in your guess, friend! No less than four dollars has been given for it by this fair lady here, and as that is unquestionably a great extravagance, you can go up to her now and ask her to give you the same sum, since her purse is so lavishly filled."

The old soldier was thrown into the most puzzling predicament, and could not see clearly in how far he dare venture to enter into the jest (for such he felt it to be;) but the queen at once relieved him, for, putting on a gayly malicious smile, she went up to the hesitating sergeant, placed four silver dollars in his hand, and then said, pointing to the king: "The puissant lord standing there at the window has a purse much more lavishly filled than mine; for from him I receive all I possess. Go up, therefore, to him, and I am sure he will give you the double of what I have just handed to you; he is well able to do it."

The wary old soldier cast a sly glance of inquiry towards his royal master, (who had assuredly little anticipated the turn affairs had taken,) before he would venture to advance, but, meeting a friendly smile, soon stood before the king, who, drawing out his purse, with a shrug that seemed to say: "I have got into a fine mess with my jesting," handed eight dollars to the delighted graybeard,

* A groschen then was worth, at the utmost, three [illegible]

who instantly backed out of the royal presence with a precipitation which seemed to imply a fear that the dollars might perchance be re-demanded as given only in jest. On his exit the queen clapped her hands merrily, and exclaimed with a joyous laugh: "Who has paid dearest for the cap, I should like to know?" And, amid laughing reprisals, the happy couple sat down to breakfast.

Leisure Hour.

THE STILLNESS BEFORE THE STORM.

The Rev. Mr. Alford, in a recent letter from the camp near Yorktown, after alluding to the encouragements of his work, graphically describes the "hushing down" of the "grand army," which could not but be felt as the stillness which precedes the tempest. That stillness was broken by the retreat of the rebel army, and we trust that even before these lines meet the eyes of our readers our whole loyal people will be rejoicing in new victories. He says:—

"If now I had myself sufficiently multiplied, and provided with material, I could reach the whole army. But as it is, all I can do is but as a 'drop in a bucket.' The men beg piteously for reading. They are now lying almost perfectly idle waiting for the planting of the siege guns. Their state of mind, too, is favorable,—all expecting battle; and if there is ever any serious thought, it is now.

"Last evening an order forbade all 'drum-beat,' 'band-playing,' or 'firing;'—any noise by which the enemy could discover our movements; and most of the divisions lie in swamps or behind slopes and woodlands. The stillness is startling; one hundred thousand men hushed down almost to a whisper! Through the woods and up and down ravines you see regiments stealing their way in serpent line and muscless, every face earnest and sobered. Along, for miles, brigades nestle under their little shelter tents, only two or three feet high, like the mounds of an immense graveyard; a shell from the rebels occasionally coming with its shrill inquiry, 'Where are you?' Our heavy gunboats in the river reply leisurely on behalf of the land forces. The engineers, with their thousands of 'spade men,' like sweating grave-diggers, are quietly but hard at work. And all this makes an impression which in some respects is more awful than battle,—officers and men so express themselves.

TRUTH.

The following beautiful illustration of the simplicity and the power of truth, is from the pen of S. H. Hammond, formerly editor of the Albany State Register. He was an eye-witness of the scene in one of the high courts:

A little girl, nine years of age, was offered as a witness against a prisoner who was on trial for a felony committed in her father's house.

"Now, Emily," said the counsel for the prisoner, upon her being offered as a witness, "I desire to know if you understand the nature of an oath?"

"I don't know what you mean," was the simple answer.

"There, your honor," said the counsel addressing the Court, "is anything farther necessary to demonstrate the validity of my objection? This witness should be rejected. She does not comprehend the nature of an oath."

"Let me see," said the judge. "Come here, my daughter."

Assured by the kind manner and tone of the judge, the child stepped forward to him, and looked confidingly up in his face with a calm, clear eye, and in a manner so artless and frank, that it went straight to the heart.

"Did you ever take an oath?" inquired the judge.

The little girl stepped back with a look of fierror, and the red blood mantled in a blush all over her face and neck as she answered:

"No, sir."

She thought he intended to inquire if she had ever blasphemed.

"I do not mean that," said the judge, who saw her mistake; "I mean were you ever a witness before?"

"No, sir; I was never in Court before," was the answer.

He handed her the Bible open

"Do you know that book, my daughter?"

She looked at it and answered, "Yes, sir; it is the Bible."

"Do you ever read it?" he asked.

"Yes, sir, every evening."

"Can you tell me what the Bible is?" inquired the judge.

"It is the word of the great God," she answered.

"Well, place your hand upon this Bible, and listen to what I say;" and he repeated slowly the oath usually administered to witnesses

"Now," said the judge, "you have sworn as a witness, will you tell me what will befall you if you do not tell the truth?"

"I shall be shut up in the State Prison," answered the child.

"Anything else?" asked the judge.

"I shall never go to heaven," she replied.

"How do you know this?" asked the judge again.

The child took the Bible, and turning rapidly to the chapter containing the commandments, pointed to the injunction, "'Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor.' I learned that before I could read."

"Has any one talked to you about your being a witness in Court against this man?" inquired the judge.

"Yes, sir," she replied, "my mother heard they wanted me to be a witness, and last night she called me to her room and asked me to tell her the Ten Commandments, and then we kneeled down together, and she prayed that I might understand how wicked it was to bear false witness against my neighbor, and that God would help me, a little child, to tell the truth as it was before him. And when I came up here with father she kissed me and told me to remember the Ninth Commandment, and that God would hear every word that I said."

"Do you believe this?" asked the judge, while a tear glistened in his eye, and his lip quivered with emotion.

"Yes, sir," said the child, with a voice and manner that showed her conviction of its truth was perfect.

"God bless you, my child," said the judge, "you have a good mother. This witness is competent," he continued—"Were I on trial for my life, and innocent of the charge against me, I would pray God for such witnesses as this. Let her be examined."

She told her story with the simplicity of a child, as she was, but there was a directness about it which carried conviction of its truth to the heart. She was rigidly cross-examined. The counsel plied her with infinite and ingenious questioning, but she varied from her first statement in nothing. The truth as spoken by that little child was sublime. Falsehood and perjury had preceded her testimony. The prisoner had intrenched himself in lies, till he deemed himself impregnable. Witnesses had testified facts in his favor, and villany had manufactured for him a sham defence. But before her testimony falsehood was scattered like chaff. The little child for whom a mother had prayed for strength to be given her to speak the truth as it was before God, broke the cunning device of matured villany to pieces like the potter's vessel. The strength that her mother prayed for was given her, and the sublime and terrible simplicity—terrible I mean to the prisoner and his associates—with which she spoke, was like a revelation from God himself.

Among the youngest missionary societies of Great Britain, the Turkish Mission Aid Society and the Vernacular Education Society for India are deserving special attention. The former has for its object to assist the American mission in Turkey, and during the past year has furnished the means for supporting fifty-six native preachers and fifty-two native students and catechisers, and for the continuation of the native agency, which otherwise would have been discontinued. The Vernacular Education Society for India is extending its field of usefulness, and already has during the four years of its existence, issued 486, [illegible] publications.

OUR MINGLED LIFE.

Bits of gladness and of sorrow,
Strangely mixed in our forward,
Bits of cloud belt and of rainbow,
In deep, alternate braid;
Bits of storm when winds are warring,
Bits of calm when blasts are playing,
Bits of silence and of uproar,
Bits of moonlight and of shade;
Bits of rest—in cheerful labor—
And of open sunny glade.
Stripes of garden and of moorland,
Heath and rose together laid;
Sweet leaf, Canaan's balm,
April's youngest, greenest blade.
Bits of dayspring and of sunset,
Of the midnight of the mind;
Snow and ice of pale December,
Living flush of crimson June.
Sands of Egypt, fields of Sharon,
Rush of Jordan, sweep of Nile;
Wells of Marah, shelter of palms,
Sinai's fawn and Lebanon's cedar,
Depths of valley, peaks of mountain,
Stretch of verdure-loving plain;
Barren miles of ocean-shingle,
Fertile swaths of smiling grain.
Broken shafts of Tyrian columns,
Rolled and worn by wave and time;
Mines of colonnade and grandeur,
Luxor's still majestic prime.
Travel-music—pressing inward
Voice of trumpet and of lute;
The thunder shower's loud lashing,
And the low fall, soft and mute.
Now the garland now the fan,
Now the wedding, now the tomb,
Now the festal shouts of thousands,
Now the churchyard's lonely gloom,
Now the song above the living,
Now the chant above the dead,
The sun-ith smile of infant beauty,
Age's wan and furrowed head.

THE TRANSLATED TELUGU TRACT.

The following is the translation of a Telugu tract on the incarnations of Vishnu. Perhaps if you will have it published in our church papers, it will give the people an idea of what kind of means we must use here to reason with the heathen on the subject of our salvation:—

1. Dear friends! Why did Vishnu assume incarnations? If you inquire into the reasons of his doing so, you will find that they are nothing but vain foolish stories, and of no benefit what ever to us.

2. Vishnu has not suffered a single pain through friendship toward us in order to take away our sins. We cannot ascertain that he ever had the least particle of love for saving souls.

3. We find, however, that Vishnu has never had the ability to take away the burden of our sins.

4. Vishnu had ten incarnations. In the first he is said to have assumed the form of a fish, and to have entered into the sea. While he was swimming about there, and saying that he was God, none would believe him, but all would laugh at him. We get no benefit from this.

In the second incarnation, Vishnu is said to have assumed the form of a tortoise, and to have carried Mount Mandara. Do we get anything by that? Besides, it does not become the dignity of Deity to be a turtle, therefore Vishnu is not God.

In the third incarnation, Vishnu is said to have assumed the form of a hog, and to have killed Heranyakshudu. What good do we derive from the conduct and qualities of senseless brutes? In addition to this, it is extremely contemptible to think God ever became a hog.

In the fourth incarnation, Vishnu is said to have become half man and half lion. Such a form only creates terror to frighten the people. Is it right to say that Vishnu, who has assumed such a form as this, is God?

In the fifth incarnation, Vishnu is said to have assumed the form of a dwarf, and to have deceived Balichakravarti. In this way he became a little man, and went about begging. Why? Was it not for the purpose of cheating Balichakravarti? Besides this, he kicked Balichakravarti, who had been so kind to him in granting what he had asked. Is that right?

In the sixth incarnation, Vishnu is said to have become Parashmamuda, and to have pursued and beheaded kings for twenty generations. This is not fit to be called an incarnation.

In the seventh incarnation, Vishnu is said to have become Ramudu. Then while another one, by name Ravanasudu, was taking away his wife, he had no power to prevent him. He went about in the forest weeping and sobbing, not knowing who had taken away Seeta, his wife, and where she was. Afterwards he received intelligence that she was the principal Hanumantudu, the chief of monkeys, in the Island of Lanka. Not possessing the power to make war against Ravanasudu, he joined the monkeys, and thus went to war. It is exceedingly disgraceful to say that he who has assumed such a form as this is God.

In the eighth incarnation, Vishnu is said to have become Krushna. The deeds he is said to have committed in this form are such as adultery, theft, &c. Who would not be afraid to say that God became incarnate for the purpose of increasing the ways of sin, instead of diminishing them?

In the ninth incarnation, Vishnu is said to have assumed a form that has neither sight nor hearing. If we cannot say that one is a fool, who is so base as to become a mere object to be kicked about, we cannot say that he is God.

In the tenth incarnation, Vishnu is hereafter going to become a beauty! It is utterly useless to believe that we shall be benefited by what he is yet to do, inasmuch as his former deeds are nothing but foolishness and crimes.

5. Now, let us consider the incarnation of Jesus Christ, the Saviour of the world. This is not like those of Vishnu. He came to this world that was full of sin, bore the sins of mankind; gave his own body as a sacrifice for their sake, and opened the way to heaven in order that they may be saved. Therefore, the only true incarnation of which we have any account is that of Jesus Christ. E. UNANGER.

Guntoor, February, 1862.

BROWNLOW.

A grand reception was given to this brave Tennessean on Friday night at the Academy of Music, when the usual amount of speech-making was enacted. A beautiful flag was presented by the Hon. W. D. Lewis, on behalf of the ladies of Philadelphia, to Mrs. Sawyer, the young widowed daughter of Mr. Brownlow, for her courage and patriotism in defending, pistol in hand, the last U. S. flag that waved in Tennessee after Secession had swept the State out of the Union. Ex-Gov. Pollock received the flag with appropriate remarks, while the brave recipient very modestly hid herself in the corner of a private box, so that none of the audience recognised her. The great feature of the evening was, of course, the Parson's speech; and, if possible, it abounded more in profane expressions and malignant denunciations than any of his previous speeches. Mr. Brownlow is a brave and patriotic man, and, in this rebellion, has done a good work, and all honor to him therefor. But, in the name of Constitutional liberty, we protest against all hero worship of him or any other one, for, in the end, it must bring forth evil fruit; and, in the name of virtue and religion, we protest against affording him any more such opportunities to ventilate his peculiar style of oratory; for, whether his views be right or wrong, his arguments good or bad, there is no doubt but that the spirit which animates his speeches breathes as much malignity towards his Southern enemies as devotion to the Union. We have sometimes, on reading his speeches, been made to fear that his course has been dictated more by hatred towards certain men than love for the old flag and the Constitution in general. His language is grossly profane, as [illegible] the spirit, and, in particular, the irreverent [illegible] his speeches must have a demoralizing tendency with the public. We do hope and pray that this whole thing may be stopped before profanity becomes current as the expression of intense patriotism.

The students of Paris are at length to be accommodated with comfort in the Imperial Library. The new reading-room, which is of immense size, is about to be opened, and will seat, it is said, a larger number of readers than that at the British Museum. The library contains 1,800,000 volumes, and the shelves on which they are arranged measure seventeen miles in length.

CALIFORNIA ITEMS

Masonic Temple. [illegible] was the Seventh of April—a day made famous in the annals of one of our American cities, and infamous in the annals of another. In Lexington, Mass., 1775, was fired, on that day of the month, the [illegible] for American independence and American liberty. In Baltimore, on the same day of the month, in the year 1861, a foul blot was cast upon the hitherto fair escutcheon of that beautiful city. Often have I reflected on this fact, and often have I regretted, as a southern man, that these two acts could not be interchanged as to their respective localities. That, however, cannot be. They must both go down to history—the one the act of patriots, the other the act of traitors. I can find some little relief in the thought, that they were not both, properly, representative acts of the people. The affair at Lexington was undoubtedly of this character. It was an evidence that they were ready to fight for their rights and liberties, and as such, history will pass it down to posterity. In Baltimore, however, her subsequent fair conduct will go far to show that it was caused by a class of persons with which all large cities are more or less afflicted. The people in Baltimore very soon showed, at the ballot box, that they had no sympathy with this foul deed. The dark stain, however, like the blood on the fair hands of the murderess of Duncan, will not wash out. It will go down in history; but it must go as the act of traitors and miscreants.

It is now some time since I had the pleasure of sending a letter to the INSURRECTION. The fact that we are in hourly communication with the East by means of the telegraph, while letters are usually from twenty-five to thirty days on their way, not a little detracts from the interest of the latter mode of communication. A friend of mine, a few days since, received at 1 o'clock a dispatch from Philadelphia dated 2 o'clock—thus beating old father Time just one hour!

By the way, will not this incident illustrate the importance of not only speaking the truth but the whole truth? Some of your little readers, who may as yet have learned nothing of longitudes, may regard this statement as either a mistake in the printer, or an untruth. And yet it is neither the one or the other, there being a difference between Philadelphia and San Francisco time of something like three hours and thirty minutes!

The completion of this great work of art, especially at this time, is a source of universal congratulation with us who live at these "ends of the earth." Though anxious to receive the latest dispatches, how often are painful feelings awakened by the thought, that so many of our fellow-countrymen are falling upon the field! These feelings, however, only increase our interest in the shifting scenes of this great national tragedy. Melancholy and even heart-rending as the news often is, yet let the war go on and on, until this foul rebellion is completely crushed. During the Reign of Terror, in France, when the streets of Paris ran with blood—a state of things originating in the revolution that had been started for the vindication of the rights of man—the good La Fayette wrote to Thomas Jefferson, at that time Secretary of State under Washington, an account of the state of affairs in that country, expressing his regret that matters had gone to such an extreme. Jefferson in reply, after stating that he much regretted the extremes to which the Revolution had carried the French people, said, that rather than things should continue in Europe as they had been going on for the last hundred years, he would prefer to see all Europe completely depopulated, and a new Adam and Eve created to re-people that continent. Extreme as the remark may seem, I endorse it in relation to our own country in this her hour of trial. Rather than that this Government should make peace with Davis and his infamous crew of traitors and perjurers, I would see every man, woman and child, swept from the country. In that case new colonies of freemen would soon spring up. The ordeal through which our country is passing is, indeed, a terrible one, and awful to contemplate. It seems, however, that in the mysterious workings of God's providence, none of his great schemes of benevolence are brought to perfection without vast sacrifices. By the blood of his own Son man's spiritual redemption has been consummated, and who does not know that the history of this world is written in blood? Where have the rights of man been secured without it? This is, I admit, a solemn and mysterious subject; but what are the facts of the case?

Rev. Starr King, some time ago, delivered in this city one of his able and characteristic lectures, entitled, "Secession in Palestine, or the Revolt of the Ten Tribes." He drew a terrible parallel between that revolt and the one in which the South is now involved, and from the whole deduced the inference, that if God had punished the Jews so terribly for their treason, what will be the retribution of his wrath against the American traitors who, without cause have attempted the subversion of this Government. I am free to say of this gentleman, that he has done more than all the politicians put together to promote a union-loving spirit in the community.

I have lately finished reading the life of Columbus, by Washington Irving. Most heartily would I recommend the reading of that book to every young man. The character of that great sailor has been but little understood. He was deeply imbued with the spirit of piety. Although surcharged with the superstitious enthusiasm of his age, we cannot withhold from him the noble title of the Christian sailor. His honesty of purpose and indomitable zeal, I think, almost unparalleled in nautical history. His last words were, "In manus tuas Domine, spiritum meum—into thy hands, O Lord, I commend my spirit."

In the sketch which the author has given up of the life of the lovely Queen Isabella, there is an incident to which it would be well to call the attention of such Reverend traitors as Drs. Palmer and Thornwell, who have done so much to debase the southern mind. The early Spanish navigators sent to Spain a large number of Indians, to be sold as slaves, with the view of their being thereby made Christians. Isabella ordered their immediate return. When we think of the darkness and super [illegible] Association [illegible] on that lot to aid the freed men at Port Royal and other points where they may be located, and re- [illegible] sons and others in this city, or elsewhere, in money or clothing.

NOTICE

Any amount of value received will be acknowledged, with the name of the donor, in the Recorder, where a constant record will be kept.

Subscriptions may be sent to Jacob C. White, at [illegible] Street, and also to William Still, 107 North Fifth Street, and to Rev. E. Weaver, 619 Pine Street.

PAID.

[illegible]	$ [illegible]
Clayton Miller,	2 00
William Still,	5 00
Robert Alger,	2 00
Henry Minturn,	2 00
Catherine Johnson,	2 00
Vasti Locke,	2 00
Wm. Warrick,	2 00
Harriet Shorter,	1 00
Sarah S. Hawkins,	1 00
Rev. Jonathan C. Gibbs,	1 00
James P. Clay,	1 00
Benjamin F. Hill,	2 00
S. M. S.,	2 00
[illegible]	1 00
F. J. Dreer,	5 00

It affords us pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of [illegible] lecture, [illegible] Miss Anna E. Dickinson's lecture at Concert Hall for the contrabands contributed to the S. C. and Statistical Association' to be applied as intended. Wm. Still.

Cor. Sec of S. C. and Statistical Association of the Colored People of Penna.

Domestic Items.

Generals.—The general officers of the Union service had from the following States and Territories:

	Maj. Gen.	Brig. Gen.		Maj. Gen.	Brig. Gen.
California,	2	3	New York,	3	19
Connecticut,	0	10	New Jersey,	0	7
Delaware,	0	2	N Carolina,	0	1
Illinois,	4	11	Ohio,	4	23
Indiana,	2	17	Pennsylvania,	1	21
Iowa,	1	3	Rhode Island,	1	3
Kentucky,	0	11	Tennessee,	0	4
Kansas,	0	2	Vermont,	1	5
Louisiana,	0	1	Virginia,	1	6
Maine,	0	10	Wisconsin,	0	4
Maryland,	0	4	Dist Columbia,	0	7
Massachusetts,	2	7	Wash'n Ter.,	0	1
Michigan,	0	7	Dacotah,	0	1
Missouri,	1	4	New Mexico,	0	1
Minnesota,	0	3	Nebraska,	0	1
N. Hampshire,	0	2
Total,				23	219

The States of New York and Pennsylvania combined contain 1,217,000 more free population than all the rebel States together as the following figures, taken from the census returns of 1860, will show:

	Free Pop.
New York and Pennsylvania,	6,767,105
Eleven rebel States,	5,570,089
Difference,	1,217,016

Prize Money.—"Where there is any great loss, there is always some small gain," so the world has been told away back, perhaps, to Adam, and the truthfulness of that saying is now being verified. While hundreds of millions are being spent in the cause of freedom, a few hundred thousands are being received by our navy in the shape of prize ships. Some of these ships are manned by pirates, and belong to Jeff. Davis & Co., while others hail from "friendly nations," and they are embracing this favorable opportunity to show their most tender regard for our glorious Union. The brave officers and men connected with our navy are adjusting accounts with a good many of these vessels by bringing them to the auction-block in this metropolis, the proceeds of sale being equally divided with the captors and Uncle Sam. Flag-Officer McKean's share of prize money, it is said, already amounts to $100,000, while another officer has received about $50,000. The latest haul is an English steamer from London, captured as she was about entering Charleston harbor, with a cargo valued at about $300,000. She arrived at this port on Sunday last, and now lies at the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

Neil S. Brown.—The late Governor of Tennessee, the Hon. Neil S. Brown, who earnestly assisted Secession when it was first threatened, has been fired by a sense of duty to himself to denounce it as a dead failure, and to hold up the measures which have been resorted to to maintain it as inhuman and disgraceful. A single extract from his speech at Columbia, Tennessee, on the 2d instant, will suffice:

"I want this war stopped! Whose heart has not dropped blood who has a son in the Southern army? I know something of that unspeakable sorrow. Think of this, you who stay at home and bluster about whipping Yankees and establishing a Southern Confederacy. Let us stop this wanton, hopeless war. I would say this now, even though I had been in the habit of eating fire five times a day. It is ruining us. The rebels are burning up the cotton. Why, in the name of reason, why? Don't it impoverish the people and the Government? Don't it kill their credit and their banks? Don't it ruin our hopes abroad? Then this conscription law. I will not swallow it until I swallow aloes, gall, and wormwood. It is a base fraud upon those brave boys who had enlisted for a year, and who were packing up their dear mementoes of home in their knapsacks when this infamously tyrannical law came to arrest them on the eve of their departure and drive them back, in violation of all faith, into the hardships and sufferings of a soldier's life. It binds our boys hand and foot against their will. It seizes upon the poor soldier who has been dreaming of nights for returning to his wife and children, and dashes his visions of bliss cruelly to the ground. It places the gallant Tennessee volunteer on a level with the conscripts of Austria. This whole policy was unjust and ruinous. Now look at things just as they are, and not as you might wish them. If I were the rankest Secessionist alive, I could not resist the conviction that this rebellion cannot be successfully managed with Southern resources. Will you wait till an overwhelming force drives you into the ground? Will you struggle against this hope? You were deceived in this matter, and facts show themselves in a strangely different light from that which colored them a year ago. Now, if I am employed as your lawyer, and you make me a highly favorable fiction of your case and your evidence, I tell you you can gain it. But it turns out, on investigation, that the facts are wholly different from your representation of them, and then it is my duty, as an honest counsellor, to tell you to desist. I commit a fraud if I spur you on to your own ruin."

From Gen. Fremont's Army—Retreat of the Enemy. Washington, June 16.—The following was received at the War Department this morning:

In the Field,
Harrisonburg, June 7, 9 P. M.

To the Hon. E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War:

The attack upon the enemy's rear, yesterday, precipitated his retreat. Their loss in killed and wounded was very severe, and many of both were left on the field. Their retreat is by an almost impassable road, along which many wagons were left in the woods, and wagon loads of blankets, clothing, and other equipments are piled up in all directions. During the evening many of the rebels were killed by shells from a battery of Gen. Stahl's Brigade.

Gen. Ashby, who covered the retreat with his whole cavalry force and three regiments of infantry, and who exhibited admirable skill and audacity, was among the killed.

Gen. Milroy made a reconnaissance to-day, about seven miles on the Port Republic road, and discovered a portion of the enemy's force encamped in the timber.

J. C. Fremont,
Major General Commanding.

The Battle at Union Church.

Headquarters Army in the Field,
Cross Keys, Harrisonburg, June 8, 9 P. M.

To the Hon. E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War.

The army left Harrisonburg at six this morning, and at half past eight my advance engaged the rebels about seven miles from that place, near Union Church. The enemy was very advantageously posted in the timber, having chosen his own position, forming a semi-circle from our own, and with his troops formed in masses.

It consisted, undoubtedly, of Jackson's entire force. The battle began with heavy firing at 11 o'clock, and lasted with great obstinacy and violence until 4 in the afternoon. Some skirmishing and artillery firing continued from that time until dark. Our troops fought occasionally under the murderous fire of grape and canister, the [illegible] of the enemy [illegible] which was held by General Stahl's brigade, consisting of five regiments. Bayonet and canister shot were used freely with great effect by our men.

The loss on both sides is very great, and ours is very heavy among the officers. A full report of those who distinguished themselves will be made without partiality.

I desire to say that both officers and men behaved with splendid gallantry, and that the service of the army was performed [illegible]

We are encamped on the field of battle, which may [illegible]

M. [illegible] Commanding.

The Battle of Cross Keys, Va

Fremont's Headquarters,
Fort Republic, June 9, 1862.

The army advanced early this morning in line of [illegible] through the woods and over the country to Port Republic. Every where were evidences [illegible] scene of yesterday's successes. The battle was fought at Cross Keys, and takes that name.

The rebel loss was greatly superior to ours. They left their dead and many wounded on the field. Not less than five hundred dead were found, and many wounded. Two of their guns were left behind, which we captured this morning.

Virginia's Desolation Caused by her Professed Friends. [illegible] army [illegible] from Yorktown, the main body passed up the valley of the James river, small parties only being thrown out towards the York and Pamunkey. The people of the peninsula living near the latter streams suffered but little from the depredations of their rebel countrymen, and of course kept their farms and property in as good condition as before the war. The Federal troops, wherever the inhabitants showed enough confidence in the professions of order made by the proclamations of general officers, to remain quietly at home with their property, respected their rights, and in no case injured or despoiled their farms. So that now, every one left behind us in our victorious march up the peninsula, has every cent's worth of property preserved to him before the rebel retreat. But as we neared Richmond a different story is told. We are now on the track of the Manassas army which was run back and forth by them for ten long months. We are gradually encroaching on the path trod by the flying rebels from Yorktown, and as they retreat day by day we follow them up and possess the ground left vacant. At Cumberland, White House, and this vicinity, although the purse-proud aristocracy had, of course, run away, every family used to earning their bread by their own labor was left, and had a full plenty to eat and wear secured them by special order of the commanding general. Poor or rich they may have been, when we reached them—the army passed by and left them with everything they had before, or its value in gold and silver.

But when we strike the track of retreating rebeldom, quite a different scene presents itself. Every inhabitant left in the land is full of despair. All of their property had been taken from them by their own friends. Their political opinions made no differences. Union or Secession, they were alike despoiled of their goods. At first the army was far away, and the conscription law took their husbands, fathers, and brothers. Then despotic orders deprived them of horses and wagons. Then the army itself came, and each rebel took for himself, until not so much as a drop of oil or a handful of flour remained in a single cottage. No wonder the despairing women and children—for no one else is here—were indifferent spectators of the defeat of the Southern forces, and calmly gazed at the passing drama which moved the rebels off the stage and the Unionists on. And with what pleasure they must have received the gold and silver gladly given by the latter for the first fruits of opening Spring. Their friends had despoiled them, but their enemies changed the habit, and paid for all they took.

All the devastation on the farms and among the poor people on the vicinity of Richmond, has been caused by the Secessionists. I have seen, in all our wanderings, but a single instance of Federal lawlessness—and that, the destruction of the rebel Colonel Richardson's library, was done under great provocation, though it makes it none the less blamable. No poor people have been insulted, or had their food taken away, or cattle stolen, or houses ransacked by the Union army. Everything of this sort which has been done, has been the work of the Secessionists. Ask the poor people themselves, and they will, reluctantly enough, condemn their own brethren, and point out each pitch piece of destruction as the handiwork of some Mississippi Tiger, or Georgia Bloodhound, or Virginia gentleman. Indeed, the devastation is so general, that, even if the Union army were so minded, they could scarcely find any opportunity to improve upon the example set them.

Glorious News From Tennessee.

Success of General Negley's Expedition—Capture of Chattanooga—Retreat of the Rebels—Enthusiasm of the East Tennesseeans.

Nashville, June 12.—A despatch from General Negley to Governor Johnson announces the success of his expedition to East Tennessee.

He took eighty prisoners, including a number of private citizens. A drove of cattle and a large number of horses intended for the rebel army were also captured.

The defeat of General Adams' rebel force in Sweden's Cove was more complete than at first represented. General Adams barely succeeded in making his escape, without hat, sword, or horse.

The rebel batteries at Chattanooga were silenced on the 7th, after a heavy cannonading of three hours.

Our forces opened fire on the next day, and continued it for six hours on the town, driving the enemy out of his works, and forcing him to evacuate the city.

The rebels burned the railroad bridges in order to prevent pursuit by our army.

The loyal citizens of East Tennessee, who have thus been relieved from the despotic rule of the rebels, after so long an endurance, came out in crowds along the line of march of the army of the Union, and greeted our troops with the most enthusiastic cheers.

A great many applications are being made at the Executive office for passes to Memphis.

Later from Charleston.

Occupation of James Island—The Rebel Force Augmented—Thirty Thousand of Beauregard's Troops Arrived

New York, June 13.—A special despatch to the Post from Washington says that Mr. Pierce, the Government superintendent of cotton lands in South Carolina, has arrived there. He left Charleston harbor on Tuesday.

Our forces under General Benham had occupied James Island under the protection of the gunboats.

The rebel force at Charleston had been greatly augmented. Deserters say that thirty thousand men from Beauregard's army had reached there, and every preparation was making for a stubborn defence of the city.

Com. Dupont thought our attack could not safely proceed until we had a stronger force. There was heavy firing from the enemy during Tuesday, but no apprehension of danger was felt from an attack on our troops.

From the Army Before Richmond.

Extensive and Mysterious Movements of the Enemy—The Contraband Fair Only to be Renewed

Headquarters of the Army of the Potomac,
Saturday, June 14, 1862.

The movements of the enemy to-day have been extensive, and, as yet, are involved in mystery; large bodies of troops have been seen moving down from the neighborhood of the Meadow Bridge and Richmond towards the late battle field. Our pickets were, yesterday, driven in from Old Church, during which Captain Royall, of the cavalry, was wounded, showing that the enemy design making a demonstration in that direction. A contraband who came in yesterday reported that a force of three thousand cavalry left Richmond on Wednesday, proceeding in the direction of Fredericksburg.

A Rebel Lieutenant, named Rickson, who lost his leg in the Fair Oaks fight, and was yesterday sent North, says that if the next great fight results in the capture of Richmond, there will never be another battle. Some skirmishes, he thinks, may take place—but nothing more.

From Harper's Ferry.—New York, June 15.—A special despatch to the Tribune, dated Harper's Ferry, to-day, says:

General Wool, accompanied by his staff, paid a hurried visit here to-day. The General thoroughly inspected "Bolivar Heights" and the adjacent country.

From the feeling exhibited by the secessionists in the vicinity of Martinsburg and Winchester, more credit may be attached to the rumor that Jackson has again been largely reinforced, but while I have confidence in the ability of General Banks to successfully cope with Jackson in the valley, it is believed that even in the event of his meeting with a reverse, the preparations which General Banks and Sigel are making in the vicinity of Washington will render any successes the rebels may achieve of short duration.

The bridge across the Potomac at this point was repaired this morning, and its security tested by the passage of a heavy burden train.

The road between here and Winchester is being rapidly repaired, and it is believed the Government will have it in running order a few days, thus greatly facilitating the transportation of supplies to the army in the Valley.

Guerilla Warfare.

Headquarters of the Army of the Potomac, Saturday Evening, June 14.

To the Associated Press:—

The Rebels yesterday, after driving from Old Church a squadron of the Fifth Cavalry, proceeded to Garlick Landing, on the Pamunkey river, about four miles above the White House, where they burned two schooners and several wagons, and drove off the mules.

[illegible] have been barbarous. They killed several of our teamsters [illegible] and [illegible] Those who had fared in making their escape were taken prisoners.

[illegible] miles from White House, with the view of burning the railroad bridge. A train, which was passing down at the time, was fired into, and two of the passengers [illegible]

A Colonel belonging to the Excelsior Brigade was taken prisoner, but he succeeded in making his escape during the night. A paymaster jumped from the train and hid himself in the woods until morning, leaving $12,000 on the cars. The train never stopped, but passed on to White House, which it reached in safety.

After destroying the telegraph wire at that point, the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] General Stuart. Most of the troops were residents of this locality, and therefore were no strangers to the roads.

The Advance on Charleston.—From Rebel sources we learn that a spirited engagement between our forces and those of the enemy—the [illegible] comprising three regiments and one battalion of infantry, and three batteries, under command of General W. D. Smith—took place on James Island, on Tuesday last. The Rebel loss, never correctly stated by their journals, is said to have been from thirty to sixty-five, a wide margin.

The same authority informs us that the steamer Cecile, in endeavoring to run the blockade on a trip from Charleston to Nassau, had been captured by our navy.

Foreign Summary.

London Drinking Places.—The number of gin and beer shops in London is 18,853, while the population [illegible] that would give one gin shop to about every 160 persons, including women and children. The number of butchers' and bakers' shops amount to one-third the number of gin and beer shops—so that, while there is one of them for every 160 persons, there is a butcher's and a baker's shop for every 960 persons! In 1859, 29,903 persons were charged with drunkenness, of whom 24,395 were women!! Of the whole number charged, 56,161 were punished by the magistrates for being drunk, or drunk and disorderly, and of those punished 10,486 were women!! In 806 cases of coroners' inquests a verdict was found, "Died from excessive drinking." 270,000 parades were counted entering 14 of the principal gin palaces of London in one week, which would give an average of nearly 40,000 daily attendants at only 14 out of the 18,853 in London!!—N. Y. Observer.

There are twelve daily papers in Turin, a city of not more than 160,000 inhabitants. At Naples, Milan and Florence the same mania for newspapers is exhibited. Parma, a town of 40,000 inhabitants, has three dailies, and Modena four.

Austria.—The Austrian government, in reply to the Committee on Finance, declared it was incessantly engaged in providing by diplomatic means for a settlement of Italian affairs, and had reason to hope its efforts would be successful; that all the questions at issue had reached a crisis, and in a short time matters would be easier. They consider the danger of a war in Italy averted for a long period, and are about to realise the reduction of the army on a grand scale.

Prussia.—The Prussian Chambers were opened at Berlin on the 19th, with a speech read, in the name of the King, by the Minister President. He represented the finances of the country as favorable; stated that negotiations for a modification of the commercial relations between France and the Zollverein had led to an understanding; regretted that negotiations with Denmark as to Schleswig Holstein had as yet led to no result with respect to the federal relations of Prussia. The government makes no allusions to the elections, but implicitly accepts the results of them by engaging itself to satisfy the wishes expressed in the preceding session. It will conscientiously guard the "rights of the Crown, as well as the constitutional rights of the representatives of the nation." The session is expected to be short, and devoted solely to the despatch of the most urgent business.

Russia.—An imperial decree entirely exempts from custom duties all Chinese productions, except tea and coarse brandy, imported into Russia across the Asiatic frontier.

Poland is still unquiet. Arrests continue to be made in Warsaw on account of the singing of prohibited songs in the churches. The Archbishop of Warsaw had intimated his intention of closing the churches, should the persecution of the people therein continue. In consequence of the representations made by the Archbishop, Gen. Inders had issued a proclamation, announcing that the police would remain away from the churches two days. If, however, prohibited songs should be sung, notwithstanding these measures, arrests would be made.

Died.

WARFIELD—In New Bedford, May 28th, 1862, Sister Rhoady Warfield, in the 84th year of her age.

Sister Warfield was a great sufferer, but bore her affliction with Christian fortitude. She was a native of Baltimore, Md., but for a number of years she has resided in this city, and was a nursing mother in the Church. She has quitted the scene of her earthly labors, and gone to reap her reward in the bosom of her Redeemer.

Her funeral took place on Sabbath, the 3d of June. The burial services performed in the A. M. E. church were conducted by the Rev. William W. Grimes assisted by Revs. L. S. Lewes and H. J. Johnson. She lived a Christian, and died in the triumphs of faith.

JOHNSON—In New Bedford, Mass., June 15th, of consumption, Mr. Josiah Johnson, in the 35th year of his age.

Brother Johnson leaves a wife and three children to mourn his loss. W. W. G.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NOW READY!

PARSON BROWNLOW'S
WONDERFUL BOOK

[illegible] Portraits, besides upwards of [illegible] pages 12, superior Engravings, an excellent Steel Portrait, &c.

Beautifully printed on fine white paper, and handsomely bound in muslin. Price, $1.25

SENT FREE BY RETURN MAIL ON RECEIPT OF PRICE.

AGENTS WANTED

In every City, Town, Village, and County, to sell this thrilling and remarkable work. Address

GEORGE W. CHILDS, Publisher,
628 & 630 Chestnut Street, Philada.

APPLEGATE & CO., Cincinnati.
Publishers for the West

☞ Papers copying will receive the work.

GRAHAM, EMLEN & PASSMORE,
NO. 627 MARKET STREET, PHILADA.,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN GARDEN, FIELD, GRASS, AND FLOWER Seeds
Agricultural Machinery of every description,—
HORTICULTURAL TOOLS.
TREES, PLANTS,
FERTILIZERS, &c.

☞ Sole agents for Pennock's celebrated Reaper and Mower, Morgan's Patent Steel-Tooth Horse Rake, Cumming's Hay, Straw, and Fodder Cutter, &c.

JOHN B. GRAHAM, SAML. EMLEN, E. G. PASSMORE
ap22 1y

Samuel Work — William McCouch
Kearney and Bank Streets

BANKING HOUSE OF
WORK, McCOUCH & CO.,
No. 56 South Third street,
PHILADELPHIA.

Dealers in Uncurrent Bank Notes and Coin, Southern and Western Drafts bought on the most favorable terms.

Interest allowed on New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Richmond, [illegible] [illegible] payable [illegible] ... apply made on all accessible points in the United States and Canadas.

Collections [illegible] promptly attended to and interest allowed on deposits [illegible]

Refer to [illegible] and Commercial Banks, Philadelphia; Asst. Dazell & Co., Winslow, Lanier & Co., New York, and Citizens' and Exchange Banks, Pittsburg. ap22—1y

WILLIAM S. YOUNG,
STEAM POWER PRESS
Book, Job and Newspaper
Printing Office,
No. 52 NORTH SIXTH STREET,
PHILADELPHIA.

BOARDING
IN BROOKLYN

MRS. S. PLAST (formerly Richardson) respectfully announces that she has opened a first class BOARDING & LODGING HOUSE at No 97 HIGH STREET, Brooklyn—where she is prepared to accommodate the public on the most reasonable terms.

Her house being located in a very pleasant part of the city, and within five minutes' walk of Fulton Ferry, is made thus a very desirable and convenient place.

REV. LEWIS S. LEWIS'
FAMILY LINIMENT
IS PREPARED WITH GREAT CARE,
EXPRESSLY FOR FAMILY USE

Its composition is very simple, containing nothing that is injurious in any form, and there is no danger in its use from exposure to the weather. No family should be without it. Having a wish to benefit mankind in general, and those afflicted in particular—and having had recourse to the article in several cases of rheumatism, bunions, chilblains, and other lameness, it proving to be a remedy in every case—I therefore recommend it to the public.

CERTIFICATES

Providence, R. I., Nov. 27, 1861

Rev. L. S. Lewis—Dear Sir: I have been afflicted with the rheumatism eleven years. During which time I tried almost everything, but received no cure relief. For the last four months my limbs and joints were so swollen, that at times I could not walk or use my fingers. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and at the first application was instantly relieved. After using one or two bottles, I was enabled to enjoy the free use of my limbs. Rev GEORGE A. RUE.

Newport, R. I., October 29, 1861,

Rev. L. S. Lewis—Dear Sir: I have been affected for a number of years, more or less, with a pain and weakness in my chest, arising from some cause unknown to me. I made two applications of your Liniment, and was relieved. I was attacked with the diphtheria, and was cured by using you. Liniment. Its worth has paid itself ten times its cost. ANTHONY RANDOLPH.

Newport, R. I., Nov. 19, 1861.

Rev. L. S. Lewis—Dear Sir: I have been cured of stiffening in my joints by using your Liniment. I recommend it to all who are thus troubled. RICHARD WHITE.

Newport, R. I., Nov 17, 1861.

Rev. Mr. Lewis—Your Liniment is, truly, all that it is recommended to be. I have tried it, and it has successfully cured my business. SOPHIA TAYLOR.

Newport, R. I., Oct 7, 1861.

Mr Lewis—Dear Sir: I have had a pain and stiffness in my neck and back for some time. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and applied it twice, which effected a cure. I recommend it to the public
Mrs EVELINA DEMOND

Providence, Dec. 10, 1861

Rev L. S Lewis Dear Sir: For upwards of three years I have been very lame at times, arising from a sprain. I have tried a great many things, without any decided results. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and was effectually relieved. Mrs PHEBE A. MORSE

Newport, R. I., Oct, 10, 1861

Rev Mr. Lewis—I have been afflicted with the rheumatism for some time. I used your Liniment, which has removed it successfully. It has also cured my swelled joints. Mrs. ELIZABETH THOROUGHGOOD.

Newport, R. I., Nov. 20, 1861,

Rev. Mr. Lewis—My boy was troubled with the chilblain I applied your Liniment a few times, and it cured him. Mrs. ADELINE JONES.

Providence Plrsv, Sept. 3, 1861.

Rev. Mr Lewis—I have used your Liniment for rheumatic pains of long standing—also, lameness in the feet, &c. It is a perfect remedy where other things have failed. Mrs. SUSAN GARDINER

Providence, Rhode Island, Aug. 19, 1861

Rev. L. S. Lewis—I have been afflicted for upwards of seven years with swelled joints. I have tried almost everything, without the desired effect. At last I obtained a bottle of your Liniment, which relieved me successfully. Mrs. MARY A. JEWITT

Providence, Nov., 1861.

Mr. L. S. Lewis—I had a very severe attack of rheumatism last fall, during which time I tried almost everything but nothing so effectual as your Family Liniment. I would not be without it. Mrs. LUCY WATERMAN.

MANUFACTURED BY
REV. LEWIS S. LEWIS,
No. 115 Meeting St., Providence, R. I.,
TO WHOM ALL ORDERS SHOULD BE ADDRESSED.
PRICE, 25 CTS. PER BOTTLE.

☞ Sold in Newport by Mrs. MARTHA J. RANDOLPH, No. 1 Spruce Court. 1y

THE YOUTH'S EVANGELIST

Is published twice every month, and is prepared expressly for use in the Sabbath Schools of the United Presbyterian Church. It is printed on clear, white paper, and embellished with fine engravings in every number.

Every number has a Psalm or part of a Psalm, set to Music suitable for use in Sabbath Schools.

THE TERMS ARE PREPAYMENT, AS FOLLOWS

WITHOUT POSTAGE.		POSTAGE PAID.
For a single copy per [illegible]	$1 00	16 copies to one address	$4 [illegible]
4 copies to one address,	3 [illegible]	25 " " "	5 [illegible]
10 " " "	7 [illegible]	50 " " "	12 [illegible]
20 " " "	14 [illegible]	100 " " "	22 [illegible]
50 " " "	34 [illegible]	As by law, the packages must weigh at least 2 ounces, orders for less than 16 copies cannot be sent postage paid
100 " " "	66 [illegible]

We have secured the services of a number of valuable contributors, who will furnish original articles for every number, which will add much to the interest of its columns.

It is the intention of the subscriber to make the Youth's Evangelist a help to parents and Sabbath School Teachers in the training of the youth committed to their care, and a welcome visitor in all the families and Sabbath Schools of the Reformed and United Presbyterian Churches.

All communications, whether for insertion or on business, should be addressed to JAMES M. FREELAND
P. O. Box 818, Philadelphia, Pa.

Agents—Thomas Johnston, Monmouth Illinois. John Fleming, Xenia, O.; R. J. Murdoch, United Presbyterian Office, Pittsburgh, Pa. Spratt & Lisle, Allegheny, Pa.

PERRY & FITZGERALD'S
PROCESS FOR MAKING LIGHT, NUTRITIOUS, AND UNADULTERATED BREAD, WITHOUT FERMENTATION.

The new process of bread making, patented by Perry & Fitzgerald removes all the obstacles which have hitherto rendered it impossible to manufacture perfectly pure, sweet and nutritious bread. The entire process is performed by mechanical means, and is eminently cleanly.

The process consists in mixing the flour in a closed vessel, and the application of pure carbonic gas, under pressure, by which the dough mass is made thoroughly light, and ready to be discharged into pans, for baking, in the brief space of fifteen or twenty minutes. The "charge" is usually 200 pounds, and each machine completes the operation, in all its details, from the putting in of the flour to the discharging of the dough, in from seventy five to forty minutes.

The inventors of Perry & Fitzgerald effect a revolution in the preparation of bread, by establishing a system of wholesome manufacture not subject to the vicissitudes and evils of fermentation, but exact and certain in its results—i. Because, by the substitution of mechanical for manual labor, and in the superior value of the article produced it promises large profits upon the capital employed. 2. Because it will insure to capitalists as well as the purchasing public, the purest, most wholesome, and nutritious bread, at prices adequate to remunerate manufacturers, and yet materially lower than the present rates of the best bread in our cities. 3. Because, by the substitution of machinery for the present system of kneading, the objectionable practice of using the feet, and other disgusting modes of preparation will be entirely superseded. 4. Because it will insure to the consumer the benefit of the entire nutriment of the wheat—as the process of fermentation, by which the gluten, or nutritious portion of the flour is rendered soluble, and a portion of the starch converted into sugar, is entirely dispensed with. 5. Because, by the saving of time, labor, fuel, and the loss of flour, in the present mode of manufacture, the cost of bread will be greatly reduced.

The application of pure carbonic acid gas, under pressure, to a mechanically kneaded dough-mass, as in the invention of Perry & Fitzgerald, did not occur to Dr. Ure; though he seems to have had a clear foreshadowing of the importance of the artificial use of the gas, since he states, hypothetically, that "if water, highly impregnated with carbonic acid gas, be used for kneading the dough the resulting bread will be eminent at upcopy. Could a light article," he continues, "be produced in this way, then, as the sugar would remain [illegible] the bread would be [illegible] much the sweeter and more nourishing."

What, to Dr. Ure, was evidently a clearly comprehended chemical truth has been practically developed by the brilliant inventors of Perry & Fitzgerald. Posterity will hold their names in grateful remembrance, as among the most eminent benefactors of mankind.

IV. Its Wholesomeness.—Being free from the deleterious substances which are the product of fermentation, or chemical reactions, by the old modes, the bread made by the New Process is easy of digestion, and agrees with the most delicate stomach. "Indigestion," says Dr. Ure, chief of the N. Y. Medical College, "will be found incurable so long as all or able to any of those who formerly used fermented bread has been found to have originally failed as an article of diet." Says the London Medical Times and Gazette

"From the introduction of the new unfermented bread there have already been received from members of the medical profession, who have recommended it in their practice, as well as from private families, numerous accounts of the most astonishing results that have followed the use in cases of deranged digestion and assimilation. Many persons have regained their recovery to health, after years of suffering and misery, by the simple use of the bread as a diet. Many cases have also been reported by medical men, in addition, in which certain distressing forms of dyspepsia, which had remained intractable under every kind of treatment, have yielded as if by magic, almost immediately after adopting the use of the unfermented bread

"The beneficial effects of the new bread are attributable to the reason That due to the absence of the gelatinous matters required to ordinary bread by the process of fermentation, and the other to the presence in the bread, unchanged, of those elements which are the essential agents of digesting and assimilation."

The most eminent members of the medical profession, both in Great Britain and in the United States and only speak in the highest terms of the ease with which it is digested, and of its rich, nourishing qualities, but especially of its peculiar palatableness and wonderful keeping properties. The absence of acidity and other strong flavors, which in a greater or less degree, are diverse to [illegible] fermented bread, renders the new bread peculiarly suitable to the taste.

V. Its Economy and Economy.—By the use of mechanical means, instead of manual labor, a barrel of flour is converted into baked loaves in forty-five minutes, whereas by the ordinary process, four or five hours are occupied in the formation of the "sponge," and a further time in kneading, raising, and baking the dough.

It is [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] cost of the material. The [illegible] of [illegible] peculiarly suitable to be prepared and supplied by a public company. And since the new process removes all the objectionable manufactures, and the expense of the machinery gives a comparative monopoly, the supply of bread is placed at once in the same category with gas, water, or other articles of prime necessity."

VAN RIPER & CAMP,
EXCLUSIVE MANUFACTURERS,
Corner of Broad and Buttonwood Streets,
PHILADELPHIA.

Advertisements.

THE DAUGHTERS OF HOPE GRAND UNION Temperance Society met, it being the thirteenth convocation, April 18th, 1861. Representatives from Lodges are as follows:—

From Grand Union No. 4, D. of T.; from Phoenix Union, No. 5, D. of T.; from Northern Union, No. 16, D. of T.; Webb's Union, of Chambersburgh, Pa., from Dr Bias' Union, of Carlisle, Pa.; from Mount Olive Union, No. 19, D. of T.; from Vanbrackle Union, No. 15, D. of T., of Norristown, Pa

Officers installed to their several positions are as follows:—

Grand P., Sister Bennet; Grand Associate, Sister Burris, Grand Treasurer, Sister Faucett; Grand Conductress, C. Thompson, Grand Sentinel, A. E Duckett Grand Chaplain Sister Hall

G. P. P., Sister E Rogers,	G. P. P Sister Ammons,
" " E. Howard,	" " J. F Black,
" " M H Brady,	" " E. A Chase,
" " S Newman,	" " Wyatt,
" " S Dixon,	" " R Hall

THE DAUGHTERS OF CORNISH SOCIETY.

The Stated Quarterly Meetings of the Society are held on the first Wednesdays of February, May, August, and November.

The meetings of the Board are held on the Wednesday previous to the regular stated meetings of the society.

Mrs. Sarah Carter,
Pennsylvania.
Mr. L. R. Saunder, Sec'y.

THE BOOK DEPOSITORY
OF THE
AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH,
No. 619 Pine Street,
PHILADELPHIA.

We keep on hand, in connection with our other books, Sabbath School books of various kinds, Question Books, Catechisms, Nos. 1, 2, and 3. We have a good assortment of such books as are generally used in the Public Schools. Also, Stationery, Inks, Pens, Paper, Envelopes and Blank Books.

THE DEATH-BED OF THE REV. JOHN WESLEY.

Wanted Canvassing Agents for this splendid large engraving, which should be in every house of which a love feast is held. A good sale. The most liberal inducements offered to those selling this print. Send for Catalogue and Circulars at once.

WM SMITH, Proprietor,
702 South Third Street, Philadelphia

WANTED.—The charge of a Public School. Reference as to ability can be given. Apply to
J. W. A., 1641 Belmuth St.

ONE-PRICE CLOTHING,
OF THE LATEST STYLES,

Made in the Best Manner, expressly for RETAIL SALES. Lowest Selling Prices marked in Plain Figures. All Goods made to order warranted satisfactory. Our One Price System is strictly adhered to. All are thereby treated alike
JONES & CO.,
Dec 21 ly 604 Market Street

GOOD NEWS

To Tailors, Dress makers, and to those wishing to be such. Also, to owners of sewing machines, shoe-keepers, and large families,—for no one day (by printed directions which every Dollmaster has) you can learn to cut and fit perfectly. Ladies Dresses, Boys' and Misses Pants, Vests, Jackets, Sack and Over-coats.

Local and Travelling Agents Wanted.

Address REV WM BRADLEY.
Carversville, Bucks Co., Pa.
Or, apply to Mrs. Mary C. Weaver, (wife of the Editor of this paper,) 619 Pine St., Philada., Pa. Jan18—1y

MRS. E. A. PALMER'S
DRY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS STORE.
NO. 105 NORTH FIFTH STREET.
PHILADELPHIA.

A General Assortment of Hosiery, Trimmings, Dry Goods, &c.

Dress, Shirt-making, and Plain Sewing, promptly attended to. Jan12—1y

COAL! COAL!! COAL!!!

The subscriber is selling the best qualities of Lehigh and Schuylkill Coal at the following very low prices:

Lehigh Store Coal, per ton,	$4 50
" Egg " "	4 25
" Broken and Screened, per ton,	4 25
" Nut " "	4 00
Schuylkill, Stove, and Egg, and Broken, and Screened,	4 50
" Nut,	4 50

Orders left at the Store Store, No. 107 North Fifth St., will be promptly attended to. WM STILL.
JOHN DORSEY, Philada.

KEELY'S PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY.
N. W. corner Fifth and Coates.
Picture Gallery and Frames on the First Floor.
Strangers should not fail to call and examine.
Admission Free

JAMES DOWNS,
DEALER IN
NEW AND SECOND HAND
CLOTHING,
No 225 South Second Street.
No 17—3mo. PHILADELPHIA

WILLIAM STILL'S
STOVE STORE,
107 NORTH FIFTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

The subscriber would respectfully inform his friends and all in want of good stoves, that he has now on hand a general variety of excellent PARLOR, COOK and CHAMBER STOVES, including Gas-burning, as well as other patterns, which he is selling at very low rates. He buys entirely for cash, of the best wholesale founders, and of course can sell much cheaper than those buying on the usual credit system. At any rate his friends are invited to give him a call and examine for themselves before purchasing elsewhere, as he feels that they would be convinced that it would be to their interest to give him their patronage. Coal orders constantly on hand. WM. STILL.

JOSEPH H. COLE,
CONTINENTAL RESTAURANT,
NO. 717 LOMBARD STREET, PHILA.,
(Above Seventh St., under Philadelphia Institute,)

Where he continues to keep always on hand the very best assortment of OYSTERS and other refreshments—hoping that all his friends and the public in general will favor him with their patronage.

☞ Meals served at all hours. Families supplied with Oysters of the best quality and flavor at the shortest notice.

☞ Also, public and private waiting done on the most reasonable terms. ly

Mrs. S. Shorter Hawkins
HAS NOW OPENED
NEW SPRING GOODS,
consisting of Delaines, Brilliants, Calicoes, &c. Hoop Skirts of all sizes, from 10 cents to $1 25. A large lot of linen Bol

From the Lutheran and Missionary.

THE YOUNG PARSON.

[We continue our extracts, giving some further revelations of a pastor's experience.—ED.]

GREAT EXPECTATIONS," THE LOVE PART OF THE STORY BEGINS, THE HEROINE ENTERS.

On Monday morning, probably an hour after Mr. Tuber's breakfast table had been cleared off, the young parson's slumbers were disturbed by a knock at his door. As, however, he was in constant expectation of a pitcher of water, he simply called out, "Come in!" and turned over for a few moments' additional sleep. He had fairly commenced to carry this laudable purpose into execution, and probably would have presumed on an "extension of time," had not a series of jerks at the bed-clothes and a few pokes in his ribs aroused him to the consciousness that a stranger was in the room, anxious for an audience.

Rev. Petit was startled. He sat up in the bed and rubbed his eyes to a state of bewilderment. "Well? Ah—yes! Good morning, sir. Can I do anything for you? Anybody sick? Please be seated."

The visitor was a man about fifty years of age, rather above the average height, with sandy hair mixed with gray, sharp, determined features, and a pair of sparkling hazel eyes. When asked to sit down, he passed by two or three chairs and squatted himself on a low ottoman that was placed near the jamb of the ingle. Having thus disposed of himself, he took off his hat—a white, or rather a brownish one with long rough fur, and deposited it upon the floor by his side; then pulled a bandanna from it and wiped the perspiration from his brow.

"Mooseus warm:" said he.

"Yes, sir," replied Mr. Meagre; "I am sorry it cost you so much effort to awaken me, but I did not get to sleep until four o'clock this morning."

"No difference, Mr. Meagre, I just come to see you on a little serious business."

"I am ready to serve you in any way, sir," said the parson. "Just go into the parlor below and I will join you in a few moments."

"No use at all: I only wanted to engage you to marry me and another young lady to-morrow evening."

Ha! my first wedding! thought the miniature clergyman. Up to this time he thought the man had come for him to preach his wife's funeral sermon, and was prepared to sympathize with him, but when he found that a different task awaited him, the whole affair presented itself in a comical light.

"And who is the other young lady?" he inquired.

"One Kit Carson"

"Any relation to Texas Kit?"

"Don't know; 'Spec she is. She's got a good many kin-folks and she's the best one among 'em. Mooses fine gal, that."

"No doubt you think so," said Mr Meagre "and your peculiar relation to her makes her mooseer," he was going to add, but he did not.

"Yaas, indeed, you must know her. Belongs to your meetin'; sits right forenent old Mrs. Graves, not far from the front on the side towards the jail."

"O, yes," said the parson, rubbing his forehead to assist his memory, "she is a small, spare woman, is she not?"

"No, indeed; she'd make well nigh on to six people as big as you are."

Rev. Petit looked into the man's eyes and felt convinced that he meant to cast no reflection and that he was not even irritated that so important a person as his elect bride was unknown to her pastor.

"I must be mistaken then," he said, "but you will excuse me, as I am a comparative stranger here."

"Reckon you don't know her yit, but I do, just as easy. You might have heard of her, though. Old Mr. Strapiron wanted her so bad when his other wife died; but very like you would not know her by that neither; they say he wanted some time or 'nother, mighty nigh every gal in the meetin. He used to be lookin round all the time of sarmont. Once he got up on his tip toes, to see if somebody was in. He allers got his hat when they was singing the last hymn, and waited for "amen," like for the word "go," and was out at the front door before the rest of the people got out of their pews. One evening he knocked a little child over, and never stopped to pick her up—just went ahead like as if the meetin-house was a-fire and he wanted to git out. Minister Hugenot give him fits for it, said it 'wasn't becomin in an elder,' and that was the first of Mr. Hugenot's trouble with him. I didn't blame the minister much, though, for Strapiron did make a goose out of himself. Why, Mr. Meagre, afore his last wife died he wouldn't black on his boots, he said it was all pride; he used to wear striped cotton trousers that didn't come much below his knees, and a nankeen roundabout with a big hymn-book in the pocket. But as soon as his old woman was in the grave he come out in a suit of black, all except his jacket—that was red and yallar, and he wore a breastpin, and his shoes were as shiney as them little ones of your'n settin there by that bed stead, and he always put cinnamon drops on his handkerchiefs to make it smell good. Howsomever, as I was sayin, he was monsus anxious to get this gal I am to marry. He went home with her every other Saturday night for two weeks and went in the first time and axed her to have him afore he was in the house a half an hour."

"Well, every other Saturday night for two weeks is not often, if you consider it right," said the pastor, apologetically,—"only once, you know."

"Yaas, but he acted so silly that one time; got down on his knees and cried like a child, and prayed and threatened to drown himself."

"I hope, sir, that the lady did not tell you these things?" the preacher said, inquiringly.

"Not she. I don't believe she will give me any satisfaction about em even after the weddin. She says it aint honorable, and I aint goin to ax her any questions. You see, Tom Hickman, that's her brother-in-law, knew'd Strapiron was a comin and run home quick and crawled under a settee that had a cover in front of the legs, to see and hear the fun. And when the old man took on so, Tom laughed and had to come out, and then he advised the old feller to go in a swimmin—just to cool himself off, but said there was no use of drowning himself. Tom is an awful cut up; worse than I am."

"I am not sure," said the clergyman as gravely as possible, "that your friend Hickman did not go too far. It was not right to hide and listen to what was going on between lovers."

"Mebbe not," answered the man, "but Tom said if he'd a know'd the old man was a going to be so loud, he needn't a got under the settee, and wouldn't a got cotched: he could a just went up stairs and took the board off the pipe hole."

"That," said Mr. Meagre, "would not have made it any better. Do you think it exactly right to tell on the old gentleman?"

"La, me, Mr. Meagre, Tom wouldn't a never told, if the old man hadn't a done it himself tryin to explain things away to people who was in ignorance of the whole thing. He spread reports to his efforts to contradict 'em and now every body knows that he did act foolish. It stands to reason that was no way to court—all so sudden like. A feller ought to take it by degrees—a sort of draw 'em on gradually. That's the way I did."

"I am without experience in such matters," said the parson, "and you may be right in your idea of the way things should be done, but I think you can afford to let the elder rest. He is married now, and you ought to leave him out of the question. I suppose you are satisfied, as you are to have Miss Carson for your wife."

"Ya-a-s, s-i-r-e-e-e. She's what I call a real jewel," exclaimed the man.

"And very elaborately set, I should judge, from what you have told me," chimed in Rev Petit.

"That's true, she set Strapiron a flyin;" quoth the visitor, "said he had too many children. He had three more then than I have now, and I got eight, and most of his'n warn't growed out of the way much."

"Well, eight are enough for any mortal woman to begin with," said the preacher anxious for a truce. "I do not see how your sweet-heart's southwestern name-sake could manage more. I will be on hand to-morrow evening."

"Very well," said the man, "We'll expect you at three o'clock. Be sure and don't disappint us," and then he added in a whisper "look a here, parson we want you to keep this affair secret a while, will you?"

"I don't know about that," said Rev. Petit, half frightened, thinking into a scrape. "I object to be a party to a clandestine transaction."

"I would not like to bind myself. I am under bond to the State and to my consciousness, not to perform the ceremony under certain circumstances, and the whole idea of keeping marriages secret is rather repulsive to me. I cannot see what object you have in view. Are you not of age?"

"Any body can see that for himself," said the man.

"And the other young lady. How old is she?" inquired the parson.

"Over forty, sir," was the reply.

"Then there can be no objection on that score. Any cruel parents to oppose your youthful love?"

"No, sir, our mammies and daddies is both dead long ago."

"Any tyrannical uncles or aunts threatening to disinherit you?"

"The kitchen's all clear of them things, Mr Meagre."

"And no legal difficulties in your way?"

"None, whatsomever. To make a clear breast of it, parson, we're afraid we'll get serenaded. Kitty's half skeered to death, and I am a little uneasy myself on her account. We had a notion to go down to the State line, but Kitty said it looked too much like running away for her, and they'd be sure to find it out and give it to us when we come home. So we thought we'd get married before night and get a horse and buggy and take a short voyage up the pike, and come back after all the boys is gone to roost. And then you know I wouldn't keep a lettin on for some time, till the whole thing blowed over like."

The young servant of the church found that he had struck a rich vein, and he resolved to open it. "O," he said, "is that the reason you want to be so sly? I should think a serenade would be complimentary."

"So it would, if it was the right sort of a one, such as they give the gov'ner when he was here: but they do it with a horse-fiddle."

"A horse-fiddle! What is that?" asked Rev. Petit, with an air of innocence that would have well become one who did not know.

"Why, bless your soul, it's awful. Never hear one? You know they get out what they call a Callythumpian band; some people calls it an ox band. They have tin horns, and buckets, and cow bells, and what's worse a horse-fiddle. They take a big strong store-box, put about two pounds of rosin on it, and saw a heavy scantling for a fiddle-stick. About a dozen catch a hold of each end and draw it over as if they was gittin out shingle stuff with a cross-cut saw. It does make a power of noise. Elephant grunt aint nothin to it. So coplement too, to one that ain't used to it. The first time I heard one of them things I thought I'd sooner hear a drove of these here shave-tailed Kentucky mules holler. It was up on Turnip Hill, all of the horses got to nickering and pawin in the stables, and the cows was bellowin all over town. 'Spec they thought the world was comin to an end—was a pretty sharp sprinkle of Millerites in them days any how. And it did look strange to see the women and all come out in white, just like that man that preached in the market house said it would be in the last time. I tell you the whole town was excited in general. It was the funnyest thing ever heard tell of. Fact is, some of the boys that worked the fiddle got skeered at the noise it made themselves and run away. Mayor Stanhope sent the police to stop it, but it wasn't no kind of use. They was too many of us, or rather of them. They was too many of them. We all had on old clothes, so that nobody wouldn't know us."

"You mean that they all had on old clothes, on that they would not be known," interrupted the parson.

"No use, Mr. Meagre, a body will get cotched, and if nobody else don't catch a feller, he'll be sure to catch himself."

By this time, Rev. Petit's risibility, which had been kept down with some effort, became uncontrollable. He fell back on the bed and laughed immoderately, and his visitor joined in the chorus. When he had thus relieved himself, he said, "Come, now, tell me all about it, were not you engaged in that serenade?"

"Well," said the bridegroom elect, blushing, and evidently embarrassed, "it's a queer thing to confess to a minister—didn't 'spec to do so when I come here, but I don't think you'll judge me hard, or use your influence agin me with Kitty, who thinks a power of you, so I'll owe up that I was in that serenade—one of the principal ones, and I afterwards helped to serenade Strapiron. Had a pig, a screwing as tail that night, to make it squeal."

This last declaration set the little parson off into another fit of laughter, from which it took him some time to recover. "And now, sir," he said as soon as he could regain his gravity, "is not this the ground of your fear, that you will be serenaded?"

"Rather 'spec they'll be up to givin old Nick a taste of his own porridge."

"Is your name Nicholas?" asked the minister.

"No, sir, that's only a sayin I used just now. My name's Michael, but they call me Mike for short."

"Michael! well that name savors of something better. I do not wonder at your success; only you should not bring a rating accusation against your adversary even if he were much worse than he is," said the preacher, anxious to inculcate a lesson. "Still people will name you. But you surely do not think that my ruling elder will return your compliment?"

"No, sir. Don't 'spec he would, but there is plenty that will do it for him. Some of his boys and shop hands would do it unbeknowns to him."

"Well, but I should think you would not mind it if done in the spirit of fun, that is, I do not think you would be offended at it."

"Not me. I'd like it, but then, Kitty—she might have her feelin hurt, and I would not have that done for a slate farm. Kitty's a good girl, Mr Meagre, if I am bad. She talked mighty purty to me last night about jinin the meetin and I'm afraid I will have to do it one of these days. It was the first time I cried for a good many years, and I hated to do it; it seemed a kind of weak, but I couldn't help it, and I did try to pray when I went home, but somehow it seemed awkward to me, and yit my conscience would not let me stop."

The man was evidently sincere. A tear had moistened his eye as he spoke these words. Here was a positive character, and the young parson resolved to pay some attention to it. Mike had perhaps been wild in his earlier years, and some traces of a natural disposition, and of habit, might linger yet, but he respected his intended wife's piety, was frank and open to good influences. And he was about to be surrounded by these good influences.

Now, for the first time, Mr. Meagre identified Kitty Carson in his own mind. "Was she not," he asked, "a large woman who wore a purple bonnet and a mouse-colored shawl embroidered with silk of a lighter shade?" "Yes;" the man who knew her so "easy," said it was she. There could be no mistake this time. The young preacher remembered that he had been introduced to her after service one day, and had formed a good opinion of her. She was always in her seat, seemed to be attentive, modest and sensible, and she had not been indifferent to the highest interest of him in whom she was affianced—knew that every thing depended upon his securing this, and had shown courage enough to speak to him on this important subject. Here, then, were traces of another positive character—of a good character, too, and the parson took a note of what he had heard, in his mind.

"Now, my dear sir," he said to his visitor, "I hope that when you are married you will endeavor to listen to your wife. I do not know much about her, but would take her to be a good woman. Let me ask you whether you have been candid with her? Does she know that you have been wild?"

"Yess, sir," replied the man, "she know'd a good deal and I told her all the rest. Hadn't the heart to keep any thing from her, now when I was goin to marry her. Would as soon think of keepin her out of her meetin. She would have married me long ago but for this wildness, cause she know'd I hadn't any spite in what I did,—that and my daughters. She wouldn't be jined to me as long as they was opposed to it, for she said she didn't believe in a woman's drivin children out of house and home. But they're all knocked under now, she was so gentle like."

"I respect her all the more for that," the parson said, "but you are certainly old enough to give up some kinds of fun."

"And I am goin' to," he said. "You see Mr. Meagre, I was raised in this place. When I was young I had nobody to take care of me, and somehow or other I had a nat'ral disposition to cut up Jack. Used to tote store boxes and signs out of their places when I wasn't more nor fifteen years old, and somehow the thing did not leave me but grow'd on me till I was over thirty. You know there is one or two such persons in every neighborhood. Sometimes I'd get on a spree and drink a little, but I have not done much at that for twenty years, only on special 'casions, such as the President's election, camp meetin' and such times. The last time was when Strapiron got married, then a parcel of us fellers did horse-fiddle him, not that we had any thing agin him, but it did seem funny to see him turn butterfly so soon."

"I am glad to hear," remarked the clergyman, "that you bear no ill will to Mr. Strapiron. I feared from the fact that so much mention was made of him this morning, that there had been more than a generous rivalry between you, and screened him as much as I could, because he was absent, and because he is an elder in my congregation."

"O, no. We are good friends. I sat up with him when he had the typhoid fever, and would do anything in the world for him. His wantin Kitty, brought him up somehow this morning, and then I spect they'll serenade me the tallest kind. But I don't care if they do, for I deserve it. Well, ra'ly I must go. Wish I could get out of here without any body's seein me. Tried to come arly this mornin before many people was about, but then I kind of know'd you was in bed. Been overstayin my time, too, but we got to talkin, and then I used like Whinny down on the corner and wanted him to go away. You won't disappint us, now."

"O no, sir, come to see me again."

"I will: good morning, Mr Meagre."

"Good morning, sir," said the parson, as from his sitting posture he tried to bow his visitor out of the room.

CHAPTER FIFTEENTH.

THE REHEARSAL; A DILEMMA.

The Rev. Petit Meagre having been thoroughly awakened by this remarkable interview, got up when his visitor had left, dressed himself, and looked up the form for marriage with all the characteristic interest of a young preacher who has been called upon to perform that important ceremony for the first time. The service was of course a new one to him, and he studied it with all the trepidation of one who wished to avoid mistakes. He was especially anxious to guard against any error that might invalidate the holy rite, and many questions arose in his mind as to what this and that feature of it involved. And then, to guard against mere awkward embarrassment and confusion:—this was a matter that depended in a great measure upon the preacher and gave the inexperienced brother some concern. For even his old elder who had been united in the bonds of matrimony about as often as most men, perhaps, got out of practice from one time until another. No one but an old Blue Beard ever expected to be married oftener than the time in hand, and of course, no one cares to preserve his dramatic character with a view to anything of the kind in future; that would have implicated his present relations, sadly. It was therefore probable, that, although the groom had been married before, he nevertheless had only a general idea of what was to be gone through with. As for the bride, she might have witnessed many weddings, but had never been married herself, and nothing was to be expected from her in the way of experience. Some things are usually committed to competent bridesmaids, but in this case, the candidates for marriage would scarcely have attendants, but do just as the minister told them to do, and trust that all would be right.

The little parson felt the weight of responsibility that rested upon him, and in the midst of his first anxiety, bethought himself of—pantomime. The first thing to be settled was the position of the parties on the floor. If only he could have given them instructions, all would have been well But, then, even if he could have commanded their presence, he might have tied the knot in the process of practising the ceremony, and thus done away with the necessity of practising, as the end in view would have been accomplished by acts of mere anticipation.

Practising with the parties was then out of the question. The looking glass, too, to which it is handy said preachers sometimes resort, was now of no avail. To have consulted one would have been the veriest Irish bull, as the candidates for connubial bliss would have been wanting. Rev. Petit had a notion to call in Mr Birney's two little children and have them personate the anxious pair, but he remembered that they had gone to school. He next looked for the tongs and shovel, but the weather was warm, and these had been taken out of the room. As a last resort, he whistled up two stuffed chairs—the big one would be "Mike," and the lesser one "Kitty." He then commenced to go through with the ceremony, but was brought to a halt in the midst of it, by the fact, that "Mike" was found to be standing upon the wrong side? This mistake was soon corrected. "Please join your right hands." The minister had to imagine that gracefully done, and then he saw another broker ahead. He did not know what form the parties preferred, but as this was only practice, he might ask, and then begin again. "Maybe you would like to be married with a ring?" The representatives of Mike and Kitty were dumb—the proxies could not speak for their principals, and the parson must go and see Mike and Kitty themselves.

And now the truth flashed upon his mind that during the whole conversation of the morning, he had neither asked Mike what his other name was, or where Kitty lived. "What a man has not in his head he must have in his heels," was a proverb that came into his mind. He must inform himself on these points, as he did not even know where the ceremony was to take place, and it would not do to put off these inquiries until the very hour, as he might have some difficulty in having them answered, and delay matters beyond the appointed time. So he took his hat and went in search of his exhibitor—the young deacon.

"Mr. Green," he asked as he entered the store, "can you tell me where Miss Catherine Carson lives?"

"I don't know her at all," he replied.

"O, yes, you must know her. She belongs to our congregation," said the pastor, "you introduced me to her one day after service. She was the only woman at the Wednesday evening lecture, the night of the heavy shower."

"O! Kitty Carson, you mean. They call her Kit, and I did not know who you were after, first, when you called her Miss Catherine."

Mr. Meagre was disposed to think well of the woman, and somehow or other wished that she had another name. To be sure, Kit Carson was no worse than Sally Flasher or Polly Parkins, but an adventurer had given it a questionable notoriety, and it grated on the clerical ear: in fact, it impressed him painfully with the idea that some one had been unsexed.

Mr. Green knew not where Miss Carson lived; he had been unable to find out when he was showing the pastor around, but said, Mr. Strapiron could tell; "only," he added "if you call her Kitty or simply Kit, he'll understand better who you mean."

The preacher left the store, his umbrella over his head to keep the sun off, and went in search of his elder. He did not find him in his shop; "has just gone up to the house," some one said, and thither the Rev. Petit followed him. Here he came upon the family at dinner, and a large family it was, with journeymen, apprentices, children and all.

"Won't you set up and take a bite?" asked the mistress of the house, as she pushed two or three little ones away from the table to clear a place for him.

"You quality folks don't eat dinner till most night. Reckon our'n is too airly for you," said the elder.

"It is not quite my hour, and I am sorry to disturb you, but I have a little business with you," said the pastor.

"Any thing pertick'ler?"

"No, Sir: I only wished to ask about some of our members. With your permission, I'll just wait in your front room here, until you have dined," said the parson withdrawing.

In fact, he was just going to inquire for Kitty's whereabouts, when it occurred to him that some impertinent questions might be put to him, and that he would be forced either to prevaricate or betray confidence, and put the boys on the scent of the wedding. To have done so would have been synonymous with telling them to serenade the couple.

The elder soon joined his pastor. He came into the parlor picking his teeth with a fork that he brought with him from the table, and followed by the little Strapirons supplied with bread and molasses.

"I have but a moment to stay, sir," said the reverend youth. "I have not yet found out where all of our members live and come for some information."

"Don't brother Green know?" said the elder. "There were some whom he could not find when he went around."

"Who are they?"

"Why, for instance Miss Kitty Carson."

To Rev. Petit's surprise, Mr. Strapiron was taken all aback at the mention of the name, and looked very foolish. "Mr. Meagre," he said, as soon as he had somewhat recovered from his confusion, "are you certain nobody sent you here to ax me just for a trick?"

"I am certain, sir," replied the parson, "that your friend deacon Green sent me here simply, as I thought, because he could not give me the information I wanted, himself. If there is any trick in it, I am not a party to it."

"Well, then," said the elder, "you have been sent here by Providence just to give me a chance to explain some things to you. Children, you go out—here take this fork with you. I'll just shut this door; this is a matter that my wife don't like pertick'lerly to hear about."

CHAPTER SIXTEENTH.

THE TRIBULATIONS OF ELDER STRAPIRON.

Having closed the door securely and looked around as if to assure himself that no other auditor was present, the old gentleman drew a chair up in front of his pastor, sat down upon it, put his elbows on his knees, and looked over the top of his spectacles, right into the young incumbent's eyes.

"You see," he commenced, "when you came here just now, and mentioned Kitty's name, I thought, mebbe, Minister Hugenot had been telling you something about me and her, and that it was intended to raise another fuss between me and another preacher, or between me and my wife, but I am one of them that believes that whatever is to be, is, and now, I know Providence sent you to me."

"Mr. Green sent me," interrupted the parson, unwilling to hear the old man's yarn, and yet perfectly satisfied that it would be rich.

"But then you know, Brother Meagre, that Providence uses us instrumentally like sun and rain, and no doubt, Brother Green was the means of bringing you here just in order that you might learn the truth, and the truth you shall know. You see when my last wife died, I was laid off, on account of my motherless children. True, as Mr. Hugenot said, granny was here to do everything for them that was needed, and my darter was grown up, but then they had no one to call mother. That distressed me. I did not care for inclination, but only sought to know my duty. I searched the scriptures, and there I was told marriage is honorable, so I thought it my duty to supply my wife's place, and then I sought out from Providence who I should take for a mother for my babes, and he pointed right to Kitty. She'd come to me in visions of the night. Well, I goes to her and axes her, and she wouldn't have nothin' to do with me. I even got down on my knees to her and wept like a child, and threatened to drown myself: you know Providence directs us to do some very desperate things, and"—

"No he don't," exclaimed the clergyman impatiently.

"Well, just hear me out, Mr. Meagre, and then judge."

Mr. Meagre did so: half worried and half amused, he resigned himself to hear the case, and only hoping that he would not be called upon to give a formal verdict, which he knew would be equivalent to giving offence.

"As I was saying," continued the witness, "Kitty turned a deaf ear to my supplication. She said I was crazy, and that, Mr. Meagre, was no way to rebuke an elder. And then Tom Hickman served me a curus trick. He come out from under a settee, and said I ought to go in a swimin', as if cold water would quench the best feelings of the human heart. Well, this was all of a Saturday night. On Sunday night followin', I got out of meetin before most any body else. I axed her if I mought go home with her, and she said, "No," and the next thing I know'd she was going away locked arms with Mike Stoner, and that was what I called being unequally yoked with unbelievers, for Mike is an unbeliever, at least was he aint no member of the church, and got fined once for shooting out old year with a horse pistol."

"Well, when I saw that Kitty was a throwin' herself away, I thought it my duty to try and reclaim her, and I went to my pastor as one of his spiritual advisers and asked him to interpose with his authority. I pinted out passages of scripture, showing him the error of Kitty's ways to him, and in spite of this he turned around and gave me such a lecture as nobody ever heard. You know Minister Hugenot could do that. He was a good man—Minister Hugenot was, but rather plain spoken like, and it wasn't very pleasant when he opened on a feller."

"But all this did not dampen my zeal in the good cause of Kitty's welfare. I got a nice red sheet of paper and writ her a letter, telling her just who Mike Stoner was, and how members of the Church ought to love one another, and saying that I'd send the two least children up the country with granny, and bind the boys out, and let my darter Betsy git married, and wouldn't let the rest call her mother if she didn't like it, if she would only take back what she said. And then I puts the letter in a kiver, nice as that one round that valentine on the table there—it cost me a levy, and I put it in my hat to give it to Mr. Hugenot, and asked him to give it to Kitty. I know'd she didn't come to the post office much, and so it might a laid there a week, and that if I sent the children with it she would not take it, and so I thought I would secure my pastor's service."

"Well, I met Mr. Hugenot, and asked him to take the letter to Kitty for me, and he said he wouldn't do no such thing; I was making a goose out of myself, and if I didn't stop my foolishness he'd blow me out of water, and that meant he'd suspend me out of meetin'. Now, mind you, all this was before I had directed the letter. Fact was, I couldn't write well, and was a going to git old Mr. Hearty, the commission merchant to direct it for me. And when my own minister turned his back on me I thought I would get Hearty's boy to take it up for me, too; but when I got to his store and took off my hat I found the letter was gone. Yes, Mr. Meagre, I lost that letter, and what was worse, Mike Stoner found it. You may laugh, as if you don't believe it, or not, but it's just as I tell you.

"Mike said as there was no directions on the letter, and as it wasn't sealed he read it to find out whose it was, and then took it to Kitty, and axed her to let him publish it with all in about him, if only my name was left to it. But Kitty took it to Minister Hugenot, and said she was pestered almost to death. And then you ought to a heard him. He said I was always twisting Providence into my conceit, and that I wasn't influenced by consideration for my children, and that I pretended to be Mike's friend. I denied at first that I said anything agin Mike, for I had forgot it, I was in so much trouble; and said that I would face Mr. Stoner. So he sent him down with the letter, and advised him not to kick me, though he said he could not hurt him for it if he did, for he was not a Church member, but he told him that if he would go home with Kitty every night it would be purgatory for me. I believe the preacher would have helped Stoner if he hadn't been opposed to interfering one way or other. He liked him because he was a kind of open-hearted feller, that wouldn't hide his worst acts from even a parson. But Kitty will never marry Mike until he promises to join the meetin'. He's been trying about her for these ten years and I think she is doing him good. He don't cuss any more, and hasent been on a spree since—well, for a long time, and its hard to make him mad. Even that time he fotch the letter to me, he only just laughed at me, and jumped up and cracked his heels together, and crow'd like a rooster."

"Now, as I said before, these things is just as I tell you. I thought I would just set you right, in case any body should want to misrepresent things. Did Minister Hugenot tell you anything about it?"

"Not much," said the young parson. "Not half as much as you have told me, and he did not make it half as bad as you did. I think, perhaps, that your representation is a truthful one."

"Well, I don't think old brother Hugenot treated me quite right. My wife couldn't bear him, and, indeed, I had a notion to join the New Schools, but I know'd that all the women would be down on me, and so I was determined to maintain my attachment to the Church of my fathers, just for the sake of principle. As for Kitty Carson, I always did say she was a fine woman, though my wife wont hear to it."

"I have just been thinking, Mr. Strapiron," said the little successor of Mr. Hugenot, "that you are married now, and that there is no use to revive your affair with Kitty. I did not ask you to make a father confessor of me."

"Yes, Providence led me to my present wife," said the elder.

"I thought," retorted the clergyman, "that Providence was leading you the other way. But I hope you are satisfied with your present arrangements."

"Yes, for if a man aint satisfied with his wife, it's bad enough."

At this point, Mrs. Strapiron entered the room, followed by three or four pledges of love. It is hard to say what disposition they had made of their bread, but the molasses seemed to have been transferred to their faces and clothes. The good lady's liege lord gave Mr Meagre a sort of wink to drop the subject upon which they had been talking, but Mrs Strapiron had heard the last sentence of the conversation, and asked, "who aint satisfied with his wife? Any body in our church?"

"No," said her husband meekly, "me and our pastor was just saying it was bad enough when a man wasn't. Had no reference to any allusions."

The youthful shepherd arose to leave. Mr. Strapiron followed him to the door and whispered, "Kitty lives with Tom Hickman—her brother-in-law, next door above old Mr. Huggermugger's. She's a fine woman."

During the long rigamarole that Mr. Meagre had heard, he did his best to preserve his gravity, and only had it up-set two or three times, but now being clear from the house he almost laughed aloud. Miss Ella Tudor and her sister Blanche, met him going down town, and afterwards asked him what made him wear such a broad grin that morning. But he could give them no satisfaction without betraying state secrets, and had to put them off by saying, "I had often listened to the gossip of old women, but never before spent a half day in listening to the gossip of old men."

The young divine, had, of course, gleaned from his elder's conversation that the surname of the gentleman who visited him that morning, was Stoner. He also found out, although he had well nigh come away without finding out, where Miss Carson lived, and he lost no time in repairing to Mr. Hickman's. "Yes," he was told, "Kit's at home." In the course of his conversation with her, Mr. Meagre told her that Mr. Stoner had called upon him that morning. Having ascertained that she preferred to be married without the ring, he went back to his room and found the chairs as he had left them—as near together as Mike and Kitty were to stand the next day to have the marriage ceremony performed. This reminded him again of the service, and he studied it, until he thought he could render it to the satisfaction of all concerned.

At quarter before three the next day, he tapped again at Tom Hickman's door, and found the parties ready to proceed to business. The ceremony took but little time, and no egregious blunders were committed, although Rev. Petit spoke hurriedly and showed more trepidation than any one on the floor. Mike seemed to be very glad that he was alive, and responded firmly and loudly to the usual questions. Tom Hickman stood behind Kitty and snatched a kiss from her before her husband had time to release her hand, a feat which the enraptured brother-in-law pronounced a success, by smacking his lips and jumping up and striking his heels together, perhaps, as much as Mike had done when he gave the letter to his infatuated rival.

For this "little job" as it was called Mike deposited in Mr. Meagre's hand two dollars and a half, to use for a fee of gold.

To a little time a horse and buggy were brought to the door, and the newly married pair "put on their things," and so got ready to start on the contemplated "voyage." Tom brought out a chair to help the bride into the vehicle, and seemed strongly tempted to repeat the strategy he had gone through with in the house. The groom repudiating the chair, put his foot on the hub of the front wheel, and with a remarkable display of agility seated himself by a single spring at the side of his new wife. As he did so, he said to the parson, "Mr. Meagre, you no-du't keep the wedding a secret, if you don't want to. Let 'em come on with their corn-cobs and cart wheels. I can manage 'em."

Family Circle.

HASTY MARRIAGES.

A thousand hearts and homes of sadness respond to the oft-quoted passage on hasty marriages, which, we believe, appeared first in the New York Tribune.

There is not a city, there is scarcely a township, which does not number among its inhabitants women who have married on very short acquaintance, only to be abused, deserted, and left a life-long sorrow to the families in which they were born and reared, and which they most imprudently and improperly deserted to share the fortunes of relative strangers. If young ladies would realize how grossly indelicate as well as culpably reckless such marriages appear in the eyes of the observing, they surely would forbear. A year's thorough acquaintance, with the most circumstantial accounts from disinterested and reliable witnesses of the antecedents from childhood, are the very least guarantee which any woman who realizes what marriage is, will require of a stranger. Even then, if her parents are not fully satisfied as well as herself, she should still hesitate. Marriage is an undertaking in which no delay can be so hazardous as undue precipitation.

[Adapted from the German of Hoffmann.]

A STORY FOR THE LITTLE FOLKS.

MARTIN THE FISHERMAN.

Martin and his poor but happy little family lived right down beside the river Rhine. The village was farther back in the country, but the fisherman's cottage was close to the water, so that he would be near his nets. The vines grew up around it, and its walls were of spotless white.

Happiness dwelt there. Their possessions were small—only a cow and two goats; but the king upon his throne was not more contented than they were.

One beautiful evening, after Martin had set his nets, and returned home in his little boat, the family sat out of doors, on the long wooden bench, and looked at the setting sun. The air was pleasant, and beautiful sail-boats glided down the rapid river. Martin's wife commenced a lively song; then all the family joined in. The sailors on the boats and rafts that were passing up and down the river caught up the strain, and the whole country around was vocal with the grand concert.

By-and-by the fisherman's family commenced to talk about the old Duke, who lived in a large, ivy covered house, a great way off—they could not tell how far.

"I wonder if we will ever get back the eighteen thousand dollars that my poor father loaned him," said Susan, Martin's wife.

"Indeed, I should be afraid to make the request," replied the humble fisherman; "I suppose he would have me put in prison."

"Never mind, never mind, Martin," she continued; "we have lived ten years without it now, and I think we can still get along by our own labor. But there have been so few fish lately, that I am beginning to tremble for our bread."

"Come, Susan, brush away your tears, (for she had begun to weep;) times will soon be better with us," answered Martin. After their evening prayers were offered, they all went to sleep.

And nobody in all this world ever slept sweeter than did that fisherman, his wife, and their three little peasant children.

About two o'clock in the morning, Martin was startled out of his happy dreams.

"What is the matter? Am I asleep, or awake? am I in my boat, or in my house?"

He screamed out at the top of his voice, "Wake up! wake up! or we shall all be drowned!"

"What is the trouble?" cried out poor frightened Susan.

"The water! the water! There is a freshet to-night! Look at the water streaming through the door, and in at the windows! See, it is coming up through the floor! Wake up the children, dress them as quickly as you can, and I will go out and get the boat, if it is not already too late. The water is knee-deep here in our house; I am afraid we shall all be drowned!"

"We are lost! we are lost!" cried Susan.

Soon Martin was out in search of his boat. Happily for him, he found it just as the freshet was about taking it away from the stake to which it was tied. He pulled it along after him, as he waded almost up to his waist in the rising water, back to his little cottage.

There was but little time for Susan to dress her little children; and, after she had done it, she was very doubtful about any of them getting off safe. Then she caught up some of her most valuable things, and tying them in a bundle, said: "Now, my dear little ones, this is all I can save. You see we are going out into the world without a dollar." The chairs, the boxes, and brooms, and shoes, and many other things, were floating about the room.

"Hurry, Susan!" cried Martin as loud as he could. "Bring the children here to the window; give them to me just as quickly as you can; don't wait for anything; we may be lost any how! Hurry, hurry! here's the boat at the window; every moment is worth a fortune!"

Crash! crash! It was a tree that had been washed away, and had come floating down against the fisherman's cottage. It shook from floor to roof, and it is a wonder that the terrific blow, together with the rushing water, did not carry it off.

"Get in now yourself, Susan. Be careful, now; it is as much as I can do to keep the boat steady."

Susan and the children were now in the boat, which was tossing about like a little chip.

"Thank God, we are all spared!" both Martin and his wife exclaimed. "But all our little property is lost; yet God will provide for all our wants. Economy and perseverance will supply all our necessities."

Just as Martin was about to loose the rope, and let the boat float down with the current, his wife began to sob and cry as if her heart would break?

"What is the matter?" asked the fisherman. "Has one of the children fallen overboard!"

"Oh! no; but my Bible, my old Bible! It was my father's last gift to me, and I shall never be happy without it!"

"I shall have have it, if I risk my life to get it. Where is it? Oh! I know; it is on the shelf just over the door."

Martin had no sooner said these words, than he jumped through the window, got the old Bible, stuffed it in his bosom, and returned into the little boat.

"Now I am happy," said Susan. "Everything else may go. My father's old Bible—why, I wouldn't take the world for it!"

The boat was untied, and began to go down the river with the tide. Martin tried to row towards the bank, and, after drifting down about two miles, he succeeded in reaching the land, just alongside a little hotel.

"Now we are safe, thank God!" he said, "and not one of us is lost. Let us go into this little hotel, and maybe the landlord will welcome us, though we are penniless."

He was right. "Come in, my good friends," said the old, gray-haired landlord. "These are awful times. I know you, Martin, for I have bought fish from you hundreds of times. You are an honest man, and shall have the best in my house for yourself and family. Come in; I will see that you have dry clothes, and a comfortable room, and some bread and coffee."

It was about daybreak, or a little after, that Martin went upon the top of the house, where quite a number of people were collected. They were watching a man, about a mile down the river, on the other side. He was on top of his large castle, waving a little white flag, in sign of distress. He was afraid he would be carried off by the flood; and it really did seem as if he was lost. The river was beating up against the castle walls; soon they must give way.

"Ah! I fear Baron Wilmer is lost," said the good-hearted old landlord. "It is no use to try to get to him to save him. He will be carried away before any one could get to him; and besides, no one is strong enough to row across the river. Who would think of undertaking it?"

"I wouldn't," said one. "I should be afraid," said another; and so on until every one had spoken but Martin the fisherman.

He looked again, and there was the waving white flag, and there were the waves beating higher and higher against the castle walls. Martin began to weep; his breast heaved with emotion. At last he said: "I will go and try to save him."

"Bravo!" cried the landlord. "Now, who will go with Martin, to save the Baron? He is a nobleman, and worth your labor and risk of life." Every one refused to go with the fisherman. Then he declared he would go alone in his little fishing-boat.

I will not tell you the particulars. But Martin rowed along to the castle, and saved the noble Baron Wilmer. The next day, after the waters spread down a little, they came across the river. As soon as they landed the Baron said:—

"Now, Martin, we must separate, perhaps never to meet again in this world. You will no doubt take your family from the little hotel, and commence business in some way or other. I wish I could assist you: but I have no more money than will take me to England. I can stay here no longer, now that my castle has fallen, and all my wealth has gone with it. God bless you, Martin! If I am conscious of anything, I will pray for you on my death-bed."

"May God bless you, Baron!" replied the humble fisherman. "I want nothing for my labor I have only done my duty. May Heaven's blessing follow you!"

Martin sold his boat for seven dollars, and then took his family far back into the country, some forty miles off. He hired a little cottage on the outskirts of a great forest, and procured a bow and arrow, in order to shoot game for a livelihood for himself and his family. There was a plenty of game in the forest, but it did not belong to him, and he had as yet no right to shoot any of the pigeons, or rabbits, or deer that abounded from one end of it to the other.

A thought occurred to him. He told it to his wife and children, one evening, in these words:—"This great forest is full of game, and I have learned that it belongs to the old Duke, who can't live much longer any how. The overseer of his whole estate lives about two miles from here, and I will go and see if I can't be allowed the privileges of shooting game in such a splendid place. If I succeed, then we'

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Published by the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, for the Dissemination of Religion, Morality, Literature and Science.

Rev. Elisha Weaver, Editor. PHILADELPHIA, JUNE 28, 1862. Vol. II.—No. 26.—New Series.—Whole No. 68.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

Is published every Saturday on behalf of the

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,

BY

REV. ELISHA WEAVER,

General Book Steward,

No 619 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

Notice.—All letters and matters pertaining to the Book Concern subscribers, sale of papers, and all moneys (or) agents for Book Concern or for paper, must be directed to Rev Elisha Weaver, Box No 434, Philadelphia and all matters must be express, and in our city, must be directed to E. Weaver, No. 619 Pine St

All articles or matter of the Christian Recorder, must be directed to E. Weaver, Box No. 434, Philadelphia.

TERMS

Two Dollars a year, payable in advance. Single copies, five cents

ADVERTISEMENTS.

We solicit Advertisements of all descriptions, suitable for a religious newspaper, which will be published as follows:—

Cards or Advertisements, inserted for one year, provided they do not exceed eight lines, ten dollars, paper included; or, eight dollars without the paper.—six months, for six dollars, paper included.—three months, four dollars,—one month, $1 50, paper in each case included.

CORRESPONDING EDITORS OF CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Rev. J. P. CAMPBELL, Rev. A. W. WAYMAN,
" J. M. WILLIAMS, " B. T. WILLIAMS,
" G. H. GRAHAM, " C. BURCH,
Rev. L. ROSS.

Poetry.

THE CLOCK OF HUMAN LIFE.

'Tis one o'clock—the silvery chimes
Are ringing soft and low,
Over an infant's cradle bed,
As it swings to and fro;
While smiling near, a teether bends,
Listening to the clear bells
Ringing the babe's sweet advent hour,
In her heart's deepest wells.
Tinkle! tinkle! soft and clear,
On the loving mother's ear.

'Tis two—three—four—in merry peals
Bells strike the passing hour,
While bliss pours in through every sense,
As on this mortal shore
The tripping feet of childhood fly,
While air, and earth, and sky,
Are full of joy and childhood's bells
Are ringing clear and high.
Jingle! jingle! clear and high,
Ring the bells of childhood's sky.

Now five and six ring on the ear,
In deeper golden notes,
And tender chimes, and loving peals,
Round youth's sweet dream-life floats.
These notes are filling every sense
Of the young maiden life,
And their soft mellow lullabye,
Hush every thought of strife.
Love me, love me, ring the bells,
As round fair youth their music swells.

'Tis seven now—'tis eight—'tis nine;
And deeper sounds the toll,
As in the solemn march of life,
They ring with fuller swell;
And toll of strife, and toil, and care—
Of grief and sundered ties,
And to the heart enblued by grief,—
They're ringing in the sky,
Of rest above, where Jesus dwells.
Come home, come home, they faintly swell.

'Tis ten o'clock—the vanished hours,
Ring out their warning tones;
The silver notes of infancy.
And golden chimes are gone.
The past is all a fleeting dream;
The future, O, how grand!
As 'mid its deep and solemn peals,
With parted lips we stand.
Ding-dong, ding-dong, is slowly rolls,
Pealing the requiem of souls.

The clock has struck eleven—hark!
The awful moments pass,
'Mid muffled bells, we hear them die,
And watch time's hour-glass.
Solemn and slow we hear their knell;
They ring of ending strife;
There's more of tender joy than grief,
Which tells of endless life.
O! joyful knells, life's evening bell,
Of conflicts past, their music tells.

'Tis twelve o'clock—the midnight hour
Rolls out its thrilling knell.
Ah! not of grief, and not of death,
Does its deep tolling tell.
To Christian souls—oh high! so grand
Are the bright hopes it rings.
That 'mid the solemn knells of time,
The parting spirit sings.
As midnight bells fade soft away,
'Tis endless one in upper day.

'Tis endless one in that bright world,
One everlasting day;
Hours have pealed their last farewell,
And minutes passed away.
'Tis one effulgent, brilliant noon,
One flood of light and love;
One solemn never-ending tune,
In that sweet home above.
O! the deep joy of evermore,
When waking first on that blest shore.

Episcopal Recorder.

THE PARTED SPIRIT.

"YE CANNOT TELL WHENCE IT COMETH, OR WHITHER IT GOETH."

Mysterious in its birth,
And viewless as the blast;
Where hath the spirit fled from earth,
For ever past?

I ask the grave below—
It keeps the secret well;
I call upon the heavens to show—
They will not tell.

Of earth's remotest strand,
Are tales and tidings known;
But from the spirit's distant land,
Returneth none.

Winds waft the breath of flowers,
To wanderers o'er the wave,
But no message from the bowers
Beyond the grave.

Proud Science scales the skies
From star to star to roam,
But reacheth not the shore where lies
The spirit's home.

Impervious shadows hide
This mystery of Heaven;
But, where all knowledge is denied,
To hope is given!

JOHN MALCOLM.

GOD AN UNFAILING REFUGE.

The smoothest seas will sometimes prove
To the confiding bark untrue;
And if she trust the stars above,
They can be treacherous too

Th' embrageous oak, in pomp outspread,
Full oft, when storms the welkin rend,
Draws lightning down upon the head
It promised to defend.

But thou art true, incarnate Lord!
Who didst vouchsafe for man to die;
Thy smile is sure, thy plighted word
No change can falsify!

I bent before thy gracious throne,
And asked for peace with suppliant knee;
And peace was given—nor peace alone,
But faith, and hope, and constancy!

WORDSWORTH.

SHORT HYMNS ON PASSAGES OF SCRIPTURE.

BY C. WESLEY

GEN. XIV. 9.

Is God's peculiar people mine?
To them I then shall be Gathered beneath the Saviour's sign,
And Christ in glory see.
Gathered into the church above,
Where'er to Christ belong
Shall meet to sing the song of love,
The Lamb's eternal song

GEN. VI. 6. "It repented the Lord, that he had made man.

He mourns His frustrated intent,
Who bade the rebel be;
But never did the Lord repent
That He hath redeemed me

For the Christian Recorder.

LETTER FROM WASHINGTON

Mr. Editor:—I promised, the week before last, to give a synopsis of Mr. Wm. J. Watkins' lecture, delivered in Israel Church on the 5d inst. But after reconsidering my promise, I thought it better to change the plan of my intention, and speak of its merits, for however much we might epitomize the lecture, it would be too lengthy for one letter

It is hardly needful for me to say that Mr. Watkins is an uncompromising emigrationist, for he has established his reputation in that direction long since. But, on entering the church he rose up before the people with all the boldness of a unicorn, apparently possessing all that greatness of soul that should characterize a man suitably fitted to the great task of exerting a reformation among a people who have been disfranchised and crushed beneath the unmanning yoke of slavery. With no written lecture or notes, he stood before the most intelligent audience of white and colored that could be raised in Washington, for over two hours, pouring out one unbroken flood of light and information from his exhaustless store of knowledge—so pleasing and interestingly captivating to his hearers, that when he stopped, though 11 o'clock at night, the cry from all parts of the house was, "Go on, don't stop." He corresponds in toto with what Prof. Fowler very wisely said of Daniel Webster, that the greatness of his own native genius held him up, and enchained his hearers. It appeared at times that he would fall back upon the power of his intellectuality and come forth with such overwhelming arguments, and picture them, though in words so enchantingly reasonable, before the mental observation of his audience, that however great the inconveniences surrounding them, they, notwithstanding, would start for Hayti before the rising of the morrow's sun. And though Dr. Rock, of Boston, one week previously, when opposing emigration, was loudly clapped, and most cheerfully stamped, as a demonstration of corresponding sentiment, yet Mr. Watkins, one week after, had the same parties, when asked "Where would they go?" crying out, "To Hayti, Hayti!" The inconsistency, though very regrettable, was, however, very laughable.

If Mr. Watkins can make converts as fast as he made them in Washington, he would do well in the ministry; yet I would be fearfully doubtful about them getting to heaven, if they did not go there better than they are going to Hayti. But, in short, Mr. Watkins is unquestionably a talented man, an eloquent speaker, a great originalist, and one peculiarly adapted to the masses: his manner is chaste, logical and terse; his ideas are rich, grand and glowing; his language plain and comprehensible—he possessing the seldom possessed power of firing his auditors with his own soul and spirit; his denunciations burn and blister; he pours vengeance in the most scathing tirades upon his antagonist, so that when he leaves him, he leaves him an object of pity; he takes up such men as Crittenden and Vallendigham and handles them with such thunderbolts of merciless wo, that if it were their persons instead of their principles he was thus treating, God have mercy upon their destiny. But the objects of his affection are treated with the most tender regard. He takes them in the arms of his favor, and encircles them in the embrace of his attachment, and lavishes, in one sweep of his eloquence, a thousand incontestable arguments of his fondest respect. Few men have the power of making so radical a change in a moment's time as he. One moment his countenance appears to gleam with the most cheerful regard, the next he writes upon his visage hatred, disgust and indignation.

Mr. Watkins being an agent of the Haytien Emigration Association, he held up her claims to the colored people of America with a familiarity and interest seldom evinced by any of its agents. He said we might sing

"In Dixie's land we take our stand,
We will live and die in Dixie's land."

But living and dying is about all we ever would do in this country. We might stay to fight it out, as many had said, but how men could fight without arms he could not see, and he knew the colored people had none in this country. He stated that many who had claimed to be the colored man's friend, were actuated with a desire to rid the country of the negro, and that there were not five leading men in this country who desired to see the negro on an equality with the white, and that one thousand years would not secure one colored man the nomination for President. But Hayti, he allowed, held out inducements for every office in the gift of the people.

Mr. Wm. T. Watkins is the brother of the Rev. George T. Watkins, a very learned divine of the A. M. E. Church in Baltimore city. Both of these distinguished men seem to be providentially set apart for the work of reformation,—one in a political, and the other in a religious sphere. Rev. G. T. Watkins is one of the most modest men, for his ability, I have ever seen; while he is a great scholar, a masterly writer, an exhaustless thinker, yet he is unassuming, unpretending, easy and affable, and courteous to any one however inferior, and appears to live non sibi sed omnibus. Mr. W. T. Watkins has left for Hayti with 120 contrabands. H. M. T.

Washington, June 16th, 1862

For the Christian Recorder.

FROM NEWPORT, R. I.

June 19, 1862.

Mr. Editor:—I am at home, in the bosom of my dear family. I am now gathering up my bundle, which is very small, and my wife is preparing my North Carolina and Virginia costume. I am eager for my flight, praying the time to revolve that I might be on the great deep, speeding onward to my destined field.

Five days, on my way to Newport, I tarried in the city of Providence. The Young Ladies' and Gents' E Club of said city gave an exhibition for my benefit while I was attending my Conference at New Bedford, Mass. It cannot be said of these ladies and gents, as of many, or as the old adage, "Out of sight, out of mind." While I was their humble pastor, they manifested their love towards me—now, since the change of my ministerial labor in another clime, they remain the same—their love is none the less. I shall ever remember and speak of those, my warm and tried friends, in the highest terms

I would also recommend them to my successor as his friends. They are of the spirit of Mary, Martha, Joseph, and John. Mary chose the good part, Martha incumbered with much serving, Joseph begged the body of Jesus, and John reclined his head on the breast of the dear Redeemer.

On Friday evening, the 13th instant, the President of the Club, in behalf of the members, presented, with her delicate maiden hand, the sum of $3 68. Subsequently they made up the round number of 87

The humble recipient returned his grateful thanks in a few remarks, and invoked the blessings of God upon them

In order, Mr. Editor, to encourage their noble acts, and to show that we poor ministers of the A. M. E. Church in America do not depreciate their love towards us, I crave the insertion of their names in the well-conducted Recorder of Bethel Church, as follows:

OFFICERS

President—Miss Eliza Forrest.
Vice-President—Miss Sarah Hall.
Secretary—Miss Louisa Treadwell
Assistant—Miss Ellen Murray.
Treasurer—Miss Eliza Dorrell.

SPEAKERS.

Mr. John Scott, Mr. Benjamin Schambell,
" John Brown, " James Dorrell,
" Thomas Chambers, " Frederick Waugh,
" Robert Adams, Miss Hattie Williams,
Miss Freelove Brown, Miss Mary Jackson,
Miss Mary Adams.

Observe, Mr. and Miss Adams, who sang so beautifully in their first grand exhibition—they are worthy of much note. The audience were captivated by their sweet voices, calling the singers out the second time. The Club have elected new officers since their last exhibition. They now have for their President Miss Louisa Treadwell. Wherever we go, their names as such a Club shall be wafted on every Southern breeze, breathing forth a fervent prayer for their success in the work of our Heavenly Father. May God bless them with good husbands and wives, and affectionate children.

Mr Editor, my time has expired. Next Monday night, the Lord willing, I leave my dear wife and dutiful children for New York, there to wait for the troubling of the Atlantic waters. Before I leave said city I shall write to you again. My warm and heart-felt love to all my dear brethren, especially to our worthy Bishop Nazrey, from all of whom I crave their prayers that my faith fail not, while I go weeping, sowing that precious seed—and that I may return again rejoicing, bringing many sheaves. Amen. So mote it be.

In time and in eternity,

George A. Rue.

For the Christian Recorder.

NEWARK, N. J.

Mr. Editor—As I have just entered on my field of labor at the above named place, I thought it would not be amiss to say a word in relation to my charge.

I came here on the 14th instant, and I found my people generally well, except one aged father in Christ, who is quite feeble. On Sabbath morning I went to the church, where I met the Right Rev. D. A. Payne, who made me a flying visit, and preached a very interesting and instructive discourse to the mothers, setting forth the character of Hannah, the godly mother, and earnestly impressing it on the minds of all mothers to copy her example. The occasion was one of great solemnity.

I visited the Sabbath School at 10 o'clock. This department is not as perfect as I wish it, but, as I am a lover of Sabbath Schools, I shall try to make it second to none in the State. At two and a half o'clock we had a discourse from Brother Nelson on redemption, and in the evening we had another discourse from Brother Rays on the necessity of religion. On the whole, the day was one of rejoicing, and the prospects for the future look bright—both temporal and spiritual. The colored citizens of Newark and the adjacent towns assembled on the 18th instant in Liberty Hall, Newark, to celebrate the act of Emancipation in the District of Columbia. The occasion was one of great interest. Speeches were made by Revs. Mr. Adams, Mr. Gloster, W. G. Strong, and others; and every thing passed off very pleasantly indeed.

I would just say that I have not forgotten the Recorder, and I mean to see how many cash subscribers I can get in this city, and I hope soon to send along their names, with their money.

Yours for the onward march of the Recorder,

J. H.

GENERAL BOOK STEWARD'S REPORT CONTINUED—No. 5.

The Christian Recorder Reported from January, 1861, to May 1st, 1862

CASH RECEIVED.

1861
Cash rec. before going to press,			98 20
Jan. 11.	Papers sold,		3 14
12.	"		5 21
12	Subscription,		2 00
14.	Cash for papers,		1 56
15	"		3 88
16	"		1 78
17	"		4 96
17	Cash subscriber,		1 00
18.	Papers sold,		2 00
19.	"		6 08
21	Subscription,		1 50
21.	Papers sold,		7 75
22.	Advertisements,		1 25
22.	Papers sold,		24
23	"		56
24	Subscriptions,		4 00
24.	Papers sold,		78
24.	Donation from Mr Bliss,		5 00
25.	Subscriptions,		3 00
25.	Papers sold,		1 82
25	"		2 99
26.	"		5 00
28.	Subscriptions,		5 00
28	Papers sold,		12 10
29.	Papers sold,		52
29	Subscriptions,		2 00
30.	Papers sold,		2 07
31.	Papers sold,		18
31.	Subscriptions,		2 00
			$187 39
Feb 1	Papers sold,		68
1	Papers sold,		2 00
2.	Subscription,		2 00
2	Papers sold,		5 77
4	"		24
4	Subscription,		2 00
5.	Papers sold,		12 00
5.	Subscriptions,		4 30
6	Papers sold,		78
7.	Papers sold,		1 39
7.	Papers sold,		88
8.	Papers sold,		30
8.	Subscription,		2 00
9.	Subscriptions,		4 50
9.	Papers sold,		7 59
11.	Subscriptions,		11 00
11.	Papers sold,		2 95
12.	Subscription,		1 50
12.	Subscription,		1 00
13.	Papers sold,		5 30
13.	Subscription,		1 00
13.	Papers sold,		8 05
14.	Papers sold,		8
15.	Papers sold,		45
15.	Subscriptions,		10 00
16.	Papers sold,		6 22
18.	Papers sold,		12 00
18.	Papers sold,		2 16
19.	Papers sold,		26
20.	Papers sold,		1 55
20.	Subscriptions,		3 50
21	Papers sold,		3 00
21.	Subscription,		1 00
21.	Advertisement,		25
22.	Papers,		83
23.	Papers sold,		7 30
25.	Subscriptions,		9 76
25.	Papers sold,		3 08
26.	Papers sold,		2 53
27.	Subscriptions,		23 14
			$157 79
March 1	Papers sold,		60
2.	Papers sold,		11 51
4.	"		28
5	"		3 00
5	Subscriptions,		3 00
6	"		6 64
7	"		6 97
8.	Papers sold,		3 00
8.	Advertisement,		3 25
9.	Papers sold,		8 62
9.	Subscription,		2 00
9.	Papers sold,		3 53
12.	Papers sold,		9 23
13.	"		3 78
14.	"		1 40
15	"		6 13
16.	"		6 65
16.	Paid Miss Jackson,		37
18.	Papers sold,		73
19.	Papers sold,		36
19.	Papers sold,		10 00
19.	"		2 40
20.	For paper from the publication city,		10 04
21.	Papers sold,		3 75
22.	"		1 61
23.	"		36
23.	To Rev. W. Moore,		2 00
25.	Papers sold,		10
26.	"		21
27.	"		1 25
28.	"		10 44
29.	"		1 20
30.	"		5 45
			$160 43

THE CROSS.

One of the most favored spots of wild New England is the city of the dead near Cambridge You can't help it, you must be touched; wander round Mount Auburn in the green of the year,—if you are made of mortal clay, you will find pouring right into your soul the wealth of nature and of art in winding hill and dell. It is a beautiful place. Gently curving lines, a feast for the eye, sloping hill-sides yet fresh from their yearly resurrection, marble traces of thoughtful sorrow, thick trees which have grown old in shading mourners, are all around. Right before you, high up, is the chapel. A simple cross surmounts the structure. Why a chapel here? Why a chapel in every grave-yard? Why a chapel with a cross on it? It is strange; think of it. There have been those who have taught that the story of the cross is all a fabrication, an invention of diseased brains. There are those who think it foolishness to have anything to do with what we cannot hear or see or feel. There are those who curl the lip when you speak of a land beyond, a home in heaven, a Saviour to love and serve. But here is a cross on the chapel. Strange! Strange that the story of a human form who walked and talked, slept and waked, smiled and wept just like other human forms, that the story of a man of sorrows should come down through the ages, and be today a living story to thousands of beating hearts. Strange! Tell this story to a little child, and he will weep. Tell it to bounding youth, gay, frolicsome, and he will stop and think as he never thought before. Tell it to manhood, pressing on in life's race, he will hear what you say whether he seems to or not; he will hear it and will remember. Tell it once, and he will know forever after, that such a being walked this earth and hung on the cross. He will recognise the recital whenever it comes up again. He does not so remember other men who have lived great lives and died great deaths in the world's history. And still strange,—here in Mount Auburn, to all who bring their loved ones to bury them out of their sight, is told this story of the cross. Why won't something else do? When the preacher stands to comfort the saddened ones, why not tell of an eternal sleep or Lethean waters? Why point to the cross on the chapel? Some say that there is no need of religion, that you are freer without and happier without, that it is a sickly sentimentality to worship what you cannot see, what you cannot lay your hand upon. But there are times when such lose their confidence; their merry happiness vanishes. They want a something, they don't know what. They feel that there is a part of their nature unsatisfied. Times come in every household, when the last word is spoken, the long breath is drawn, the eyes close forever, the cherished form is covered and carried out, and lowered beneath the turf. Then, when the thoughts are forced out of the daily routine, when wondering inquiries start up about what does come beyond, then men want something to lean upon that will not fail. If anywhere in the world men deal with realities, if anywhere professions and false dependencies are swept away, it is when real heart-trials hold stern sway, where not one earthly association is happy, where is the concentration of the sorrow of generation after generation of saddened home-circles,—in the grave-yard. And in the grave-yard is the cross on the chapel. The worldling, the careless, the godless want it there.

One sighs in humanity can be filled by the cross alone. There is a want in human nature which goes out beyond this earth, which grasps beyond the region of sense, which gropes into futurity and eternity. As long as this want is unsatisfied, the poor creature struggles within and without, adrift, rudderless, covering an aching heart by superficial mirth, consciously unsettled and unhappy. Let in the religion of Christ and humanity is complete. The going out of the affections after something better, the progress after the infinite is entirely satisfied. Life is happiness, loving and serving the adorable Saviour

MR. CHURCH ON EMANCIPATION

We copy the following from the Christian Instructor. Rev. Mr. Church is a minister who labored with acceptance and success for twenty years in the Island of Trinidad, W. I. He was in the West Indies before the emancipation. He labored there for many years after, and speaks from a perfect knowledge of all these things:

Mr. Editor:—May I crave the use of your valuable columns for the insertion of the following. On Thursday, the 5th inst., a meeting was held in the National Hall of this City, to commemorate the Emancipation of the Slaves in the District of Columbia; owing, however, to the very inclement weather of that day, there was not such a large concourse as otherwise there would have been. The meeting was truly patriotic in its character; several national airs were played by the band, after which the exercises were opened by a most fervent and appropriate prayer, in which the officiating Minister (colored) gave hearty thanks to God for the event which had brought them together, and earnestly supplicated the Divine blessing on the Government and Nation at large in such a manner as to force from the heart of every true Christian patriot, a hearty Amen! The ministers present on the occasion were mostly belonging to the colored congregations—they did not however lack evidence that they were ministers of Christ. It was the lot of the writer of this article to be present on the occasion by invitation; and while I could not exactly endorse the views of every speaker on the occasion, yet I hesitate not to say that the meeting was well conducted, and did credit to those through whose instrumentality it had been got up. As I considered the object of the meeting one which commended itself to Christian attention, I accepted the invitation to give a short address.

As certain individuals, whose proclivities render them more suitable for the land of Secessia than for a northern element, have been insidiously misrepresenting my address among the members of my congregation, with an evident intent of alienating the feelings of my beloved people, I feel it my duty, in self-justification, to furnish them, by your permission, with a copy of the offensive address as nearly verbatim et literatim as possible. It has always been a rule with me never to say either in the pulpit or elsewhere, that which I am ashamed to avow before the world. Your insertion, therefore, of the following, will oblige

Yours truly, Francis Church.

Mr. Chairman: The event which has brought us together to-day is one of peculiar interest, and which I cannot but regard as the dawning of a brighter era than has ever shone on this great republic. We are met together to-day to celebrate the Emancipation of the Slaves in the District of Columbia, and where, I ask, is the Christian man or Christian minister, whose heart is not elated with joy, that the great national curse of Slavery is wiped away from our central metropolis? I am aware, sir, that my views on this subject are liable to be controverted, as the system of Slavery has found advocates in the pulpit as well as in the Senate; be that as it may, I still adhere to the position I have taken, and call in question the fact whether any true gospel minister can sympathize with a system which ignores the claims of humanity, and dishonors God. This scene to-day, Mr. Chairman, reminds me of old times. I am not aware whether it is known to this audience or not, that I had the honor and privilege when in the West Indies, to preach the funeral sermon of Slavery in the British colonies—yet this, sir, is the fact, and I begin to fancy there is hope, that under the Divine blessing the same privilege may be granted me in this great country. I cannot but regard the late act of our worthy President, Abraham Lincoln, as an entering wedge, placed by a judicious hand into the huge block of our national corruption, (not to be extracted) but to be followed with blow after blow, till the fetters of every bondman shall be burst in sunder, and the whole wretched system of oppression, which has plunged our once happy country into its present difficulties, shall be numbered with the things that were.

I have adverted, sir, to the emancipation of the slaves in the West Indies, and it affords me pleasure in adverting to the interesting scene presented on that memorable first of August. The enemies of freedom had been predicting that the day would be ushered in with riot, tumult, and insurrection, and followed by anarchy and ruin, but never shall I forget the thrilling scene upon which the rising sun of that morning shone; instead of rioting or drunkenness, multitudes from every quarter were seen wending their way to the house of prayer, there to give thanks unto God for the great things he had done for them, and to hear from the ministers of Christ, that God requireth them not to "use their liberty as a cloak of maliciousness, but as the servants of God." Every place of religious worship was opened on that day, and whites as well as blacks rendered praise to God. And here, sir, let me state an undeniable fact,—let the enemies of freedom contradict it, if they can. Great as was the transition from a state of Slavery to that of freedom, there was not found in all the land where I was, one solitary instance of drunkenness on that memorable day, but on the contrary it was consecrated to God.

It affords me pleasure, sir, as a minister of Christ, to state these things, because the advocates of human oppression in this land have so wilfully and shamefully misrepresented the facts of the case. As a living witness, sir, I hesitate not to affirm, that the benefits resulting from emancipation in the West Indies were not only seen in the moral, social, and physical improvement of the laboring classes, but also in the appearance of the plantations, and the increased revenue therefrom. I am confident, sir, it is not so much for the cheapness of slave labor, that so many are the advocates of that wretched system; as from the fact that it gives man such an absolute dominion over his fellow being that he can either kick, or flog, or kill, whichever his depraved human passions may dictate, without being accountable to any, save that God who is the avenger of the oppressed.

I am frequently asked, "Why do you sympathize so much with the slave? why do you wish so much to see slavery done away?" I answer, Because I love the country in which I live—because I wish to see God's blessing upon it—because I see God's hand uplifted against the sin—and because these traffickers in human flesh, to further their nefarious schemes, have plunged this country into this terrible war, and cost the sacrifice of so much blood and treasure. Thank God that while thousands are praising him in the West Indies for raising up a Wilberforce, a Buchington, and a Buxton—he is also raising such up here—thank God for our noble President, and that under the wise rule of Father Abraham, I see the dawning of a day for which I have long prayed, and as a true patriot will pray. Let us, then, thank God and take courage.

PIN AND CROWN

A gentleman playing at a game, deceived his antagonist. One who was present, and could not endure to see such meanness, showed him his fault

"Ha!" said the gentleman, "You know we are only playing for farthing."

"If you had been playing for [illegible] you have done? He who is faithful in a little, will be faithful in much, but the man who will deceive for a pin, will do so for a crown."

BENGEL AND HIS GNOMON.

Just before Bengel died, he remarked that "for a while he would be forgotten, but would again be remembered." Now is the time for the fulfillment of his presentiment. He is indeed recalled from his sleep. When on his death-bed he uttered the remarkable prophesy just quoted, the Church in Germany and in Europe generally had fallen into rationalism. Faith in the Scriptures had well-nigh taken its departure from the pulpits of the churches, and from the seats of learning. This moral death of his age is most graphically described by himself. He is full of hope for the future, while he tells the sad story of the present.

He says: "The Holy Scriptures are falling into mournful disgrace, and even by those who still attach some importance to them, are so ill-used as to offend and mislead many; the powers of nature and reason are so immoderately exalted, that grace and faith, in a word, the supernatural, are almost unknown. The (human) instruments by which God wrought such deeds of power and goodness for his people, are despised. One attacks Joseph, another Moses, a third David; and what God wrought by them is converted into mere shifts of political sagacity. What every one regards as mere fancies are with the greatest levity brought into the market for the amusement and ruin of the human soul, and the teachers and leaders are drawn into the toils so that the verdict reaches the lowest of the people."

The critical spirit of his own times, thus portrayed in its unhappy results, did not fail to reach him, but with far different fruits. He knew what it was to struggle with doubts, which, so far from driving away as mere temptations unworthy of answers, he boldly met and overcame. Here marks, in one place, that "a man of the world who has no struggle for the truth will find subscription to his creed an easy thing. But that conversion makes truth precious, and the man who experiences it, deals with the truth carefully, anxiously, as with a costly jewel."

This critical tendency of his mind showed itself especially in reference to the purity of the sacred text, to the examination of which he devoted much of his time. He was too profoundly interested in the divine word to rest until he had explored for himself its very foundations; but this was done in a reverent spirit, for true piety was the very centre and animating power of all his theological labors. But this piety was thoroughly penetrated by the Scriptures. His struggles with his times were apologetic and exegetic, mainly the latter. This kept him in constant communion with the sacred text, in its most minute as well as in its general aspects, so that his piety, as an element of earnest resistance to the prevailing rationalism, familiarized itself with the turns of thought and with the slightest shades of feeling. And this is doubtless the reason why his dialectics appear so pious, and yet his piety so carefully logical. Bengel was essentially an interpreter. He had learned to feel the power of divine truth. This was what he had gained by his study of Scripture. He felt that truth was woven into the very texture of the Scripture utterances, and hence his whole aim as an interpreter was simply to bring out their meaning. Even when Bengel preached, this spirit of the interpreter prevailed, and he catechised rather than sermonized. There was no preaching manner or tone about his addresses.

The Gnomon is the work of just such a spirit as this. It is precisely what in its title it professes to be; namely, a pointer out, from the nature and force of the words, of the simplicity, depth, harmony, and saving power of the divine thoughts of the New Testament.

Methodist.

NATIONAL EDUCATION IN IRELAND.

We commend the following to scholars, and lovers of education, giving a true account of the rise and progress of education of Ireland, which piece of information will be useful to that class of minds:

We cut the following passages from a speech recently made in the British House of Commons, by Sir R. Peel, who is, at present, Chief Secretary for Ireland:

This National system was established by the present Lord Derby; and in order to show the house the results that have attended its establishment, I may observe that in 1833 there were only 789 schools, which were attended by a total of 107,000 children. I shall now take three periods, 1841, 1851, and 1861. In 1841 the population of Ireland was about 8,000,000, and the number of children on the rolls 281,000. In 1851 the population was 8,552,000; there was then 4,704 schools, and 520,000 pupils on the rolls. In 1861 the system had progressed in an extraordinary manner, for, while the population had diminished to 5,784,000, the schools were 9,032 in number, and the children were about 804,000. It is, I think, a most remarkable fact, that at the present moment, one seventh of the population of Ireland are receiving education under the National system (hear.) And when, after 30 years' experience, you find one seventh of the population receiving instruction, it is not a time to come forward and say that the system under which such results have been accomplished is a failure. . . .

I trust, however, I am prepared to show to the satisfaction of the house that these colleges have been eminently satisfactory in their operations, that they have answered the purpose for which they were designed, and that their present position reflects credit on the political foresight of those who established them. The house must first remember how very ill supplied Ireland was with educational or endowed establishments when the Queen's Colleges were founded. Let honorable members first look at the educational provision of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and then compare this with the population. At the present time the population of England is about 20,000,000. In addition to the great public schools of Eton, Winchester, Harrow, and Rugby, there are at Oxford 19 colleges, and at Cambridge 17 colleges. The population of Scotland is 2,500,000. There are six colleges and five universities in that kingdom, educating about 3,000 students. The population of Ireland is about 5,700,000. It has (except the Queen's Colleges) only one college—Trinity College—with 800 students on its books. When the Queen's Colleges were founded, and when the population of Ireland was 8,000,000, Ireland had only this one college, while Scotland and England possessed the great educational advantages which I have enumerated. Recollect, too, that Trinity College was administered on an almost exclusive system. To use Lord Derby's words, in proposing to the House of Lords the Bill for establishing the Queen's Colleges, Trinity College had been administered on an exclusive system, for the purpose of supporting the clergy of the Established Church. Surely the time had come for endowing Ireland with the same advantages as Scotland and England? The establishment of the Reformed Church and its Liturgy has had the effect of excluding Roman Catholics and Protestant Dissenters from Oxford, from Cambridge, and from Dublin. Trinity College, Dublin was the first to show liberality, because in 1794 it admitted persons of different persuasions to enter its walls, and it was, therefore, greatly in the advance of the sister establishments in England. It was only in 1854 that the matriculation test was abolished at Oxford, so that Dissenters could enter. It was not until 1856 that the declaration regarding religious opinions was abolished in Cambridge. Trinity College, for the purpose of inducing Roman Catholics and Protestant Dissenters to accept the perfect education she supplied, established [illegible] foundation scholarships, called "non-foundation scholarships." [Mr. Whiteside offered, because the number of those who had entered Trinity College on an average of 12 years, had not been more than 16 Roman Catholics and 12 Protestant Dissenters. This clearly shows that the great majority of those who enter Trinity College are destined for the Established Church. I would ask the house whether, after we had a national system in operation for educating the mass of the lower classes, it was not wise on the part of Parliament, in 1845, to afford corresponding advantages to the middle classes? When these colleges were established there was no country in Europe so deficient in suitable establishments for education as Ireland. . . . . .

Mr. [illegible] sectors to avail themselves [illegible] education than

Besides, there are at the present moment, a vast number of ecclesiastical seminaries and other institutions belonging to the Roman Catholics in Ireland, and I think, therefore, there is no reason to blame the State for viewing the Colleges with favor. There are 86 convents, 164 nunneries, and 117 monasteries and Christian Brothers' schools in operation in Ireland at this moment. Well, then, I say, with that large number of Roman Catholic religious establishments, I think we can justly affirm that no harm can result to the Roman Catholic religion in consequence of the aids offered to the youth of Ireland by the opening of Trinity College and the establishment of the Queen's Colleges (hear, hear,) But the question has been asked—Have the Queen's Colleges fully answered the purposes for which they were established? The hon. gentleman said they were expensive, and that they had cost since they came into operation over half a million of money. Well, if we consider the benefits that flow from them, I think the money, even if it has reached that sum, has been well bestowed. Now, the Queen's Colleges were established by an Act passed in 1845; about £35,000 a year is voted for Maynooth, and a similar amount for the Queen's Colleges, and yet there are more students at this moment in the Colleges of Cork, Galway, and Belfast than have passed through Maynooth during the last 13 years, (hear, hear.) Let us compare the Queen's Colleges now with Trinity College, Dublin. There are about 16 Roman Catholics and 12 Protestant Dissenters on an average who enter the University of Dublin each year. But compare that with the number on the books of the Queen's Colleges, and you will find that I am justified in asserting that at this moment there are more Protestant Dissenters and Roman Catholics in the Queen's Colleges than have passed through Trinity College during the last 11 years (hear.) I must say that comparison affords the most convincing and conclusive proof that great good must have resulted to Ireland from the establishment of the Queen's University in that country. Then the honorable gentleman alluded to the large number of endowments that we have in the Queen's Colleges, and I think he said that there was about a scholarship for each student, or something more. Nothing can be more fallacious, nothing more unjust or unfair, than such an assertion. Here are the Queen's Colleges doing an immensity of good in Ireland, and supported only by a Parliamentary grant which is perfectly trifling compared with the revenues of Trinity College, Oxford, or Cambridge. What are the endowments of Dublin University? It has a property of 100,000 acres, extending through 17 counties in Ireland, and its returns under the Poor Law valuation are £92,362 a year, in addition to about £9,000 for renewal of short leases (hear.) I believe Trinity College is richer than almost any other university. I do not my one word against the excellencies of that institution, but I only want to show how fallacious it is to speak of the endowments of the Queen's Colleges as excessive. The Queen's Colleges have really nothing to depend upon but the small grant voted by Parliament, whereas Trinity College is magnificently endowed, and some of the Senior Fellows have vastly larger salaries than my noble friend at the head of the Government (No, no). At all events, they have as large as some of the Cabinet Ministers on that bench. Trinity College has 31 Church livings, 70 foundations, and 16 non-foundation scholarships, 30 studentships, and 14 studentships. In fact, £2,000 a year is given away in those scholarships and studentships, in addition to the other emoluments to which I have referred (hear.) . . . . .

The honorable gentleman complained of the endowments of the colleges, and said that too much was given to the students. Now let me compare the stimulating force applied at the Queen's Colleges with the stimulating force in Oxford, Cambridge, and Dublin. By "stimulating force" I mean the average annual advantage which each student entering the universities or colleges may hope to obtain. In Oxford there are 1,600 students; the stimulating force is £106 12s. to each student. In Cambridge there are 1,000 students; the stimulating force is £68 to each student. [Mr Monsell—"As an undergraduate?"] Not as an undergraduate—as a member of the University. In Dublin there are 800 students, and the stimulating force for each member of the University is £28 14s. The stimulating force for the Queen's Colleges, on the other hand—and I will vouch for the accuracy of this statement—is only £6. (hear, hear). It is absurd, therefore, to speak of the advantages

The Christian Recorder.

Philadelphia, June 28, 1862.

NOTICE.

There will be a Quarterly Meeting of the West Chester Circuit's Quarterly Conference at West Chester, June 28, 1862, at 2 o'clock.

Quarterly Meeting, June 29th, at West Chester; July 6th, at Lumberton; July 13th, at Thornbury; July 20th, at Unionville; July 27th, at Media; August 3d, at Westtown.

J. W. STEVENSON.

NOTICE

RESPECTED EDITOR:—You will oblige us much by announcing through the columns of your interesting paper, our Quarterly Meeting at Salem, New Jersey, July the 13th, 1862—to which all are affectionately invited.

From your brethern fraternally,

REV. JAMES HOLLAND,
REV JACOB JAY.

Swedesboro', N. J., June 19, 1862.

NOTICE.

Quarterly meetings of the Bridgeton circuit. Quarterly conference, at Springtown, July 5th, 1862, at 2 o'clock, P. M.

Quarterly meeting, July 6th, Springtown,—July 13th, Back Neck,—July 20th, Gouldtown,—July 27th, Bridgeton. J. WOODLIN, Elder in Charge.

The quarterly meeting will be held at Woodbury, on Saturday and Sabbath, June 28th, and 29th.

The quarterly meeting will be held at the Macedonia church, Camden, N. J., on the 5th and 6th of July. PETER GARDINER, Minister in Charge.

CELEBRATION

Of the Emancipation of the District of Columbia and the West Indies by our Little Folks.

We would recommend the celebration of the Emancipation of the District of Columbia and of the West Indies by our Sabbath Schools, the proceeds to be devoted to the benefit of the Recorder, on the first day of August. We hope that all of our ministers, superintendents and teachers will at once take hold of the matter, and thus afford the little folks an opportunity of giving an expression to their thoughts and feelings on the subject, through the medium of an exhibition on the day specified. Let us hear from you, dear brethren, without delay.

OUR CITY CANVASS.

Miss MARY STILL, our city and county canvasser for the Christian Recorder, has started out on her mission, and we hope that she may be successful in procuring not less than one thousand subscribers in this city alone, and that every lady and gentleman, both white and colored, who do not take the Recorder, will give their names to Miss Still as regular subscribers without delay. She is well-known in this city as a warm and ardent friend of our people, as, also, a persistent advocate of educational and literary attainments. She is settled, and the friends may know her by the wearing of glasses, and by the pleasant smile that is ever lingering on her matronly countenance.

Surely, no one upon whom she may call, who is really a friend indeed to the cherished project of mentally improving the condition of the colored race, as well as in a moral sense, but will either subscribe or give a donation. Either one will be thankfully received.

ACNOWLEDGMENTS.

Mrs. Belinda Jackson, of Bordentown, per Miss M. Still,	$1.00
Rev. James Lynch, of Baltimore, on account,	1.00
Jared Morris, of Providence, R. I.,	1.00
William Nichols, of Washington, per Rev. H. M. Turner,	1.00
Jeremiah B. Murray, of Reading, on account,	2 00
Peter Marler, of Washington, D. C., per Rev. H. M. Turner,	1.00
Rev. Benj T. Turner, of Washington, D C., on account for books,	5 00
Rev. James A. Handay, of Washington, D. C., on account for papers,	2 00
Mr. William R. Arnold, of Zanesville, Ohio,	1 00

☞ Rev. James Lynch will remember that he received credit for his five dollars some time since. We allude to the money which he paid us while at Conference.

THE WEATHER.

We have had a great deal of cool and rainy weather for some time past—indeed, so much so, that we can scarce realize the fact that Spring has come with its balmy breath, laden with the sweet perfume of flowers and garlands from a thousand bowers, and the melodious minstrelsy of gay and beautiful songsters, that flitted merrily from blossom to blossom, uttering notes as if in praise of the great Creator—yes, we say, we can scarcely believe that this beautiful picture has come and passed away—that the scene has changed, and the yellow harvest and nodding clover fields of Summer loom boldly up to view, awaiting the bright sickle of the reaper.

As yet, Summer has given us but little of her wonted heat. We are informed that the residents of Jersey were somewhat surprised on Tuesday by the sudden visitation of quite a heavy hail-storm! Some of the drops, they say, were as large as partridges' eggs.

QUARTERLY MEETINGS.

Our brethren are having a fine time with their Quarterly Meetings on their respective circuits and stations. The prospects seem to be very promising for their new fields of labor, and each circuit and station, as far as we know, is very well pleased with their minister.

EXPECTATIONS

The colored people are looking with no little interest to the decision of the Presidents and Boards of Managers of the Philadelphia City Passenger Railroad Companies in relation to the Petition sent unto them some time ago, conveyed by Revs Mr. Gibbs, Still, and others, to allow colored people to ride inside of the cars, as they are doing everywhere else but in Philadelphia.

EGYPT

We propose to introduce our readers some historical facts. In the Hebrew of Sacred Scripture a well known country in the south of Africa, and which is said to have derived its name from Mizraim, a son of Ham, (you may read the reference in the Book of Genesis, 10 v., 6 v., also Ps. cv. and 23 v.,) shall be our theme of comment. The Arabs, it is said by writers, still call it Mizraim. Ally referring to the map, you will see that the country is divided into Upper, Central and Lower Egypt. Therefore, it owes its fertility to the periodical inundations of the Nile, without which it would be only a sandy desert. We are told by writers that the early history of this country is lost in fable. Moses was the first who mentioned Egypt in the sacred volume, in narrating the life of Abraham. At that time it seems to have enjoyed a regularly organized government under a race of kings under Pharaoh. The special king referred to is supposed by many of the writers to be one of the shepherd kings, who, it is believed, seized the government and formed a new government or dynasty, which, according to Rollin, lasted for two hundred and sixty years. It will be remembered, dear readers, that after the time of Abraham there is nothing more said of Egypt in the Scriptures until the time of Joseph, the son of Jacob, whose history is intimately connected with the country of Egypt. By examining closely the whole history in relation to this matter, it will be found that it was 1,729 years before Christ at the time Joseph went down to Egypt, and his advancement to be governor of Egypt was B. C. 1715.

Here allow us to say that the connexion between sacred and profane history in relation to Joseph in Egypt commences.

Again, according to the chronology of the Bible, Joseph died 1,635 years before the Christian era, after having governed Egypt for eighty years from the time of his elevation as Prime Minister. We are bold and free to say that Egypt was the cradle of the arts and sciences Here men resorted from all parts of the country, and especially those who wished to become acquainted with the learning of the East. There were four colleges in Egypt of great renown. Thebes is the place where Pythagoras visited; Memphis where Thales and Democritus consulted the Egyptian priests; Heliopolis is the place where Plato studied, and Lais where Solon learned the art of legislation. The arts of Egypt seem to have early acquired great eminence. In architecture, particularly, we find, they seem to have excelled; according to all the information that we can gather from historians, the pyramids of Egypt have always been ranked amongst the wonders of the world. We believe that it never has been perfectly understood—their object in having such stupendous structures. The learned Doctor Duff tells us that, "One time they were represented as disguised fortresses for the concealment of treasures, or oracular shrines for the exibition of acoustic phenomena, and other priestly jugglery."

"At another time they have risen into magnificent fire temples or astronomical observatories."

Then it seems to have followed the elaborated dissertations on the wealth, the hierophancy, the mythology, or of the science of the ancient world That these pyramids could ever have been designed for fire-altars or astronomical edifices, as some writers would pretend to say, to us involves a physical impossibility. It is quite evident to our mind that on either of those suppositions, the summit must have been flat and accessible. The truth of the matter, my readers, is this: when these pyramids were finished they terminated in a sharp culminating point or apex, and it is said that some of them remain so to this day; and such as do not, the great pyramids, it is said by some of the late historians, bear evidence that their tops have been violently dislocated and thrown down. There are many strange ends which those pyramids have been made to serve. We have read somewhere where they have been designed to represent the soul, which is of a fiery nature, and adhereth to the body, as pyramid does to the basis, or as fire does to the fuel, &c.

"I will set fire in Egypt," saith the Spirit of the Lord by the prophet Ezekiel, "and her cities shall be in the midst of the cities that are wasted." All the ancient cities, without one exception, are now wasted—so wasted as to be without an inhabitant It is, however, clear to be seen that all the arts and sciences came from the descendants of Egypt There are various prophecies in the Old Testament concerning Egypt. Some of them were uttered by Isaiah and Jeremiah, when the kingdom was in the highest splendor and prosperity—and they were fulfilled by the invasions of Nebuchadnezzar, Cambyses, and the Persian monarchs. It is said that during the reign of the Ptolemys, Egypt enjoyed for nearly three hundred years something of its former renown for learning and power—and during this period it is said to have formed one of the two ancient kingdoms which had survived the Assyrian, Babylonian, Persian, and Macedonian Empires.

And now, dear readers, we shall have to close our few brief remarks for the present, promising, if possible, to conclude our thoughts on Egypt in our next number.—ED.

BRETHREN. READ THIS

We continue to give notice of a portion of books we keep on hand

THEOLOGICAL WORKS

Bengel's Gnomon on the New Testament, 2 vols., price per vol.,	$2 50
Notes on the XXV Articles,	75
Schmucker's Popular Theology,	75
Lowrey's Positive Theology,	62½
Whedon's Commentary,	1 00
Covel's Dictionary,	75
" Religious Works,	75
The Memoirs of Stoddard,	75
" Cone,	75

SABBATH SCHOOL PRESENTS

Boys' and Girls' Book of Birds,	75
Glen Morris Stories,	75
Sweet Story of Old,	31¼
Henry's Birthday,	25
A Mother's Gift,	25
Sunday's Pictures,	25
Willie Books,	31
Father's Presents,	37½
Meadowside Stories,	25
Jessie Books,	37½
Lives of Eminent Men,	25
Alden Series,	25
Youth's Library,	12½

HOOPING COUGH

There is at present a great many cases of this most distressing ailment among children in this city, and even adults, in some instances, have not been exempted from the malady It goes very hard with [illegible]

THE CIVIL WAR OF THIS COUNTRY.

It has been more than one year since the civil war broke out in this country. At that time it was thought by many that "the rebellion COULD HAVE BEEN put down in THREE MONTHS!"—by some, in six months, at the very farthest. But, alas! we have found it hard and heavy, and we believe that it is difficult for ANY ONE to tell when it will end

Many of the officers and soldiers stated as we have heard, that if they thought their fighting the so-termed rebels would be the means of freeing the colored people, they would throw down their arms. The rebels at once came to the conclusion that the Yankees were not in earnest, but were merely trying to frighten them; but the rebels are in earnest, and care not whether it frees the slaves or not, for they can live either with or without them. They make no concessions, nor ask no quarters from the Northern Yankees, so they say.

So, as the anxiety for fear of the slaves rising in insurrection, and the blaming of them by some of our troops, is quite prevalent as a general thing among the people of the North, we have only to say in their behalf that when the war first broke out, that if such a thing had been merely hinted at, some of our officers and men would have become indignant, and would have threatened to give the Southerners their aid to put it down—and even the Governors of some of our States give the South to understand that, in case of an insurrection, they shall have aid to put it down. Now, that same people want the slaves to rise up and fight for their liberty. Rise against what?—powder, cannon, ball and grape-shot? Not a bit of it. They have got too much good sense. Since you have waited till every man, boy, woman and child in the so-called Southern Confederacy has been armed to the teeth, 'tis folly and mockery for you now to say to the poor, bleeding and down-trodden sons of Africa, "Arise and fight for your liberty!"

NOTICE

To the following named brethren:—J Frisby, W. G Cooper, Richard Bagwell, Samuel Hugh, J. W. Stevenson, Joseph Long, Wm Offer, Jacob Jay, W. R. Norris, F. Main, J C. Corniah, E. Laws, and Bro. T. Cooper.

Dear Brethren:—Your committee appointed by the Philadelphia Annual Conference of the A. M. E. Church to examine during the present conference year, all who are Probationers in the Itinerancy and Conference of said church, do hereby recommend you to pursue the following course of studies:

1st. The Old and New Testament. 2d. Clarke's Theology. 3d. Smith's Grammar. 4th. Horne's Introduction. 5th. Hedge's Logic. 6th. Discipline and Government of the A. M. E. Church. 7th. Smith's Quarto Geography, revised edition. 8th. Arithmetic.

The students are recommended to make an immediate commencement in the above studies, and diligently pursue them as follows:—Read one chapter in the Old Testament each day, and one in the New, commencing in the former at the first chapter of Genesis, and in the latter at the first chapter of our Lord's Gospel according to St Matthew, and reading regularly through. In Clarke's Theology, Hedge's Logic, and Horne's Introduction, study and intellectually digest at least one page of each every day, (Sabbaths only excepted)

In Smith's Quarto Geography, you will be required to master the first fourteen lessons: In arithmetic, the first five rules with their exercises, i. e., numeration, addition, subtraction, multiplication, and division: and in grammar, the two first parts, i. e., orthography and etymology.

We shall give at least three examinations during the present year, and unless we are satisfied that the probationers are making suitable proficiency in the above studies, we cannot nor will not recommend them as proper persons for membership, neither in the Itinerancy nor conference. The place and time for the first examination will be stated in the RECORDER at a future period.

Signed,

W D W SCHUREMAN,
J. P. CAMPBELL,
A. L. STANFORD, } Committee.

A RECOMMENDATION

TO THE DISTRICTS OF PHILADELPHIA, NEW ENGLAND, OHIO, INDIANA, AND MISSOURI, OF THE A. M. E. CHURCH MINISTERS.

Dear Brethren:—As we have a number of superannuated ministers on the list in said Districts, therefore it will be expected that the ministers and preachers, on their circuits and stations, will do all they can to collect the two cent money; and we also recommend that the Class leaders be instructed to collect and set the amount on the Class book opposite each member's name, as also all the collections called, per Discipline, for the Annual Conference, and publish the same once every quarter, that it may be seen who they are that work for God and his cause. We think it is time to give credit to those of our people who do work, and that God's name may be glorified.

It is said of Commodore Foote, that "he prays as if God did everything, and fights as if man did every thing." So he should, if the cause for which he is fighting is a good cause, as we think it is. In everything that relates to the temporal or eternal welfare of ourselves and others, we are to labor as if all depended on our efforts, and yet rely on divine agency as if all depended on it. "Without God we can do nothing, without man God will do nothing."

It seems that the North Carolina Presbyterian recently gave the "Action of the Synod of South Carolina at Abbeville Court House, with reference to the state of the country." But, then, it was not the action of the Synod. It was only the action of "the ministers and elders comprising the Synod," after they had resolved themselves to be, not a "court of Jesus," but a "convocation of Christian gentlemen." Thus is Dr. Thornwell's patent method of keeping secular and religious things separate and apart. They pledged themselves to the rebellion as "Christian gentlemen."

It is stated that the Ohio Legislature has recently passed a law forbidding billiard playing by minors. If playing at billiards is an innocent amusement, why forbid young people to share in it? If it is not an innocent amusement, why give it a quasi Legislative sanction for the use of grown up people?

"I DIE IN PEACE." A colonel of one of the Pennsylvania regiments was lately present at a Boston prayer-meeting He said he was in the battle of Ball's Bluff. One of his men was shot He dismounted and embraced the dying man, and asked him if he had any message to send to his friends

"Colonel, tell the Sabbath school that I die in peace." The lesson that he learned in the Sabbath school, amid the noise and confusion of the battle-field, did not forsake him. "I die in peace," were his last words

Is it all with thee in life? Imitate the traveller who, amid the discomforts of a bad inn, reflects that he has only to pass the night there.

"THE TRYING OF YOUR FAITH."

There are two periods in the history of the faith of every believer: the period of its inception, and the period of its development. There is the time of the planting of our faith, and there is the time of the growth of our faith Faith is the gift of God, but after it has been given to us, it is strengthened by long years of trial and suffering. This development, this growth, this trial of faith is just as necessary as the first implanting. We long insisted on trying the world, and is it any wonder that God insists on trying us, before he admits us to all that "fulness of joy" which his children know? We cannot, from the very laws of our nature, spring at once from the depths of misery and pollution to the heights of uninterrupted communings with God. Gradually our wavering belief is strengthened—gradually our struggling and fighting faith presses on to be crowned with victory The implanting of our faith is followed by the trying of our faith, just as surely as the birth of man is followed by his life. Those, who pass through the first period in the history of faith, must pass through the other also. Have we faith? Then we must expect to meet with trial of our faith.

These faith-trials are exceedingly numerous, and of various kinds. There is but one way in which faith is obtained, for "faith is the gift of God," but there are two thousand ways in which it is developed. The outward circumstances of our lives are not the same: the internal characteristics of our minds are different: the religious experience of our hearts is somewhat diversified; and the infinitely wise scholar adapts his trials to the condition of individuals. He tries the faith of one man by adversity; of another, by prosperity. He tries the faith of one, by the trouble and labor of a life of three score years and ten; of another, by the short suffering of a death-bed experience. He tries the faith of one by the gentle leadings of a merciful Providence; of another, by all the agony of bodily pain, or by the deeper anguish of a crushed and stricken soul. He tries the faith of one sufficiently by the experience of his life, and so he approaches the hour of death, filled with the joy and confidence of triumphing faith; he tries the faith of another, especially as he goes down into "the dark vale," and is sinking deeper and deeper in the river of death.

But we shall notice more particularly some of the most common of our faith-trials. One way in which God tries the faith of his children is by worldly trouble A financial panic, without any assignable cause and without any warning, or the dishonesty or weakness of a trusted friend, may bring poverty and want into the palaces of the rich. But when ruin comes crashing down through gigantic fortunes, it is for "the trying of our faith." It has been said, "Yea, what is good, the Lord shall give," and when He takes away the visible means of support, and comfort, and happiness, it is as if He said, Do you believe what I have spoken? Do you believe and rely on the promise. "The Lord withholdeth no good thing from them that walk uprightly?" It is, indeed, a glorious step of triumphing faith, when, trusting in what has been spoken, and rising above the wrecks of fortune and hopes, we can say, "Lord, we believe. Help thou our unbelief"

Again, God sometimes tries the faith of his people by national calamities. Men are apt to think that any advantage they possess has been procured by themselves, and national advantages do not form an exception. In this respect, we are all Nebuchadnezzars, and our language in reference to our nation is, "Is not this great Babylon, which we have builded by the might of our power, and for the honor of our majesty?" But when God comes and rocks the nations, as a man might rock a drop of water in the hollow of his hand, it is to confirm and strengthen our belief, that He is "King of kings, and Lord of lords."

And sometimes a nation goes on in sins—the greatest sins against the rights of humanity and the laws of God, and yet that nation is crowned with continued prosperity. Under such circumstances as these, faith wavers and staggers. Has God forgotten? Can it be possible, that there is a just and righteous One, who sees and knows all these things, and yet permits them to pass unpunished? But when national calamities point so plainly at those sins, which have so long proved a stumbling-block, faith is confirmed, and we believe and rejoice that there is One, who watches over the righteous, and who will give to the wicked their reward.

Another way in which God tries our faith is in domestic afflictions. This trial may come in a variety of ways. It may be in our own person It may be in the sickness and death of those who are united to us by the strongest family ties. It may be that the children, whom God has given us, are disregarding parental counsel, and making light of the offers of the gospel. In all these things he is trying our faith in his promises. With regard to ourselves, he has said, "My grace is sufficient for thee, for my strength is made perfect in weakness." With regard to Christian relatives, who have been called from our side, it has been said, "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." With regard to children it has been promised: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." And when these afflictions come upon us, God is saying in his providence, Do you believe what I have spoken? Do you believe that my grace shall be sufficient? Do you believe that the death of the saints is precious in the sight of their Lord? Do you believe that the child, properly instructed in his youth, will, when he is old, walk in the way he has been trained? God's afflicted ones often wonder why he is dealing with them in this manner. Many a man who has been brought down into the depths of sorrow, and perhaps every man who has been brought down into the depths of sorrow, has said, Why is my affliction so different from that of other men? Why is my trouble so much greater than that of my fellows? Why does God take my husband, or my sister, or my child, and not those of my neighbor? It is hard for us to see the "why" and the "wherefore" of these afflictions. When we step from joy down into the darkness of grief, we can see nothing, until our eyes become accustomed to the gloom, and then we will see gradually brought to light the gracious designs of God for the trying of our faith. While we are stunned and paralyzed by the sharpness of present pain, we cannot reason calmly of the goodness of Jehovah in sending afflictions. But God does not require us to reason, and he will not be offended if we do not reason under such circumstances: all he requires of us is to trust in his power and in his mercy.

Of course, the reason why afflictions are sent is hard to be understood, and it is in this very thing that the just benefit of affliction lies. If we could see the whole design of God in our trouble, and understand perfectly the ordering of his providence, what room would there be for the exercise of faith? Much less could there be any "trying of our faith," and this is the end to be attained in some way or other, by all the afflictions which God in his goodness is pleased to send upon us. Remembering, then, the great work that is to be wrought in us by means of our troubles, with the Apostle James, "we can count it all joy when we fall into diverstemptations" or trials; "knowing this, that the trying of our faith worketh patience." And with Paul, we can "glory in tribulations, also; knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope; and hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us." R.

THERE is an affected humility more insufferable than downright pride, as hypocrisy is more abominable than libertinism. Take care that your virtues be genuine and unsophisticated

AN inscription, it is said, may be found in an Italian grave-yard,—"Here lies Elelia, who transported a large fortune to heaven in acts of charity, and has gone thither to enjoy it."

THE CONVERSION OF SINNERS

Were we to see an individual in great danger of losing his life, and that individual unconscious of his danger, who so inhuman that he would not strain every nerve to arouse and rescue him? And should he succeed, how comforting in after life the reflection, as also the gratitude of the rescued one, as well as the commendation of all interested; especially if done at great exposure of life to the deliverer, and how deep and bitter the self-reproach should the exposed person perish from sheer indifference to his case

Now is not the unconverted sinner in a condition incomparably more deplorable than that in the case supposed? And does he not need to be roused and shown his danger? And who, of those that see and know it, are putting forth their energies to save him from going down to the bottomless pit, and bring him to enjoy the happiness of heaven? We are assured that God will bless efforts made for this purpose: vast multitudes are trophies of energetic labor in their behalf. The promise is still "I will be with you" in this great work of saving souls

Will we not be harrowed with deep and bitter self-reproach, should they go down to death through our neglect? How withering the look of the poor dying sinner, seeming to say: had you done your duty, I might now have before me "an entrance being ministered abundantly into the kingdom of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ," instead of the pit of wailing and gnashing of teeth into which I am about to launch forever. And let the imagination paint the scene before the judgment seat

He who loved us and gave himself for us has been robbed of the praise and service that would have accrued to him by the salvation of the soul thus lost through our neglect. How can we meet Him? What incentives to faithfulness? What unspeakable joy to hear Him say, "well done good and faithful servant?" Do say say—and what shall I do?

Doubtless the first thing with most Christians is to ask God to grant His Spirit, to awaken in their bosoms a suitable concern for their fellow creatures:—to open before them the path of duty and to make duty a delight.

It was the meat of the Saviour to do the will of His Father. So it may be with all His children.

And what a happy consideration that this work of saving souls from death is within the reach of every one who would engage in it. Ministers have their peculiar sphere to operate in:—so with other officers of the Church: and not one, high or low, rich or poor, bond or free, is excluded from this great and glorious work. A word of caution or of exhortation at the proper time may arouse a slumbering sinner, and lead him to inquire "What shall I do to be saved?" The fervent, effectual prayer of the righteous availeth much Jesus says, Men ought always to pray and not faint. Our example is powerful for good or evil The widow's mite, as well as the munificence of the wealthy, may be honored of God in the conversion of sinners. And now when He calls for laborers to save souls, who replies "Here am I, send me." What! Shall we turn a deaf ear to his call? It is not so when our President calls for aid:—and what is our President, compared to our Saviour and His call? And what the salvation of our whole country and all the civil governments on earth from misrule and anarchy, compared to the salvation of a single soul from death? O, what! Think of the bottomless pit and quenchless pain. PHILO.

THE COUNCIL OF NICE.

FROM HISTORY OF THE EASTERN CHURCH, BY PROF STANLEY

MODE OF TRAVELLING.

He gives the number of Bishops present as 318, and including all the presbyters and attendants, the assembly embraced, perhaps, 2000 persons.

Letters were addressed, doubtless on this as on a previous lesser occasion in the West, to the civil authorities, enjoining the supplies necessary for the journey The postage arrangements of the Empire made such a convention far more easy than would have been the case at any period in the Middle Ages. The great lines of communications were like railroads, straight as arrows, from one extremity of the Empire to the other. From Bordeaux to Constantinople, a few years later, we have the record of two hundred post-stations and ninety-one inns; an inn at the interval of every half day's journey. Each Bishop was to have two presbyters and three slaves as his retinue. They travelled partly in public carriages, partly on horses, asses, and mules, provided for the purpose, both for riding and carrying baggage. The precedent thus established was never dropped, and the summoning of a Council was always known throughout the Empire by the stir along the roads in every direction. At later Councils we hear of the indecent haste with which Bishops might be seen galloping at full speed to reach the appointed place in time.—the horses knocked up by their impatience,—or at times detained, as would not unfrequently happen at the end of an Eastern spring, by the flooding of rivers.

DIVERSITY OF CHARACTERS.

But it was the diversity of the persons, and the strongly marked characters dividing each from each, which, more than any mere display of numbers, constituted their peculiar interest. In the conventional pictures of the Council, such, for example, as that which still exists at Nicæa, the figures are almost indistinguishable from each other, with the exception of the small knot of Arians, who are represented as grouped together in the centre, bearing the marks of their discomfiture in their looks of extreme disgust, and the sign of their heresy in the cool black color of their complexions. But this was far from being the true aspect of the assembly as it was first seen, before the theological differences had been fully developed, and whilst the natural differences were the most prominent. Eusebius, himself an eye-witness, as he enumerates the various characters, from various countries, of various age and position, thus collected, compares the scene either with the diverse nations assembled at Pentecost, or with a garland of flowers gathered in season, of all manner of colors, woven together as a peace-offering after the tranquillization of the Empire; or with a mystic dance, in which every actor performs a part of his own, to complete a sacred ceremony There were present, the Lord and the Bible: he, courtiers and peasants, old and young, aged bishops on the verge of the grave, beardless deacons just entering on their office

FIRST PLACE OF MEETING.

They assembled in the first instance in one of the chief buildings of Nicæa, apparently for the purpose of thanksgiving and a religious reunion. Whether it was an actual church may be questioned. Christians, no doubt, there had been in Bithynia for some generations. Already in the second century Pliny had found them in such numbers that the temples were deserted, and the sacrifices neglected. But it would seem that on this occasion a secular building was hired upon a temporary house of prayer. At least the traditional account of the place where the [illegible] prayers were held exactly agrees with Strabo's account of the ancient gymnasium of Nicæa. It was a long building, shaped like a bow, with an open at one end, planted in the centre of the town and thus commanding down each of the four streets a view of the four gates, and therefore called "Mesomphalos," the "Navel" of the city Whether, however, this edifice actually was a church or not, its use as such on this occasion served as a precedent for most of the later Councils From the time of the Council of Chalcedon, they have usually been held within the walls of churches. But for this, the first Council, the church, so far as it was a church, was only used at the beginning and the end.

ARIUS.

Next after the Pope and Deacon of Alexandria, we must turn to one of its most important Presbyters—the parish priest of its principal church, which bore the name of Baucalis, and marked the [illegible] system. In appearance he is the very opposite of Athanasius. He is sixty years of age, very tall and thin, and apparently unable to support his stature; he has an odd way of contorting and twisting himself, which his enemies compare to the wrigglings of a snake. He would be handsome but for the emaciation and deadly pallor of his face, and a downcast look, imparted by a weakness of eyesight. At times his veins throb and swell, and his limbs tremble, as if suffering from some violent internal complaint—the same, perhaps, that will terminate one day in his sudden and frightful death. There is a wild look about him, which at first sight is startling. His dress and demeanor are those of a rigid ascetic. He wears a long coat with short sleeves, and a scarf of only half size, such as was the mark of an austere life; and his hair hangs in a tangled mass over his head. He is usually silent, but at times breaks out into fierce excitement, such as will give the impression of madness. Yet, with all this, there is a sweetness in his voice, and a winning, earnest manner, which fascinates those who come across him. Amongst the religious ladies of Alexandria he is said to have had from the first a following of not less than seven hundred. This strange, captivating, moon-struck giant is the heretic Arius—or, as his adversaries called him, the madman of Ares, or Mars.

PRELIMINARY DISCUSSIONS

It was probably by degrees that these different arrivals took place, and the lapse of two or three weeks must be supposed, for the preparatory arrangements, before the Council was formally opened. This interval was occupied by eager discussions on the questions likely to be debated. The first assemblage had been, as we have seen, within the walls of a public building. But the other preliminary meetings were held, as was natural, in the streets or colonnades in the open air. The novelty of the occasion had collected many strangers to the spot. Laymen, philosophers, heathen as well as Christian, might be seen joining in the arguments on either side, orthodox as well as heretical. There were also discussions amongst the Orthodox themselves as to the principle on which the debates should be conducted. The enumeration of the characters just given shows that there were two very different elements in the assembly, such indeed as will always constitute the main difficulty in making any general statements of theology which shall be satisfactory at once to the few and to the many. A large number, perhaps the majority, consisted of rough, simple, almost illiterate men, like Spyridion the shepherd, Paramnion the hermit, Acesius the puritan, who held their faith earnestly and sincerely, but without much conscious knowledge of the grounds on which they maintained it, incapable of arguing themselves, or of entering into the arguments of their opponents. These men, when suddenly brought into collision with the acutest and most learned disputants of the age, naturally took up the position that the safest course was to hold by what had been handed down, without any further inquiry or explanation A story somewhat variously told is related of an encounter of one of these simple characters with the more philosophical combatants, which, in whatever way it be taken, well illustrates the mixed character of the Council, and the choice of courses open before it. As Socrates describes the incident, the disputes were running so high, from the mere pleasure of argument, that there seemed likely to be no end to the controversy, when suddenly a simple-minded layman, who by his sightless eye, or limping leg, bore witness of his zeal for the Christian faith stepped amongst them, and abruptly said: "Christ and the Apostles left us, not a system of logic, nor a vain deceit, but a naked truth to be guarded by faith and good works." "There has," says Bishop Kaye in recording the story, "been hardly any age of the Church in which its members have not required to be reminded of this lesson." On the present occasion the by-standers, at least for the moment, were struck by its happy application, the disputants, after hearing this plain word of truth, took their differences more good-humoredly, and the hubbub of controversy subsided.

HINTS TO PARISHIONERS.

No one can know the trials of the ministry, except those who undertake the arduous employment, or those who reside in their families When we consider how much clergymen's time is occupied by unavoidable company at home, how many special meetings, if they are faithful to their Master, they must attend, what a large portion of their time is occupied in visiting the sick, how much is necessary preparation for the pulpit; and then, in addition to all this, what numbers of parochial visits they are required to make, and censured if they do do not, it must appear obvious that their task is arduous, their trials peculiarly great. It is a great trial to be obliged to attempt study when the mind is distracted with the burden of a whole parish. It is a trial to be, as it were, compelled to spend that time in visiting, which ought to be devoted to writing and meditation, and then to be censured for neglect and ill-digested sermons; or, if time and pains are taken to write good sermons, be complained of for visiting so little Surely, if societies or churches knew the trials of their ministers in addition to those personal troubles which are common to all, they would be more tender of them, more fervent in prayer for them. I do not wonder that so many of the laborers of the Lord's vineyard faint before midday. They ought in every way to be strengthened, and comforted, and encouraged by their people.

Mrs Huntington's Memoirs.

COURTESY.

"Be courteous." This injunction is often obeyed by "man of the world, who have their portion in this life;"—or rather they are courteous, not out of regard to this injunction, but from other considerations. And on the other hand, it must be admitted that there may be found professing Christians, and in the eye of charity, true Christians, who pay little or no respect to this precept, but are unpolished in manners, crabbed in temper, and rude in speech. It never seems to have occurred to such persons that their Divine Master was otherwise,—that his religion has a refining, elevating influence, and that it is much commended and practiced by having those who claim to possess it, pursuing "whatsoever things are lovely, and of good report." Indeed we have met, and doubtless our readers can say the same—with avowed disciples of Christ, who because they were disciples of Him who said —"My kingdom is not of this world," felt it especially incumbent upon them to show their contempt for the pleasant civilities and proprieties of life, by being coarse, blunt and dictatorial. Such "fidelity."—for thus they are pleased to call it is not fidelity to the truth, but is in direct opposition thereto. It is an error, and a damaging error, by causing the ways of truth to be evil spoken of, and generating prejudice against Christianity Christians should be blameless, and without rebuke, and not be less, but more polite than others. The professed disciple of Jesus is bound to be a pattern of benevolence; and courtesy, or politeness,—as Lord Chatham well observes is one of his letters to his nephew,—"is benevolence in little things." He should "adorn the doctrine of God his Saviour in all things," and among the rest by being courteous.

DO THE RIGHT THING.

Whenever you are in doubt which of two things to do, let your decision be for that which is right. Do not waver, do not parley; but square up to the mark, and do the right thing. Boy! when you divide that apple with your little sister, be careful not to keep the largest half for yourself. Young man! do not sneak out the basement door, because you wish to escape your father's eyes. Maiden! let not the most trifling deceit pass current in those little acts which make the sum of your life.

No matter who you are, what your lot, or where you live, you cannot afford to do that which is wrong. The only way to obtain happiness and [illegible] is to do the right thing You may not always hit the mark; but you should, nevertheless, always aim at it, and with every trial your skill will increase. Whether you are to be praised or blamed for it by others; whether it will seemingly make you richer or poorer, or whether no other person than yourself knows of your action, still always, and in all cases, do the right thing Your first lessons in this will grow easier, until finally doing the right thing will become a habit; and to do a wrong, will seem an absolute impossibility.

A GREAT GIFT.

At the close of a missionary meeting in Brighton, England, one of the poorest widows of the parish brought a sovereign. The pastor, knowing her deep poverty, refused to accept it because it was beyond her means. His refusal disappointed and grieved her, and with the irresistible eloquence of a heart deeply moved, she replied, "Oh, sir, I have often given the Lord copper; and once or twice I had the pleasure of giving him silver; but my ardent desire has been to enjoy the happiness, once before I die, of giving him gold. I have long been laying up penny after penny, that I might be able to bring this piece of gold and give it to the missionary cause." The pastor could resist no longer, but gladly added to the collection this gift of love.

LET US HAVE A BLESSING.

"Mother, can't we have a blessing to-night?" said a little boy of five or six years to his mother, who, in the absence of her husband, was about to pour the tea without the usual preliminary.

"My son," replied his mother, "who will ask the blessing? You know your father is away."

"I will," answered the child, not intimidated by the presence of a stranger; and at once, with a grave face, and the utmost solemnity of manner he invoked God's blessing, in simple but characteristic language; then, apparently satisfied that all was right, proceeded to take his tea, unconscious that the act of the moment contained a wondrous promise of the future. If at that early age he could conquer a child's timidity and be true to his convictions of right, what may he not do when these convictions shall have deepened into the strength of manhood?

Sunday School Gazette.

A LETTER TO MR. TRAIN

TO GEORGE FRANCIS TRAIN, ESQ., London:—

DEAR SIR:—

It is most natural that at a moment when studied injustice, shameful misrepresentation, and bare-faced falsehood, respecting the people of the northern States, disgraced so large a portion of the British Press, your lucid and eloquent advocacy of our cause should elicit the warmest gratitude of your fellow citizens.

Having watched the course of the Southern Conspiracy and rebellion with the liveliest interest, and carefully observed the disposition of our people, I feel qualified to offer a few observations respecting the past, the present, and the future.

1. It is a great error to suppose that it was the attack upon Fort Sumter which first aroused the people of the North to a sense of their danger, and to a determination to support their Government. On the contrary, there was no moment from the first symptoms of rebellion, when hundreds and thousands of brave men were not willing and anxious to grind it to powder. "But what could we do? Our late 'President' refused to put forth a finger to save the ark which he had sworn to protect; and our late Vice-President, who in case of the successful impeachment of his principal would succeed to his place, was believed to be, as he has since proved himself, even worse than the former." In this state of affairs, when it was a problem of the first importance, whether we would survive three months more of the reign of these precious magistrates, Congress proved itself unequal to the crisis, and did nothing. General Scott was vainly urged to declare himself Dictator, ("to do a great right, do a little wrong,") and send an expedition to the relief of Fort Sumter. During this "winter of our discontent," the rebels waxed strong "from our neglect;" and the impunity with which South Carolina defied the National Government, encouraged the other Cotton States to join the revolt.

On Mr. Lincoln's accession to power, from amiable, but most mistaken, motives, the short-sighted policy of conciliation was allowed to paralyze the arm which should have dealt instant destruction to every traitor. Had the Government immediately re-enforced Fort Sumter, and proclaimed death to every rebel, confiscation of his property, and the freedom of his slaves; and called out 100,000 men to carry these orders into effect, how much of blood and treasure would have been spared! But six weeks were wasted in inaction, and the Government was only aroused at last by the plot to take the Capital, which, on any day of those six weeks, could have been effected with ease, by two thousand insurgents:—but,

2. It is a great error to suppose that the possessions of the capital would have been of any permanent advantage to the rebels. The people of the North would have swept them from the precincts which they defiled, as chaff is scattered by the winds of autumn. That the insurgents would have destroyed much that they could not retain, is not to be doubted, for demolition is their forte.

3. It is a great error to suppose that the acknowledgment of the independence of the rebels by England, or by England, France, and Spain, and the world at large, would have forced the North to a like foolish and wicked action. What could even the offensive and defens

NOTICE

The Social, Civil, and Statistical Association of [illegible] authorizes [illegible] to add their names to the following list to aid the freed men at Port Royal and other points where they may be located, and request [illegible] to forward [illegible] or clothing.

Any amount of value received will be acknowledged, with the name of the donor, in the Recorder, where a constant record will be kept.

Subscriptions may be sent to Jacob C White, at the office of the Lebanon Cemetery, 711 Lombard Street, and also to William Still, 107 North Fifth Street, and to Rev E. Weaver, 612 Pine Street.

Statistical Society, . .	$50 00
[illegible]	[illegible]
William Still, . .	5 00
Robert Adger, . .	2 00
Henry Minturn, . .	2 00
Catherine Johnson, . .	2 00
Vasti Locke, . .	2 00
Wm. Warricks, . .	2 00
Harriet Shorter, . .	1 [illegible]
Sarah S. Hawkins	1 00
Rev Jonathan C. Gibbs, . .	1 00
James P. Clay, . .	1 00
B[illegible]min F. Hill,	2 00
S. M. S., . .	2 00
[illegible] Gordon,	1 00
F. J. Dreer, . .	5 00

It affords us pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of ten dollars, the proceeds of Miss Anna E. Dickinson's lecture at Concert Hall for the contrabands, contributed to the S. C. and Statistical Association, to be applied as intended. Wm. Still.

Cor. Sec. of S. C. and Statistical Association of the Colored People of Penna.

Domestic Items.

OUR COUNTRY.

BY REV. DR. BETHUNE.

THE FOURTH OF JULY.

Maine from her farthest border, gives the first exulting shout,
And from New Hampshire's granite heights the echoing peals ring out;
The mountain forms of staunch Vermont prolong the thundering call;
Massachusetts answers: "Bunker Hill!"—a watchword for us all
Rhode Island shakes her sea-wet locks, acclaiming with the free.
And steel Connecticut breaks forth in sacred harmony
The giant joy of proud New York, loud as an earthquake's roar,
Is heard from Hudson's crowded banks to Erie's crowded shore;
New Jersey, hallowed by their blood, who erst in battle fell
At Monmouth's, Princeton's, Trenton's fight, joins in the rapturous swell.
Wide Pennsylvania, strong as wide, and true as she is strong,
From every hill to valley, pours the torrent tide along
Stand up, stout little Delaware, and bid thy valleys roll,
Though least among the Old Thirteen, we judge thee by the soul!
Hark to the voice of Maryland! over the broad Chesapeake,
Her sons, as valiant as their sires, in cannonadings speak.
Virginia, nurse of Washington, and guardian of his grave,
Now to thine ancient glories turn the faithful and the brave
We need not hear the bursting cheer this holy day inspires,
To know that in Columbia's cause "Virginia never tires"
From as the evergreen that waves above her sunny soil,
North Carolina shares the bliss, as oft the patriot's toil.
And the land of Sumter, Marion, of Moultrie, Pickney, [illegible]
Respond the cry, or it will rise o'en from their sleeping dust
And Georgia, by the dead who lie along Savannah's bluff,
Full well we love thee, but we ne'er can love thee well enough;
From thy wild northern boundary, to thy green isles of the sea,
Where beat on earth more gallant hearts than now throb high in thee?
On, on, from Alabama's plains, the ever-flowering glades,
To where the Mississippi's flood the turbid Gulf invades;
There, borne from many a mighty stream upon her mightier tide,
Come down the swelling long hurrahs from all that valley wide,
As wood-crowned Alleghany's call, from all her summits high,
Reverberates among the rocks that pierce the sunset sky,
While on the shores and through the swales, round the vast inland sea,
The Stars and Stripes, 'midst freemen's songs, are flashing to the breeze.
The woodsman, from the mother, takes his boy upon his knee,
To tell him how their fathers fought and bled for liberty,
The lonely hunter sits him down the forest spring beside,
To think o'er his country's worth, and feel his country's pride;
While many a foreign accent, which our God can understand,
Is blessing Him for home and bread in this free fertile land.
Yes! when upon the Eastern coast we sink to happy rest,
The day of Independence rolls still onward to the West,
Till dies on the Pacific shore the shout of jubilee,
That woke the morning with its voice along the Atlantic sea.

O God! look down upon the land which thou hast loved so well,
And grant that in unbroken truth her children still may dwell;
Nor while the grass grows on the hill, and streams flow through the vale,
May they forget their fathers' faith, or in their covenant fail!
God keep the fairest, noblest land that lies beneath the sun—
"Our country, our whole country, and our country ever one!"

General Hunter.—A correspondent from the army writes: "General Hunter is a soldier, a patriot, and, I trust, a Christian, a man of the Washingtonian school. He keeps three books on his table—the Bible, the Prayer-book, and Webster's Unabridged. While he appreciates his enemies on battle-field, he approaches his Maker on his knees." We rejoice to hear this.

Commodore Farragut a Christian.—"Rev. Mr. Taylor, of California, who is well acquainted with Commodore Farragut, the hero of the late naval engagement at New Orleans, assures us," says the Buffalo Advocate, "that he is a devoted and working Christian, as well as an able and successful officer. Mr. T. became acquainted with him about five years since. He was then commandant of the Government navy-yard at Mare Island, forty miles from San Francisco. The Commodore and his two daughters were constant attendants as teachers in the Methodist Sabbath-school, [illegible] and their personal labors were zealous in every good word and work."

Bishop Soule denies the report that he had been compelled to take the oath of allegiance to the Southern Confederacy. The editor of the Western Advocate has been told that, upon hearing the report, the bishop remarked that "he had not been asked to take the oath, and that there were not men enough, nor was there Army enough in the Confederacy to make him do it."

The well known Baptist, Elder Knapp, is dead. He died in New York, on the 16th of May, aged 61 years.

Suspension of Antioch College.—It is stated that at the approaching Commencement, which occurs on the 26th instant, the Collegiate Department of Antioch College will be suspended in consequence of a want of funds to carry it on.

The Emancipation League has just been formed with this title. Its principles are as follows:

1. To bring about emancipation throughout the whole land.
2. To support the present war until its successful termination, and, to that end, to promote by precept and example the support of the burdens, personal and pecuniary, it may impose upon us.
3. To procure the repeal of all laws authorizing interstate slave trade, and all other laws of Congress [illegible]
4. And to insist that all slaves who become practically freed by our advancing armies, or by any power of Congress or the President, shall never be restored to bondage, and that no State now in rebellion [illegible]
5. These objects are to be obtained by peaceful and lawful [illegible] meetings, by discussions in the periodical press, by tracts and essays freely distributed, by appeals to government, and by efforts to form auxiliary and co-operating societies throughout the land.

It is directed that all medical officers hold as pri[illegible] discharged the principle being recognized that they should not be held as prisoners.

Classic Spots of the South.—Hanover, the birthplace of Henry Clay, near Ashland, Mount Vernon, the steeple and tomb of George Washington; and the Hermitage, the lovely residence and the final resting place of iron hearted Andrew Jackson, are now all within the lines of the Union army, and guarded by the Federal flag, to whose glory their honor and usefulness were given. The dust of every dead President of the United States is enclosed by the national lines

PASSAGE OF THE CONFISCATION BILL.

Mr. Stevens (Pa.,) with a view of at once disposing [illegible] moved the previous question.

The bill was then passed—yeas 82, nays 44.

The bill, as passed, provides for the emancipation of slaves of all the following classes:

First. Of every person who shall act as an officer of the Rebel army or navy

Second. Of every person who shall act as President, Member of Congress, Judge of any Court, Cabinet Officer, Foreign Minister, Commissioner or Consul of the so-called Confederate States.

Third. Of every person who shall act as Governor of any State, member of a Convention or Legislature, or Judge of any State Court of the so-called Confederate States

Fourth. Of every person who, having held an office of honor, trust or profit in the United States, shall hold an office in the so-called Confederate States.

Fifth. Of every person who shall hold any office or agency under the so-called Confederate States, or under any of the States thereof, but persons in the third and fifth classes must have accepted their appointments since the date of the passage of the Secession Ordinance of their States, or have taken an oath of allegiance to the Confederacy.

Sixth. Of every person not within the above classes who, after the passage of the act, being, wilfully and without compulsion, engaged in armed rebellion, shall not, within sixty days after proclamation by the President, lay down his arms and return to his allegiance.

The bill also disqualifies the said six classes from holding office under the United States Government.

The President is authorized to negotiate for the acquisition, by treaty or otherwise, of lands or countries in Mexico, Central America or South America, or in the islands of the Gulf of Mexico, or for the right of settlement upon the lands of the said countries, for all persons liberated under this act, to be removed with their own consent.

For the purpose of paying the expenses of the purchase of such lands, and the removal of such persons, the President shall use such money as Congress may from time to time direct, arising from the sales of the property [illegible] shall have been confiscated to the use of the United States.

The other sections of the bill mainly relate to the machinery by which the provisions of the bill are to be enforced.

Number of Divorces Granted.—The Court of Common Pleas, during the four terms of the year 1861, granted sixty six divorces, comprising, for the March term, nineteen; June term, seventeen; September term, twenty, and December term, ten.

During the March term of the current year, six divorces have been granted, and for the present, or June term, one.

Jeff Davis and His Policy

From the Cincinnati Gazette.

That President Davis is an incubus on our cause, we do not doubt. Although carefully covered over with the mantle of secrecy by Congress, enough has been disclosed by stern realities to show his total incompetency to govern the affairs of the Confederacy. He has lost the confidence of both the army and the people; and, if an election to supervise was to come off for the Presidency, we do not believe that he would get the vote of a single State in the Confederacy.

The Reciprocity Treaty.—It appears, from an official report of the Secretary of the Treasury, showing the quantity and value of the different articles of merchandise imported into the United States from the British North American provinces, under the reciprocity treaty, that the total value in 1859 was more than fifteen millions of dollars; in 1860 it was over twelve million five hundred thousand dollars—and, in 1861, twenty millions. The table shows, in the last year, a falling off in fish, furs, fruits, hides, and wool, and an increase in animals, ashes, bark, butter, cheese, coal, eggs, flax, flour, grains, meats, ores, timber, &c.

For example, of animals was one million seven hundred and forty-six thousand dollars; fish of all kinds, [illegible] dollars; flour and breadstuffs, over three million dollars; grain, six million five hundred thousand dollars, timber of all kinds, three million two hundred and eighty-nine thousand dollars. The respective amounts of other imports are not enumerated.

Supplies for the Sick and Wounded

U. S. SANITARY COMMISSION,
Philadelphia Agency, 1235 Chestnut St.

To the Editor of the Bulletin.

In reply to your article of yesterday, headed "Let us have peace," and referring to the [illegible] to the efforts of the United States Sanitary Commission in New York, I beg leave to state that the Philadelphia Branch [illegible] at the above place for nearly six months; that about eight thousand dollars have been collected in money, that a very large quantity of hospital supplies of every kind have been received and distributed to the sick and wounded; that the steamer Spaulding, which lately arrived at this port, with her load of [illegible] stores and supplies of all kinds for her return voyage, at a cost to the Philadelphia Branch of nearly seven hundred dollars, and equipped with a full complement of Philadelphia surgeons, nurses and dressers, under our townsman, Dr. Gilmore, who must generously volunteered their services to the Commission. The Spaulding may be soon expected back with another sad and precious freight, and the Commission desires again to secure and provide for her [illegible] An organization, such as you call for, exists, and is in active operation. I annex the names of the officers of the Committees:

Executive Committee—Horace Binney, Jr., Chairman; Dr. Edward Stackhouse, Secretary.

Committee on Supplies—Samuel C. Merrick, Chairman; Charles Hartshorne, Secretary.

Committee on Medical Inspection—John C. Cresson, Chairman; Dr. Alfred Stille, Secretary.

Treasurer, Caleb Cope, Esq.

General Superintendent, Wm. Platt, Jr., Esq.

All that the Commission now needs is a more enlarged support in contributions and supplies

Donations in money may be sent to Caleb Cope, Esq., Treasurer, 302 Market Street; and contributions in other money or supplies will be gratefully received by William Platt, Jr., Esq., Superintendent, at the office, 1235 Chestnut St.

Yours, very respectfully,

HORACE BINNEY, JR.,
Chairman of Executive Committee of Philadelphia Branch of U. S. Sanitary Commission.—Evening Bulletin, 18th.

We would state, in addition to the above, that the Spaulding is still at the "White House," in the Pamunkey River, there not being wounded soldiers enough to [illegible] Her Medical Director [illegible] turned to Philadelphia, after performing arduous and important services, such as dressing the wounds of some of those who were attacked by the guerillas on Friday evening, the 13th, and removing all the sick from the tenth on shore to transports in the river, so that they might be safe in the event of the anticipated attack.

From the Army in Front of Richmond

Reconnoissance of Montgomery, en route for Richmond—Resign to Repel Hasbrouck—Another Fight on James Island—Seven Lies on Both Sides.

General McClellan's Headquarters, Sunday, June 22, 8 P. M.—The has been a remarkably quiet day, considering the close proximity of the two contending forces. Brisk skirmishing occurred all day yesterday, and last night everything indicated that a [illegible] advanced in strong force on our lines during last night, but, being promptly met, soon retired.

[illegible] dispatch from Montgomery, Alabama, dated the 17th instant, stating that General Beauregard and staff had arrived there, on their way to Richmond, and it was said that they were to be followed by a large portion of the army of the Mississippi, and that a sufficient force had been left under the invincible Bragg to check any advancement of the Vandals under Halleck.

[illegible] position Sunday, in which it acknowledges a severe loss on both sides, without any material change in positions.

The Latest from Richmond

Washington, June 21st.—The following despatch [illegible]

Headquarters of Army of the Potomac,
June 21, 1862.

Hon. E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War—Things are pretty quiet to-day. There is not as much shelling as usual. Our preparations are progressing well The enemy opened with some heavy guns yesterday.

GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN,
Major General.

All Quiet Along the Entire Lines of the Army of the Chickahominy.—Advices have been received at the War Department to-day from General Halleck, dated at 12 M.—Advices have been received at the War Department to-day from General Halleck, dated at Corinth, the 22d inst., and from the Army of the [illegible]

Nothing of interest has transpired in any quarter.

Admission of Western Virginia into the Union.—The Senate [illegible] reported a bill to-day providing for the admission of a new State into the Union, to be called Western Virginia.

Beauregard and his Army.—Memphis, June [illegible] the following despatch:

"Montgomery, Ala., June 17.—General Beauregard and his staff are on their way to Richmond. We hear that a large portion of the army of the Mississippi will soon follow their general. A sufficient force will be left with the invincible Bragg to check any steps toward the interior by the Vandals under General Halleck."

Rebel Account of a Battle near Charleston.—Fortress Monroe, June 23, 8.30 A. M.—The steamer Mount Vernon arrived from City Point last night, but too late to send a despatch through.

The Richmond papers of Saturday contain a brief account of a bloody battle fought on Monday last between five Federal regiments and a battery of Parrot guns, and parts of two Confederate regiments and a battery. The battle lasted all day, with a heavy loss on both sides.

The Charleston Mercury feared that the battle would be renewed the next day; and expressed apprehensions for the safety of the city in consequence of the great exhaustion of the Southern troops and the loss of many officers.

Generals Evans and Pemberton complimented the troops for their bravery in standing under the shells of our gunboats and batteries.

The fight took place within four miles of Charleston, and from the tone of an editorial of the Mercury, I should think that the rebels have been cut off from a retreat by our gunboats. If this be so, Charleston must soon fall.

The Despatch says it can no longer be denied that Jackson has been reinforced largely, and that the United States columns must either combine or fall back across the Potomac.

Memphis, June 21.—The following news is contained in the Grenada Appeal of the 18th:

The Charleston Mercury of the 17th says: "The Confederate loss at Secessionville, yesterday, was 40 killed and [illegible] wounded. We [illegible] the field 146 Federals, and took 100 prisoners."

Special despatches to the Augusta, Ga., papers, dated [illegible] that the [illegible] took place this morning on James Island, four miles from the city. Five regiments of Federals, with artillery, attacked our batteries at Secessionville. Col. Lamar commanded the Confederates, and, with a few hundred troops, repulsed the enemy three times, with great slaughter. The enemy fought bravely, but were defeated. Our victory was complete. The enemy's loss is supposed to have been about 400, including 30 prisoners. Our loss is estimated at from 50 to 100. Col Lamar was wounded. Captains Reed and King, and Lieut. Edwards, were killed. The attack will soon be renewed. The Confederates are much exhausted by the previous shelling of the enemy, which has been continued day and night for a week."

The Press remarks on this:

"We have no news from Charleston except what comes from rebel sources. It seems that the rebels made an effort to repulse the advance of General Hunter from Stono Island. The attempt was fruitless, as, according to the Charleston Mercury, they were compelled to retire [illegible] a large force of our army engaged, and it is probable that the regiments in the battle were merely our advance guard. The real fight has yet to take place, unless, as is very probable, the enemy evacuate Charleston. That city is now the home of a terror-stricken people. They see the doom of their metropolis at hand. Charleston, in the course of a little while must yield—and when it [illegible] the power of the rebellion is at an end in South Carolina. The [illegible] to these people. It is a little more than a year since its uncertain reports echoed over Charleston Bay. Then it came from the starving garrison of a beleaguered fort. Thousands crowded the wharves of the city, and while an overwhelming force were raining shot and shell upon Fort Sumter's walls, men shouted and women smiled, and in all things it was a gala day. Our flag was trailed in the dust, and treason gloried in its shame. These traitorous people have another foe than Major Anderson and his heroic battalion. The Union cannon again thunder at their door, but they are commanded by men powerless to [illegible] the wrongs of April, 1861. In Charleston the rebellion [illegible] in Charleston it passes [illegible] will [illegible] be torn down, never to float again in mockery and shame."

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

The change which the fall of New Orleans has produced in the tone of that part of the English press which [illegible] country, is remarkable. The predictions that the Federal Government will be unable to restore the Union, gradually cease. The cause of the South is generally represented as almost hopeless; and if we only could send them enough cotton, we would have no warmer friends than the entire family of John Bull.

It is now rumored that the king of Prussia will defy the verdict of the people, and overthrow the [illegible] which would inevitably lead to a rise of the people for the defence of their rights. A [illegible] democracy and despotism cannot be doubtful, as the detailed accounts of the late elections show that the immense majority of the people are firm in their liberal political views, and ready to make any sacrifice for their defence.

An important conference has taken place in Naples between the King of Italy and Prince Napoleon. The Prince was the bearer of a letter from the French [illegible] which is supposed to promise a new [illegible] of the Italian question.

Romanism in England and Wales.—In 1829 there were only 449 Romish chapels in Great Britain. Now there are 1,098. Then there were 1,018 priests, now there are 1,586. In 1829 there were no colleges; there are now 1250 monasteries and 152 convents. And it is a fact, that at the present there are more priests in England and Scotland in proportion to the population than there are in Ireland. These facts speak volumes about the spread of Romanism.

Jules Gerard, [illegible] is forming under the [illegible]

Samuel Work, Wesley McCouch
Members and Agents, Pittsburg

BANKING HOUSE OF
WORK, McCOUCH & CO.,
No. 56 South Third Street,
PHILADELPHIA.

Dealers in Uncurrent Bank Notes and Coin. Sovereigns and Specie From bought on the most favorable terms.
Bills of Exchange on New York, Boston, Pittsburg, Baltimore, Richmond Cincinnati St. Louis &c., constantly for sale
Collections promptly made on all accessible points in the United States and Canadas
Deposits Received, payable on demand, and interest allowed as per agreement.
Notes and Loans bought and sold on commission, and Business Paper negotiated
Refer to PHILADELPHIA and COMMERCIAL BANKS, Philadelphia Bank, Drexel & Co., Winslow, Lanier & Co., New York, and Citizens' and Exchange Banks, Pittsburg dec 6-tf

NINTH STREET WALL PAPER
AND
WINDOW SHADE WAREHOUSE,
No. 210 North Ninth St., abv. Race.

CHARLES H. GRILLO would respectfully invite the attention of purchasers to his rich and beautiful assortment of
WALL PAPERS AND WINDOW SHADES,
[illegible]
All orders [illegible] promptly attended to.

Call to Respectfully Solicited.

IMPROVEMENTS made in the machinery for manufacturing Gold Pens, and secured to the subscriber by Letters Patent, have enabled him to overcome the many imperfections hitherto unavoidable in their production and now bring them within the reach of all. The writing public will know the following facts:—

Constant writing for six months is done cheaper with Gold Pens than with steel, therefore, it is economy to use Gold Pens.

The Gold Pen remains unchanged by years of continued use, while the steel Pen is ever changing to worse forms and wear; therefore, perfect uniformity of writing is obtained only by the use of the Gold pens.

The Gold Pen is always ready and reliable, while the steel Pen must be often condemned and a new one selected; therefore there is great saving of time in the use of the Gold Pen.

Gold is capable of receiving any degree of elasticity, so that the Gold Pen is exactly adapted to the hand of the writer; therefore, the nerves of the hand and the arm are not injured, as is known to be the case by the use of Steel Pens.

He is now selling Gold Pens at prices varying from 25 cents to $1, according to size, the average wear of every one of which will far outlast a gross of the best Steel Pens.

Sold by all dealers in the line throughout the country. Wholesale and retail at the store No. 25 Maiden Lane, [illegible] customers receiving cash or [illegible] prompt attention, and a Pen or Pens corresponding in value, and selected according to description, will immediately be sent by mail or otherwise, as directed

Address
A. MORTON, 25 Maiden Lane, New York.

"We happen to know Mr. A. Morton to be not only one of the best and most extensive manufacturers of Gold Pens, not only in America, but in the world. We use his Pens, and can assure our readers of their excellence."—New York Tribune

"We have been in the habit of using these Gold Pens for a long time, and have always found them the best instruments of the kind that have fallen in our way."—New York Evening Post.

C. O. VALENTINE,
DEALER IN PURE NATIVE WINES,
EXTRACT OF WINES,
FOR MEDICINAL AND SACRAMENTAL USE
UNFERMENTED.
PURE GRAPE AND CIDER BRANDY, WINE AND CIDER VINEGAR, GRAPE VINES OF ALL KINDS FURNISHED.
All the above for sale at the Great Wine Depot of the North,
JACKSON, WASH CO., N. Y.

BOARDING
IN BROOKLYN.

MRS. S. PLANT (formerly Richardson) respectfully announces that she has opened a first class BOARDING AND [illegible] HOUSE at No. [illegible] Fulton Ferry, where she is prepared to accommodate the public in the most [illegible]

Her house being located in a very pleasant part of the city, and within five minutes' walk of Fulton Ferry, is made thus a very desirable and convenient place.

PERRY & FITZGERALD'S
PROCESS FOR MAKING LIGHT, NUTRITIOUS, AND UNADULTERATED BREAD, WITHOUT FERMENTATION.

The new process of bread making, patented by Perry & Fitzgerald, removes all the obstacles which have hitherto rendered it impossible to manufacture perfectly pure, sound, and Nutritious bread. The entire process is performed by mechanical means and is eminently cleanly

The process consists in mixing the flour in a closed vessel, and the [illegible] with [illegible] and [illegible] which [illegible] dough is made thoroughly light, and ready to be [illegible] pans, for baking in the [illegible] and [illegible] The "change" is usually 20 minutes, and such machine is operated the operation, in all its details, from the putting in of the flour to the discharging of the dough, in from twenty five to forty minutes.

The Invention of Perry & Fitzgerald effects a revolution in the preparation of bread, by establishing a system of wholesale manufacture not subject to the ridiculous and evils of fermentation, but exact and certain in its results:—1 Because by the substitution of mechanical for manual labor, and in the superior [illegible] of the article produced. It promises large profits upon the capital employed. 2 Because such employment of capital as well as the protection afforded by the patent, gives adequate security against competition. The [illegible] consumer [illegible] of the evils of a monopoly, because it leaves the consumer at all times in possession of his former means of supply, to be resorted to, should the monopoly become prejudicial

The application of pure carbonic acid gas, under pressure, to a mechanically kneaded dough-mass, as in the invention of Perry & Fitzgerald, did not occur to Dr. Dye, though he must to have had a clear perception of the importance of the artificial use of the gas since he states, by the [illegible] that "if water, highly impregnated with carbonic acid gas, be used for kneading the dough, the resulting bread will be remarkably spongy. Could a light article," he continues, "be produced in this way, then, as the sugar would remain undecomposed, the bread would be as much the sweeter and more nourishing."

What, to Dr Dye, was evidently a dimly comprehended chemical truth, has been practically developed by the brilliant invention of Perry & Fitzgerald [illegible] and [illegible] to [illegible] membrane, as among the most eminent benefactors of mankind.

ITS SUPERIORITY.—The superiority of unfermented bread is by no means new. Dr. Cullen, who wrote more than seventy years ago, says:

"In [illegible] also [illegible] the finer sort of people, as that is the greater part of the whole, live upon unfermented bread, and unfermented farinaceous in other forms, and there are not a few healthy people anywhere to be found. In the course of fifty years, that I have resided among them I have had occasion to know this and have taken notice of their [illegible] that [illegible] I never found impute to the use of unfermented farinaceous

At a later period, Professor Thompson, of Glasgow, in his work on the "Food of Animals," after alluding to the facts referred to above by Dr Cullen, and other kindred facts, observes:—

"Such then, being well-ascertained evidence in favor of the wholesomeness of unfermented bread, it becomes important to discover in what respects it differs from fermented bread. The result gained by this process [illegible] is, that the [illegible] of the [illegible] of the mass more readily digestible by the proper organs of digestion. But, on the object is gained at a sacrifice of the nutritious [illegible] amount of the less nutritious in the proportion.

The [illegible] Thompson [illegible] a difference [illegible] in the process of fermentation, and [illegible] by the process of [illegible] Bread

II. Cheapness.—Instead of the dough being mixed by the naked hands or feet, the bread from the mixing of the flour to the completion of the baking, is put and entirely out of [illegible] by any one. "One desideratum attained in its manufacture," says Dr Willard Parker, "is its utter cleanliness." Says Dr Dye, "The process is not only purely scientific, but presents [illegible] cleanly."

III. Its Preservative or [illegible] Principle of the Flour.—As the raising of the dough is by the mechanical introduction of pure carbonic acid gas, under pressure [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Family Circle.

THE GLASS DECANTER.

There is no thing we have in [illegible] stocked with necessaries and comforts [illegible] for the purchase

"A decanter. We have nothing to put liquor in. We must have, I think, a decanter." A decanter was more of a "must have" then than now, and James drew some change from his pocket, which on counting over was not enough for the purchase

"I would buy a good one," said Fanny, "while I was about it; not thin glass, that will break easily. A handsome cut-glass one will be cheaper in the end."

James thought he should finish a job by noon, the wages of which would not only buy the decanter, but fill it also; and he went out to his work. It was a neat new two-story house this young couple lived in, built by James himself in "odd moments," he said; for James' joinery was in good demand, and he was rarely out of employment. There was a patch of ground round it, with vegetables enough for summer eating, and a few for harvest. They were a well brought up, industrious, happy couple, with half a pew at church, and sometimes a seat at the prayer-meeting, useful and promising, with good prospects also.

A few nights after, when James came home, he drew out from his green-baize jacket the best-looking decanter to be found at Hobbs', he said, and held it up before Fanny and the candle It was filled. "Let's try it," said James. "Hobbs said it was the very best. Hand me a tumbler, Fanny."

"Oh no, James," replied his wife, "it is not for us; it is for company or sickness. Let us save it." "You have had a big wash; a swallow will do you good, and I should not object to tasting;" so he put two or three spoonsful of their best sugar into a tumbler, poured out a suitable quantity of Holland gin, and added some hot water from the singing tea-kettle. "Excellent toddy," said James, stirring and offering it to his wife "No, James, you drink first," answered she; "I like the leavings best;" and Fanny folded her arms, while James sipped the smoking beverage. "It seems to me you have not left much," said Fanny, smiling, and taking her turn at the tumbler, "but it is as much as I want;" and she leisurely finished the remainder

This was the first glass of toddy from the new decanter; and as James and Fanny sat there, too to tee, by their warm hearth, in pleasing chitchat, they did not see the coil of a serpent in the bottom of the tumbler. Perhaps a microscope was needed to discern it, but it was there

By and by a baby was born in the house Happy father and mother, with their plump little one, who filled their hearts with a new joy. Fanny was happy, only as the months went by, once in a while a fear took hold of her, a strange fear, that made her shudder. What was it? Had she got a glimpse of the serpent? Ah, among all the increasing wants of the little household, there was nothing which oftener needed filling than the glass decanter.

One day, on hearing her husband's step in the yard, she arose with baby sleeping in her arms, tiptoed into the keeping-room closet, and snatching the decanter from the shelf, thrust it into a small cupboard below, and turned the key. Back she went with a trembling heart. James soon after came in. First he played with baby, then nidled to the keeping-room, and Fanny heard the closet door creak. "What will James think?" thought Fanny anxiously and much afraid. She laid baby down, and tried to busy herself with dinner. Presently her husband passed through the kitchen without speaking. Dinner ready, she rang the bell. James came in and took a seat by the fire. Baby crept towards him, but he took no notice of it. "Are you sick, James?" asked Fanny. "Not very smart," answered he, sulkily "You have taken cold," she said with affectionate earnestness; "it is very raw. Let me make you a bowl of sage-tea." "Sage-tea!" growled her husband angrily, "I don't want any old woman's nostrums." He rested his elbows on his knees, and put his head between his hands. Fanny pitied him. "What will you have, James?" asked Fanny. "Shall I fix you something hot?"

"Is there any thing in the house?" he asked, eagerly turning his face towards her with an asking look. "I reckon it would make me feel better." "Well, poor James is sick," thought Fanny, trying hard to feel there was no harm in unlocking the little cupboard, and offering that cup to her husband's lips which a few moments before she was so anxious to save him from. Poor Fanny wanted firmness. The contents of the decanter were soon emptied, and James took it away to be refilled. It did not come back the next day, or the next, or the next. The tumblers were clean and dry, and through the livelong week showed no marks of sugar, gin, or toddy. "James sees his danger, and he has put the decanter away," thought Fanny, with a thankful heart. A heavy weight seemed lifted from her, and again she sang about the house

James had a small poultry-yard, which not only kept a supply of eggs for his family, but made an occasional trade for the neighbors. One day about this time Fanny went to the barn to get a newly laid egg for James' favorite pudding. She and the little boy loved to hunt for eggs. Among the hay she found a new hole, which, quite likely, led to a new nest. Down she thrust her hand and grasped at something. Fanny started and turned pale, and shrank back trembling. It was not a hen, or chicken, or egg she touched, but something that took her strength away, and she felt like lying down to die. A serpent? It was the glass decanter which she pulled out, hid away there half filled—with what? The deadliest firewater, New England rum. Fanny forgot her eggs, her pudding, her child, as she sat there and cried as if her heart would break.

We must now pass over several years of poor Fanny's life; sorrowful years they grew to be Many children were born to the Farmers. The two oldest died, and the mother wept bitter tears But greater sorrow was in store for her, as her husband went, step by step, down, down, down, until he lost his fine manly look, neglected his work, was no longer seen at church, and every thing within and without his house showed the mournful tokens of a ruined home.

So things went on till Silas the second son was twelve years old. A fine lad was he. Two years before, Silas went to live in a gentleman's family; when, the gentleman dying, he came home to seek other employment. It was not long before Hobbs had his eye on him—Hobbs the dramseller, whose little shop at the corner had manufactured more hard drinkers than any shop in the country, making its owner rich on other men's sins. "A smart little fellow," said Hobbs, with his eye on Silas, "and I can get him for nothing," chuckling over the long account run up against the Farmer estate. He concluded to go over and talk with his mother about it. "A fine lad that Silas of yours," said Hobbs, seating himself in a chair which his custom-work had made rickety. "Silas is a good boy," replied his mother sadly—"a good boy." "Well," proceeded Hobbs, with a little creditable embarrassment, "perhaps you know there is an account against your husband, which maybe, you will like Silas to help wipe off." "I did not know there were any honest debts there," said Fanny, a faint color mounting into her pale face as she thought of the wicked enticements he used to keep his victims. "Your husband can remember, I reckon," exclaimed Hobbs angrily, "and if I am not paid soon, you must take the consequence." With a house still over her head, Fanny had contrived to get along. She feared at no distant day it might be drank away, and she well might dread a creditor like Hobbs The poor mother was cowed. "I will talk with Silas about it," she said humbly. "What would you allow him?" "Oh, I shan't be hard," said the hard old man; "send the boy to me;" and Hobbs was not sorry to decamp. He could meet the frightful oaths and reeling idiocy of the wretched men who frequented his bar, but the presence of a stricken woman alarmed his conscience

When Silas came home his mother told him "Never, mother, never," exclaimed Silas, "never will I go and deal rum to my father or any body's else father. No liquor shall pass through my hands. Why, mother, I am a soldier in the Cold Water army."

"If father gives you the decanter, you'd have to go and buy some," said his little brother. "Never!" repeated Silas. "Than father would beat you," said little Fanny shrinking. "I would be licked to death rather than break my pledge," said Silas. "Obey your parents," said his mother, for the mother's spirit was altogether crushed, and she was ready to counsel any compromise rather [illegible] with wickedness, but he said nothing

That evening James Parmer came home and told Silas to run down to Hobbs' and bring home the decanter. His mother trembled, but Silas took his cap and walked away He entered the shop as the old man was filling it "You are Silas Farmer, I suppose. Well, I want you in my shop," said Hobbs in a tone which was meant to be pleasant. "I came for the decanter," said the boy "And I want you in my shop," cried the old man testily, putting it on the counter. "I cannot come, sir," replied Silas, firmly. "I am a soldier in the Cold Water army, and I cannot serve in the shop where my father was made a [illegible] With that he stepped further [illegible] the decanter and went off, not homeward, no, no, for he was a soldier in the Cold Water army. He ran to a neighboring well. On the green grass which grew around it—for every thing looks fresh and green where pure water is—he poured out the destroying liquor. Drawing up a bucket of water, he carefully rinsed the decanter; then filling it with water, fresh and sparkling, he bottled it up and went home

"Father," said the brave boy, entering the bed room where his enfeebled parent was about undressing, "I have brought you some good wholesome drink, such as God made, and it is all I could bring you, because I am a soldier in the Cold Water army." "A soldier in what?" asked the father, looking round with his bleared eye. "In the Cold Water army, father. We are fighting against wicked king Alcohol; and Oh, father, do come and join our ranks; do, father." There was something in the almost agonizing earnestness of his son that touched James Farmer's heart "Do, father," rang in his ears the livelong night. True, he gruffly motioned the boy away; but there were other things that he could not motion away so easily His mind was alert, and he had [illegible] thing to stupefy it—nothing to moisten his parched lips and burning tongue—nothing to quench his craving thirst but the pure water in his well-filled decanter. The first object he descried in the gray early dawn was his decanter. He grasped it with his trembling hands. No liquor fumes quickened his senses. How he longed for "a drink." Again he looked at the decanter. No hope there; it was only water, water, water. He glared around the room. How changed was every thing in that once happy room, every thing else but the glass decanter. And what a long train of misery had it uncorked in his family! As he looked at it, vipers and serpents, hissing and stinging, seemed crawling from it, mocking him with cruel mockings. That dreadful delirium, the curse of the drunkard, was creeping over the fine strong frame of James Farmer. He shouted aloud, "Drink, drink, drink!"

For days and nights did Fanny and her son watch by his bed, and bathe his hot brow and cool his burning tongue with cold water. "Do, father," came first to his mind when it began to clear up. "O my God, help me!" cried the sick man. "Almighty Saviour, help me to keep it!" prayed he, as Silas, true to his soldier duty, brought the cold water pledge to his father's bedside. In large, sprawling letters James wrote his name, and the family knelt down, while the minister prayed for forgiving mercy, and grace to strengthen him in days to come.

"Here, father," said Silas, going to the closet when the solemn service was over, "here is the decanter filled with fresh cold water; will you not seal your pledge to total abstenence by a glass of this wholesome drink?" "Oh, let us smash that decanter," cried little Fanny. "And bury the pieces," added Freddy. "From her sight for ever," said Fanny the mother. "That is all which is left of our first housekeeping, Fanny. Let it stand always filled with water, a witness of my reform, as it was the companion of my fall," said the penitent father. So there it stands, an abiding memorial of sad days bettered and brightened.

Child's Paper.

HOW TWO HEROINES DIED

In the year 204, at Carthage, suffered two females, Vivia Perpetua and [illegible]

Perpetua was a widow of two-and twenty, of respectable rank, great accomplishments, and, at the time of her trial, the mother of an infant child With the other members of her family, except her father, she had embraced the Christian faith, and was about to be baptized, when information was lodged against her as being a disciple of the forbidden religion. She and her companions were kept under guard for some days before they were cast into prison; during this time Perpetua was visited by her father, who loved her with great affection. He knew the danger she was in, and grieved to lose such a loving daughter; he earnestly besought her to recant, and be restored to her afflicted family. Pointing to a vase which stood on the floor, she said: "Can you give any other name than vase to that vessel?" And her father answered in the negative Neither, added she, "can I call myself by any other name than that of a Christian."

Although she loved her father much she knew her duty, "to obey God rather than man." Her father left her, and for several days she did not see him. During this period she was baptized, when she again gave herself to God, and besought him to give her patience in the time of trial

She and her companions were at last cast into a dark, dismal prison to await their trial. Vivia, being well educated, wrote an account of what they suffered. She says, "I was terrified at it, for I had never been [illegible] I was torn with anxiety about my infant; but by the aid of the deacons of the Church my dear child was brought to me, and we were removed to a more open part of the prison, where I suckled the babe, who was dying of hunger. I then had to part with him again; but I was satisfied. I was as happy as if I had been in a palace"

The miserable father, forgetting his anger in his grief, learning that an examination of the prisoners was to take place the following day, visited his daughter, and again implored her to recant "Think," said he, "of your mother, your aunt, think of your little son who cannot live without you." He then threw himself at her feet, weeping as if his heart were broken She answered to her loving father's entreaties, "that while nothing on earth would have delighted her more than to [illegible] please and disobey God."

[illegible] with her fellow prisoners, to the tribunal, to be examined in the presence of a vast concourse of people, who had assembled to witness the trial Vivia's turn at last came, and she was about to confess that she was a Christian, when a noise was heard in the court. It was her father forcing himself through the crowd with her little infant son in his arms, to make, in that most affecting manner, his last appeal to change her mind. The judge was moved to tears at this sight, and said, "Spare the old age of your father, and the helplessness of your infant." then added, "Are you a Christian?"

She replied, "I am; I have lived, and am resolved to die, a Christian"

Her father was now ordered to withdraw, but lingering, as all fond parents would do in such try[illegible] staff of one of the officers

Vivia says: "I felt that blow, given to my father, as if it had fallen on my own head"

[illegible] to be thrown to the wild beasts Perpetua sent to ask her father to allow her to have the company of her child during the few hours she had to live. He, however, refused to comply with her request, as he thought he might even yet induce her to sacrifice to the gods But he sought an interview She was granted to have it, still she would not deny her father's request He was admitted. Frantic with grief, he tore his hair, fell on the floor, used every rateously; but to no purpose, her heart was in heaven She trusted in Christ to the last and [illegible] hour

Felicitas, her companion, had also a little infant [illegible] Very different prayer in her behalf, she, with the utmost composure, gave her offer to her sister, and so appeared free from all earthly care

The hour at last come when they were led to the amphitheatre, to witness a good confession before [illegible] went on with composed countenances and an easy [illegible] might draw wrong conclusions from their being cheerful in the face of death. They sang a hymn, and then called on the magistrates and people to remember that they would have to give an account of that day's work. They then asked them to observe that they died in the faith of their Saviour, "whom having not seen, they loved

The wild beasts were then let loose, and the poor women were made to stand by and witness the death of their male companions by the jaws of lions leopards, and bears

Their own turn came at last, when they were enclosed in a net and exposed to a wild cow. Perpetua met the first attack, and was thrown wounded to the ground; after which the cow ran against Felicitas, and made her a horrid spectacle even to look at. Faithful still, in such trying circumstances, Perpetua went to her aid, composed her disordered hair, and raised her to her feet. Perpetua then called her brother and said to him, "Continue firm in the faith, love one another, and be neither frightened nor offended at our sufferings."

As the hour was late the spectators grew impatient, so they were led forward to the middle of the arena, to be killed by the sword. Giving each other the kiss of peace, they presented themselves to the arm of the executioner. Felicitas was killed by a single blow; but Perpetua, falling into the hands of a trembling gladiator, was often struck and wounded in vain. Preserving her fortitude to the last moment, she was observed calmly directing the soldier to the most expeditious way of performing his office; and then, without a groan, on the sands of the amphitheatre she fell asleep in Jesus

AN ADDRESS TO CHILDREN

Children and young persons, I have a message to you from God. All of you, even the youngest, "have sinned, and come short of the glory of God;" that is, you have done that for which you will be cast, soul and body, into hell if you are not reconciled to God through Jesus Christ.

If you read the fifty-first Psalm, you will see that you were born sinners, and every day brings you intelligence of the death of some person once as young, as healthy, and apparently as likely to live as you. And if God should now take you away by death, what would become of you if you are not reconciled to him?

Perhaps you wish to know what some of the sins are of which you are guilty. Did you never disobey your parents? If you did, you disobeyed God; for God commands children to obey and honor their parents. And when your parents or teachers have corrected you for your faults, were you never angry at them? If so, it was sinful, it is sinful to be angry at them; and sinful not to do better when corrected. "Correction is grievous unto him that forsaketh the way; and he that hateth reproof shall die." Tell me, when you had thoughts that you were ill-treated by some of your companions, did you never desire to be avenged? "Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath." Do you not sometimes become angry with your companions, and call them by opprobrious or reproachful names? This then is another sin. Whoever calls his brother a "fool, shall be in danger of hell-fire." Do you not sometimes wish to be out of sight of your parents and teachers, so as to do what you would fear to do in their presence? If so, surely you must have forgotten that God is [illegible] before him, what you dare not do before your parents. Have you not been glad when the Sabbath day was over, or at least when divine service was closed? [illegible] so long in the house of worship? And during divine worship, are you not thinking of your sports and your pastimes? or what is worse, talking to some other, instead of listening to the preacher This is also sinful; for God regards those as mockers, who draw nigh to him with their lips, or with forms of worship, while their hearts are far from him. Do you pray to God morning and evening? I fear that many of you are so wicked as to neglect to pray every morning and evening. If you have never been guilty of stealing, have you not sometimes been guilty of telling lies, or of profane swearing? Now the Bible tells us, that such persons "shall have their part in the lake that burns with fire and brimstone."

Do you [illegible] your play when you should have gone to your prayers? And what will become of children who think more of their sports than of God and their souls? I will ask you but one question more, and that is, if possible, to awaken you to a concern for your soul. Do you ever think of death? If you look into a grave when it is opened, instead of one who has life, who can speak and walk, you see nothing but lifeless remains fast returning to dust. But in a little while you will be thus mouldering in the grave You must certainly die, and you know not how soon, and if the sins of which I have told you, and probably very many other sins of which I know nothing, be not forgiven, you cannot be saved. Will you not then repent of sin immediately?

But perhaps you wish to be told what you must do in order to be saved. First of all, give your heart to the Lord. Repent and turn to him Pray like the distressed Publican; "Lord, be merciful to me a sinner." Say, "Lord, thou hast promised a new heart to sinners like me, and I have need of it, for my heart is very wicked. Save me from my sins, for Christ's sake." Who knows but that the Lord, who hears the lions and the ravens when they cry for food, may hear you Read your Bible and your catechism; but first pray to God to bless them to you and make you understand what you read [illegible] Do not lie, nor swear, nor [illegible] which I have told you; and, in short, strive to [illegible] of those who lie, swear, and break the Sabbath, for they will try to make you as bad as themselves [illegible] "he that walketh with wise men shall be wise" Never forget to pray to God as soon as you rise [illegible] at night

Now there are many things to encourage you to follow the advice now given. A promise is made to those who seek God early in life. "I love them that love me, and those that seek me early shall find me." Samuel, Abijah, Josiah, and Timothy, are highly commended in the Bible [illegible] children with the most tender affection. He says of them, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not" "And he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them." O, if you knew how good he is, you would not rest till you should know how he is to [illegible] him If you seek God early, God will bless you, and his people will bless you, and all generations will call you blessed O, then, make glad the [illegible] make glad your own heart by seeking the Lord and saving your soul — Hodgkinson's Great [illegible] tination.

A Yorkshireman having occasion to visit France, was dumbfounded to find, on reaching Calais, that men, women, and children, all spoke [illegible] this occasioned, he retreated to bed, and was awakened in the morning by the cock crowing; whereupon he burst into a wild exclamation of astonishment and delight, and exclaimed, "Thank goodness, there's English at last'

THE HURRICANE

Lord of the winds! I feel thee nigh
I know thy breath in the burning sky!
And I wait, with a thrill in every vein,
For the coming of the hurricane!

And lo! on the wings of the heavy gales,
Through the boundless arch of heaven he sails;
Silent and slow, and terribly strong,
The mighty shadow is borne along,
Like the dark eternity to come;
While the world below, dismayed and dumb,
Through the calm of the thick but stagnant sphere
Looks up at its gloomy folds with fear

They darken fast,—and the golden blaze
Of the sun is quenched in the lurid haze,
And he sends through the shade a funeral ray—
A glare that is neither night nor day,
A [illegible]
The clouds above and the earth beneath,
As to greet it as the eldest birth
While the hurricane's distant voice is heard
Uttered among the mountains round,
And the forests hear and answer the sound.

He is come! he is come! do ye not behold
His ample robes on the wind unrolled?
Giant of air! we bid thee hail!—
How his gray skirts toss in the whirling gale—
How his huge and writhing arms are bent,
To clasp the sons of the firmament,
And fold, at length, in their dark embrace,
From mountain to mountain, the visible space!
[illegible] the whirlwind is near
The dust of the plains to the mid-air!
And hark to the crashing, long and loud,
Of the chariot of God in the thunder-cloud!
You may trace its path by the flashes that start
From the rapid wheels where'er they dart,
As the fire-bolts leap to the worlds below,
And flood the skies with a lurid glow.

What roar is that!—'tis the rain that breaks
In torrents away from the airy lakes,
Heavily poured on the shuddering ground,
And shedding a nameless horror round.
Ah! well knows woods, and mountains, and skies,
With the very clouds!—ye are lost to my eyes:
I seek ye vainly, and see in your place
The shadowy tempest that sweeps through space—
A whirling ocean that fills the wall
Of the crystal heaven, and buries all:
And I, cut off from the world, remain
Alone with the terrible hurricane.

Bryant

ON A SLEEPING BOY

Sleep—and while slumber weighs thine eyelids down,
May no foul phantoms o'er thy pillow frown;
But brightest visions deck thy tranquil bed,
And angels' wings o'ercanopy thy head
Sleep [illegible] dark dreams arise
To mar thy rosy rest—thou babe of Paradise!
See where the glowing hands are closely pressed,
As when from prayer he softly sank to rest;
Mark how with half-closed lips and cherub-smile
He looks, as still he prayed, and slept the while;
Yet—yet they seem as if they whispered praise
For all the blessings of his halcyon days.
Rid, oh, Almighty Father, God, and Friend,
Religion's glories on his steps attend!
To shine through all the dreary storms of life,
A splendid beacon in the world of strife;
And when to Thee recalled he sinks in death,
May prayer and praise still bless his parting breath!

FACTS AND FANCIES

There are one hundred and ten Protestant missionaries in China

In India there are 125,000 converts to the Christian religion.

On the Zambesi river, Central Africa, there is a place, according to Dr Livingstone, where the stream leaps a precipice of three hundred and ten feet—double that of the Niagara

Iceland, A. D. 1000. The London Quarterly, in an article on Iceland and its change of faith, says that in the year of our Lord 1000 almost the whole population were baptized.

The Rev. Dr. Perkins, formerly of the mission to Persia, has a copy of the New Testament seven hundred years old, which he found in that country.

The Jews have recently dedicated a new synagogue in Brooklyn, N. Y., and another is soon to be opened

Art vs. Nature.—A lecturer, who was contending, at a tiresome length and great tautological perplexity, that "Art could not improve Nature," was startled "half out of his boots" by the question, in a deep, sonorous voice, by one of the [illegible]

"How do you think you would look without [illegible]

The question was a "poser"—the argument a "non sequitur."

An intelligent farmer being asked if his horses were well matched, replied: "Yes they are matched [illegible] willing to do all the work, and the other is willing he should"

A clergyman in Maine startled his hearers on a recent Sabbath by calling upon the sexton to open the windows, "as some of the congregation were asleep!"

An Irish editor, in speaking of the miseries of Ireland, says: "Her cup of misery has been for ages overflowing and is not yet full!"

A prominent trait in the character of the Scotch is a vein of dry, quaint, sarcastic humor. An instance of this was formerly to be seen, and for aught we know to the contrary may yet be extant, on a tombstone in the "kingdom of Fife," (now, alas! though occupying its ancient limits, only a Scotch county;) erected in honor of the memory of that supposed rara avis in terra—an honest lawyer. Sawny could not let slip such a favorable opportunity to indulge his national propensity to drollery. The epitaph was as follows. (Note,—clerk is the old Scottish term for lawyer.)

The Lord works wonders now and than,
Here lies a clerk, an honest man!

THE DEATH OF WORDS.

Of two words which have been equally long in the language and equally in familiar use, one shall continue to be employed by everybody and the other shall become obsolete; the one shall live, the other shall die; and in many, or in most cases their respective fates could no more have been predicted than it could usually be predicted which was to die first of two men of equal age, and both apparently in good health. Why a particular phrase [illegible] should fall into disuse language, or at least out of use, cannot even be always [illegible] but when a word has thus fairly ceased, from whatever cause, to perform its proper functions, it would seem to be nearly as impossible to recall it to a really living or working condition as it is to raise the dead in any other case. Pope, indeed, has spoken of commanding "old words that long have slept to wake;" and, of course, any writer or speaker may employ antiquated terms to any extent that he pleases Certain it is, at any rate, that very little genuine revivification has ever been accomplished in human speech; you will sooner introduce into a language a hundred or a thousand new words than you will re-establish in the general acceptance ten old ones that have been for [illegible] as if words too, as well as we who use them, were doomed to wither and decay with age, and all at one date or another to lie down and fall asleep in death.—Craik's History of English Literature and [illegible]

EARLY SIGNS OF CONSUMPTION

The only effective remedy for this fatal disease is a knowledge of the first symptoms of its approach and [illegible] measures to eradicate its first germs. Dr. Hall says, in his admirable Journal of Health.

A quick pulse and a short breath continuing for weeks together, are the great alarm bell of forming consumption. If these symptoms are attended with a gradual falling off in flesh in the course of [illegible] been heard. Under such circumstances there ought not to be an hour's delay in taking competent medical advice

The vast mass of consumptives die not far from the age of twenty five: and this, in connexion with another fact, that consumption is several years in running its course, suggests one of the most important practical conclusions yet announced, to wit

In the large majority of cases the seeds of consumption are sown between the ages of sixteen and twenty-five. Now, at this period, the frame is rapidly developing, and the demand for blood is unusually great. Hence the waste of tissue, the effect of exercise, and the exposure to cold, are unusually great. Hence, also, the appetite is craving, digestion rapid, and the supply of blood ample. Now, if, at this time, the lungs are not fully developed, or if they are compressed by tight clothing, or by stooping at the desk, or by bending over the needle, or if the habits are sedentary, the pulse and the easily accelerated breathing may be readily detected by an intelligent and observant parent, and should be regarded as a knell of death if not arrested; and yet it is easily and uniformly done, for the spirometer will demonstrate the early danger, and the educated physician will be at no loss to mark out the remedy

The quick pulse and short breath go together; rather "easily put out of breath" is the more common and appropriate expression. Ordinarily, persons breathe once while the pulse beats four times; this is an approximate average, a general result. A person in health breathes seventeen times a minute, and during that time the pulse numbers sixty-eight strokes. A person decidedly consumptive breathes from twenty to twenty-four times in a minute, the pulse being proportionately rapid. A man whose pulse is among the nineties, with a breathing which corresponds, lasting for weeks, may with great uniformity be pronounced to have unmistaken consumption. And even here the permanent arrest of the disease is quite a probable thing, if men could only be induced to act wisely, promptly, and energetically

But unfortunately such is not the case; nine out of ten are led away with the hope that it may be something else, that it is only bronchitis, and this is confirmed in their own judgment by two facts: they [illegible] pain in the breast, and they triumphantly point to [illegible] as a demonstration of the soundness of the lungs, and this other feeling, equally fallacious, comes to their aid, the prominent trouble is a mere tickling at the bottom of the neck, at the little hollow there. They should remember that no bronchia are there; it is the windpipe, and it begins to divide into branches below that spot. That little hollow place is the telegraphic station, as well for the distinct lungs as the bronchia. The news comes from afar; that is the point of enunciation only. It is the news of mischief in the lungs, that something is there which requires removal, which is working harm, and may breed death; and it does breed death. That very tickling at the little hollow exciting cough for months together, is the forerunner of consumption in perhaps, at a moderate calculation, four times out of five. If a person could be amused at such a serious symptom the physician would be at the very indifferent, unconcerned air, and tone, and gesture with which the patient often announces this symptom. "Doctor, I have bronchitis, I believe; a trifling little tickling at the bottom of the throat here; I wish you would give me something to take it away. I am not sick at all; I feel as well as I ever did in my life, all except this kind of itching here." Upon a close cross-questioning a large amount of undiscovered truth will be elicited, in almost every instance, of symptoms dated many months, and even years before. If, then, a patient for himself, or for his child, has any apprehension of the disease, let the family physician be requested to notice the pulse with care and accuracy at different hours of the day, not within half an hour of active exercise, or within two hours after a regular meal, and if the invariable report be preternatural excitement, there is ground for alarm in proportion to the intensity of that excitement.

FUR OFF

A friend was trout-fishing on the sides of "Old Saddleback," a mountain in the interior of Maine, a hundred miles from the coast. Supposing himself ten miles from any village and half as far from a house, he was surprised by hearing the blows of an axe. Soon he came to a small clearing, where the proprietor of the axe surveyed him with some curiosity.

"Hallo, stranger!" said he.

"How are you, sir?"

"Well, now, stranger, where be you from?"

"I'm from New York"

"From New York! Why, I should think you'd hate to live so fur off"

UP TO FUN

It would not be well to unite in a select social circle of Hoods and Jerrolds a certain lady who could not appreciate a facetious remark. Her husband once remarked to her with some vexation:

"Why, wife, I don't believe you'd take a joke if it was pitched at you from a fifteen-inch Dahlgren!"

"Now, John, how foolish," said she with charming simplicity, "you know they can't fire jokes from a gun."

SABBATH IN THE COUNTRY

The creaking wagon's in the shed,
The busy flail is heard no more,
The horse is littered down and fed,
The harness hangs above his head,
[illegible]
His leathern gloves and hooked hoe
[illegible]
The blacksmith's fiery forge is still,
The wooden wheel of the old mill
Sleeps in the millstream wide

The miller's boat is anchored where,
Far out, the water lilies sleep;
You see their shadows mirrored there,
The broad white flowers reflected clear
Within the mill pond deep.

The harrow's in the garden shed
Hoe, rake, and spade are put away.
[illegible]
The gardener from his work hath fled—
'Tis holy Sabbath day

Upon the walls the white cat sleeps,
By which the churn and milk pans lie;
A drowsy watch the house-dog keeps,
[illegible]
Upon the passer-by

And sweetly over hill and dale
[illegible]
A [illegible]
They come and go, and on the gale
Their Sabbath tidings fling

From where the white washed Sabbath school
Peeps out between the poplars dim,
[illegible]
Far out upon the rushy pool,
You hear the Sabbath hymn.

From farm and field, and grange grown gray,
From woodland walks and winding ways,
The old and young, the grave and gay,
Unto the old church come to pray,
And sing God's holy praise

JOHN ANGELL JAMES

All eminent Christians have learned the worth [illegible] grace to the closet and the social circle. Young converts find themselves urged by their new-born zeal to pray alone and with their brethren. Older Christians are drawn by deep inward yearnings and by blessed memories of past experience That disciple is to be pitied who cannot recall seasons when he would have left meals untasted, or walked many miles, rather than miss the prayer-meeting [illegible] ment of his religious life, for great zeal to sustain [illegible] of Poole, where he was an apprentice. An old gentleman, who remembered him well, told the following story in illustration. One Saturday evening he had gone over to Blandford, about fourteen miles, to visit his friends, and was not expected back till late the next day. But on the next morning the old gentleman went as usual to the [illegible] the services had begun, and none one was looking [illegible] Mr James', but knowing his absence from town, [illegible] got in, he found it was indeed Mr James, and on expressing surprise at the close of the meeting, Mr James simply said, with a smiling face:

"Oh! why could you not come in time? I have walked over here from Blandford this morning, and got here before you."

If members of our churches living within two or three squares of the church, had a little of Mr James' spirit, these meetings of prayer would be [illegible] who does not love the prayer-meeting?

Gentleness is a sort of mild atmosphere, and it enters into a child's soul like the sunshine into a rose-bud, slowly, but surely expanding it into beauty and vigor

INSURANCE.

American Life Insurance and Trust Company

Company's Building, S. E. corner WALNUT and FOURTH Sts. Opposite INDEPENDENCE SQUARE.

Incorporated 1850 by the Legislature of Pennsylvania

Capital, $500,000 Charter Perpetual

Insures Lives during the natural life, or for short terms grants annuities, [illegible] Receives deposits of money, allows interest thereon, and acts as Agent for the payment of Bonds, Mortgages, Interest, Dividends and Coupons.

Holders of Life Insurance Policies in this Company have the additional security of the Capital Stock, and the Premium Reserves of the Company—with profits to the assured—at Joint Stock rates, 20 per cent less than above, or Total Abstinence rates 40 per cent less than Mutual rates

SAVING FUND.

Interest at 6 per cent. allowed on sums not drawn during the Deposit remains, and paid back on demand in Gold and Silver, and Checks furnished, as in a bank, for the use of Depositors

The Company has also a MORTGAGE, REAL ESTATE, and GROUND RENT [illegible] investments as well as the CAPITAL STOCK, for the security of Depositors in this old established institution. ALEXANDER WHILLDIN, President.

SAMUEL WORK, Vice President.

JOHN S. WILSON, Secretary.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

Alexander Whilldin,	John Ansperk, Jr.,
Samuel Work,	James Dougan,
[illegible]	William J. Howard,
John Aitken,	John C. Sims,
Samuel T. Bodine,	George Nugent,
T. Esmonde Harper,	Albert C. Roberts,

H. H. Eldridge.

Office open from [illegible]

J. P. Bird, M. D., Medical Examiner. John Sartain Walker, M. D. In attendance at Company's Office daily at 1 P. M.

NORTHERN FIRE AND LIFE ASSURANCE CO., NO. 1 MOORGATE STREET, LONDON.

ESTABLISHED IN 1836

Capital, $5,250,000 Annual Revenue, $1,000,000.

OFFICE:

New Building, Philadelphia Bank, 425 Chestnut Street

The Policies of the Northern Assurance Company are not only guaranteed by a large Capital, but also by the unlimited personal responsibility of over One Thousand Shareholders

Losses promptly adjusted and paid without reference to London.

PHILADELPHIA BOARD OF REFERENCE.

Stuart & Brother	M Cutchen & Dolling,
Myers, Hughes & Co.,	Smith, Wilstach & Co.,
James Orrell & Co.,	Thos. M. Seeger & Co.
Jos. R. Mitchell, Esq., Pres. Mech. Bank.
Jos. Dunlap, Esq., Pres. Union Bank
Hon. W. A. Porter late Judge Sup. Court.

NEW YORK REFERENCES

Duncan, Sherman & Co.,	J. R. Jaffray & Sons,
Phelps Dodge & Co.,	John C. Green & Co.,
J. & J. Stuart & Co.,	Robert L. Maitland.

WILLIAM GETTY, Agent.

New Building, Philadelphia Bank.

JOHN COCHRAN & CO.,

Importers and Jobbers of

Hosiery, Gloves and Fancy Dry Goods,

NO. 13 NORTH FOURTH ST., ABOVE MARKET,

PHILADELPHIA

Ribbons and White Goods, Undershirts and Drawers, Embroideries and Handkerchiefs Watches and Jewelry, Combs, Brushes, &c.

TARRANT'S EFFERVESCENT SELTZER APERIENT.

This remedy is not to pass unnoticed by the universally received the most desirable means of [illegible] Manufactured on the Medical Principles of the Cabinet as the most efficient and agreeable Saline Aperient. It may be used with the best effect in Bilious and Febrile diseases, such as Fevers, Sick Headache, Nausea, Loss of Appetite, Indigestion, Acidity of the Stomach, Torpidity of the Liver, Hypochondriac Affections, Dysentery, Piles, and all complaints where a gentle and cooling aperient is required.

It is particularly adapted to the use of Travellers by Sea and Land. Residents of Hot Climates, Persons of Sedentary Habits, Invalid Ladies, [illegible] Children, and Infants, will find it a valuable addition to their medicine chests

It is to the form of a powder, carefully put up in bottles, to keep in any climate, and merely requires water poured upon it to produce a delightful effervescent beverage.

[illegible] testimonials from first class and other gentlemen of the highest standing throughout the country, also its steadily increasing popularity for a series of years, strongly guarantee its efficacy and valuable character, and recommend it to the favorable notice of an intelligent public

TARRANT'S CORDIAL ELIXIR OF TURKEY RHUBARB.

This beautiful preparation from the true Turkey Rhubarb, has the approval and sanction of many of our best physicians as a valuable [illegible] in which rhubarb is administered, either for Adults or Children, it being in a manner combined to make it at once palatable to the taste and efficient in its operation

TARRANT'S IMPROVED INDELIBLE INK,

For marking Linen, Muslin, Silk, etc., has been proved, by many years experience, to be the best, most permanent and reliable preparation ever [illegible] the public.

The superiority of this article is acknowledged by all, and purchasers and dealers will find it to their interest to give it a preference over all similar preparations.

Manufactured only by

JOHN A. TARRANT & CO., Druggists, No. 278 Greenwich St., cor. Warren St., New York.

And for sale by all first class [illegible]

ROTHERMEL & BROTHER,

COAL DEALERS.

All Coal warranted

AT THE CONSUMER'S OWN DOOR

With Scales attached to the Cart.

The best quality of

SCHUYLKILL,

LEHIGH, and

BITUMINOUS COAL.

Best Prices of References given

Feb15 3m. YARD—N. W. Cor. Broad and Ash Sts PHILADELPHIA.

IMPORTANT TO CHURCHES AND GAS CONSUMERS GENERALLY

LIGHT! LIGHT!! MORE LIGHT!!!

BETTER AND CHEAPER STILL!

C. F. Holzer's Improved Original Gas Saving Regulator.

C. WILSON FOSS AND WM. D. REICHNER,

PATENTEES, MANUFACTURERS, AND PROPRIETORS

No. 104 N. Tenth St., above Arch, Philadelphia.

This superior Regulator and Burner makes of gas is so simple and [illegible] as to commend itself to the practical mechanic and [illegible] scientific appreciation of many scientific and practical gentlemen of [illegible] as a standard. The great advantages of this invention over all others is, that the operative principle, a conical spring shell, accommodates itself to the street pressure, being connected with a [illegible] valve, it is fully protected from the over size and injurious [illegible] Frank's Institute Exhibition a report of [illegible] pas, from 2½ to 50 per cent. with a clearer, more pleasant and steady light from all burning, flaring, or other irregularity of the flame of either a soft, mellow light, for home hearths, and more dazzling to the sight.

Orders by mail attended to promptly Prices moderate. Send for [illegible] containing certificates of references from

State and city rights for sale. 1f

KOLLOCK'S IMPROVED

DANDELION COFFEE.

Made from the true JAVA GINSENG, is recommended by physicians as a superior, nutritious beverage for General Debility, Dyspepsia and all Bilious disorders

[illegible] Coffee, and by the use of which the [illegible] of coffee will see this offensive ingredient [illegible] at the S. E. corner of Broad and Chestnut, and all Druggists and Grocers, and

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Published by the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, for the Dissemination of Religion, Morality, Literature and Science.

Rev. Elisha Weaver, Editor. PHILADELPHIA, JULY 5, 1862. Vol. II.—No. 27.—New Series.—Whole No. 78.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

is published every Saturday on behalf of the

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,

by

REV. ELISHA WEAVER,

General Book Steward,

No 619 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

Notice All letters and matters pertaining to the Book Concern subscriptions, bills of papers, and all moneys belonging to Book Concern, must be addressed to Rev. Elisha Weaver, Book Agent, Philadelphia, and all matters sent by express, and in our city, must be left at No 619 E. Weaver, No 619 Pine st.

All articles or matter for the Christian Recorder, must be directed to E. Weaver, Box No 432, Philadelphia.

TERMS

Two Dollars a year, payable in advance Single copies five cents

ADVERTISEMENTS.

We publish Advertisements that are kept as suitable for a religious newspaper, which will be published at Ten Cents a Line for Advertisements, inserted one time per week; they do not exceed eight lines, ten dollars, paper included, or, eight dollars without the paper of a number for six times paper included three months, four dollars,—one month, $1 50, paper to each one included.

CORRESPONDING EDITORS OF CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Rev. J. P. CAMPBELL, Rev A. W. WAYMAN,
" J. M. WILLIAMS, " E. T. WILLIAMS,
" G. H. GRAHAM, " C. BURCH,
Rev. L. ROSS

Poetry.

For the Christian Recorder.

THE LAST WORDS OF PETER POYAS.

"Do not open your lips: die silent, as you shall see me do."

Die silent! let no fatal word
From any brother's lips be heard:
But back to deep concealment hide
Our well-attested plans.
Know that 'tis best they must abide;
They'll live in worthier hands.

Not even with the gory gyves,
Now eager for our worthless lives—
Nor for the bondman's sorrowing tears,
Make an ignoble truce.
But score a mark for future years:
They'll crush the foul abuse.

One glance upon the bruised throng
Whose woes our breezes bear along;
A parting thought to them is due—
Our crushed, despairing kind;
An inward throb of love from you
For those we leave behind.

Then upward, with a steady eye,
'Tis but to dare—'tis but to die!
God counsels to be firm and true;
Obey the great behest!
Die silent, as you see me do,
And leave to God the rest.

—MARY A. CARY

Chatham, Canada West.

P. S.—The enclosed reached me by mail, with a request that I forward it to you for publication. Do as you may choose.

I hope you will be present at Conference, Mr. Editor. Your paper improves weekly. It is, in fact, far ahead of anything that we have ever yet published.

CONSIDER THE LILIES HOW THEY GROW.

The lilies fair are found
On shadowed ground,
The shady haunts of sunny clime:
And breathe the balm of summer time;
Refreshed by morning dew, and veiled from noontide glow,
They taste the softest light and air, and this is how they grow.

Updrawn from verdant sod
By look from God,
These holy, happy flowers pervade
The sloping lawn, the forest glade:
And charmed by zephyr's wing, and lulled by streamlet's flow,
They calmly muse, they brightly dream, and this is how they grow.

They bloom in sheltered nook
By parting brook;
And earth how firmly, fondly loves
These treasures of her streams and groves;
The dark mould cherishes their petals white like snow,
With heaven apportioned nutriment, and this is how they grow.

I have considered them
The fertile gem,
The blossome pending airily
Beneath their leafy canopy,
Their witching fragrance, spotless hue, and thus I feel and know
That God imparts their loveliness, and this is how they grow.

For the Christian Recorder.

EIGHT REASONS FOR OBJECTING TO THE HAYTIEN SCHEME.

BY REV. W. R. REVELL, M. D.

MR. EDITOR:—In these times of excitement in the country in which we live, one of the great subjects of agitation and discussion is: What must be done with the colored people of this country? Different places are pointed out where it is urged, that we, the colored people of the United States, should go en masse for our own good, as the country that contains us now cannot, at some future day, contain us. I have no objection to emigration to any country where we can live, and enjoy those God-given rights which are most sacred and dear, and most of all earthly blessings to be desired, namely: the immunities of citizens in common. But to my objections to the Haytien scheme:—

1. It panders to the vile spirit of negro hate by urging the expediency of a white Haytien representation at Washington, and of white Haytien consuls at other cities in the United States, rather than the right of representation through Haytien citizens and colored men; white men not being citizens of Hayti; and a colored American acting as the servant of the white consul (J. Redpath) at Philadelphia—not as the consul; thus insulting and degrading the native born or adopted Haytien citizen through the proposed and real representatives of Hayti in the United States, and doubly and gratuitously insulting colored Americans by assigning to one of their number the menial position, when there are no real obstacles to his being the representative, and by persisting in excluding from Washington a colored representative of a colored government.

2. By sending discord amongst the colored people of the United States, unsettling their minds, rooting up now, when they begin to assume permanent form, their home plans, and causing men at the decline of life to begin again; by arraying churches and church members against one another on the question of growing or decreasing prejudice of church management, and the relative advantages of the same, and so preparing them to go where even superior knavery or transcendent cunning and duplicity may invite them.

3. Because slumbering and fast disappearing prejudices are aroused, and invoked through the means of their press and their public speakers; all of which tend to swell the number of victims to the deception.

4. That the scheme is unworthy of consideration, because its advocates, though first starting out with the assertion that removal is necessary to our preservation, have changed with the successful exposure of their fallacies, and taken directly opposite grounds; not as more favorable to their scheme in doctrine, but to swell the list of emigrants; as, for instance, they now say they do not advocate entire removal, they want but a few thousand, though they at first proposed to found a vast empire, and invited all to go on pain of annihilation

5. Because the signs of the times lead us confidently to expect great good to the colored people of the United States, from the fact that within one short year our citizenship has been re affirmed by the government, many thousands have been forever released from slavery by the same power, the presence of free colored men has been recognised, and their services acknowledged in ways which are in many respects most important to the people of present and future times.

6. Because the colored people of the United States give, at the present time, an evidence of vitality, of self-appreciation, of progress, in all the elements of American civilisation, most hopeful for them as a people, and that clearly show that God's providence designs, in spite of expatriation or schemes of designing men, to provide for them an ample home in conjunction, and neighborly association, with the numerous other races of men to be found here.

7. Because the dominant religion, the imperfect language, the oligarchical form of government, the enervating climate, the limited territory, all make it (the Hayti scheme) impossible, and undesirable of realisation to the colored man, and not at all worthy of serious consideration by practical and earnest men, but greatly to be condemned because of the great discomfort, suffering, and death brought upon many scores and hundreds of simple-minded, illiterate, but confiding people, who have been led to go thither by its specious inducements.

8. Because the prejudices abounding in Hayti are more intense as between the mulatto minority now ruling and the black majority in subjection, the rich land monopolist, and the poor tiller of the soil, than the prejudice against us on the continent.

Indianapolis, June 25th, 1862.

(To be continued.)

For the Christian Recorder

LETTER FROM WASHINGTON.

MR. EDITOR:—We are having beautiful weather at this time, though Washington is hardly ever very agreeable on the streets, for it is either flooded with mud or dust. A few days of rain will mire wagons down on some of the most popular streets in the city, and an equal proportion of sunshine will darken the heavens with dust, making a fellows broadcloth look like he had been rolling in the dirt, and nearly put out your eyes, unless they are well protected with a good set of lashes.

Before this shall have reached you, I judge you will have been apprised of the emancipation bill, which has passed during the previous week, and must necessarily give liberty to so many rebel slaves.

Rev. D. D. Nichols, from Boston, who recently has been on to Port Royal, as a teacher among the contrabands, has been appointed by General Wadsworth, the superintendent of the contraband hall, and is making quite an improvement among them. Indeed, so entirely has he changed things there, that those who have been accustomed to frequent the contraband hall, can hardly accredit it to one man's operation.

Rev. B. T. Tanner is doing a great work at Alexandria, Va. He has raised a Sabbath school of over eighty children, in connexion with twelve excellent teachers. Several have joined the church there, and the A. M. E. Church, under the energetic labors of our beloved brother, is prospering finely.

Rev. John Green, a local preacher of the Zion Wesley Church as they call themselves, went down to Alexandria a few weeks ago to organise a church for their connexion (so report says,) and he carried his congregation from Washington, and when he returned, his congregation returned with him. I was at his church on the island the same day, and one of the orators stated that the reason there were no more people at church (and indeed there were few) was because they had all gone to Alexandria to the consecration of a new church. I would like to organize a church in Richmond, Va., if I could, but I should dislike to take my audience from Washington, and then have them to return with me, for I fear I should do but little harm to my opposer in flesh, or to my opposer in the world.

Deaths occur very frequent in the city at this time, and particularly among the children. I think it must be some kind of a cholera, for you may see a child well and hearty this morning, and in the evening you will hear of its death: but young and old are dying very fast. But it does not diminish the zeal of the companion seekers—people court and get married like fun here

I see a very able article in the last RECORDER from the pen of Wm. H. Winder. I was proud to read such an able piece of composition, as well as such an embodiment of deep, weighty and profound thoughts from the pen of one of our race; it has excited some considerable curiosity among the literati of Washington.

Another suggestion thrown out by yourself, is also waking up some inquiry among the thinking minds, which is relative to the way our bishops lay off the conferences into certain districts, and then to deny authority to go into any other district or diocese except their own, and exercise Episcopal authority; whereas, the connexion knows each and every bishop, as the Bishop of the A. M. E. Church, wherever the least vestige of said church is to be found

But it does appear to some of us, that if your idea is correct, that each and every bishop is the bishop of the entire connexion, wherever that connexion may exist, that it would be utterly impossible for them to delegate legally their right of any conference to say one of the bishops for four full years

Some of us understand it to be not according to the Discipline, and their mode of operation is one of expediency, only, I suppose.

President Benson, of Liberia, is looked for in Washington before long I trust he would not sell his distinguished reputation by visiting America at this time. Several men of note, it is reported, have written for him to come on; but many of Liberia's best friends are hopeful that he will refuse The condescension would be too much for one so high in position.

Washington, June 23d, 1862. H. M. T.

For the Christian Recorder.

MAN'S RESIDENCE

DEAR READERS:—You will notice that while writing upon this subject in the twenty-fifth No. of the CHRISTIAN RECORDER, that I left off while speaking of thunder, as being the majestic voice of an angry God. Thus, I will proceed again In the Bible, the terrors of Divine wrath are often represented by thunder and lightning, and thunder on the account of its awful impressions on the minds of mankind. It is often spoken of in Scripture, as the voice of the Lord. Job, xl. 9. "Hast thou an arm like God, or canst thou thunder with a voice like him?" "The Lord also thundered in the heavens, and the Highest gave his voice; hailstones and coals of fire" Ps xviii. 3. Psalm xlvi. 6. "The heathen raged; the kingdoms were moved; He uttered his voice; the earth melted."

Since this earth was pronounced good, mankind has often been solicited by the echo of the thunders, and the repeated flashes of the lightning; with horrible glare to enforce the solemn warning; with zigzag turns dazzles the eye of mankind; with his forked fire strikes consternation into their breast, that this earth is only their residence for a few years. Then they must go the way whence they shall not return. O, how solemn these things should be when we reflect upon them! In the midst of this shattered habitation, heaven darts destructive fires But not alone is earth—our mother earth—man's residence. As if she was not satisfied with the destructive fires from the heavens, she frequently corrupts the atmosphere by pestilential vapours, and borrows the assistance of the devouring elements to terrify and scourge her guilty children Ah! hear them when she scourges them by opening her mouth at the top of some of her burning mountains, and vomits clouds of smoke and sulphurous flames; and calcined rocks emit streams of melted mineral, covering the adjacent plains with boiling, fiery lavas, as if she wanted to ease herself of the burden of her inhabitants. I fancy I hear them crying as a Peter: Lord, save me!—or as a Paul: O, wretched man that I am: who shall deliver me from the body of this death?

These are astonishing scenes,—like a bloody battle that is seen at a distance. They may, indeed, entertain us; yes, they may amuse our imagination, when in peaceful and quiet homes, we may behold them beautifully represented by the pen of a Virgil, or the pencil of a Raphael. But to be in the midst or near them as millions are would be inexpressibly dreadful. I hold that these are severe rods of correction, that the earth scourges her children with. As an intelligent mind, no doubt, seeing the top of a burning Mountain in its perpetual vocation, throwing out fire and ornamental coloring, would think of God's destructive rod, and the awful pledge of that awful fire and brimstone, storm and tempest, which the righteous Governor of the world will rain upon the ungodly; when the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, the elements melt with fervent heat, and the earth, with the works that are therein, shall be burnt up.

To the earth again, man's residence. O, earth, earth, earth, thou hast concealed the slain that have fallen in the bloody battles for hundreds of years, and detained them in thy dark bosom! Vain wishes, too active to be confined in thy deepest vaults, range through the world; with unrelenting fierceness, it pursues parents, and widows, and orphans for the children, and the husbands, and the fathers, and forces them to lift up their voice for speedy relief. And while it reverberates from hamlet to hamlet, from city to city, it strikes the unprejudiced inquirer, and makes him confess that these clouds of unbribed witnesses, by loud, consentaneous evidence, impeach sin, the tormentor of the woman, and murderer of her offspring. I will here notice a few of the murderers that harry mankind to his gloomy cell. Rebellious animals are not satisfied with the produce of the fields; but they thirst after man's blood, and attack his person whenever they have an opportunity; impetuously attack, furiously tear, and greedily devour him, and the basest reptile not afraid to breed in his stomach, to live in his bowels, and consume his inward parts, suck his blood, and feast upon him from his cradle to his grave.

W. R. WINDER.

Freehold, N. J.

(To be continued.)

For the Christian Recorder

FROM JOHNSTOWN

June 26th, 1862.

MR. EDITOR: Dear Sir—It has been some time since you have heard from me. The first reason I give for not writing sooner is, that my health has been very bad since I met you in Conference, and I am still under the weather; and my wife has been very poorly, and is yet bed-fast. The second reason is, I have written several letters, and have seen no account of them in the Recorder. The third reason is, I thought I made use of such bad spelling and grammar, that you could not make it out

I returned to my circuit from the Conference, and found the friends, as a general thing, ready to receive me. My first Quarterly Conference was held at Lowistown on the 28th instant. We had a good time at our Sacrament and Love Feast. Preaching at half past ten, A. M. Also, at half-past two o'clock, P. M., and in the evening at half-past seven o'clock by the Rev. George Witten, from first John, first chapter and twenty-ninth verse.

We protracted the meeting several nights there, and there appeared to be a good many serious persons present. Some were convicted when I left I left the meeting still in progress. My next point was Huntingdon. Preaching commenced on Thursday, the 20th, and continued every night up to Saturday. Preaching at half-past ten on Sabbath morning, also at half-past two, when the sacrament was administered. Preaching in the evening, followed by a short prayer-meeting. [illegible] Monday night. Preaching every night up to Wednesday night. There was no exhibition of Divine power exhibited on that occasion more than that the membership appeared to be revived and made promise of more faithful living But that place is a sister to Sodom and Gomorrah. The people seem to be gospel-hardened

I propose holding a camp meeting at that point, the Lord willing. After I have made my arrangements, I will give you the full particulars. From that point I left for Bedford on Thursday morning, although very unwell. Taking what is called the Broad Top Railroad, and meeting with an obstruction in the burning of a bridge across a large stream, (I have forgotten the name of it,) I was, in conjunction with the rest of the passengers, compelled to get out and climb a hill, almost perpendicular—every man with his carpet-bag, or whatever he happened to have with him For my part, I was unfortunate enough to have two; and, when we got to the top of the hill, we had about the same difficulty to endure in descending on the other side to get to the river. Here we found it full from bank to bank, and, in some places, running over. We had to cross this in a flat-boat, rowed by a number of men. I was amused at a lady in the party, who appeared to be as good a soldier as any of us—and, to put the climax on, it was still raining. I should have said that in crossing this hill there was no road, the bushes thick, and rocks plenty. Every one had to be his own engineer. When over this mountain and river, we again took the cars to Hopewell, and from that point we took the stage to Bedford.

On arriving at this place, after eighteen or twenty miles' staging, I found myself perfectly exhausted, and ready to get to bed. I was not able to preach before the following Sabbath, at half-past ten o'clock—and I found the little band that I had organised a few weeks before, with a large audience. We had preaching and Sacrament at half-past two o'clock. The subjects on Sabbath morning were—1st, The ability of Christ to save, and, 2d, The condition on which he saved; third, the nature and extent of this salvation. I had the promise of a white brother to preach the Sacramental sermon, but he was taken sick and consequently could not be on hand, and I had to undergo the arduous task myself of preaching the Sacramental sermon; and we had quite an interesting time. Some twelve persons were baptized and received into the church. At night, preaching by the Rev. Eli Rouse, from Matthew, twenty second chapter and fifth verse, if my memory serves me correctly, followed by Brother Gates; and we had quite an interesting time. We kept the meetings up until Wednesday night, although the weather was unfavorable, raining more or less during the whole time they were being carried on.

On Thursday morning I left for Brother John Henry's circuit. I met him at Altoona, in comfortable health. I was cordially received by the brethren and sisters there—this being the first time I had met them since I went to Conference. To that place I have many warm friends. They are always ready and willing to administer to the wants of the ministers.

From this place we went to Hollidaysburg, where Brother Henry's first Quarterly Conference was held, Saturday, June the 14th, followed by preaching the next morning by the Rev. Henry. Quite a respectable audience we had. Preaching at two o'clock by your humble servant, after which the Lord's Supper was administered. The little house was crowded to its utmost capacity. We also had preaching at night—the house being crowded

I left for home on Monday morning, feeling very unwell indeed. Brother Henry held his Love Feast on Monday night, and I learn that he had a very encouraging time. I returned to Altoona on the following Saturday. On Sabbath morning, at half-past ten o'clock, we had preaching; also, preaching at half-past two o'clock, after which the Holy Eucharist was administered; the occasion was one of great solemnity,—after which a child was presented for baptism by its mother, its father being present in the congregation, who, not coming forward, we called him up, and asked him all the necessary questions. I asked him what was his design in having this child baptized. He said he had none, and that he did not believe in infant baptism. I then tried to explain to him the nature and design of baptism. But he still exhibited his unwillingness to be convinced, which appeared to mortify his companion very much. I then declined to perform the ceremony, and dismissed the audience with the benediction

Love Feast on Monday night. I was so unwell that I was not able to be out of bed, but I learned from some of the sisters and brethren that they had a very pleasant time, on which occasion a very able-bodied and intelligent man joined the church

Brother Henry's next Quarterly meeting will be in Bellefonte on next Sabbath, the 29th, and on the following Sabbath at Williamsport, July the 6th

Dear Sir—While these lines are being penned, I suffer much pain; and I hope that when they reach you they will find you and your dear family in good health.

I still remain

Yours truly in Christ the Lord,

A. JOHNSON

P. S.—Brother, this is the first time that we have heard from you since we saw you in Washington, D. C.—ED.

For the Christian Recorder.

FROM VINCENNES, IND

June 24, 1862

MR. EDITOR:—As your valuable and interesting paper is so extensively read on this circuit, that it amounts to nineteen subscribers, besides the Sabbath School being supplied with it, I shall be glad to have you insert my appointments in its columns as follows

APPOINTMENTS

Two days' meeting at Vincennes—first Saturday and Sabbath in July, at Washington; the second Saturday and Sabbath do.; three days' meeting at Maria Creek—the third Friday, Saturday, and Sabbath

Ellison Prairie, the fourth Saturday and Sabbath do; Vincennes, first Saturday and Sabbath in August

The quarterly meeting will be held at Vincennes on the second Friday, Saturday and Sabbath in August, at which time the funeral sermon of Sister Laura Jane Stewart will be attended to

Yours in Christ

WILLIAM JACKSON

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS

When John Quincy Adams was minister to the Court of Holland, he joined a society of learned men who met once a week for mutual improvement. Mr. Adams, though one of the youngest members, soon became a great favorite; his finely toned mind and delightful conversation won him many friends, and receiving as much enjoyment as he gave, he was always punctually present

On one occasion, however, the meeting was adjourned to Sunday evening. Mr Adams was not there. It was appointed on the next Sunday evening. Mr. Adams was not there. His fellow members noticed and regretted his absence On the third Sunday evening it met, Mr Adams' chair was still vacant. Many were surprised, that he, who was formerly so prompt and punctual, should thus suddenly break off

How did it happen? Press of business was supposed. At last the meetings were returned to a week-day evening—and lo!—there was Mr. Adams in his place, brilliant and delightful as ever. The members welcomed him back, and expressed their sorrow that press of business or duties of his office should have so long deprived them of his company.

Did he let that go as the reason?

"Not business engagements hindered me," replied he; "you met on the Lord's day—that is a day devoted to religious uses by me."

He then told them he had been brought up in a land where the Sabbath was strictly observed, and from all that he had felt and seen, he was convinced of the unspeakable advantages always arising from the faithful observance of it.

From the Friends' Review

VIEWS OF THE EARLY FRIENDS RESPECTING NEGRO SLAVERY.

Negro slavery existed in Maryland and other British colonies at the time when the Quakers first settled in them; and it does not appear that slave-holding was then considered by them as inconsistent with their principles. Numerous instances may be adduced of the fact that they were slaveholders

Janney, in his History of the Quakers, quotes the will of one Alice Kennersley, of Maryland, who bequeathed "her negro woman Betty and her child to Dan. Cox, in consideration that he should pay twenty shillings annually for thirty years to the Meeting, for the paying of travelling Friends' ferriage in Dorchester County, or whatsoever other occasions Friends may see meet," and the Meeting recognised the bequest by advising Dan. Cox to be present at the next Monthly Meeting to answer such questions as may be asked him concerning the premises

In 1671, George Fox issued an advice to Friends in Barbadoes "respecting their negroes," "to endeavor to train them up in the fear of God," "and after certain years of servitude they should make them free"

Whilst in Barbadoes he was assailed with a calumny that he "taught the negroes to rebel," which he declared was "an abominable untruth," and "it is a thing we utterly abhor."

The earliest movement on the part of the Quakers in America, in a Meeting capacity, relating to slaves, was by some German Friends at Kreisheim, near Germantown, Pa., in 1688, when they addressed a paper to their Yearly Meeting "concerning the lawfulness and unlawfulness of buying or keeping negroes No action was then taken on it by the Yearly Meeting

In 1700, William Penn having made provision for the liberation of the few slaves he held, brought the subject before a Monthly Meeting in Philadelphia, but the extent of its action was merely to direct that the negroes and Indians should be encouraged to attend Friends' Meetings.

From this time forward it is said that the subject of slavery continued to attract the notice of the Quakers in various parts of America; but no Minute upon the question appears in the Manuscript Records of Friends in Maryland until the 6th month, 1750, when upon a revision of their queries, a new one was adopted as follows: "Are Friends careful of importing or buying of negroes, and doe they use them well they are possessed of by inheritance or otherwise, endeavoring to trane them up in the principles of Christian religion?"

In the 5th month, 1760, the Records of the Yearly Meeting at West River, relate to "some uneasiness" with some Friends respecting the words, "buying of negroes," "agreed to last year," and the Meeting thinks, "Friends at present are not fully ripe in their judgments to carry the minute farther than against being concerned in the importing of negroes."

At the meeting in the 10th month of the same year, at Treadhaven, the minute relative to this subject is that "this Meeting concludes that Friends should not in any wise encourage the importation of negroes, by buying or selling them, or other slaves"

In the 5th month, 1762, the Meeting at West River declares: "It is their solid judgment that no member of our society shall be concerned in importing or buying of negroes, nor selling any without the consent and approbation of the Monthly Meeting they belong to."

The Manuscript Records teem with the subject of slavery; nearly every year was it brought before the Meetings, and it gradually grew from a concern relating only to the importation of negroes, to the retention of them as slaves. Great caution is apparent in their Minutes upon the subject, and as it encountered serious opposition by many of their members, it was not until 1777 that slaveholding was made a disownable offence In 1770 the Yearly Meeting of New England had arrived at the same point, and in 1776 the Philadelphia Yearly Meeting had also come to the same conclusion. In 1777 the North Carolina Yearly Meeting (which embraced the Friends of South Carolina and Georgia) commenced [illegible] ously acted in concert with their brethren in Maryland, but it was not until 1784 that the Virginia Friends adopted the extreme measure of disownment for holding slaves.

It thus appears that nearly a century had elapsed between the first introduction of the subject in the Society in 1688, to its final settlement in 1784; while the Maryland Friends consumed eighteen years in the discussion of the question, before arriving at the position they have since maintained in relation thereto

We have no means of ascertaining the pecuniary sacrifices made by the Maryland Quakers, to their conscientious convictions on this momentous subject, but tradition relates that one family alone liberated 200 slaves

From the fact that a large number of Friends lived in the slaveholding counties of Anne Arundel, Prince George's and Montgomery, and others on the Eastern Shore, where the great mass of labor was performed by slaves, it is easy to believe that in the aggregate the sacrifice was very great; and perhaps has no parallel instances where such pecuniary loss was voluntarily incurred for conscience' sake

From Friends' Review

POWER OF IMAGINATION.—In illustration of the power of imagination, the case of the old lady who watched the vane, to see when her rheumatism was going to begin, is not equal to that of the storekeeper, who painted the lower part of his stove red, and saved seventy-five per cent. in the consumption of wood thereby during the winter. The illusion was so complete, that one man tried to make him pay for a pair of boots that he had burnt on the stove

THERE is an affected humility more insufferable than downright pride, as hypocrisy is more abominable than libertinism. Take care that your [illegible] genuine and unaffected

CURIOUS MIRROR.

Among the curiosities exhibited in the last Paris Exposition, and promised for ours, was a huge concave mirror, the instrument of a startling species of optical magic:—On standing close to the mirror, and looking into it, it presents nothing but a magnificently monstrous dissection of your own physiognomy. On retiring a little, say a couple of feet, it gives your own face and figure in true proportion, but reversed, the head downwards Most of the spectators, ignorant of anything else, observe these two effects, and pass on But retire still further; standing at the distance of five or six feet from the mirror, and behold yourself, not a reflection—it does not strike you as a reflection—but your veritable self, standing in the middle between you and the mirror. The effect is almost appalling, from the idea it suggests of something supernatural; so startling, in fact, that men of the strongest nerves will shrink involuntarily at the first view. If you raise your cane to thrust at your other self, you will see it pass clean through the body and appear on the other side, the figure thrusting at you the same instant. The artist who first succeeded in fashioning a mirror of this description brought it to one of the French kings—if we recollect aright, it was Louis XV.—placed his Majesty on the right spot, and bade him draw his sword and thrust at the figure he saw. The King did so; but, seeing the point of a sword directed to his own breast, threw down his weapon and ran away. The practical joke cost the inventor the King's patronage and favor, his Majesty being afterwards so ashamed of his own cowardice that he could never again look at the mirror or its owner.—London Journal.

USEFULNESS OF DIAMONDS.

Many persons suppose that diamonds are only used in jewellery—for rings and other articles of personal adornment, and that they are really of no essential value whatever in the practical arts. This is a mistaken notion; they are used for a great number of purposes in the arts. Thus for cutting the glass of our windows into proper size, no other substance can equal it, and it is exclusively used for this purpose. A natural edge, or point, as it is called, is used for this work, and thousands of such are annually required in our glass factories. Diamond points are also employed for engraving on cornelians, amethysts, and other brilliants, and for the finer cuttings on cameos and seals. Being very hard, the diamond is also used in chronometers for the steps of pivots; and as it possesses high refractive, with inferior dispersive power, and little longitudinal aberration, it has been successfully employed for the small, deep lenses of single microscopes. The magnifying power of the diamond, in proportion to that of plate-glass, ground to a similar form, is as eight to three. For drawing minute lines on hard steel and glass, to make micrometers, there is no substitute for the diamond point.

The rough diamond is called bort, and the "points" used for glass-cutting are fragments of the borts. Great care and skill are necessary in selecting the cutting-points, because the diamond that cuts the glass most successfully, has the cutting edges of the crystal placed exactly at right angles to each other, and passing through a point of intersection made by the crossing of the edges. A polished diamond, however perfect may be its edges, when pressed upon the surface of glass, splinters it with the slightest pressure; but with the natural diamond the most excessive force are produced on glass, and their surfaces are so finely burnished, that if ruled close together, they decompose light, and afford the most beautiful prismatic appearance—all the colors of the rainbow flash from them as from the silvery interior of a pearl oyster-shell.

Diamonds are also employed for drill-points to perforate rubies, and bore holes in draw-plates for fine wire, and also for drilling in hard steel. Some inquiries have been made recently in regard to using them for dressing millstones, as a substitute for steel picks. We apprehend that they are altogether too expensive to be used for this purpose at present; but if some of our inventors would make the discovery of manufacturing diamonds as cheaply as we make charcoal, which is of the same composition, we might be able to recommend them to our millers. The coke obtained from the interior of gas retorts, in many cases, is found so hard that it will cut glass; but as its point endures but for a short period, it cannot be made available as a substitute for the natural diamond for such purposes.

JESUS AND THE MOSS.

AN OLD CHURCH LEGEND.

In a deep hollow, in the heart of a forest, grew a bed of moss. It was thick and soft as a velvet carpet, and its structure was more wonderful and curious than that of the finest carpet ever woven by the hand of man. But the traveller never stooped to see the miracles of beauty hidden in it, but hurried on to the sunshine and bloom beyond. And the moss sighed:

"Ah, for the green beauty of the grove, and the rosy glow of flowers! The foot tramples me, but the eye regards me not!"

One evening, just as the last golden rays of sunset lighted up the tree-tops, a pale and weary man came slowly through the forest. It was Jesus, returning from the wilderness after his forty days of fasting and temptation. His feet were blistered with wandering over the burning sand, and were torn and bleeding from the briers of the wood. When he came upon the bed of moss and felt its soft coolness upon His wounded feet, He paused, and spake a blessing on this gift of His Father's hand.

"Little plant," He said, "fret not because thou art unheeded by the careless eye. Bear thy lot with patience. Thou hast done good to me, and the Father will remember thee."

Scarcely had the words passed His lips, when out of the bosom of the moss budded a lovely rose. Its hue was like the glow in the western sky after the sun has set, and the veil of tender moss which, half concealed, also increased its beauty.

"Moss Rose" [illegible] our Saviour, spread thou into all lands, and become to men the sweetest emblem of humility!"

The despised moss had softened the Redeemer's earthly pain—had kissed his sore and wounded feet

It was for this it had such sweet reward.

Oh, poor and lowly one! keep thy heart soft and tender; be like the moss when trodden on Then, be sure, the time of thy roses is at hand.

THE WITNESS OF THE SPIRIT.

What is there in the true believer, that he should bear within himself a convincing testimony of the truth? Every true believer has experienced the convincing power of the Gospel. This has opened his heart, given him a realising sense of his sinful and lost condition, and brought him to repentance. He has received the gift of the Holy Spirit. Peter said unto those whom he addressed on the day of Pentecost, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the Holy Ghost," Acts ii. 38. On another occasion, while he yet spake, "the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word," Acts x 44. Every true believer has shared in the gift of the Holy Spirit, and under the influence of this gift, his mind has been enlightened, his heart renewed, and his affections purified and sanctified. He bears the fruits of the Spirit, lives in the Spirit, and walks in the Spirit. He loves God with a pure heart, and cherishes those benevolent affections towards his fellow creatures, which flow from the [illegible] enjoyments, proceeding from Christian principles and affections in the soul. He fears God, and works righteousness. He forms his character after the example of Christ, and according to the model exhibited in the Gospel; his whole life and conduct are under the government and direction of the Spirit of light and truth

The believer thus renewed, enlightened, and sanctified, hath the witness in himself. The question here arises, What witness is this? I answer, it is the Holy Spirit; he testifies in the hearts of all true believers.—To what does this witness testify? 1, To the adoption of the believer as a child of God, and his salvation through grace—"The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God," Rom viii. 16.—"Hereby we know that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit," 1 John, iv. 13—"Hereby we know that we are of the truth, and shall assure our hearts before him," 1 John, iii. 19.—"According to his mercy hath he saved us by the washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost," Tit. iii. 5.

BEARDS

The wise and kind Infinite never made any thing in vain. Every created thing has not only its use, but its uses. Wearing the beard is no exception to the universal law. The beard was first mentioned thirty-three centuries ago, in connection with a Mosaic injunction, that it should not be "marred"—deformed. Its first great design, perhaps, was to distinguish the sexes, to inspire personal dignity, self-respect, and the deference of woman. The next great use is its influence in the preservation of man in those outdoor exposures to winds, and cold, and dust, and accidents from which women are exempt, from its being more natural for her to remain in-doors in attention to domestic duties. Since we first mentioned, some five years ago, the advantages of keeping the mouth shut, as a preservative against colds, pleurisies, and pneumonias, by its sending the air to the lungs through the circuit of the head, thus warming it, a book has been written on the subject. The beard on the upper-lip is kept warm by its living connection with the body, and by the warm air constantly passing out of the nostrils; this warmth is imparted to the incoming air, and thus effectually prevents those dangerous shocks of cold driving in upon the warm lungs, which so often cut short human life in three or four days. The beard being warm, evaporates any dampness in the atmosphere, to a greater or less degree, and thus gives a purer air to the lungs; rendered still more pure by the dust, with which the air is always full, being detained in the meshes of the hair.

The throat and upper part of the chest are greatly exposed to cold; their imprudent exposure engenders some of the most fatal forms of disease, such as Bronchitis, Consumption, Diphtheria, and the like. The beard is an extraordinary protection against cold. The thinnest gossamer veil over the face will make the coldest winds endurable. Delicate and silken as the hair is, its protecting influence in keeping the scalp comfortably warm, is very impressively appreciated by those who have become bald.

Inconsistent as it may seem at first sight, the beard not only keeps the parts genially warm in winter, but by its evaporating influence, cools the parts wonderfully in the hottest weather, to say nothing of its breaking the force of the hot sun.

Another advantage of the beard is its power to break the force of blows and arrest the stroke of a cutting instrument against an vital and otherwise easily vulnerable a part as the throat. Many persons aggravate throat complaints by mufflers, wearing scarfs or extra covering about the neck; these do keep the throat warm, but in every change of position of the head or face, some part of the neck or throat is moved from the covering; the covering does not adapt itself to or follow the movement, hence the cold air rushes in upon that unprotected part and chills it; but the beard follows every motion of the head or face faithfully, and thus is the most perfect muffler that can possibly be devised. Nature's provisions cannot be interfered with impunity. The Orientals, who shave the head and wear the beard, suffer more from ophthalmia, an eye disease, but have fine teeth. Europeans, who shave the beard and wear the hair, suffer but little from ophthalmia, but have very defective teeth; this last result may arise from the beard modifying the coldness of the air which passes into the mouth, thus keeping the temperature of the tooth more equal. The early Christian fathers denounced shaving as a violation of the law of God. The beard of John Mayo of Germany touched the ground when he stood upright. Steel-grinders, stone-cutters, engineers, firemen, and all others who work in dust, heat, or steam, should especially wear the beard. Daily shaving is an intolerable nuisance, a useless waste of time

BREAD AND BUTTER "TEA."

As usually ground, one hundred pounds of wheat yield from seventy-eight to eighty pounds of flour, but when "bulled" before grinding, it yields from ninety to ninety-five pounds. Connoisseurs of the table know that when the bare outside, thin skin of the potato is removed, the most nutritious part of the vegetable is the one fourth of an inch of the outer portion of it, more nutritious than the whole remaining inner part or core; so in wheat, the most nutritious part of the grain is that which is immediately outside of the kernel and adheres to the hull; hence the ten per cent of flour lost in the common mode of grinding, is the most nutritious portion of it. It is in this part, also, that weevils and other animalcules lay their eggs, and such flour does not keep, while that ground of bulled wheat will, under the same circumstances, keep for years, looking fully as well, and is quite as agreeable to the taste

BUTTER.—The best temperature for getting butter out of milk quickly, is sixty-eight degrees, ten times quicker than if at fifty four. If cream is churned, it should be about sixty-eight degrees.

TEA.—Take pure soft water, make it boil rapidly, and the moment it has boiled, make the drawing of tea in the usual way, thus retaining the gas in the water, which gives that life like [illegible] sparkling, pretty [illegible] distinguished from "flat," "dead" drinks—dish-water, for example.

It is very certain that several years would be added to civilized life if, from infancy to age, nothing were eaten after dinner but a bowl of pure, fresh, sweet milk, and cold, light, or hot corn-bread for children; and for those over a dozen years of age, the "supper" should be made of stale, coarse, "light bread," with fresh butter made of rich milk, and a cup of hot tea; for children, made of boiled milk and hot water, half-and half, with sugar, adding green or black tea in later years. The effect of such a "supper" would be to allow the stomach to rest at night, with the other parts of the body, by which it [illegible] laying up a stock of strength to be expended on a hearty breakfast The most unobservant know that a very hearty supper will inevitably be followed by a disturbed, dreamy, or otherwise unrefreshing sleep. Just as certain as any thing in nature can be certain, will a bad night's rest be succeeded by a weary waking up, with an entire day following of more or less discomfort; an irritability of mind or depression of spirits, while the lowly lacks that animation, vivacity and elasticity so inseparable from vigorous health, and [illegible] life is pleasureless, if [illegible] Worse [illegible] ation it is, that for the smell and literally momentary pleasure of swallowing a little "relish" of chipped beef, pound cake, preserves, hot rolls, or ginger bread, all of which tempt and lead on the appetite to excesses, we incur the discomforts just alluded to, at the expense of a sound sleep, a glad awakening, a glorious appetite, and a pleasurable day

Be cheerful, but not light, solid, but not sad

The Christian Recorder.

Philadelphia, July 5, 1862.

NOTICE

The Quarterly Conference of the members of the A. M. E. Union Church, will be held on the evening of the 18th inst., and the Quarterly Meeting, in the above named church on the 19th and 20th insts.

H. Davis, Minister

QUARTERLY MEETING

In the Wesley A. M. E. Church on Sabbath, the 6th of July. Love Feast in the morning; doors open at 8 o'clock, and close at 9. Preaching to commence at 10½ o'clock. Theme—"Christian in the World." Preaching in the afternoon at 3 o'clock by Rev. E. Weaver, and Sacrament of the Lord's Supper administered. Preaching in the evening at 8 o'clock. Theme—"A Stone with Seven Eyes"

A. L. Stanford, Minister.

QUARTERLY MEETINGS.

We are really delighted to see our brethren publish their Quarterly Meetings, as they will by this means become more generally known and be better attended. But will not the brethren have the kindness to send us a quarter of a dollar's worth of postage stamps to pay for setting up their matter? We believe that you will.

NOTICE.

Quarterly meetings of the Princeton Circuit. Quarterly Conference at Princeton, July 5, 1862, at 2 o'clock, P. M.

Quarterly Meeting, July 6th, at Princeton—July 20th, at Rocky Hill—July 27th, at Montrose.

Rev. T. Gould

NOTICE

There will be a Quarterly Meeting at New Brunswick on 13th July.

T. Gould, Elder in Charge
W. Offer, Stated Pastor.

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT OF OUR PAPER

The fourth page of our paper is devoted to the children. Will not our brethren, and the superintendents of our Sabbath Schools, send in their orders for as many as they want per month, accompanied with the cash? We promised to charge our Sabbath Schools only three cents per copy—$3.00 per hundred.

A WORD TO OUR BRETHREN.

We are looking for our brethren to send us subscribers for the Recorder. Let us swell the list to ten thousand copies. It can be done, if every brother will set about the work, and lay the matter before their people, for we hold that the people do want the Recorder. We have been informed that there are some places where the Recorder is never mentioned. Why is this? We don't want to have to hear of this very often.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

We wish to give notice to those of our subscribers who have only paid one half of their yearly subscription, that it is now time to pay the other half—one dollar. You will do us a favor to send it now, for we need all the money we can get, and more than we can get, to keep the Christian Recorder in the field.

PROF. P. HOUSTON MURRAY'S LECTURES.

The young phrenologist, Prof. Murray, whose accuracy in delineating character has astonished all his magical fingers have come in contact with, after making a successful phrenological tour through Canada West and Western New York, has arrived in our city, and intends delivering a second lecture here during the coming week, of which the public will be duly notified. Any one wishing an oral examination, written, or a chart, can be accommodated by calling at his stopping-place, No. 14 Eutaw St., where he will be pleased to accommodate them.

P. Houston Murray.

EMIGRATION.

Rev. W. R. Revels, M. D., of Indianapolis, has pitched into those who advocate emigration to our people en masse, without sufficient means to carry them, or a sufficient number to go with them who have the means, so as those who are dependent on them may find both food and employment.

OUR CITY AND COUNTY CANVASSER.

Miss Mary Still, our city and county canvasser, has gone to work, and is prosecuting her mission finely, despite the unfavorableness of the times; yet the cause is so praiseworthy, that there are many who cannot turn her away without giving her some encouragement. She feels encouraged, because she knows that a work so important, or a mission, rather, cannot be accomplished in a day or a week, but must take time. The Lord be with her in her mission.

BISHOP'S ALLOWANCE.

Philadelphia, June 30th, 1862.

The ministers and members of the Philadelphia Conference will please remember, that by a resolution passed at our last session, all the preachers having charges or appointments, were required to collect at least one-fourth part of their apportionments for their circuits or stations, quarterly, and pay over to the District Book Steward, if not immediately to the Bishop, the same, taking his receipt.

Also, that those quarterly collections and payments were to be taken or made in the months of July, October, January, and April

In view of the above stated arrangements and the present wants of the Bishop, which are known to us, we do hereby call the attention of our brethren to these facts, and request that they will be pleased to make returns to us for the Bishop as soon as possible, and they shall have receipts for all monies thus paid to us for him.

J. P. Campbell, District Book Steward.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

John D. Clough, of Coxsackie,	$1 00
W. L. Watson, per Rev. W. M. Johnson,	1 00
Mrs. Dickson, N. Y., omitted last week,	2 00
Rev. W. W. Grimes, of New Bedford, Mass on account,	2 00
Mrs. Chas. Williams, Burlington, N. J.,	$1 00

GOOD FEELINGS

We are receiving letters from our brethren from every direction informing us of the apparent indication of not only good feelings, but a determination to renew their walks with God

A GLARING BLUNDER

An oversight by the printer will be found in our last week's issue. In numbering the paper, [illegible]

REV. WILLIAM ALSTON

Rev William Alston, of New York, preached last Sabbath for St. Thomas' Church. We were present to hear our old North Carolina friend, and we were much pleased with his discourse. He read for his text: "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, so must the Son of man be lifted up" We were truly glad to hear our old friend. When at Olbin College, he and I boarded at the same house. The members of the St. Thomas' Church, we think, anticipate calling him for their minister.

MINUTES OF CONFERENCES

We have received a number of copies of the New England Conference, sent us by the Rev. W. W. Grimes, the District Book Steward; some 13 for us to file or put in the archives of the church, and the others to sell. The New England Minutes are gotten up in a very neat style, and anybody wanting a copy of the New England Minutes, by sending us 10 cents we will mail it to them prepaid. Those in the city can have them for 8 cents per copy. We have also the Philadelphia Minutes on hand to sell by the copy. Anybody wishing one can get it of us.

ANGLO AFRICAN

This paper has added to its editorial columns very much by procuring the services of our distinguished friend, Mr. P. T Smith, a gentleman of much ability and taste, and who possesses that spirit of persevering go-aheadativeness so ominous of future success. He is the Philadelphia editor. We hope for great success in future for our worthy contemporary

For the Christian Recorder.

FESTIVAL.

Mr. Editor:—I was present at a grand festival in New Brunswick on the 25th day of June, 1862, held by the ladies of the A. M. E. Church I was much delighted with the arrangement of this affair, and the creditable manner in which it was conducted by the Committee. They realised fifty-three dollars, and as we could not stay until the bills were settled up, we could not learn with certainty how much of the sum was clear profit Some of the brethren thought that thirteen dollars would cover all the expenses incurred, thus leaving forty dollars profit.

The ladies deserve great praise for their share in the affair.

In behalf of the Committee and Pastor,
Wm. Offer
Rev. Theodore Gould,
Princeton, N. J., June 31, 1862.

HYMN BOOKS.

We have orders for Hymn Books and Disciplines more than we can fill, because we have not got them bound up. The brethren are aware that it takes money to bind them, and therefore should send us all the aid they can.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Strange and important events have crowded thick and fast upon us during the past week. The able and accomplished soldier, General Pope, has been installed Commander in Chief over the combined forces of Fremont, Shields and McDowell. In consequence of this change, Fremont has resigned, though it may not be such a disaster as some of his over-zealous friends suppose. The news from McClellan's forces is startling and calculated to stir the deepest emotions. Vague and conflicting rumors are constantly pouring in; the import of them all is—a terrible battle has been fought! We have not yet learned the result who has won or who has lost. Strange forbodings oppress our brain—we cannot shake them off. We wait and tremble. God grant that our fond hopes may not be rudely dashed to the earth by the repulse of gallant little "Mac" and his noble army. The government at Washington maintain a taciturn silence, for reasons best known to themselves. We are in the midst of a whirlpool of rumors. All is confusion and doubt. R H

EGYPT

[CONTINUED.]

We promised our attentive reader, in concluding our brief remarks on Egypt in last week's issue, that, should we find time and opportunity to confine our mind to the subject, we should again resume the subject—this week, if practicable. Our object in treating upon this subject is, that our readers may see that the colored people, who are looked upon in this country as grossly ignorant, and as always having been so characterised, are not by any means so—but quite the reverse Another reason is that, we wish to demonstrate that the arts and sciences originated in Egypt—and that those who inhabited Egypt were colored men; and that God caused them to suffer for their disobedience—just as He is causing the people in this country to suffer for their sins and wickedness.

Egypt can never be forgotten. Her memory is inseparably linked with the light arts and sciences which for a long time she enjoyed. Yet it must be remembered that she had the judgments of the Lord visited upon her. "I will make the rivers [of Egypt] ran dry," saith the Lord. There has been, according to the description of that country, and what historians say, a great many lakes, canals and water branches have been literally dried up and choked by the sand. We said in our last that Egypt was divided into two parts called Lower Egypt and Upper Egypt. In Lower Egypt the river Nile is said to have seven mouths; [illegible] artificial.

There is one very remarkable fact connected with this history—that the two artificial mouths of the river Nile only remain as outlets to this mighty stream, and that the five natural mouths are now so obstructed as to be either wholly dried up or converted into stagnant marshes. Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty. Thy ways are past finding out. Who can know them

Says the great God of the universe—"I will make the land of Egypt desolate, in the midst of the countries that are desolate." It is a historic fact that many an immense and flourishing district along the whole extent of the country of Egypt has become desolate. Her once fertile fields have been, as if by some strange touch of the magician's wand, transformed into one vast and parching desert Just think for a moment, my dear readers, of the fact that a territory which formerly supplied the principal necessaries and luxuries of life to so many millions, (we may safely set the number down at seven millions,) can now very inadequately support a third part of that number

We might say that through the oppressive energies of a merciless tyranny the work of destruction has receded a pace, and many places are said to be advancing rapidly in improvement. But God, who is King of kings, and Lord over all, has demonstrated the fact to wicked men and women that there is an end to such conduct in this world, and declared, "I will also destroy the idols, and will cause their images to cease out." Noph, or Memphis, was the ancient capital of Egypt. There were famed idols and images of Egypt. Egypt, was, we may say, the very birth-place and cradle of the leading mythologies and idolatries of antiquity. They are now no more. The prophets continue to say, "The pomp of her strength shall cease, and the pride of power shall come down." Again: says the Lord, "I will sell the land into the hands of the wicked; it shall be a base kingdom—the basest of the kingdoms; and there shall be no more a prince of the land of Egypt." We ask, where now is the pomp of Egypt's ancient strength—the pride of her ancient power? And just so may it be asked of many of our Southern cities, which once were flourishing and prosperous. But, alas! how sadly fares it with them now. Many of the towns and cities are strikingly assimilated with the impression produced on reading "Goldsmith's Deserted Village;" many, very many, of her greatest and best men have fallen, and that, too, in the midst of all their glory and splendor, and, wrapped in their bloody shrouds, have gone to meet the great Judge of all the reath—to stand as culprits before Jehovah's awful throne

We may, in a very few days, ask, "Where is Richmond—the Capital of the so-called Southern Confederacy?" When the noble Stars and Stripes shall proudly fling its graceful folds in the face of heaven over the very heart of that doomed city, and the inhabitants shall hide their heads in bitter shame—then shall we receive our answer Where are her merchants, her mechanics, her machinery?—yes, where are many of her great men, who used to ride about in fine gigs and beautiful coaches, with their servants at their backs? We might answer, and say, Like Egypt, they have lost that power which they once enjoyed.

The only remaining relic that is visible of the pomp and pride of royal Memphis is the huge bust of the colossal statue of Sesostris, erected by himself and several others in front of the temple of Vulcan. It is said by historians that it was the practice of this proud conqueror to rear pillars in every subjugated province, invariably bearing the daringly presumptuous inscription, "Sesostris, king of kings and lord of lords, subdued this country by his arms" Such was his spirit of braggadocio.

We shall now close for the present. The finger on the clock-dial warns us to attend to other duties. We shall conclude the subject, if possible, in another number.—Ed.

GENERAL BOOK STEWARD'S REPORT CONTINUED—No. 6.

The Christian Recorder Reported from January, 1861, to May 1st, 1862.

CASH RECEIVED.

1861.
April	1.	Taken in for the Recorder, ..	11 13
	2.	" " " "	3 00
	3.	" " " "	10
	4.	" " " "	59
	5.	Subscription,	1 00
	5.	"	34
	6.	Taken in for the Recorder, ..	12 79
	"	" " " " ..	2 02
	10.	Papers sold,	79
	11.	"	6 04
	12.	"	3 25
	13.	"	7 01
	15.	"	7 42
	16.	"	41
	17.	"	1 39
	18.	"	4 4
	19.	"	8 31
	20.	"	6 12
	22.	"	2 27
	23.	"	1 60
	24.	"	1 95
	26.	"	1 41
	27.	"	5 29
	29.	"	1 66
	30.	"	2 50
		Sum total, up to May 1st,	$108 56
May	1.	Papers sold,	2 29
	2.	"	18
	3.	"	77
	4.	"	6 71
	6.	"	1 [illegible]
	7.	"	7 15
	8.	"	2 40
	9.	"	1 03
	10.	"	7 [illegible]
	13.	"	4 59
	14.	"	2 [illegible]
	15.	"	1 41
	16.	"	3 05
	17.	"	7 [illegible]
	19.	"	1 49
	21.	"	7 86
	22.	"	2 30
	23.	"	2 04
	24.	"	1 89
	26.	"	[illegible]
	27.	From the Minute Society, ..	4
	28.	"	2 97
	30.	" "	2 12
			1 00
		Sum total, up to June 1st,	$165 09
June	1	Papers sold,	8 87
	1	"	54
	3	"	95
	5.	"	04
	6.	"	54
	7.	"	3 45
	8.	"	84
	12.	"	19
	13.	"	[illegible]
	14.	"	[illegible]
	16.	"	[illegible]
	17.	"	[illegible]
	19.	"	2 00
	20.	"	[illegible]
	21.	"	[illegible]
	23.	"	[illegible]
	24.	"	[illegible]
	26.	"	[illegible]
	27.	"	[illegible]
	28.	"	[illegible]
	30.	"	[illegible]
		Sum total, up to July 1st,	$ [illegible]
July	1	Papers sold,	3 44
	2	"	[illegible]
	3	"	94
	4	"	65
	5	"	[illegible]
	7	"	[illegible]
	8	"	1 50
	9	"	[illegible]
	10	"	[illegible]
	11	"	1 49
	12	"	1 50
	13	"	2 02
	14	"	3 92
	15	"	2 60
	16	"	3 40
	17	"	1 36
	18	"	6 23
	19	"	2 63
	20	"	1 00
			50
			1 67
			1 00
			2 00
		Sum total, up to Aug 1st,	$51 49
Aug	1	Papers sold,	1 00
	2	"	8 25
	3	"	1 98
	4	"	3 00
			90
			1 39
			12
			3 00
			8 56
			85
			2 00
			7 78
			1 51
			5 35
			2 34
			51
			12
			2 00
			4 22
		Sum total, up to Sept. 1st,	$48 54

(To be continued.)

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

Mr. Editor:—Permit me through the Christian Recorder to say a word to the brethren of the New England District. In looking over the minutes of the last Annual Conference, I find that we are working, but to no advantage. Permit me to advise you to carry out the law laid down by the General Conference, found in the Discipline, pages 210 and 223. You will please to read it, and act according to the law How is the District Book Steward to forward that part of the two cent money which is due to the General Book Steward when there is none in his hands? Brethren, I recommend the following plan: First, hold a general class once each month, and let the people bring forward their two cents; or, if you prefer it, when you give out your quarterly tickets, tell your class leaders to demand six cents of each member that receives a ticket, and let them know that none will be admitted to the Love Feast who have not received their last quarterly ticket. If you carry out this plan, the editor and General Book Steward will be able to stay at home and attend to the duties of his office, and not be travelling through the various districts, paying nearly all that he receives to the steamboat and railroad company to carry him around; for instance, he visited this district last winter; after passing all around the district, he raised thirty-five dollars; take out his travelling expenses, and what is left? ten dollars, at most. There was only twenty-three dollars two cent money returned to the last Conference from the whole district, containing seven hundred members—a fraction over three cents for each member.

Brethren, this is too bad. What will become of us, when worn out in the service, should it please God that we should live so long We can hardly live now while we have a charge, but when worn out, we will be turned out, nothing provided, to take care of us If five hundred members paid twenty-five cents a year, or earn twenty-four cents a year, this would be at least $100—fifty to the general book steward, and fifty to go in the preacher's fund This, with the sale of our annual minutes, would in ten years raise a little capital towards taking care of us when worn out Come brethren, take hold—we promised to enforce all the rules of the discipline when we were received into the ministry, and if you fail to do so, we will not forget you at the next annual conference. Read Bishop Nazrey's sketch on the rule, marked K in the Minutes, page 22.

Respectfully, yours in Christ.

Wm. W. Grimes.

OUR SELECTIONS.

We have introduced among the varied, interesting and instructive selections that adorn this number, some extracts from the Friends' Review, one of the best among the many good exchanges with which we are favored. For excellence of matter, suitable for family reading, we believe the Review is not surpassed

BEAUTIFUL PRAYERS

The prayers are beautiful that reach the ear of God The fervent prayer of the righteous man availeth much, and is beautiful. The prayer of the widow and the fatherless, who have no helper, is beautiful. The prayer of the infant, who takes God's promise, in his "moist, implicit grasp," as he does his mother's hand, is beautiful. The prayer of the wayside [illegible] matical, is beautiful The prayer of the poor man [illegible] God heard him and delivered him out of all his troubles," was beautiful. The prayer of the publican who smote upon his breast and said, "God be merciful to me, a sinner," was beautiful The prayer of Stephen, when amid the storm of stones he cried, just before he "fell asleep," "Lay not this sin to their charge," was beautiful. There is a grammar and rhetoric of heaven, but it is foreign to the culture of this world. The courtiers there wear "wedding garments," and they speak the celestial language; but sometimes they seem ragged and ignorant to the eyes that are blinded with the clay and dust of our earthly roadsteads. We cannot always discern the fashions of heaven. There is a frippery that sometimes claims to be the garb divine, but is more tinsel. There is an "excellency of speech" which is jargon and mockery in the ear of God. There is "sounding brass and tinkling cymbal"—mere clatter, and not celestial music at all. There are "beautiful prayers" that are quinsied and [illegible] nable before the Searcher of Hearts

An exchange, recording the fall of a person into [illegible] but it!"

MONTHLY MISSIONARY STATEMENT.

[We believe our readers will be much interested in the following extracted missionary summary.—Ed.]

Egypt.—Rev Mr Hogg and family have returned to [illegible] up the Nile, [illegible] and prosperity. They left [illegible] probably [illegible] Mr Hogg [illegible] to the mouth [illegible] to [illegible]

Four Anna Southwell, one of Miss M'Kown's assistants in the Girls' School (in Alexandria,) [illegible] We had hoped she would have been spared to be a useful co-worker in the school where she learned her letters, and where she first learned to love the Saviour. But God had otherwise ordained. The young sapling has been suddenly transplanted to a more congenial soil. She was aged 13 years and [illegible] months

Miss M'Kown, of the Girls' School in that city, writes under date of April 26th —

"I opened my school on Wednesday, but on account of the Feasts at this season of the year, the children have [illegible] returned yet The proportion of Christians (so called) in our School is larger this Spring than it was last

"Halil, our bookseller, is still distributing daily the word of God and religious books among the people of Alexandria and the sailors in the harbor. A good work is thus going on

"Abuna Michail has kept up the Sabbath service during Mr Hogg's absence. He preaches a sermon in the morning, and in the afternoon has a Bible class. He has a very good audience all the time. He is a very valuable assistant to our work

"I am grieved to say Wordy is not strong. She very much needs to rest this summer, but as I have lost my assistant, Anna Southwell, I do not see how I could do without Wordy—she is so faithful, and has such excellent judgment. But, if an assistant could be found that could speak both Arabic and Italian, I would at once release her for a time

"I would like to write to many persons who are kindly remembering me in various ways, but, alas, my hands are so full of pressing duties here that it cannot be done. May this statement be understood and appreciated by all as a proper excuse for any seeming neglect.

"Unite with us in thanking our heavenly Father for the privileges and prosperity we enjoy in this heathen country, and we will unite with you in your prayers for a [illegible] of peace [illegible] loosed stricken nature land."

Miss Dales writes from Cairo, May 6th:—

"The work of preparing our new mission premises is still going forward. The upper story is nearly ready for occupancy, and our Girls' School will go in next week The school rooms for the girls are seven or eight in number, and are most delightfully situated The largest one fronts on the Park, and will be very inviting. These rooms are all on the third story.

"Our school is very pleasant, and is every day becoming more attractive and dear. Seventy two girls were in attendance to-day. We have a Bible class, also, of twenty, most of whom are grown up, and who show a deep interest in learning divine things. In these schools we are taking special pains to train up those who may yet be [illegible] and are already having a gospel influence [illegible] Much do we especially desire that all these may be taught of the Holy Spirit, and so be [illegible] ently useful to these people and be themselves heirs of the heavenly inheritance."

China.—It is well known that an insurrection has been for some time in progress in China. Of its character and bearings upon the missionary work, we have not seen a more interesting account than one which has just been furnished us by the missionary, Rev. Mr. Nevin. It throws much light upon the present state of things in that great empire of sluggish and [illegible] people. Mr Nevin says:—

"One year ago light seemed to be rising upon this nation after the storm of war had passed away Late developments, however, seem to indicate that for a season we must wait with patience for the designs of Providence to work out a clearer sky. For several months past the most sanguine expectations of good immediately to arise from the rebellion, have been sinking and dying. It would now seem as if all hope had fled. The Rebels have uncovered themselves, and present a spectacle which cannot be mistaken, and which is worse than the form of pagan idolatry itself. Not one of their rational supporters and abettors stand by them with a word of defence. Even the eccentric old man, Mr. Roberts, who has been a resident at Nanking and a supposed favorite at the Court of the Rebel chief, has at last been compelled to turn his back and denounce them as robbers and murderers of the bluekest stamp.

"You are, perhaps, aware that Mr. Roberts was formerly a missionary of the Baptist Church, Southern Convention. For good reasons they dismissed him from their service, at length, and left him to his own resources. Since the time of his dismissal he has managed by hook and by crook to support himself, and still remained in the field. Previous to the rise of the insurgents, their chief happened to fall in with Mr R at Canton, and received a few weeks of his instruction. Having afterwards established himself at Nanking, he sent for his old preceptor to come and take up his abode at the celestial capital. Here Mr R received what he thought was every mark of attention and honor It is quite possible that the old man was, to a great extent, deceived in all this, as was conjectured by many and affirmed by others who visited him in his kingly home. The secret of his reception seems to have been an expectation, on the part of the Rebel chief, that his presence at the Court would be a blind to foreigners, and perhaps a medium of gaining their influence or countenance. The precaution failed, and they drove him from their presence as a mere dog, giving him only his life. On the day of his dismissal, King Kan, the cousin and right-hand man of the chief, came into his room and brutally butchered his servant without a moment's warning. He also struck Mr R in the face with his hand, and did everything he could by way of abusive language and personal insult, to obtain a pretext for summarily ending his days on the spot Failing in this, he ordered him to leave with all possible despatch, suffering him to carry away nothing but the clothes on his back. His denunciations now contrast rather unfavorably with the good words which he has heretofore spoken in behalf of his insurgent friends: so much so is this the case that the censure of the secular press has fallen on him without mercy. But be this discrepancy as it may, he has undoubtedly escaped from a den of villains

"King Kan, who figures so conspicuously in [illegible] by the [illegible] gelist, and is said to have had a good acquaintance with Gospel truth. But all the knowledge which he and his associates have acquired of Christianity and the Bible itself, have been appropriated to the attainment of their ambitious and selfish ends; it would seem to have proved 'a savor of death unto death' The chief has not only dishonored God and His Son by blasphemy and the assumption of divine titles, but he has forbidden the preaching of the Gospel unless his own divinity be recognised and taught with equal acceptance This was the condition which was set before the Rev. Mr Cox, of the English Wesleyan Mission, on a recent visit to Nanking. He received it from King Kan himself, with whom he had been previously acquainted when laboring at Canton and Hong Kong. He informed Mr Cox that if he attempted to preach the truth as it is in Christ, he did it at the risk of his life

"There is a second man in authority in their land, who was formerly a [illegible] invitation to dine with him, which was accepted At the appointed hour the latter very sensibly be- [illegible] acquainted that the Chief had become a [illegible]

THE MISTAKE—SHALL WE DANCE OR NOT DANCE?

"Depend upon it, Dr. N., you are making a great mistake. If you do not allow your children to attend balls and dancing parties, you will cut them off from society. They will be such speckled birds, that all the young people will shun them; and by and by you'll have a lot of mopes and old maids."

"I do not fear, Esq. W., that my children will suffer for want of society, if they do not frequent the midnight dance; neither do I consider those acquaintances most valuable, which are made in scenes of mirth and revelry."

"I am sorry to see you so prejudiced, Doctor; surely amusement is sometimes lawful; and the Bible itself proves this. For it expressly says 'There is a time to dance'"

"Yes, and 'a time to kill,' also; so you can approve murder, as well as dancing, Esquire, by the same chapter."

"Well, I couldn't have the heart to deprive my children of so much innocent enjoyment; I should expect them to hate me, if I showed so little care to make them happy. I am sure yours must think you very tyrannical."

"My children seem happy and affectionate, Esq W. The time has been when they desired to participate in these amusements which you consider so essential to their respectability and comforts. But their mother and I have succeeded in convincing them that balls and dancing parties would be injurious to their health, unfavorable to their mental improvement, and hazardous to their spiritual interests. While we do not claim that dancing, as a physical exercise, is in itself sinful, yet we do see that, as practised in society, its uniform tendency is to create a disrelish for home duties and pleasures, an aversion to intellectual culture and serious thought, and an absolute neglect of all earnest and hearty religious life We believe that our children have confidence in our affection, and do not feel the restriction from these amusements an act of parental tyranny. So, I should not confess to the minister with which you charge me; and if we live twenty years, time will show which of us is right."

Only one of the speakers reached the standpoint suggested by Dr. N. The only son of Esq. W., was led by easy steps from the ball-room to the card-table and drinking saloon. The habits and connexions thus formed proved his ruin. Gambling involved him in debts to retrieve which he borrowed without leave from his employer's funds. His hopes that a fortunate throw would enable him to replace what he had unlawfully taken were not fulfilled; and when concealment became no longer possible, he fled to a distant land to end his days in want and infamy.

His [illegible] the seductive arts of a ball room acquaintance, whose fascinating manners and ardent professions of love and constancy, persuaded her to leave her parents' roof without their knowledge and sanction. These were terrible blows to a doting father; and Esq W. could not survive his disappointment and shame. His death broke up the family. Mrs W., with her second and third daughter, were obliged to seek mechanical employment for their own support, whilst the youngest child, a little girl of seven years, found a home with a distant relative.

The family of Dr N., included a son and two daughters. The affectionate parents did not deny their children vain and improper amusements, without furnishing such as were suitable and [illegible] provided; thus a love of reading was stimulated and encouraged; a taste for the fine arts cultivated and rewarded. The father and mother showed an eager and constant interest in the pursuits and pleasures of their young charge, ministering with [illegible] joyment. As far as their moderate means allowed they journeyed with them, to see the wonders of [illegible] conversation, select society, domestic duties, and the acquirement of useful skill and knowledge, [illegible] and peace.

The twenty years of test have passed rapidly away. While the advocate of foolish and hurtful pleasure, dead of a broken heart at his children's misconduct, Dr. N. lived to see all his family pious, his daughters happily married, and his son with a lovely and beloved companion, adorning the Gospel ministry. Another generation are being carefully reared in the ways of godliness; and not only the children, but the children's [illegible] improperly

A TRAVELLER'S EXPERIENCE

I had repeated conversations with a Frenchman, an artist of considerable merit, who professed himself to be an infidel He came up to the ideal I had formed of a French rationalist I took great pains to enter into his views and trains of thought, and the impression he left on me was ineffably sad. He was what the philosophers would call a Materialist [illegible] was dead. In fact he [illegible] the idea [illegible] a personal God. No free will [illegible] agency. No [illegible] between good and evil. No truth [illegible] religion. No immortality of the soul. Everything was fast [illegible] in the crucible of the cross have been turned into hot beds of rebellion, and schools of the new divinity, and plunder and rapine have followed in the wake of the rebel armies. What the leaders intend to do in the event of establishing themselves and securing the control of many of the most valuable parts, no one knows. It is not very likely, however, that foreign nations will suffer them to [illegible] much power before knowing something definite of their intentions I suppose you have already heard of the fall of Ningpo, and the gathering of the storm about Shanghai. The former place now bears testimony to the barbarity and [illegible] as to convince many who have hitherto skeptically closed their eyes to the results which should be expected from such brutal reformers. No doubt the eye of the insurgent chief has been looking at Shanghai, for several years, as a rich and important prize which he would like to possess. The foreign element, however, which he has hitherto hoped to win over to his cause, has stood in his way. The commercial interest of the place to the empire and others engaged in the trade of the east, rendered the [illegible] too sensitive for him to touch until he should feel somewhat certain of success. Emboldened by the seizure of Ningpo, demonstrations have also been made against the now great emporium of China. The large foreign settlement at Shanghai affords a good pretext for defensive operations on the part of the English and French. In order to successfully defend this position, the city is held as an outpost Should the Rebels, then, persist in their designs, they must inevitably come in contact with foreign arms—a collision which would not be altogether [illegible] and which would lead to a more speedy and satisfactory solution of the difficulty than if left to the timid apathy of the Chinese themselves

"For the present, missionary operations have well-nigh, if not altogether, been broken up at Ningpo By the advice of the British Consul, the English missionaries have all left and gone to Shanghai. At latest advices our American brethren were still remaining on the ground, although uncertain as to the future. The threatened attack on Shanghai produced considerable consternation; but I believe that no fears are now entertained, as military reinforcements have been sent up from Hong Kong. As yet we have enjoyed peace and quiet at Canton, although there have been frequent rumors of the approach of the Kwongsi Banditti. At one time it was said they were on the march and would certainly be upon us in the course of a month, and now it is asserted that in four months the Rebels will be ready to set out against this city We have no apprehension that the work here will be interrupted even so soon as the fears of the people around us would seem to warrant. The influence of the Allied Powers, by their interests in property and persons and the proximity of the ceded possessions, will render any interference with the lawful authorities quite unlikely, unless political affairs should assume an aspect widely different from the present. Mr. Graves, of the Baptist mission, is still at Shin-hing, and enjoys an uninterrupted course of labor."

THE DIVINE GLORIFIER.

Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, He shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you.—John xvi. 14.

The Holy Spirit glorifying Jesus in the unfoldings of his person, and character, and work to his people! The great ministering agent between the Church on earth, and its glorified Head in heaven; carrying up to the Intercessor on the throne, the ever-recurring wants and trials, the perplexities and sins of believers; and receiving out of his inexhaustible treasury of love comfort for their sorrows, strength for their weakness, sympathy for their tears, fulness for their emptiness; and this the one sublime end and object of his gracious agency: "He shall glorify me." "He shall not speak of himself, but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak." My words of sympathy, my omnipotent pleadings, the tender messages sent from an unchanged human heart, all these shall he speak. "He shall tell you," says an old divine, commenting on this passage, "He shall tell you nothing but stories of my love." (Goodwin.) He will have an ineffable delight in magnifying me in the affections of my Church and people, and endearing me to their hearts; and he is all worthy of credence, for he is "the Spirit of truth."

How faithful has he been in every age to this, his great office as "the glorifier of Jesus!" See the first manifestation of his power in the Christian Church, at the day of Pentecost. What was the grand truth which forms the focus-point of interest in that unparalleled scene, and which brings three thousand stricken penitents to their knees! It is the Spirit's unfolding of Jesus; glorifying him in eyes that before saw in him no beauty! Hear the key-note of that wondrous sermon, preached "in demonstration of the Spirit, and with power:" "Him hath God exalted to be a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance to his people and forgiveness of sins."

Ah! it is still the same peerless truth which the Spirit delights to unfold to the stricken sinner, and, in unfolding it, to make it mighty to the pulling down of strongholds. All these glorious inner beauties of Christ's work and character are undiscerned and undiscernible by the natural eye. "It is the Spirit that quickeneth." "No man can call Jesus Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." He is the great forerunner, a mightier than the Baptist, proclaiming, "Behold the Lamb of God!"

Reader, any bright and realising view you have had of the Saviour's glory and excellency, is of the Spirit's imparting. When in some hour of sorrow you have been led to cleave with preeminent consolation to the thought of the Redeemer's exalted sympathy, his dying, ever-living love; or in the hour of death, when you feel the sustaining power of his exceeding great and precious promises; what is this but the Holy Spirit, in fulfilment of his all-gracious office, taking of the things of Christ, and showing them unto you; thus enabling you to magnify him in your body, whether it be by life or death? As your motto should ever be, "None but Christ," and your ever-increasing aspiration, "More of Christ," seek to bear in mind who it is that is alone qualified to impart the "excellency of this knowledge." "The Spirit of truth which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me."—Macduff's

AT THE LAST.

The stream is calmest when it nears the tide,
The flowers are sweetest at the eventide,
The birds most musical at close of day,
And saints dismost when they pass away

Morning is lovely, but a holier charm
Lies folded in the evening robe of balm,
And weary man [illegible]
For morning calls to toil, but night brings rest.

She comes from heaven, and on her wings doth bear
A holy fragrance, like the breath of prayer,
Footsteps of angels follow in her trace,
To shut the weary eyes of day in peace

All things are hushed before her, as she throws
O'er earth and sky her mantle of repose;
There is a calm, a beauty, and a power,
That morning knows not, in the evening hour.

Until the evening we must weep and toil,
Plough life's stern furrows, dig the weedy soil;
Tread with sad feet our rough and thorny way,
And bear the heat and burden of the day.

O, when our sun is setting, may we glide,
Like summer's evening down the golden tide,
And leave behind us as we pass away,
Sweet, starry twilight, round our sleeping clay.

PRIVILEGE OF PRAYER

What a glorious boon is thus vouchsafed to us! The Creator and the creature! How limitless the one! How circumscribed the other! Creator and creature speak! He stoops to the lowliness of the one! He exalts the creature nearly to the dignity of the Creator! He stoops that he may exalt! He exalts that he may stoop! He stoops long and patiently lift up from the very depths! He exalts many times upon himself and the blessings multiply! He stoops upon himself and he bows men. Prayer upon God and man's wish wedged as our prayers are, but everywhere laid down in the New Testament as our absolute duty. Earnest, energetic prayer we are hardly surprised in the Bible has great efficacy with God. What astonishing condescension! The humble, feeble petition of a worm of the dust may have an infinite one in the counsels of the Eternal Three! In nothing, perhaps, do we see the forgiving love and benevolence of the Deity more strikingly manifested toward his rebellious creatures than in the institution of prayer. Here we see, as it were, a communication opened between earth and heaven. By this way the humble saint may rise on the wings of faith and love to the very confines of heavenly bliss. He may almost hear the sound of heavenly music. He mingles in imagination with the glorious company that stand around the throne of God, with crowns upon their heads and golden harps in their hands, singing day and night: "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come." In the emotions of the simple, humble, and despised disciple of Christ are the loftiest examples of moral sublimity ever seen or felt by man. But these emotions, elevated and exalted as they are, still are open to all who will sincerely and earnestly seek them. Yet, after all, there are some still remaining, and those professing Christians too, who, regardless of its value, are now living in almost entire neglect of this heaven-born privilege!

THE SPLENDID PREACHER

Richard Baxter preached as feeling that the truths of God were too great and glorious in themselves, to be covered up with the little trappings of human adornments. He would as soon have thought of hanging the rainbow with tinsel. His eloquence consisted in rounded sentences. . . . . .

He never preached a sermon to display his scholastic learning, or his power of logic; but his aim was ever to win souls to Christ. If fine and eloquent sermons are tolerated at all, it is in the press only, when they are to be read as discussion of a subject, and read either as an intellectual exercise or as a discipline of conscience. In the pulpit, splendid sermons are splendid sins. They dazzle and amuse, and astonish, like brilliant fireworks, but they throw daylight on no subject. They draw attention to the preacher, instead of the subject. The splendid preacher, like the pyrotechnist, calculates on a dark night among his attendants; and amid the coruscation of the pulpit his skill and his art are admired and applauded, but Christ is not glorified. If angels weep and devils mock, it is at the pulpit-door of a splendid preacher.—Dr. Jenkyn.

A GOOD STORY

Dr. Thomas, when Bishop of Salisbury, used to tell the following story: "While I was chaplain to the British factory at Hamburg, a gentleman belonging to the factory, died at a village about ten miles distant. Application was made to the pastor of the parish for leave to have him buried in his church-yard, but on being told that he was a Calvinist, he refused. 'No,' said he, 'there are none but Lutherans in my church-yard, and there shall be no other.' 'This being told me,' says Dr. Thomas, 'I resolved to go and argue the matter with him, but found him inflexible.' At length I told him he made me think of a circumstance which once happened to myself when I was a curate in Thomas street. I was burying a corpse, when a woman came and pulled me by the sleeve in the midst of the service, saying, 'Sir, sir, I want to speak to you.' 'Prythee,' says I, 'woman, wait till I have done.' 'No, sir, I must speak to you immediately.' 'Why, then, what is the matter?' 'Sir,' says she, 'you are burying a man who died of the small-pox next my poor husband, who never had it.' The story had the desired effect, and the pastor permitted the bones of the Calvinist to be interred in his church-yard."

THE DYING NOBLEMAN.

A certain nobleman, as the story goes, had a rude wit in his employ, called a fool. Amused with a remark of his one day, the nobleman gave him his walking cane, with this injunction:—"Take this walking cane, and keep it until you meet with a greater fool than yourself, and then give it to him." The man kept the walking-cane for a length of time, not meeting with any one whom he deemed a greater fool than himself. In process of time, however, his lordship was laid upon a dying-bed, and sending for the rude wit, addressed him thus;—"Farewell!" "Where is your lordship going?" said the man. "I am going to my long home," replied the nobleman. "Your long home! How long is your lordship going to stay there?" "Oh!" said the dying nobleman, "I am never to return!" "Never to return!" exclaimed the man, "never to return!" "No," said the nobleman, "I am going to eternity, and am never to return." "Has your lordship made any preparation for that long home?" "No," said he, "I have not." "Then," replied the man, "your lordship will please to take the walking-cane; you are certainly a greater fool than I am—please to take the walking-cane."

If this be deemed a quaint illustration, sure I am it is forcible, and much to the point. Only think! the sinner is going to an eternal world! In that eternal world there is a heaven of unspeakable and everlasting happiness for those who have made preparation for it; and for those who have made no preparation, there is a world of woe, which must be their dwelling-place to all eternity. And yet the sinner makes no preparation! Regardless of his eternal interests, he is trifling with his undying soul. Is this acting the part of a wise man? Is it not rather acting the part of a madman and a fool? Oh, you who are throwing away the things of this world, forget that you have undying souls, that you must soon be in eternity, and must soon be in heaven or in hell! Oh! think about your need of preparation, before the season for it be over and gone forever.

The Prayer-Meeting.

A Washington correspondent gives the following account of the process of embalming:

The body is placed on an inclined platform, the mouth, ears, nose, &c., are stopped with cotton; if wounded, cotton is put in the wound, and a plaster is put on; an incision is made in the wrist, the attachment is made from an air pump, and fluid is injected into the arteries. The wound is then sewed up and the body is hoisted to dry. To save the eyes from sinking in, wax is put under the eyelids. The hair is found to come out very easy, but after the embalming it could not be removed. The bodies take on an average about seven quarts. There were some eight bodies on hand; some had been there thirty days. The operators say that in four months the body will become solidified like marble, but no change has yet been had to prove it. Colonel Baker's body, on arriving at St. Francisco, was in an advanced state of decomposition. Dr. Holmes, late of Williamsburg, Long Island, is the oldest in the business here, and I am informed he has made $30,000. Messrs Brown & Alexander are trying to get a bill through Congress for the exclusive right to embalm bodies, and to have Congress authorise a corps of embalmers for each division. The charges are $50 for an officer and $25 for a private and I must say the bodies are as lifelike as if they were asleep.

Grace does not permit us to check ourselves through to heaven, but requires us to get out at each junction of our life, and see that our faith is right, and to take heed lest we lose our way. It is this that is one of the mysteries of Christian life, that while in view of God's might we know we can never fall, in view of our weakness we know that without constant reliance on his help we must fall forthwith.

THE CHRISTIAN'S SENSE OF SIN

[illegible]

[illegible] Lawrence [illegible]

[illegible] Christ [illegible]

[illegible] have been [illegible]

[illegible] Lord [illegible]

[illegible] Lord [illegible]

[illegible] have been ingratitude, and that you have smitten [illegible]

[illegible] who to the prodigal fed where he was [illegible]

[illegible] that beggar recollections in his memory, Latour. And hence he said, "I will arise and go to my father, finding fast his paternal and filial relation-ship; and seeing his sins only the more heinous [illegible] against a father. The Christian will ever have the deepest sorrow for sin, the deepest sense of its heinousness while his deepest impressions of sin are pregnant with hope, where as the natural man's deepest conviction of sin drives him nearest to despair. A Christian's sense of sin carries him to our Father; an unregenerate man's sense of sin carries him away from our Father.

Dr. Cumming.

THE UNSEEN LAND.

There is a very old and beautiful story that has formed the staple for poems in many tongues, that we wish we could worthily tell.

It is of one sailing on the sea in a sleep. The ship was wrecked and shattered, and yet he slept. The waves bore him like an infant in a cradle, upon the plank whereon he lay, and when he awoke, it was with music, and upon a couch of flowers. The shore was strange yet lovely, and thronged with thousands who proclaimed him King. It seemed as if they had awaited him, waif though he was, for there was a throne without an occupant, and royal robes for his arraying. All human wills seemed merged in his, and glory shone around him even as the sea of that fair, unclouded clime. At length there came to him a reverend man, and told him that the time would come, when exiled from his kingdom, and powerless, as he came, there would be "none so poor as to do him reverence." "But," continued the sage, "beyond the clouds that skirt this land, lies an unseen island, bare and dread; no fountains sparkle, and no flowers perfume; no music but the wail of wind and waves; no shelter but the shadow of a rock. Thither they will banish thee, there must thy home be. But now thou art supremely blest; slaves do thy bidding, and gold strews thy pathway like sand. Go, seek that island out; cause the rock to be smitten that it may gush with living water; send fragrant flowers from thy gardens and spicy trees from thy forests; let the amaranth be transplanted and the palm shed pleasant shade, till the wilderness shall be glad for them and the desert blossom as the rose. Build there a royal mansion, and fill it with all things pure and beautiful that surround thee now; so thou shalt have a Paradise at last, and go rejoicing into exile." The King was wise, and while he cherished the realm he had ruled, yet sought the island and "colonized," as it were, the half of his heart. Spring was persuaded to come that way, and she hung her robes on the trees he had planted, and left her breath on the gale. The music of the birds and fountains, the winds among the leaves floated round the new palace he had built, but nothing of this land had he ever beheld. Years went on, and the old royal glories grew dim, and the crown was tarnished, and by-and-by there was another wreck, a new King came sleeping to the shore, and he had ruled in a palace where he was not suffered so much as a shelter, for he was an exile, as the sage had prophesied. But he went not with a heavy heart, for sometimes when the wind blew from the unseen shore, it had scents to him the fragrance of the orange and the palm, and so he knew that his gardens were growing beautiful for his coming. And he laid off the purple robe like one disrobing for pleasant dreams, and put down the sceptre as if it had been a burden, and went away to his unseen home, with a "good-by" on his lips.

LOOK BEFORE YOU KICK

A minister is one of the orthodox churches, while on his way to preach a funeral sermon in the country, called to see one of its members, an old lady, who lived near the road he was travelling. The old lady had just been making some sausages, and she felt proud of them, they were so plump, round, and sweet. Of course she insisted on the minister taking some home to his family. He objected, on account of not having his portmanteau along. This was overruled, and the old lady, wrapping them up in a rag, carefully placed a bundle in each pocket of the preacher's capacious coat. Thus equipped, he started for the funeral.

While attending to the solemn ceremonies of the grave, some hungry dogs scented the sausages, and were not long in tracking them to the good man's overcoat. Of course this was a great annoyance, and he was several times under the necessity of kicking these whelps away. The obsequies of the grave completed, minister and people repaired to the Church, where the funeral discourse was to be preached.

After the sermon was finished, the minister halted to make some remarks to his congregation, when a brother who wished to have an appointment given out ascended the pulpit steps, and gave the minister's coat a hitch to attract his attention. The divine, thinking it a dog having a design upon his pocket, raised his foot, gave a sudden kick, and sent the good man sprawling full length upon the floor.

"You will excuse me, brethren and sisters," said the minister, confusedly, and without looking at the work he had done, "for I could not avoid it. I have sausages in my pocket, and that dog has been trying to grab them ever since I came upon the premises."

NERVOUSNESS AND ORATORY

According to tradition, despite the majestic self possession Lord Macauley truly ascribes to the tenor of his life, Mr. Pitt was nervous before rising to speak; hence, perhaps, his recourse to stimulants. A surgeon, eminent in Brighton, [illegible] boy in London, he used to bring to Mr Pitt the dose of laudanum and sal-volatile which the great statesman habitually took before speaking. The laudanum perhaps hurt his constitution more than the port wine which he drank by the bottle; the wine might be necessary to sustain the physical spirits lowered by the laudanum. Mr Pitt's own nervous [illegible] Lord Plunket. A distinguished member of the Whig party, now no more, and who was himself one of the most sensitive of men, and one of the most attractive of orators, told me that once in the House of Commons he had crossed over to speak to Mr Canning on some question of public business a little [illegible] remarkable speeches; on taking the hand of Mr Canning extended to him, he exclaimed, "I fear you are ill, your hand is so cold and damp." "Is it?" replied Canning, smiling; "so much the better: that shows how nervous I am; I shall speak well to-night." Mr. Stapylton remarks how perceptible to those familiar with Mr Canning was the difference in his aspect and manner before and after one of his great orations; and a very clever French writer upon the Art of Oratory compares the anguish ("anguisses") which oppresses the mind of a public speaker while burdened with the [illegible] utter, with the joyous elation of a spirit that fol[illegible]

As Exhibitor [illegible] what's the matter with my child's nose?" "Yes marm; it's probably irritation of the gastric mucous membrane communicating a sympathetic it[illegible]

"That, now; that's just what I told Becky!"

THE EMPEROR CONSTANTINE

[illegible] Constantine [illegible] Emperor of the Eastern [illegible] of the pomp and [illegible] and character of the first Christian [illegible]

Heroic as he fell at a broad shoulder, he was a [illegible] of the earth, earthy about [illegible] Rome. When Eusebius first saw him, as an ordinary man, on a journey through Palestine, his [illegible], all were struck by the stately bearing and vigor of his frame, and his person personally recurs to it and maintains that it existed to the end of his life. In his later days he [illegible] and somewhat blunted appearance gave [illegible] the bad of that he had been [illegible] with leprosy. His eye was remarkable for a brightness, almost a glare, which reminded his courtiers of that of a lion. He had a [illegible] habit of the wing back his head which, by bringing out the full proportions of his thick neck, presented for him the look-name of Torcholis. His voice was remarkable for its gentleness and softness. In dress and outward demeanor, the military commander was almost lost in the vanity and affectation of Oriental splendor. The spear of the ordrer was almost always in his hand, and on his head he always wore a small helmet. But the helmet was studded with jewels, and it was bound round with the Oriental diadem, which he, first of the Emperors, made a practice of wearing on all occasions. His robe was remarked for its unusual magnificence. It was always of the imperial purple or scarlet, and was most [illegible] with pearls and [illegible] Even the Emperors, since Hadrian, he wore a short beard.

He was not a great man, but he was by no means an ordinary man. Calculating and shrewd as he was, yet his worldly views were penetrated by a vein of religious sentiment, almost of Oriental superstition. He had a wide view of his difficult position as the ruler of a divided empire and divided church. He had a shrewdly humor which stamps his sayings with an unmistakable authenticity, and gives us an insight into the cynical contempt of mankind, which he is said to have combined, by a curious yet not uncommon union, with an inordinate love of praise. He had a presence of mind which was never thrown off its guard. He had the capacity of throwing himself with almost fanatical energy into whatever cause came before him for the moment. One instance, at least, he showed of consummate foresight and genius.

We have seen from his dress, and we see also from his language, that he was not without the wretched affectation which disfigured the demeanor of the later emperors. Against one great old Roman vice, that of voracious gluttony, he struggled but struggled in vain. The Christian accounts all speak of his continence—Julian alone insinuates the contrary. It was only as despotic power and Eastern manners made inroads into the original self-control of his character, that he was betrayed into that disregard of human life, in his nearest and dearest relationships, which, from the same causes, darkened the declining years of the Grecian Alexander and the English Henry.

THE CUP OF COLD WATER.

A young English woman was sent to France to be educated in a Huguenot school in Paris. A few evening before the fatal massacre of St. Bartholomew's day she and some of her young companions were taking a walk in some part of the town where there were sentinels placed on the walls. When a soldier is on guard he must not leave his post until he is relieved—that is, until another soldier comes to take his place. One of the soldiers, as the young ladies passed him, besought them to have the charity to bring him a little water, adding that he was very ill, and that it would be as much as his life was worth to go and fetch it himself. The ladies walked on, much offended at the man for presuming to speak to them, all but the young English woman, whose compassion was moved, and who, leaving her party, procurred some water and brought it to the soldier. He begged her to tell him her name and place of abode, and this she did. When she rejoined her companions, some blamed and others ridiculed her; but they soon had reason to lament that they had not been equally compassionate, for the grateful soldier contrived, on the night of the massacre to save this young English woman, while all the other inhabitants of the house she dwelt in were [illegible]

A DESOLATE HOME

A correspondent of Zion's Herald, writing from the Aroostook region in Northern Maine, says: "The past season diphtheria has raged here with fearful fatality. Many, many have fallen victims, and in one case, in an adjoining township, a whole family of seven children were swept away. An affecting incident is told of the last one, a bright little boy of seven years. He was bringing in wood for his mother, and he says, 'Mother, who would bring in wood for you if I should be sick and die?' you would have no one but Ivy then.' His mother clasped him in her arms, her emotions choking her utterance, and she could make no reply. Pretty soon he began to complain: 'I'm sick now, mother, and I shall die too, and they'll bury me beside my brother and sisters, and then you'll have no little boy.' Too true; in three days he was gone."

The Social, Civil, and Statistical Association of the Colored People of Pennsylvania open a subscription list to aid the freed men at Port Royal and other points where they may be located, and respectfully ask the co-operation of the colored citizens and others in this city, or elsewhere, in money or clothing.

Any amount of value received will be acknowledged, with the name of the donor, in the Recorder, where a constant record will be kept.

Subscriptions may be sent to Jacob C. White, at the office of the Lebanon Cemetery, 711 Lombard Street, and also to William Still, 107 North Fifth Street, and to Rev. E. Weaver, 619 Pine Street

PAID.

[illegible]	$[illegible]
Clayton Miller,	2 00
William Still,	5 00
Robert Adger,	2 00
Henry Minturn,	2 00
Catherine Johnson,	2 00
Vasti Locke,	2 00
Wm. Warricks,	[illegible]
Harriet Shorter,	1 00
Sarah S. Hawkins,	1 00
Rev. Jonathan C Gibbs,	1 00
James P. Clay,	1 00
Benjamin F. Hill,	2 00
S. M. S.,	2 00
Elizabeth Gordon,	1 00
F. J. Dreer,	5 00

It affords us pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of ten dollars, the proceeds of Miss Anna E. Dickinson's [illegible] contributed to the S. C. and Statistical Association, to be applied as intended. Wm. Still.

Cor. Sec. of S. C. and Statistical Association of the Colored People of Penna

Object of the War on the Part of the Rebels.—

The Louisville Courier, the accepted organ of John C. Breckinridge, [illegible] Henry Clay Green, then in Nashville, stated the case thus:

"This has been called a fratricidal war by some, by [illegible] slaves). We are not the brothers of both these [illegible] of the Yankees, and the slavery question is merely the pretext, not the cause, of the war. The true irrepressible conflict lies fundamentally in the hereditary hostility, the surest animosity, the eternal antagonism, between the two races engaged.

"The Norman cavalier cannot brook the vulgar familiarity of the Saxon Yankee, while the latter is continually devising some plan to bring down his aristocratic neighbor to his own debased level. Thus was the contest waged in the old United States. So long as Dickinson daughtrees were to be bought, and Cochrane cowards to be frightened, so long was the Union tolerable to Southern men; but when, owing to divisions in our ranks, the Yankee hirelings placed one of their own spawn over us, political connexion became self-respect.

"As our Norman friends in England, always a match for the Saxon, have carried on the [illegible] rummage up to the present day, so have we, 'the slave oligarchs,' governed the Yankees till within a twelvemonth. We framed the Constitution, for seventy year, moulded the policy of the Government, and placed our own men, or Northern men with Southern principles in power."

Cobden's Opinion of America.—In the recent [illegible] Cobden [illegible] of want of confidence in the Palmerston Ministry, Mr. Cobden took occasion to give his personal opinion respecting the great contest in which the United States are now engaged. He said

"I don't think the strength of a nation depends upon its armaments or even upon its resources, and I deny the statement of my right hon. friend that the resources, in order to maintain the power of your country upon the roll of the world, that you should always present yourselves in the attitude stated even. Look at what is now going on here and the war in America. We used to be told that America was utterly overmatched in her foreign power. [Hear, hear.] Very well, but bear in mind that America was not armed. She had but 14,000 or 15,000 soldiers, and she never would have a fleet. During the last ten years she has not had a line-of-battle ship. Can anyone seriously assert that on the rest of the world! The answer is, undoubtedly, because you gave her credit for having vast resources behind her, which were not necessarily displayed in a state of armed defiance. [Hear.] What has been the result of the present deplorable war in America? You have seen the country manifesting a power such as I have no hesitation in saying no nation of the same population ever manifested in the same time. [Hear, hear.] No country in Europe, possessing 20,000,000 of people, could show the resources in men, money, and equipments which the Confederate States of America have done during the last twelve months. Taking the whole country together, with a population of about 5,000,000, it has kept [illegible] men in arms, and has supported them on a greater army than was ever supported before. [Hear, hear. War was then? Simply because the Americans had not exhausted the resources previously by high taxation. [A laugh, and cheers.] They were a prosperous people. They wages and [illegible] were nothing [illegible] as much as [illegible] when the war broke out, they had but to restrict themselves to half of their usual enjoyments in order to find means for carrying on hostilities. [Hear, hear.]

Married.

BY REV. J. P. CAMPBELL.

June 12th, 1862, Mr. James Hamilton to Miss Mary Ann Curtis, both of this city.

June 26th, 1862, Mr. Littleton Armstrong to Miss Ann Elizabeth Oliver, both of this city.

Philadelphia, June 30th, 1862.

June 19, 1862, by Rev. H. J. Rhodes, Mr. Alfred Day to Miss Maria Bell, both of Georgetown, District of Columbia.

June 26th, 1862, Mr. Henry R. Edmondson to Miss Mary Thomas, both of Georgetown, D. C., the marriage ceremony being performed by Rev. H. J. Rhodes.

This couple were married in the church—being the first persons that were ever married in the Bethel Church, of Georgetown, D. C. There was a very large audience present. There was a breathless silence [illegible] during the performance of the ceremony. [illegible] they proceeded to the house, where everything was agreeable to the occasion was served up in the very best of style.

BOARDING

IN BROOKLYN.

MRS. S. PLANT (formerly Richardson) respectfully announces that she has opened a first-class BOARDING & LODGING HOUSE at No. 37 HICKS STREET, Brooklyn—where she is prepared to accommodate the public on the most reasonable terms.

Her house being located in a very pleasant part of the city, and within five minutes' walk of Fulton Ferry, is made [illegible] a very desirable and [illegible]

BOARDING

Mrs. AMIA WILLIAM, of Cape May, will open the Bunker House for the season, for the accommodation of all who wish to spend the season there, and I also will spare no pains to make all comfortable. Those wishing to spend one week or three days, will find the Bunker House the right spot. Prices very reasonable. [illegible]

PERRY & FITZGERALD'S

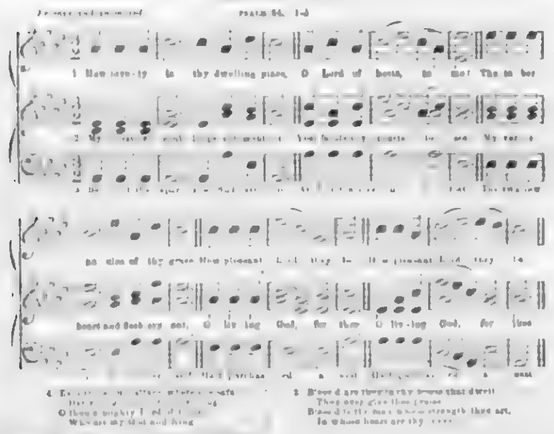
PROCESS FOR MAKING LIGHT, NUTRITIOUS, AND UNADULTERATED BREAD, WITHOUT FERMENTATION.

The new process of bread-making, patented by Perry & Fitzgerald, removes all the obstacles which have hitherto rendered it impossible to manufacture perfect, pure sweet and wholesome bread. The entire process is performed by mechanical means, and is eminently cleanly.

The persons employed in mixing the flour in a closed vessel, and the application of pure carbonic gas, under pressure, by which the dough mass is made thoroughly light, and ready to be discharged into pans, for baking, in the brief space of fifteen or twenty minutes. The "charge" is usually 300 pounds, and each machine requires but two operatives, in all its details, from the putting in of the flour to the discharging of the dough, in from twenty-five to forty minutes.

The [illegible] Perry & Fitzgerald differs in principle in the preparation of bread, by establishing a system of wholesale manufacture not subject to the [illegible] and evils [illegible] but exact and certain in its results:—1. Because, by the substitution of mechanical for manual labor, and in the superior cleanliness of the article produced, it promises large profits upon the capital employed. 2. Because such employment of capital, as well as the production, in all its details, from the putting in of the flour to the discharging of the dough, is

CHOPIN. C. M.



THE HIGHLAND SOLDIER.

A great many years ago there were bloody wars in Scotland, a mountainous country far away over the sea. The inhabitants of that country were sorely oppressed by cruel enemies. They were persecuted because they were Christians. Many brave men left their loved wives and children at home, and went away to the war.

And what dear homes they had! Nestled among the mountains were their quaint little cottages so beautiful and so quiet, within whose walls, every morning and evening, arose the sweet melody of Psalms, and the voice of thanksgiving and prayer. But war makes sorrow and trouble. It calls away, (and often never to return any more,) fathers, sons and brothers well beloved. It was so in Scotland.

In the picture you see an old soldier, just returned from the war. Long marches, rough and scanty food, hard pillows and fierce battles, have made him stiff and lame. Once he was young, and strong, and handsome. But see him now. How old and sad he looks! I like that honest Scotch face still. Beneath his tattered old vest there beats a faithful heart. God bless the old soldier! That funny-looking cap rests on a patriot's head. That clumsy staff supports the right hand of a true veteran. And see how the young Highlanders love the old soldier. They are giving him bread to eat for he is hungry,—and they give him smiles, for he is sad. Look at that wee Scotchman with the plaid surtout. Bless his little heart—he wants to share the joy of giving with his kind sisters.

THE EAGLE.

Our readers have always looked upon the eagle as an emblem of strength and power. It is the representative of our own great land. It is a very powerful bird, and builds its nest in places which are difficult to reach. Job says, "She dwelleth and abideth on the rock, upon the crag of the rock, and the strong place."

Eagles are often mentioned in the Scriptures. We want our little readers to find out as many places in the Bible as they can where the eagle is mentioned.

Eagles are sometimes caught and caged. There was once a very large eagle which had been kept in a cage for many years. The owner at length concluded to give him his liberty. At the appointed time a number of persons assembled to see him take his flight. The door of the cage was opened, and the noble bird stepped to the threshhold, and after deliberately looking round on those standing there, he spread his wings, made two or three circles over their heads, darted towards the sun, and was soon lost to sight in the distance.

The time will come, dear reader, when your soul will leave the body in which it is caged; and perhaps some of your friends will stand around to see it take its flight. We pray that God would grant that you, like the captive eagle, after taking a parting look at those around your bedside, may ascend heavenward, and stop not in your flight till you reach the throne of God.

THE BATTLE AND THE VICTORY.

Near Richmond, Va.

DEAR CHILDREN:—In time of war, every day brings its trials and horrors; its joys and sorrows; hopes and fears. I am now going to tell you of a battle in which my regiment took part. The division to which our regiment belongs was landed from transports in the rear of the enemy, when they fled from Yorktown. We were put ashore at night, and formed in line of battle, every man resting on his trusty rifle, with our pickets thrown out to guard against surprise. It was a beautiful night; the stars of heaven shone brightly down on our little army, whilst the crescent-shaped moon glided through the vault of heaven, attracting the eye of many a soldier, as he lay on the hard ground, perhaps thinking of home and dear ones. At early dawn our pickets and those of the enemy commenced to fire promiscuously. Several regiments were ordered up to support our pickets. Soon the firing became general along the line, and many a poor soldier fell to rise no more. Now, the musketry to the right, left, and centre, poured in their terrible volleys. Our little army advanced into a thick wood, and here the fight raged for a long time. The soldiers of the Union shed their blood freely around the stars and stripes, and never did the old flag fall; ere it touched the ground, ready hands and brave hearts, amidst smoke, flame and fire, raised it in as bright a glory and majesty as it ever shone on former fields. The dead now lay in all positions, whilst our soldiers pressed on, with clarion voices shouting, mingled with the roar of battle, the Union forever. Overwhelming numbers of the enemy now poured in on all sides, and our men fell back to the open field; now our cannon, which had not as yet been in service, belched forth deadly fire, spreading death over every foot of ground. Again the Union soldiers press forward with determined countenances, whilst bursting shell and deadly missile deal death around. On every hand a new graveyard is formed, and still our flag, though torn, floats with increased splendor in the warm May sun. The word is given, "Charge!" On, with bayonets fixed and iron nerve, our soldiers rush with renewed shouts for the Union. The rebels cannot meet the steady tramp and steel of our men: they waver: they stagger backwards, and now retreat in disorder, whilst wild shouts of triumph go up from Union victors.

Dear children, I must stop; I cannot relate to you the scenes now witnessed; nor do I wish to tell of the sufferings of the dying and wounded; I have no desire to dwell upon battle's havoc, and the mutilation which war's engines, with ball and powder, make upon man. May God keep his arms around you, and cause you to never have occasion to engage in war. I could do nothing but cast myself upon His care. He alone could protect amidst exploding shell and flying shot. I thought of the past and the future. I was a sinner, and merited not God's favor. Such were my thoughts for an instant as the war went on. When we are in danger, how quick the conscience smites for deeds of the past. The sins of a lifetime crowd themselves into a single thought. Will God protect in the conflict? Will he pardon if I fall? Our Bible says, "The Lord your God ye shall fear, and he shall deliver you out of the hand of all your enemies." "Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by night, nor for the arrow that flieth by day." O, how consoling such passages to the Christian soldier!

My young friends, let us all be mindful of our earthly decay. Victory was ours; but in the great, last battle between our souls and Satan, will we be conquerors? Will we exult over the flight of Satan's army, in the day when "the earth shall melt with fervent heat, and the heavens be rolled together as a scroll?" Let us reflect on these serious questions, and ask God for help to fight our worst enemy—Satan. Pray that our heavenly Father will pour oil upon the troubled waters, and restore peace, and make us once more a united people.

Truly yours, SOLDIER.

THE WOODPECKER'S MOUTH.

Just look at Mr. Woodpecker on that old tree, at his morning meal. He has been going tap, tap, tap, for some time, and he has at last got at the poor worm, and his long tongue is out drawing the worm into his mouth.

Is it not a curious thing to see how many different kinds of mouths there are, each adapted to a different kind of food, the different ways of taking it, and the different places where it is found?

The human mouth has a good set of tools for biting and chewing, while the hands wait upon it. But we were going to talk about the woodpecker's mouth. The woodpecker has not only to find the food, but work pretty hard for it. It feeds upon the worms and insects which lie in the hollows and under the bark of old trees, and they have to be taken out some way or other. For this purpose it has a long, sharp, hard bill, and with this it chisels and taps. Perhaps it was busy at work getting its breakfast, when the poet was out for his morning walk, and heard it, and wrote the song, which has made it famous ever since. He works till a hole is deep enough to reach the poor worm, when out darts the long, sharp tongue, set with teeth like a saw, only running back like the barb of a fish-hook. Poor worm can't escape. He is made a meal of. We might tell you a great deal about other mouths, but will defer that till another time. You might study the mouths of insects, animals, and birds, and as you do, you will see their wonderful adaptation to obtaining the kind of food on which they live. These different kinds of mouths did not make themselves—did not happen so. No one could seriously suppose they came by chance. Ah, no. As you study them, you will see that they must have been contrived by a great and intelligent mind. None but God could have formed so many different mouths.

"The woodpecker taps the hollow beech-tree,"

FOR A LITTLE ONE

Choose, little one, the better part,
To Jesus early give thy heart;
Thy little prayers he hears
Sit at his feet, then, little pet,
And pretty Scripture lessons get
In childhood's happy years

The story of the cross there told,
The Holy Spirit will unfold
To such a one as thee
The Lamb of God was crucified
Believe on him; for thee he died:
Come, little one, and see!

M

THE TEACHER IN HIS CLOSET

"Enter into thy closet," are the words of our Saviour, addressed to every one. The thoughts suggested by these words are precious indeed. "Enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut the door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." O, blessed promise! O, brother, sister, Christian fellow-laborer, whoever thou art that readest these words, take courage; let not thine heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid. Thy Father seeth thee—he watcheth to receive thy prayer. O, ask of him and he will give thee understanding. Be not discouraged because thou laborest much and seest no fruit. Be encouraged; it is God's work, and in due time thou shalt reap if thou faint not. Hast thou entered into thy closet and prayed to the Lord of the harvest to bless the seed thou hast sown? If not, then how canst thou expect to see the seed spring up and bear fruit? If you expect success in your labor, you must pray to your Father in heaven earnestly, fervently for success; for if you go to him believing that you will receive, then, most assuredly, he will reward your labors with abundant success. Then be encouraged, dear teacher, for in due time you shall reap if you faint not. May the great Teacher enable you to be faithful to the end. JENNIE.

DR. CHALMERS' EARLY TASTE FOR READING.

Young Tom soon acquired the ability to read, which, unlike many young people everywhere, he soon turned to very good account in gaining useful knowledge. Among the books which he earliest read, the Pilgrim's Progress took a strong hold upon his thoughts. It filled his childish imagination. He has himself told us of other impressions which were indelibly made on his mind in his childhood days. Writing more than forty years afterwards, he says:—"I feel quite sure that the use of the sacred dialogues as a school-book, and the pictures of Scripture scenes which interested my boyhood, still cleave to me, and impart a peculiar tinge and charm to the same representations when brought within my notice." Even before he could himself read its stories, or understand thoroughly any of its pictured scenes, some of the sayings of the Bible had charmed his infant ear. He was but three years old when one evening, after it had grown dark, he was missed and sought for. He was found alone in the nursery, pacing up and down, excited and absorbed, repeating to himself, as he walked to and fro, the words of David:—"O my son Absalom! O Absalom, my son, my son!"

W. S. S.

LETTER FROM UNCLE JEREMY.

Sober Cottage, June, 1862.

MY DEAR LITTLE FRIENDS:—You and I have been corresponding a good while, and have never yet said any thing about this war which we are having in the United States. I never once think of any of you having any sympathy with the rebels, and perhaps you have the same opinion of me. Still, that there may be no possibility of our misunderstanding each other, let us exchange sentiments on the subject. Your Uncle Jeremy is naturally of a very peaceable disposition, yet is fully persuaded that it is right to fight in self-defence. He is too old now to go to war. He could not keep his seat on a saddle if he were to join the cavalry, neither could he endure the fatigue of a march on foot. Indeed, he would be at the mercy of the enemy, were he to attack him in almost any position. If the rebel army were to come over by Sober Cottage, I have no doubt they would destroy the trees, lay waste the grounds, and even mercilessly take away the life of its inoffensive occupant. Do not you all think those Southerners will have an awful account to render for their deeds of violence and of blood? How many men, as old as I, have been ruthlessly murdered, or driven from their pleasant homes to spend their few remaining days in uneasy wandering? How many mothers weep for their sons who have fallen on battle-fields, or died of disease in camp? Perhaps some of you can think of young men who have gone from your Sabbath-Schools and Bible classes to fight for their country, who have died, pierced by the rebel's steel.

Some of you may even mourn the loss of brothers or of fathers. Though I cannot fight, I can pray, and this I do with all my heart. I pray the God of battles to give success to the armies of the North. We can all do this much, and if we pray aright, our prayers will avail much. You recollect how Moses once controlled the battle in the plain, by standing on the mount in prayer. So let us pray that we may overthrow the wicked rebels who would destroy our government, and eventually wrest from us our liberties. And let us have faith to believe that we shall prevail, and that the time will come when traitors will only be known in our country by history, or by the tombstone bearing the inscription, "This man died a traitor to his country." Yours, &c.,

UNCLE JEREMY.

READING THE TESTAMENT THROUGH.

From a private letter we learn that our young soldier, who writes for the readers of the YOUTH'S EVANGELIST, has read the Testament through since he has been in the army, and has commenced to read it over again. He reads a chapter every day. He always carries his little Testament and Psalm book in the breast pocket of his coat. No matter how fatiguing the march, when they halt for the night, he brings out his Testament and reads his chapter.

How many of our little friends read their Testament daily? We hope most of you do so; for in it you will get that instruction which will make you wise unto salvation; and that is the best of knowledge.

Sins go not alone, but follow one another as the links of a chain do.

THE BOTTLETIT'S NEST.

See what a snug little house this pair of bottletits have made for themselves on that prickly holly-tree. What a vast amount of labor they have performed to make for themselves a comfortable home in which to spend the summer. We should learn a lesson from seeing how these birds provide for themselves. We should be industrious and careful, so as to be a help to those around us in making comfortable homes for ourselves. But, above all, we should be trying to obtain a home in heaven, when we will be done with earth; a building not made with hands, but an eternal one, where we will abide forever with God.

KIND LITTLE CHILDREN.

BY E. J. E. CRAWFORD.

I saw a pleasant sight one day,
Two little children left their play,
And ran with eager feet
To guide a blind man on his way
Along the village street.

The children's names I do not know;
But, oh! their kindness sent a glow
Of gladness through my breast:
For 'tis a pleasant thing to see
The hand of mutual infancy
Assisting the distress'd

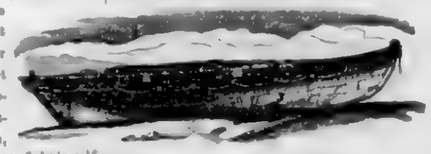
And then I thought that holy eyes
Looked on them from the bending skies
To note the deed of love
And when with cheerful steps they ran
To lend the poor old sightless man,
They blessed their Friend above.

That kind deed was not hard to do,
And, children, every one of you
May do some act as kind;
In almost every hour you live,
Although you can but seldom give
Help to the lame or blind.

If "mother" calls you from your play,
You can with cheerfulness obey,
And haste to do her will:
And if the baby claims your care,
With willing heart and cheerful air,
You can your part fulfil.

It cheers a parent's heart to see
A child obeying cheerfully,
With willing heart and mind:
And God himself doth graciously
Regard the child who strives to be
Obedient and kind.

RELIGION never takes care of itself. It must be fed, nourished, defended. It is line upon line, and precept upon precept, here a little and there a little; it is education, in the adult, in the middle-aged, and in the youth.



"THE FAITH."

Some time ago we called at the store of Mr. Childs, the publisher of Dr. Kane's Arctic Explorations, and there we saw the little boat called "The Faith," a cut of which we herewith give, and in which Dr. Kane and his companions made their escape from their icy prison-house in the frozen regions of the North. At some other time we may tell our readers something about Dr Kane's expeditions to the Arctic seas in search of Sir John Franklin, about his adventures there, his narrow escapes, and wonderful deliverance.

What we want to do now is to tell you what faith is. Dr. Kane had faith that some of the imprisoned band would return to their homes, though he could not see the means by which they were to get to them. Faith is not such a common word as honesty, kindness, friendship, or courage, the meaning of which we know. It is a word which has a good deal to do with religion. It is to believe.

Two little girls were once taking tea at a lady's house. On the table was a plate of fruit-cake. Ellen, when asked to take a piece, looked at it as if she would like to, but declined. "Do, Ellen, take a piece," said the lady. "No, I thank you," was Ellen's reply. "O, do Ellen, Aunt Kate made it; it is so nice," said the lady's little daughter. "No, I cannot," Ellen answered, "my mother told me not to eat any cake, she said it would hurt me."

Now, this was faith in what her mother said. There was the nice cake before her eyes; the others ate of it, and she wanted a piece very much; her mother was not there, and might never know she had eaten it; and the consequences after eating it, that she would be sick, might not follow. But though the temptation was strong, Ellen believed, and obeyed her mother. Faith is that which makes what we do not see have more influence over us than what we do see. The Bible calls it "the evidence of things not seen."

God is holy, wise, good and powerful. We have all sinned against him. He will punish us unless we flee to Jesus. This he tells us in his holy Bible. The Bible says, He sent Jesus into the world, "that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life." Is the Saviour willing to receive those who flee to him? O, yes. He says, "Come unto me;" "ask, and ye shall receive; seek, and ye shall find." Faith takes Christ at his word, and goes to him for a disposition to do right and love God. Let us all ask faith, believing, and we shall receive.

A mother's love may prove a snare
The child she loves so well
Her hand may lead, with gentlest care,
Down the steep road to hell.

OUR MOTHER'S LOVE

What a thrill of joy runs through us as we think on these three little words! Our mother's love! How noble! How self-sacrificing is that love! How unceasing were her efforts on our behalf, when we were young and helpless! How unwearyingly she labored to guide our young feet aright! What privations will she not endure; what perils will she not encounter for the sake of her loved ones! It was our mother who watched over us from our earliest infancy with untiring devotion; who tends us when we are sick; whose gentle hand smooths our pillow, and wipes the sweat of pain from our brow; whose loving arms are twined around us as she bids us nestle close to her breast. And, oh, how fervently she prays to God to guide our footsteps aright, to watch over us and keep us from sin, so that when we die we may meet her in that land where parting never comes. O, yes, sorrow may come upon us, friends may forsake us, enemies may take advantage of our misfortunes, but our mother will never forsake us. Her words will encourage us to brave the rude and bitter taunts of the world.

Children, love your mother; for never in this world can you find one who will love you so much as she does. Love her next to your Saviour, for next to him, she has done most for you.

THE LITTLE NEWS BOY.

I am afraid many of you, my dear children, have witnessed the sad and painful sight of boys fighting in the streets. A lady, in one of her daily walks, not long ago, came upon a scene of this kind. Two little news boys were fighting in the centre of the crowd of wicked boys we always see collected on such occasions. Her heart ached as blow after blow was exchanged between them. And words which should never fall from boyish lips shocked her ears. But she was not the person to stand long without making an effort to end this disgraceful scene; and calling to her aid a gentleman who was passing, the boys were soon separated, and the crowd scattered. All were gone but one of the fighting boys. Ragged, bruised, and bleeding he stood before her.

"I am sorry, my boy, to see you in such a condition," she said. "Do you not know that it is very wicked to fight? God never gave you those hands to bruise and blacken the faces of your companions! What was it all about?"

The boy did not answer. He stood the picture of sullen indifference.

"Are you not afraid you have hurt that other boy very much? You might have killed him."

"Don't care if I had. Wish I had him here, I'd give it to him worse than I did before. He got me a beating last week," was the answer; and a heavy scowl of hatred darkened the young face as he clinched his fists.

"O, I am sorry to hear you speak in this way," said the lady. "God has told us to forgive our enemies. As we forgive those who use us badly, so will he forgive us our many sins. Have you ever heard this before?"

"Yes, in Sunday" School, when I used to go there. But I hate Tom; I could half kill him."

"Do you know the Lord's Prayer, my boy?"

"Yes," was the sullen reply; "but I never say it."

"Repeat it to-night before you lie down. But before you do so, forgive Tom, and then you can say forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. Will you do this?"

The boy looked down in obstinate silence. But the lady would have an answer, and she asked again, "Will you do this?"

"I hate Tom!" he growled out.

"My boy," said the lady, taking one of the soiled hands in hers, "have you a mother?"

"No, miss;" the voice was a tone lower; "she is dead."

"Do you ever expect to meet your mother again?"

"Yes, in heaven, if I ever get there," was the reply; and a heavy tear-drop fell upon the soft white hand which folded over his own.

The face was changed now. The old hard look was gone, and a yearning wistful sadness had taken its place.

"You know, my boy, you can never get there while your heart is filled with hatred and revenge," said the lady.

"I will forgive Tom, miss. If he was here I'd shake hands with him."

"That's my own good boy," said the lady, joyously. And before they separated she had won from him the promise to come to the Sabbath School once more.

This little incident happened five or six months ago, and now there is not a more punctual boy in the school. Every Sabbath he watches for his kind friend, and she rarely misses his bright smile as she enters her class. RENA.

KIND WORDS.

Kind words are the diamonds and pearls of every-day life. We may not be rich, but we can speak kind words to the suffering and weary. Kind words are doubly precious when they lead us to the "Pearl of great price," the Saviour. Let us speak kindly to all we meet, so that all who come within reach of our influence may be happier for our presence. Let us speak kindly to young and old, and thus scatter the bright gems of love and sympathy along the pathway of all we meet.

THE ICELANDERS

The Bible is the companion of the Icelander's lamp; and, indeed, Iceland illustrates how much the Bible possesses the power to make life tolerable, and even charming, in the most adverse, not to say even wretched circumstances. It is not often till near midnight that the sacred readings begin. They read the Psalms, they sing, the whole family joining in devotions. So the morning devotions are performed by the lamp. When the Icelander awakes, he salutes no person until he has saluted God. He usually hastens to the door, adores there the Author of his being, then steps to the house, and says to his family: "God grant you a good day!"

COMING HOME

BY FRANCE CARY.

O, brothers and sisters growing old,
Do you all remember yet
That home, in the shade of rustling trees,
Where once our household met.

Do you know how we used to come from school,
Through the summer's pleasant heat;
With the yellow fennel's golden dust
On our tired little feet?

And how sometimes in an idle mood
We loitered by the way;
And stopped in the woods to gather flowers,
And in the fields to play;

Till warned by the deepening shadow's fall,
That told of the coming night,
We climbed to the top of the last, long hill,
And saw our home in sight?

And brothers and sisters, older now
Than she whose life is o'er,
Do you think of the mother's loving face
That looked from the open door?

Alas! for the changing things of time;
That home in the dust is low;
And that loving smile was hid from us,
In the darkness, long ago!

And we have come to life's last hill,
From which our weary eyes
Can almost look on that home that shines
Eternal in the skies.

So, brothers and sisters, as we go,
Still let us move as one.
Always together keeping step,
Till the march of life is done;

For that mother who waited for us here,
Wearing a smile so sweet
Now waits on the hills of Paradise
For her children's coming feet!

ALLIGATOR STORIES.

We have as yet seen no traces of alligators, though in the Madalam branch they are said to abound, and last spring I saw a very large one; it was a disgusting looking object, a great fat slimy looking thing—a tail stuck on a hogshead. They are not, however, dreaded, as they can obtain a very plentiful supply of food from the pigs, which constantly swim from bank to bank. Otherwise, it would be unpleasant to have to steer a boat, as the man devouring reptile strikes his victim from the stern, with a blow of his tail. This happened to an unfortunate Malay in the Siol branch of the Sarawak, who was pulling up that river, with his wife in a small canoe. The death of this man drew attention to the monster alligator I have previously referred to, and Mr. Crookshank and Sadam, a very courageous Malay, went down to place a bait on the banks of the Siol. When this was done, they pulled back, Mr. Crookshank steering. They had seen nothing of their enemy, so that Sadam jumped up, and flourishing his spear, began in a loud voice to defy the alligator, using very insulting terms. Suddenly he dropped his weapon, and seizing his paddle, began pulling away with might and main, for the animal had just risen to the surface of the water, not twenty yards from the boat. Though the steersman's position was by no means an agreeable one, Mr. Crookshank could not help laughing at the change of countenance of his companion, who excused himself by saying, it was the suddenness of his challenge being accepted, that made him pull away in an excited manner. "But now," he added, rising up his feet, "let him show himself again, and I will not attempt to run." He had scarcely uttered the words; when the alligator, which was accustomed to follow boats, again rose to the surface. There was no more boasting, but a frantic attempt to get out of the Siol branch. The alligator took the bait, but got rid of the long rattan fastened to it, by accidentally or purposely winding it round a tree, then breaking it off. However, though his body was not secured, it was most probable he died from the lacerations of the stomach, caused by his endeavours to break the rattan, as I have not heard of his being seen since. It was up the Siol branch that a place was found where the body of one of his victims appeared to have been beaten, to break the bones, previously to swallowing. The Malays say the alligators do it by repeated blows of their ponderous head: in fact, one of the large teeth of the reptile was found snapped off on the above mentioned spot. As I have told the story of Sadam's alarm, at the sudden appearance of the alligator, I ought, in justice to him, to mention an occurrence that took place last year. He and his brother Dand were wandering near Tanjong Po, a rocky point near the entrance of the Sarawak river, when they came to a cave; hearing some movement inside, they entered, and saw two huge alligators at the further end. Knowing that these ferocious reptiles are not very active, except on soft mud, or in the water, they determined to attack them. They were armed with spears and swords, and entering the cave, Sadam approached the first beast, and actively springing clear to avoid its rush, drove his spear into the soft hide, and, with his brother's aid, soon severed the head from its body. Encouraged by their success, they advanced to attack the second, which was vainly endeavouring to escape over the broken rocks, and soon succeeded in destroying it.

I was conversing one day with a French priest, who had resided many years in Siam, and he told me he had seen men there catch the alligator in the following manner:—In the upper Menam, where the river is broad and shallow, but with deep pools occasionally, the alligators are both numerous and fierce; yet the inhabitants, who are very fond of eating the flesh, pursue them with great courage and skill. Six or seven men proceed to a pool where one of these reptiles is supposed to lurk, and with long poles, sound every portion of it; if an animal be there, he is soon disturbed, and driven towards the shallower part of the river, even to the sand-banks, where expert men throw their lassoes round his feet and tail. When they think him somewhat exhausted, a bold hunter, springing on the alligator's back, places his hands over the creature's eyes, which then always remains quiet. A noose is quickly slipped over his head, and the animal hauled ashore. Alligators lay their eggs in the jungle. I remember hearing the late Mr. Brereton tell the following story: He was one day hunting in the jungle near the Saharang fort, when his dogs gave tongue. He followed up quickly, and found they had disturbed a female alligator laying her eggs. Directly she saw him, she gave chase, and he had some difficulty in getting away from her, though the dogs distracted her attention. Alligators very seldom attack boats, but a case occurred in the Sambas river, where a man was dragged out of a large prahu from among twenty of his companions. My own party was never in danger from them but once, when a large alligator rose within three feet of the boat; but before he could do any thing, I had put a rifle-ball into his side, as I happened at that moment to be looking out for a shot at them on the mud banks.—Life in the Forests of the Far East. By Spencer St. John, F. R. G. S., F. E. S.

HOURS OF STUDY.

Much attention is being paid, and very justly too, to the subject of education. One vital question which is undergoing examination relates to the power of attention. While attention can be kept up, the pupil will learn; but when there is no attention on the part of the pupil, the teacher's labors are all in vain. He may as well cease his efforts the moment that attention flags.

Now, how long can attention be given? There is a limit to human powers—to the powers of the mind, as well as to those of the body. Directors and teachers of schools, as well as professors in colleges, should know what that limit is. Its average may be discovered; and every educator has an interest in finding the boundary. To help our readers in their investigation, we here present, from the Scientific American, two extracts from a pamphlet of E. Chadwick, Esq., C. B., England, which was published pursuant to an address of the House of Lords. Mr. Chadwick, speaking of the hours of study, says:—

"Struck by the frightful disproportion between the powers of childish attention and the length of school hours, he has directed questions to many distinguished teachers. Mr. Donaldson, head master of the Training College of Glasgow, states that the limits of voluntary and intelligent attention are, with children of from five to seven years of age, about fifteen minutes; from seven to ten years of age, about twenty minutes; from ten to twelve years of age, about twenty-five minutes; from twelve to sixteen or eighteen years of age, about thirty minutes;" and continues, "I have repeatedly obtained a bright voluntary attention from each of these classes, for five or ten, or fifteen minutes more; but I observed it was always at the expense of the succeeding lesson."

The Rev. J. A. Morrison, Rector of the same College, speaking on the same subject, says:—

"I will undertake to teach one hundred children, in three hours a day, as much as they can by possibility receive; and I hold it to be an axiom in education, that no lesson has been given until it has been received; no more, therefore, as the receiving power of the children is exhausted, anything given is useless; nay, injurious, inasmuch as you thereby weaken instead of strengthen the receiving power. This ought to be a first principle in education. I doubt it is seldom acted on."

These remarks state the average of capability. Some children greatly excel others in the power of attention. Some subjects also exercise the mind far more intensely than others, and hence produce weariness much sooner.

The subject commends itself not only to teachers of children. Those who have the care of young men should also give it their serious consideration. And voluntary students—men full grown, and men in advancing life—are deeply interested. The hours of study are often too much protracted. Attainments are thereby curtailed, pleasure is diminished, and the bodily health suffers. Few men can safely prolong intent application beyond an hour. Some should take a respite in less than half that period. A short walk in the open air, or a few minutes' promenade in the hall or the study, should be the means of very frequent relaxation with every deep thinker.—Presbyterian Banner.

A PARAGRAPH FOR LADIES.

Most of our fair readers have a decided aversion to that part of their duty which falls under the "patching and darning" denomination. They are of opinion that "a rent may be the accident of a day, a darn premeditated poverty." But if they only knew how pretty a well-executed piece of repair looks, when you see in its warp and woof the bright threads of economy, and independence, and womanly thrift, crossing and re-crossing one another, they would lay aside embroideries and crochet-work, and take up, instead, the mending-basket. We rode down town the other day, when the only other occupants of the stage were a young gentleman and a lovely girl of, we should think, about eighteen. She was the prettiest, freshest-looking girl one would want to see—there were no tell-tale traces of midnight parties and headachy mornings in those peach-blossom cheeks and clear, bright eyes; and all the numberless little items of her dress were as fresh and trim as she herself—from the pink bonnet-strings down to the neatly-fitting gloves and delicate gaiter boots. If we had been an old bachelor, or a young one either, we would certainly have fallen in love with that girl, particularly after we had discovered that she was as industrious as pretty. And how do you suppose we found it out? The handkerchief that lay in her lap told us so. The neat little darn, elaborately executed, in its corner, with the small, white stitches and skilful handiwork, had a tongue quite audible to our ears. Time, and patience, and wise economy had been there. The gentleman sitting opposite saw the little token also; we noticed his eye turning from the handkerchief to the blooming face, and back to the handkerchief again, and we know perfectly well what he was thinking of—the good wife that young lady would make, and how neat her husband's cravats and stockings would be! Poor fellow, the edges of his shirt-bosom were a little frayed, and one or two buttons were missing, whose detection the most skillful arrangement of his cravat-ends could not conceal. Perhaps he had a wife who didn't believe in mending and darning—perhaps he had none at all. However that may have been, his admiring eyes appreciated the darn on the handkerchief more than if it had been the richest and most sight-destroying embroidery—not for what it was, but what it betokened. Girls! don't shrink from a mended place as if it were a plague-spot; the longer your old things last, the better able you will be to have new ones by and by. Sensible people read your character in little things; and nobody will think the worse of you, whatever may be your station in life, for the exercise of economy and thrift. A stitch in time saves nine, and sometimes it saves a great deal more than that.—English paper.

HOME AFTER BUSINESS HOURS.

The road along which the man of business travels in pursuit of competence or wealth, is not a macadamized one, nor does it ordinarily lead through pleasant scenes and well-springs of delight. On the contrary, it is a rough and rugged path, beset with "wait a bit" thorns, and full of pit-falls, which can only be avoided by the exercise of watchful care and circumspection. After each day's journey over this worse than corduroy turnpike, the wayfarer needs something more than rest. He requires solace, and deserves it. He is weary of the dull prose of life, and athirst for the poetry. Happy is the business man who can find that solace and that poetry at home. Warm greetings from the loving heart; fond glances from bright eyes that

"Mark our coming,
And look brighter when we come;"

the welcome shouts of children; the thousand little arrangements for our comfort and enjoyment that silently tell of thoughtful and expectant love; the gentle ministrations that disencumber us into an old and easy seat before we are aware of it—these and like tokens of affection and sympathy constitute the poetry which reconciles us to the prose of life. Think of this, ye wives and daughters of business men. Think of the toils, the anxieties, the mortifications and wear that fathers undergo to secure for you comfortable homes, and compensate them for their trial by making them happy by their own fireside.

A HINT TO HOUSEKEEPERS—THE MAGIC BOX.

The housekeeper's affairs had a long time been becoming very much entangled, and the poor woman knew not how to get herself out of her difficulties. After a time, she thought herself of a wise old hermit, who lived in the neighborhood, and to him she repaired for advice. She related to him all her troubles, saying: "Things go on badly enough; nothing prospers indoors or out: pray, sir, can you not devise some remedy for my misfortune?"

The hermit—a shrewd, rosy old man—begged her to wait; and retiring to an inner chamber of his cell, brought out a curious-looking box, carefully sealed up.

"Take this," said he, "and keep it for one year; but you must three times a day and three times at night carry it into the kitchen, the cellar and the stable, and set it down in each corner. I answer for it that shortly you will find things improved. But be sure, at the end of the year, to bring back the box."

The good woman received the precious gift with many thanks, and bore it carefully home. The next day, as she was carrying it into the cellar, she met a servant who had been secretly drawing a pitcher of beer. As she went a little later into the kitchen, there she found a maid making herself a sly supper of omelets. In the stable she discovered the best cow standing deep in the mire, and the horse, uncurried, had hay instead of oats.

So every day she discovered and corrected some new faults.

At the end of the year, she, faithful to her promise, carried the magic box back to the hermit, and besought him to let her keep it, as it had a most wonderful effect.

"Only let me keep it one year longer, and I am sure all will be remedied."

"I cannot allow you to keep the box, but the secret that is hidden within you shall have."

He opened the box, and lo! it contained nothing but a slip of paper, on which was written this couplet:

"Would you thrive most prosperously, Yourself must every corner see."

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Published by the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, for the Dissemination of Religion, Morality, Literature and Science.

Rev. Elisha Weaver, Editor. PHILADELPHIA, JULY 12, 1862. Vol. II.—No. 28.—New Series.—Whole No. 79.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

is published every Saturday in behalf of the

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,

BY

REV. ELISHA WEAVER,

General Book Steward,

No 619 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

Notice.—All letters and matters pertaining to the Book Concern or the paper, must be directed to Rev. Elisha Weaver, No 619 Pine St., Philadelphia, and all matters sent by express, and in our city, must be directed to E. Weaver, No 619 Pine St.

All articles or matter for the Christian Recorder, must be directed to E Weaver, Box No 620, Philadelphia.

TERMS

Two Dollars a year, payable in advance. Single copies, five cents

ADVERTISEMENTS.

We solicit Advertisements of all descriptions, suitable for a religious newspaper, which will be published as follows:—

Cards or Advertisements, inserted for one year, provided they do not exceed eight lines, ten dollars, paper included; or, eight dollars without the paper,—six months, for six dollars, paper included,—three months, four dollars,—one month, $1.50, paper in each case included.

CORRESPONDING EDITORS OF CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Rev. J. P. CAMPBELL, Rev. A. W. WAYMAN,
" J. M. WILLIAMS, " B. T. WILLIAMS,
" G. H. GRAHAM, " C. BURCH,
Rev L. ROSS.

Poetry.

I SHALL BE SATISFIED.

Not here! not here! not where the sparkling waters
Fade into mocking sands as we draw near;
Where in the wilderness each footstep falters—
I shall be satisfied—but O! not here.

Not here! where every dream of bliss deceives us,
Where the worn spirit never gains its goal;
Where, haunted ever by the thoughts that grieve us
Across us floods of bitter memory roll.

There is a land where every pulse is thrilling
With rapture earth's sojourners may not know,
Where heaven's repose the weary heart is stilling,
And peacefully life's time-taxed currents flow.

Far out of sight, while yet the flesh infolds us,
Lies the fair country where our hearts abide,
And of its bliss is naught more wondrous told us,
Than these few words, "I shall be satisfied."

Satisfied! satisfied! the spirit's yearning
For sweet companionship with kindred minds—
The silent love that here meets no returning—
The inspiration which no language finds—

Shall they be satisfied? the soul's vague longings,—
The aching void which nothing earthly fills!
O! what desires upon my soul are thronging,
As I look upward to the heavenly hills.

Thither my weak and weary steps are tending—
Saviour and Lord! with thy frail child abide!
Guide me toward home, where, all my wanderings ending,
I then shall see thee, and "be satisfied."

UNDERNEATH.

"All that glitters is not gold."
Often has this truth been told;
But another I'd unfold,
Quite as true, perhaps as old,—
Oft what glitters not, is gold:
Sometimes covered o'er with dust,
Of its brightness dimmed by rust,
Rough, unpolished—yet may you
Find, beneath, the metal true.
Mesh of precious gold lies hidden,
Which will spring to light when bidden
By a wise refiner's touch;
Oh, let yours be ever such,—
Yours to see with watchful eyes
What another would despise:
Rub away that rust of years,
It will yield to smiles or tears,
And your love will not be vain,
But return with tenfold gain.
One more spirit brought to light,
Which might else remain in night;
One more heart of precious worth
From the dark, unloving earth;
And in heaven that soul may shine,
Sparkling in a crown of thine.

PRAISE FOR PROVIDENCE.

My God, my only Help and Hope,
My strong and sure defence,
For all my safety and my peace
I bless Thy Providence.
The daily favor of my God
I cannot sing at large:
Yet let me make this holy boast,
I am the Almighty's charge.

Naked I came into the world,
And nothing with me brought;
And nothing have I here deserved;
Yet have I lacked naught.
I do not bless my laboring hand,
My laboring head, or chance;
Thy Providence, most gracious God,
Is mine inheritance.

Mysterious depths of endless love
My admiration raise
My God, Thy name exalted is Far above all my praise
O let me praise Thee whilst I live,
And praise Thee when I die,
And praise Thee when I rise again,
And to Eternity. JOHN MASON.

For the Christian Recorder

THE PLAGUES OF THIS COUNTRY.

MR. EDITOR:—There seems to be a very singular correspondence existing between the war in the United States and the Egyptian plagues. I suppose no one, in the face of so many evidences, will question the practicableness of the assertion, that this war is being waged through a providential interposition for the benefit of some portion of discarded humanity. For the last two hundred years many of the most pious and learned theologians have been preaching that some dreadful calamity would take place among the inhabitants of the earth about the year 1866. And that this catastrophical condition of things would be very transitory in its duration, and afterwards the earth, being refined by the agencies of this universal disaster, should emerge forth in all the purity of Eden's innocency.

These speculations are not yet at an end, though they had partially ceased to agitate the theological world till Miller's theory spread consternation through America and a part of Europe, by proclaiming that the world would end in 1843. When men of all grades and positions began to sift the Scriptures, either for the purpose of refuting or proving this theory; and strange to say that many of its most stern opposers sit down with every fibre of their soul prejudiced against it; but rose after an examination with favorable convictions. And since that time such gigantic minds as are possessed by Dr. Cross, of the Methodist Church, and Dr. Seiss, of the Lutheran Church in this country, in connexion with the immortal Drs. Cumming and Elliot of England, (especially the latter's Horæ Apocalypticæ) have been organising a grand galaxy of premillenarians, the works, arguments, suggestions and sentiments of whom have been calling attention to some great issue just ahead. Though piles of infamy and derision have been heaped upon Miller and his theory, because he erred in his conclusions, so much so that all those who have not since looked at things in absolute contradiction to Miller, have been branded as a Millerite, yet my impression is that the world will yet see that Miller was not as big a fool as they supposed him.

Though Miller did certainly err in his assumption of fixed dates, and to precise definite periods, and there is where he lost his power. If Miller had took the grounds that Drs. Cumming and Cross did, by compiling his prophetic figures and chronological predictions to show that some great change in human affairs would soon take place, he would have retained a more durable influence, which would have diffused a spirit of inquiry among the common people of as great acuity as he did among the few learned.

But because there was not a literal fulfilment of his predicted statements, two-thirds of the people who even claimed to think, without ever examining or comparing his views with the prophetic bearing of sacred writ, began at once to pour forth their denunciatory tirades upon him, with about as much consistency as the Roman Inquisition did upon Galileo, for what with a little improvement was philosophically true Now Miller saw, both from the indexes of prophecy and the prognostication of transpiring events, that the world was on the eve of some great mutation, which should rock nations and convulse societies in every human sphere. He saw that this dispensation of human affairs was fast receding, and that God was about to sever the distinctions which split the social order of humanity, by placing them upon a platform of more equality and unanimity. But the great error into which both Miller and others no less distinguished have fallen, is in attempting to define what this great consummation of things should be, which they thought the sine qua non, because every man being prone to think for himself who has mind enough to rise above the current of the fogyism of his day, have been actuated with a sufficiency of self-certainty to tell, so far as his own views extend, what this thing about to take place should be. Some have thought that the world was about to end, others that Christ was about to enthrone himself at Jerusalem and sway a sceptre of universal righteousness, others that God was about to purify the earth with fire, and afterwards to refit it for the habitation of his saints, &c.; but all agree that it is for the bettering of oppressed humanity. Now how far truth may corroborate with any of the above statements must be seen by future generations.

But that the King of heaven has been appealing to the hearts of men to get ready for some dreadful issue, I think is verified in the many ministers whom God has recently raised up, and books which have been sent out to warn us of some great fulness of time.

Three years ago the northern lights, which frescoed the heavens, were terrific in their appearance—that the skies would at times seem to be turning with blood, and the hearts of men in every direction failing, from the dreadful foreboding anticipations which agitate a criminal conscience. The free people of color in every direction were hunted and pursued as rabbits, and particularly in the slave States denounced as an offensive nuisance, while church conventions and conferences broke up in wild confusion, political assemblies, legislative and congressional bodies, ended in partisan strife. The atmosphere of human society seemed to be charged with sectional divisibility, and all avowed obligations which bound man to man appeared to be reversed. And then to crown this hell-forged schism, Jeff. Davis, elder brother to Pluto, was inaugurated in all his bestial vices to preside over a power organized for the purpose of crushing down the manliness of as loyal hearts as ever owed fealty to the God of heaven.

Abraham Lincoln and not Jeff. Davis becomes the Pharaoh of the mystic Egypt (American slavery.) And however unwilling to comply with a dispensation of liberation, nature's God calls from heaven, echoed to by five million of mystic Israelites, (abject slaves) in peals of vivid vengeance, let my people go Moses and Aaron, in the garb of threats for the nation's heart-blood, stand before the mystic Pharaoh with a demand endorsed by the purposes of God, for their redemption; but, being refused, a series of plagues begins, commencing at Fort Sumter.

A proclamation calling forth seventy-five thousand men, to protect an ensign which had long waved over an enslaved people, is issued; but with no contemplation of responding to Heaven's demand.

The first plague which staggered the nation's energies, was the killing of several soldiers in the streets of Baltimore; but partly recovering from that by the encouragement gained through the energetic achievements of Gen. Butler, Gen. McDowell was invested with the chieftainship of the Potomac Army. He, very forgetful of his mission, issued a proclamation that no negro should come within his military lines. This, of course, being endorsed by the President, else he would have soon altered it, as in the case of Fremont and Hunter, the second plague smote the American Egyptian in the Bull Run defeat.

Shortly after another partial recovery, Gen. Fremont in the West heard a voice saying from heaven, Let my people go. He hearkened to the call by a corresponding proclamation, that rebels should be shot and their slaves set free; but the presidential Pharaoh hardened his heart and made void all his proceedings And mystic Egypt was smitten by the third plague in the death of Gen. Lyon, the fall of Lexington, and the demoralization of Gen. Siegel's army. Shortly after Gen Fremont was removed and Halleck placed in his stead, he issues a proclamation, that negroes were disloyal, and merely came as spies into the Federal lines, and forbid their future entrance, and returned many back to their rebel masters. Again, as a penalty, the fourth plague smote this mystic Egypt in the destruction of lives, ships, and other property, and almost the demoralization of the entire nation by the coming out of the Merrimac from Norfolk. Gen Hunter soon after saw that it was no use to try to refuse the heavenly demands, and in one sweeping proclamation, over which angels rejoiced, declared the mystic Israelites free throughout South Carolina, Georgia and Florida; but the presidential Pharaoh hardened his heart, and in one grum mutter, furious enough to make hell grumble, precipitately hurled them back into the darkest caverns of oppression, ever felt by a fiendish nerve. Soon after, the fifth plague smites in the extermination of a Maryland regiment, the capturing of thousands of prisoners by Stonewall Jackson, the running of Gen. Banks, and the perpetration of other cruelties too horrible, too brutal, too infernal to mention. And I tell old mystic Egyptian to-day, my people must go free. The sixth plague—the sixth phial or vial—or the sounding of the sixth trumpet is just ahead. What Miller and other prophet writers have been seeing, and the great revolution which is to rack the earth and convulse the nations about the year 1866, is the liberation of the oppressed. And I now predict that the time is near at hand. Miller saw it through the fog of a few future years, and could not describe it; but all the nations of Europe and America will be in war before five years, unless freedom's banner waves in majestic splendor over every hill and dale. If England and France ever interfere with this nation, it will be because God in his providence will compel them for the purpose of exterminating slavery. And mystic Egypt, with mystic Pharaoh at its head, may refuse compliance to Heaven's demand; but the inexpressible tortures inflicted upon ancient Egypt, the cruelties of Antiochus to the Jews, the devastation of Jerusalem by the Roman Generals Titus and Vespasian, the bloody streets of France in 1793, will all hardly bear a comparison to what will befall this nation.

H. M. T.

Washington, July 2, 1862.

For the Christian Recorder.

JEALOUSY.

Jealousy is a passion that helps to constitute the disposition of many of our fellow-beings Some persons say that there are none exempt from this cruel trait of character; but, whether there be many or not, I think there are enough who do possess it for me to complete my communication on the subject. Jealousy takes its rise from selfishness, for, as a general thing, persons that are much jealous are very selfish. They like to receive much attention, and to have their comfort studied by all around them. But they are very indifferent about showing such politeness to others. I have thought that married people and lovers were the only ones that were jealous; but I have lately discovered that, when it is once predicated in the heart, that its venom flows in every vein, and creates a feeling of envy towards all that are well spoken of, and causes discontentment within when they see others better situated in life than they are. This disposition of jealousy spoils the enjoyment of many around us, and makes many discontented husbands and unhappy wives. I wonder till I am lost in thought why persons are so narrow-minded as to let this fashion have such a predominant influence over them; for I am well aware that the heirs of that trait know that they possess it, and they know that it makes them unhappy, and I think it might be overcome as well as any other inclination to do evil. It might be so much overcome in every one to prevent them from committing murder and suicide. It is want of confidence in those we love to believe that they love us, and to think that we are as much thought of as other people. It is very true that everybody don't love us that we love; but getting jealous about them will not make them love us any more.

Why hast thou left thy native home?
Was it for love, was it for gold?
Or was it for a maiden fair,
With pearly teeth and crimped hair?
For one, whose figure tall and slim,
With grace, full form, and dimpled chin?
One on whom kind fortune smiled,
And made her an heiress child;
For one, when beauty passed her by,
Left a mark for the lover's eye?
What other charms have made you go
And leave your land of birth?
If not for love, if not for gold,
It was in search of fleeting mirth.

Some poor girls think that it is wisdom to live single till they have the opportunity of getting a rich husband; but I think it wisdom to marry a poor one and help him to get rich.

The gentleman that is fascinated with every fine-looking lady he sees seldom makes a confidential husband or lover.

Ladies that are looking for a husband must not be smitten with a handsome face or costly apparel; but take the one that is not ashamed to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow

Children that are brought up under the chastising rod of a pious mother will, in after life, rise and call her blessed. MARY MANLEY.

Woodbury, July 3, 1862.

For the Christian Recorder.

THOUGHTS ON THE WAR.

MR. EDITOR:—We design with your kind permission, to say a few thoughts on this subject, knowing as we do that such themes are ever welcome to the readers of your worthy paper.

In the first place, we would allude to the papers. How many of our sedate sheets have made themselves at once both conspicuous and ridiculous since the commencement of this unhappy war. Some of them, in their pretended zeal for the cause of the Union, would try to cram down the throats of the masses, that the war has been conducted properly in every respect; when, at the same tme, they themselves have proved, by their own words, their complete ignorance of the whole mater. We will give one important instance from a thousand that we could select from a leading paper of your city. A writer in the pape to which we refer, in alluding to the capture of Mason and Slidell, the infamous traitors to their country and their God, said: "If we understand the feelings of the Cabinet, the President and the people, the giving up of Mason and Slidell, and the required apology will be made never." Yet, what was the result? But these things were done, and this not two ays after the article was penned. Then, the same writer with the changability of the weather-cock, sends forth another article, loudly appauding the act, which but two days before he hoted at the idea of Such instances speak louly for themselves by their own foolishness and ridiculousness Such are the men who would cry to the people, "I am Sir Oracle; and when ope my lips, let no man bark"

Understand us: we do not criticise the act ourselves. The manner which Mr. Seward managed the whole affair entitles him to the gratitude of the American people forever. He has shown himself a true and loyal son, a statesman and an orator. Silently, and without ostentatious display, he is doing his noble work. So, indeed, is our noble President. Man of the stern and rugged brow!—how nobly and unselfishly has he toiled!—how many sleepless hours and restless nights has he passed, brooding over the troubles of his native land, and in constructing plans!—and yet how sleepless is the task!

He is no more than mortal; he is liable to make mistakes, as is his worthy compeer, General McClellan. But, at the same time, when a blunder does arise, all that we ask is that the papers may not seek to plaster the thing over, and harass the minds of the people by heading it a "glorious triumph." It will do no good People are not blind, and will think. Many an honest friend of the Union, for expressing disapprobation of some measure, has been branded a traitor by these same papers, whose leading departments are conducted by some upstart and aspiring graduate of some benighted printing office. 'Tis time such offensive conduct was stopped. Surely our land is not that of the Inquisition, that we may not express our desire for the welfare of it. Heartily do we wish this unnatural contest was over. 'Tis evident that while it lasts, the coffers of the same papers will continue to overflow (by increased circulation;) and it is equally certain that when ended, the coffers will cease to fill so rapidly This may account for some of the excessive Unionism, as expressed by some of our papers.

Those same papers have done the Union more harm by disclosing the plans of the campaign than any other class combined—though we are at a loss to say who has the softest head—the editor, who publishes the plans, or the general who discloses such important matters to tell-tales. We say emphatically, "Let old 'Mac' alone. He knows what he is doing; you'll shortly hear from him."

This matter discussed, we will proceed to another.

That General McClellan is governed in all his movements by motives of the purest principle and patriotism, no man of common sense or honor will doubt. Noble, self-sacrificing soul!—we could almost worship him! We are firmly persuaded that his great desire is to prevent unnecessary sacrifice of human life, but whether he is doing it, is another thing. While we shall not answer negatively, as we gaze around upon the hospitals in every part of the Union, crammed with the dead and dying, God forbid that we should answer affirmatively. We believe that Richmond could have been captured with less loss of life than was experienced by our noble troops in simply defending themselves on the bloody plains of "Fair Oaks" Strange blunders have been committed by our generals ever since the commencement of this war,—blunders so palpably stupid, that the most dreadful results were only prevented from following them by the still stranger stupidity of the wretched traitors in not taking advantage of them. Look at Pittsburg Landing! Who can doubt the appalling result if Beauregard had attacked our troops one day sooner? Nobly did our gallant band defend themselves against an overwhelming host of infernal traitors. See! see! the enemy have pressed them back and back, till now they are at the very edge of the river. God help those brave veterans so nobly struggling in defence of their country's flag. 'Tis a critical moment. Hist! that roar of cannon. Good! our gunboats are coming up to the rescue. There is a moment's pause, and then a deafening roar, as a perfect volcano of shot and shell is hurled from the gunboats. Tyler and Lexington over the heads of our men into the rebel ranks. Down! down! they go by the scores and hundreds, and finally they retreat back awhile from within range of this terrible fire. But soon they press forward again, in force twice as numerous as before, mowing down our ranks. Again are our troops at their mercy—in vain do the gunboats seek to drive them back. Good God! see how our noble fellows are falling, as they are compelled to retreat backwards to the river again! All seems lost. Is there no help? But hark! what means that dull, heavy, thundering sound—that cloud of dust rising thicker and thicker in the distant horizon? A puff of the wind for an instant blows the dust aside, revealing acres of nodding plumes, glittering steel, and prancing cavalry. In an instant a shout goes up from the Union ranks, that seemed to rend the very skies. "'Tis BUELL and the reinforcements!" Wounds were forgotten, and a new life springs through the hearts of our brave boys, as the lurid and vengeful flash of a dozen rifled cannon, bursting forth like a fiery serpent from the approaching columns, proclaim that this day laggard was left to bring up reinforcements. We need not detail the result. With the force of an avalanche, our noble reinforcements hurled their columns on the foe. They broke, they fled, and that night, as the pale moon shone sadly down on the faces of the dead, she beheld our glorious emblem, the "Stars and Stripes," proudly floating in triumph over the blood-stained field of battle. SPARTAN.

Terre Haute, Ind.

WARNING

We again will notify those wishing to write for our paper, that hereafter we will receive no notice whatever without the signature of the author, and we only give place to this because we know the handwriting.—ED.

GENERAL BOOK STEWARD'S REPORT.

The Christian Recorder Reported from January 1861, to May 1st, 1862.

CASH RECEIVED

1861
Sept.	2.	Taken in for the Recorder, ..		1 00
	3.	" " " ..		2 47
	6	" " "		85
	7	" " "		1 12
	9	" " "		92
	10	" " "		75
	12	" " "		1 00
	13	" " "		2 40
	14	" " "		2 60
	16	" " "		4 18
	17	" " "		1 00
	18	" " "		1 12
	19	" " "		1 38
	20	" " "		3 80
	21	" " "		2 71
	23	" " "		1 18
	24	" " "		3 59
	26	" " "		16
	27	" " "		2 86
	28	" " "		6 11
	30	" " "
		Sum total, up to Oct. 1st,		$43 94
Oct	1	Taken,		16
	2	"		2 69
	3	"		68
	4	"		2 73
	5	"		1 00
	7	"		1 17
	8	"		2 50
	9	"		7 50
	10	"		75
	11	"		20
	12	"		2 30
	14	"		1 56
	15	"		1 11
	16	"		7 00
	17	"		2 00
	18	"		11
	19	"		8 34
	21	"		1 78
	22	"		1 57
	23	"		2 13
	25	"		88
	26	"		1 08
	28	"		8
	29	"		1 04
	30	"		3 10
		Sum total, up to Nov. 1st,		$16 87
Nov.	1	Taken,		1 00
	1	"		3 04
	2	"		1 74
	4	"		2 00
	4	"		50
	5	"		8
	6	"		4 50
	8	"		60
	9	"		1 32
	11	"		2 48
	13	"		2 50
	15	"		1 23
	16	"		2 00
	18	"		2 29
	19	"		1 51
	20	"		4
	22	"		12
	23	"		1 16
	25	"		10
	26	"		1 86
	29	"		83
	30	"		1 85
		Sum total, up to Dec. 1st,		$43 17
Dec.	2	Taken,		1 55
	3	"		79
	6	"		12
	7	"		2 18
	9	"		78
	10	"
	11	"		8 04
	12	"		84
	13	"		3 84
	14	"		2 35
	16	"		6 54
	18	"		1 08
	19	"		50
	20	"		2 00
	21	"		3 07
	23	"		12
	24	"		4 09
	25	"		1 00
	26	"		5 01
	29	"		3 18
	31	"		1 54
		Sum total, up to Jan. 1st,		$43 61
Jan.	1	Taken,		7 91
	1	"		19 77
	2	"		6 08
	3	"		5 17
	4	"		33 65
	6	"		6 90
	7	"		5 87
	8	"		5 33
	10	"		2 16
	11	"		8 62
	13	"		23 89
	14	"		11 87
	15	"		6 10
	16	"		1 00
	17	"		18 67
	18	"		16 66
	18	"		5 28
	20	"
	21	"		14 85
	22	"		2 00
	23	"		3 50
	24	"		6 00
	25	"		2 21
	27	"		85
	28	"		11 00
	29	"		3 10
	30	"		3 25
	31	"		3 30
		Sum total, up to Feb. 1st,		$244 63

(To be continued.)

From the Anglo-African.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY.

I was born in South Kingston, R. I., in 1828; I left my mother at the age of six years, and spent thirteen and a half years at farming. In this time I spent eleven and a half years with one man. I then commenced going to sea, and cooking part of the time in hotels, cook shops and steamboats During this time, I have been in nearly every port of the American coast, and in a number of foreign ports, and in vessels from seventy-six tons up to two thousand tons. I have no occasion to speak of my fare during this time, but I may say that I have had better than some and worse than others, but I shared on average with laboring men. I would say a word in behalf of the seamen. It is too bad, however, that I must speak principally of American ships. It is a positive fact, that many Captains are very tyrannous with their men. They commence the ill treatment as soon as they leave our ports, and treat them so that they are obliged to leave in foreign ports for fear of their lives, and many are killed and hove into the sea If men, in many cases, make complaints to the Consul in a foreign port, the Captain bribes the Consul, and he puts the men on board the ship again; and if men, in many cases, make a demand for recompense, the Captain has the preference on the ground that the sailor is nothing more nor less than a dog, and the officers make their boast of bribing the lawyer to keep the man waiting till the ship sails, as the man is obliged to go himself. It would be well to look into this important matter. I speak of this, for people living on shore don't see this awful treatment. But I have met with good treatment until the last ship in which I sailed. The Captain, Adams, has the name of being very gentlemanly when on shore. Capt. Adams sailed from the port of New York for Callao in 1860, with a cook and a steward, shipped from the keeper of "Colored Sailors' Home," and he killed the cook, and hove him overboard at sea, and killed one of the men in Callao on the same voyage

The ill treatment of this Captain has been the means of bringing me in this condition, and for rebuking which I am now condemned to die.

(Signed,) WM. H. HAWKINS,
1862.

A large portion of the afternoon and night previous to his execution was spent in writing letters to friends, conversing with persons around him, and in religious exercise with Rev. Messrs Garnet and Camp. At a late hour he went to bed and slept until 4 o'clock of the morning of the execution. He spent about a half hour in walking the corridor: after which he again went to bed and slept until 6 1-2 o'clock. He then arose, ate a hearty breakfast, and commenced making preparations for the final scene. Religious exercises were again had by Rev. Mr. Camp, and Rev. Geo. A. Rue, of Rhode Island. Mr. Garnet having been with him during most of the night, had left with the view of securing some rest previous to the execution.

In the course of the morning he was visited by Father Dubouquet, a Roman Catholic priest who visits Tombs' prisoners generally.

The Rev. gentleman entered into conversation with Hawkins in reference to the salvation of his soul. He insisted that, in oder to secure salvation, he must be baptised in the faith of the church, and that without this he must expect nothing but the part of those who know not God, and who have despised the offered mercy. Hawkins listened to his suggestion with great patience, and when the clergyman had finished he replied, "Now, sir, what you say me be all very well for you to believe, and for others to believe who are of your way of thinking, an who place so much implicit faith in the almsand efforts of human mortals ourselves. For me, I must confess that my faith is placed in a loftier power than that of men, who are mortal and sinful like myself; and as for baptism being the condition of the salvation of my soul, I remember that the thief on the cross next to Christ was assured by the Master in his dying hour that he would be with him in paradise. Christ did not make any institution such as that of baptism a condition of the promise being fulfilled. I cling to that same Saviour whose promises have never failed with those who put their faith in Him, believing that in him is salvation."

At his final interview with those in attendance, a communication of his was placed in the hands of the reporter of the "Times," in which he thanked Marshal Murray, the officers of the prison, and others for their kindness toward him during his imprisonment. In relation to the murder, he says:

If I was in Court, and should stand up and say, "I did not do this deed," no one would believe me, would they? If I was in the same court, and should say, "I did do this deed," they would all believe me, wouldn't they? Yes, and on my own words, hang me. Why then is it well for me to say I done it, or I didn't, when it depends on what words I use whether you believe me or not, and not on the truth? I will say, however, that though at one time, I rather thought the second mate would be tried for this crime. I am very glad he was not. I would not like to have had him die, or suffer for this deed. I am satisfied as it is. The President has done well not to notice my case Had he done it the friends of Gordon would have perhaps caused a revolution. He is a noble man—no President was ever greater—even Washington was not greater than Abraham Lincoln. God bless him.

I am now near death.

I don't fear it. I am strengthened from within; Christ stands by me and says, I will comfort and sustain you in the bitter end. I think I have shown thus far that a colored man has firmness, has courage, has intelligence—at all events enough to entitle him to his own freedom, and now I wish to show that a Christian colored man can die bravely, and die with feelings of love for God and love for man.

He also desired the following letter to be published:

NEW YORK, June 20th, '62

To the members and friends of the Shiloh church and all other churches of religious worship, I leave to with you my most sincere and friendly thanks I am happy to say that I have all faith in Christ. This is the most needed of all things, and pleasant to those that know it; and I do hope to meet many of you in the arms of Jesus, no more to part.

To-morrow I leave you forever on earth. God bless you and good by.

WM. H. HAWKINS.

At 1 o'clock precisely the solemn procession moved from the reception-room to the gallows, United States Marshal Murray and Deputy United States Marshal Thompson in front, followed by the prisoner, his spiritual advisers, the Rev. Mr. Garnet, the Rev. Amni Camp, the Rev. Geo. A. Rue, and a number of Deputy Marshals.

The doomed man took a seat under the beam, while United States Marshal Murray, in a subdued tone, read his death warrant.

Hawkins then stood up and delivered an address to the spectators in substance the same as documents from which we have made extracts in the foregoing part of this article.

The Rev. Mr. Garnet then offered an appropriate prayer, at the conclusion of which Hawkins said to Marshal Murray: "Can I now offer prayer?"

Upon being told that he could, he proceeded, prefixing his petition with the Lord's Prayer. He prayed fervently for a safe entrance into glory of his hitherto guilty soul. He offered an earnest petition in behalf of the country, the armies and their officers, now engaged in a conflict for Union. He also prayed for the slave and the slave's master—that the former might be given his freedom, and that God would open the eyes of the latter to see the error and injustice of his conduct to his fellow-man. He prayed especially for all his relatives yet out of the ark of safety, and his dead sister who had parted with him for the last time in the prison cell.

He then shook hands with the Marshal, the Rev. Messrs. Rue, Garnet and Camp, and others who had him in charge more recently. Amid the shaking of hands he shouted, in an apparently exultant voice, "Farewell, friends."

Mr. Isaacs, the executioner, then adjusted the rope, the signal was given, the concealed weight fell and the body of Hawkins dangled in the air.

A few convulsive shrugs, and all was over. Death ensued in less than a minute after the weight fell. The body, however, was suspended for about twenty minutes.

It was cut down at about a quarter before 2 o'clock.

Coroner Collin then held an inquest in the usual form, when the jury rendered a verdict of death by strangulation. The body was then handed over to the friends for decent burial.

Marshal Murray and the Rev. Mr. Garnet undertook the responsibility and expenses of the funeral. The body was taken away, and duly interred in the Citizens Union Cemetary.

THE COUNCIL AT ROME.

On May 15th, there were at Rome 83 Bishops and 37 Cardinals. The expense of the canonization of the Japanese Martyrs will amount to 400,000 francs.

At a consistory, held on May 22d, the Canonization of the Japanese Martyrs was unanimously voted. Twenty-three Cardinals and 120 Bishops were present. A discourse was afterwards pronounced by the Pope, who displayed much emotion.

The fete at Rome, celebrating the canonization of the Japanese martyrs had been solemnized with perfect order. The ceremony lasted six hours, and was attended by forty Cardinals, two hundred and forty-three Bishops, as well as by the Diplomatic Corps. The Basilica of the Vatican was magnificently decorated and lighted by wax tapers.

The Paris Opinions Nationals learns that the Bishops in Rome are making great efforts to induce the Pope to pronounce the major excommunication against Victor Emmanuel and his adherents, and to relieve his subjects from the oath of allegiance.

The Bishops in their address to the Pope, deplore the oppression of the church, and declare that the temporal power is necessary for the independence of the Pope. They approve all that the Pope has done in defence of the rights of the Holy See, and exhort His Holiness to continue firm in his resistance. The address is signed by twenty-one Cardinals and two hundred and forty-four Bishops.

The Pope, at a consistory held on the 9th, pronounced an allocution in which he deplored the errors spread by the revolutionary spirit against the authority of the Catholic church as well as against divine and human laws. His Holiness further regretted the oppression exercised against the church in Italy, and the war declared against his temporal power. He urged the Bishops to redouble their zeal in combating and arresting the diffusion of these errors.

WAS IT EXPEDIENT?

"It is true, every word of it. Nay; the truth would have borne a much stronger statement. It was righteous; nothing could have been more deserved; but—was it EXPEDIENT?" Thus wrote a valued friend to an editor, and thus the Editor replied —

1. "It was expedient for the TRUTH'S sake, for truth lives not by suppression but by utterance. We are not in half the danger of speaking the truth too plainly that we are of obscuring it or suppressing it.

2. It was expedient for the CHURCH'S sake. It is better to show the cancer and have it removed, than to hide it or poultice it. The operation gives the church pain, but the cancer will destroy her life. We must give her pain to save her pain.

3. It was expedient for CHRIST'S sake. Those who represent him in his church, ought, for his sake, to be known as they are, in all aspects connected with their official life and public acts. It is unpleasant to strip and expose the wrong, but it is very perilous to allow it to lie safely in its disguise.

4. It was expedient for CONSCIENCE' sake. We are appointed of God to speak the truth without desire of man's favor or fear of man's frown. We are going to his judgment bar whose decision is anticipated by enlightened conscience here. For the quiet within and the quiet yet to come we must speak the truth.

CHARACTERISTICS OF DISTINGUISHED CLERGYMEN.

WHATELEY.

When Guizot was in England he met Archbishop Whatcley. He says:—

"Amongst the English prelates with whom I became acquainted, the Archbishop of Dublin, Dr Whatcley, a correspondent of our Institute, both interested and surprised me. His mind appeared to me original, and well cultivated; startling and ingenious, rather than profound in philosophic and social science; a most excellent man, thoroughly disinterested, tolerant, and liberal, and in the midst of his unwearying activity and exhaustless flow of conversation, strangely absent, familiar, confused, eccentric, amiable, and engaging, no matter what impoliteness he might commit, or what propriety he might forget. He was to speak on the 18th of April in the House of Lords, in reply to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishop of Exeter, on the question of the Clergy reserves in Canada. 'I am not sure,' said Lord Holland to me, 'that in his indiscreet sincerity he may not say he sees no good reason why there should be a bench of Bishops in the House of Peers.' He did not speak, for the debate was adjourned; but on that occasion, as on all others, he would certainly not have sacrificed to the interests of his order the smallest particle of what he regarded either as true or for the public good."

PUNSHON.

The Birmingham Daily Post thus speaks of this popular preacher:—

"In excellence, range, and volume of voice, Mr. Punshon is surpassed by Gladstone, Spurgeon, Baptist Noel, and the Bishop of Oxford. But Mr. Punshon certainly makes the most of what nature has given him, and his vocal organ may be called a bad voice admirably managed. His elocution, though naturalised, has cost him immense labor. You never hear him preach without having one or more striking feats of elocution, too clever to be spontaneous, and yet too natural to be other than sincere. It would be out of place to discuss in this article the divine element of the pulpit, but so far as the humanity of Mr. Punshon's power and popularity is concerned, it is made up of the following: Materials for sermons with which the generality of intelligent religionists are acquainted, and in which they would agree; a fine and enlarged conception of the health, beauty, and joyousness of the Christian faith; beautiful and appropriate language; superior pulpit elocution. His imagination is very fertile, furnishing him with affluent resources of illustration, dealing with the placid, gentle, grand, and joyous moods of nature, rather than with the terror-stricken and wretched convulsions of her aghast and agonised soul. His taste has been well educated, and owes more, so far as rhetoric is concerned, to the Lakers, Dickens, Harris, Macaulay, and Bulwer Lytton, than to the old divines. This is as it should be "Given a congregation of fastidious and severe-thinking literary savants, and then perhaps Dr. Caird, or the Bishop of Oxford, or Henry Melville, would be the more acceptable preacher. But turn these three ministers out together, to make their own position, let them take the multitude as such, and then to us it would seem that Mr. Punshon is the greatest pulpit orator in the world."

ROBERT HALL.

In an article in the Eclectic it is said:—

"We shall, perhaps, surprise our readers when we avow our belief that the lord of modern conversation most nearly approaching to Johnson, but in many things far surpassing him in conversational powers, was Robert Hall. He had that rapid nimbleness of fancy and imagination, seconded by a vehement rapidity of language. His estimate of a very popular author was good, if not just:—'Sir, he has set out on a race after obscurity, and, sir, he has overtaken it.' Again, on a pleasant ride with Mr. Green, as the great preacher's eye glanced over the sun setting beneath the waves, he exclaimed: 'Only look, sir; that mild, silvery light on that expanse of waters! why, sir, it looks as if they were preparing for a magnificent public baptism, and the whole of the hundred and forty and four thousand described in the Revelation were about to descend into the waves!'

"We believe Robert Hall was the finest of all our table talkers. He was in conversation what he was as a preacher: rapidity, imagination, wit, and force—he possessed these in a large degree. Somebody said: 'No doubt, in a future state, the powers of the human mind would be enlarged to an indefinite degree.' 'What's that, sir? What's that?' The question was repeated. 'Why the mind more than the body, sir? the body undergo this frightful increase? then we should have a man whose nose would perforate the sun, his chin stretch across the Atlantic, and battles fought in the wrinkles of his face; none but a fool could believe that, sir!'

"His genius for happy retort never slumbered. A timid man was the subject of conversation, when he remarked:

The Christian Recorder.

Philadelphia, July 12, 1862.

REV SHEPHERD HOLCOMB

We have a letter from Rev. Shepherd Holcomb, of Mount Holly. Brother Holcomb, as many of our brethren are aware, is a superannuated minister, and all who know him, know him to be a man of piety. We are truly glad to learn from his letter that he has nearly recovered from the paralytics, and can move around.

SELLING THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

We wish to say to those of our brethren who take papers for sale, that we hope they will not keep us out of the use of the money more than two or four weeks at the most. This will be better both for you and us, for when the accounts run long and are not strictly kept, some of our brethren are at a loss to know how their bills are so large. Let all our brethren pursue this course. In sending money, please get the postmaster's receipt. Those who do this will not be held responsible if the money is lost; those who do not, will be held responsible.

QUARTERLY MEETING.

The Rev. A. L. Stanford's Quarterly Meeting came off finely last Sabbath. There was a good feeling all the day long. The Lord be praised.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

Of Rev. H. M. Turner, of Washington, D. C., on account,	- -	$4 00
Of Rev. William Hughs,	- -	1.00
Miss C. Peterson, Camden, N J.,	- -	1 00
Mr. Shepards, per Rev. K. Berry,	-	1 00
Miss Lydia Lowery, per Rev. J. Hamilton,	- - - -	1.00

PASTOR'S NOTICE.

Rev. J. P. Campbell, Pastor of A. M. E. Church, Sixth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. Residence, No. 833 Carpenter Street between Eighth and Ninth Streets.

PLEASURE TRIP.

The A. M. E. Mission Sabbath School of Kaighsville, New Jersey, under the charge of Rev. Peter Gardiner, of the Camden circuit, will have its pleasure trip on Thursday, the 24th instant, at Maple Grove, near the place known as Diamond Cottage.

Several addresses will be delivered by Rev. Peter Gardiner, Rev. Elisha Weaver, and several others.

JACOB F. DERRIXON,
HENRY MACKEY,
HENRY HARRISON, } Com. of Arrgts.

All other usual business and work will necessarily be postponed for two weeks.

A WORD.

The report from Port Royal will be found to be very interesting. We were present at the lecture, and can assure our readers that it was a grand treat. We take it from the Press. It is correct as far as it goes.

GONE TO THE CAPES.

The Rev. Stephen Smith and family have gone to spend the summer season at Cape May. The Lord be with him and his family.

We would also state that Rev. A. L. Stanford, pastor of Little Wesley, has left for Providence, and may visit some other of the Eastern cities. He will spend some two or three weeks altogether during the trip.

GOES WEST.

Our better half will leave, by divine permission, on Tuesday, the 15th instant, for the West. She will remain some two weeks or more in the smoky city (Pittsburg) with her mother; and thence proceed to the city of Indianapolis, Indiana. We hope that she will have a very pleasant time on the rail—the distance to be travelled being over one thousand miles.

TAKE LESSONS.

It would be a capital idea for some of the managers on the Philadelphia and Pittsburgh Railroads to take lessons from the following:

EQUALITY IN TRAVELLING.

A correspondent of the Evening Post, speaking of the Richmond and York River Railroad, says: "It is a truly national road; there is no distinction known among those who travel over it. The highest official rides in the same kind of car with the most humble soldier, and men who at home would feel indignant if a respectable colored man entered a car, ride with the Virginia contrabands side by side. The other day I noticed Mr. H. J. Raymond, of the New York Times, on a platform car, with a black face on each side of him, yet he seemed to wear his usual pleasantness of countenance, and to enjoy his usual degree of good health. It seems here that every one feels so patriotic as to forget all minor differences, whether of opinion or color, in contemplating the one great idea of how to beat the rebels, end the war, and save the country."

EGYPT.

[CONCLUDED.]

Our readers will remember that we left off at Sesostris. As if to verify to the very senses of posterity the faithfulness of His word who declares that he will stain the pride of all glory, the most gigantic representation of the hero himself now lies amid the ruins of his own capital, shattered in the most humiliating manner Such must be the fate of all such monarchs, whose glory is in the god of this world. And here let us remark what mere human sagacity could not possibly have foreseen, nor had the hardihood to hazard the remaining part of the prediction, and that, too, at a time when Egypt, to human eyes, appeared to be the greatest and most flourishing, as well as the most stable of all earthly kingdoms. It is very evident from the testimony of all history, that since the days of the prophets Egypt has been overrun by successive races of foreign conquerors, and literally sold into the hands of wicked oppressors; that since the days of the prophets there never has been, even amid innumerable scenes of anarchy and change, a single native prince of the land of Egypt. Nor is this all. Mark the insults, cruelties, and miseries to which the wretched inhabitants have been almost uninterruptedly subjected, throughout the long period of two thousand years. Though Egypt has degenerated, yet it is clear to every honest and intelligent man and woman that she has been the cradle of science and knowledge. History shows that wherever any class of people have been blessed and prospered by Almighty God, and after a long period of time that people have became proud and haughty, neglecting the [illegible] not obeying his divine will, he then brings afflictions and judgments upon them In speaking of Egypt, Sir Gardiner Wilkinson makes the following remarks upon the religion of the Egyptians: "Superstitiously attached to their religious institutions, they practiced a ceremonial which they celebrate with all the grandeur [illegible] people. The celebration of their religious rites was remarkable for possessing all that human ingenuity could devise to render them splendid and imposing. Of course they prided themselves in being the people to whom had originated the most sacred institutions, afterwards common to other people, who were [illegible] to have adopted from Egypt the mysterious nature and attributes of the Deity, though presented under a different form from that of the Egyptians" Again, it is quite evident that they claimed the merit of being the first who had consecrated months and days to particular deities, and the method of forming the calendar, which has been imitated and preserved to the present day, and which has in turn been supplanted by the saints of a Christian era, which we think cannot be doubted.

In reading the history of the Greeks, we glean the following information: "Herodotus borrowed the science of astronomy from the Egyptians, and that people have invented more prodigies than all the rest of mankind." It will be remembered that it is conceded to the Egyptians the honor of teaching mankind the proper mode of approaching the Deity. Lucian, the historian, asserts that they were reputed the first who had a conception of the gods, and acquaintance with religious matters, and a knowledge of sacred names. An opinion is expressed in the words of an oracle of Apollo, quoted by Eusebius, which declares that they, before all others, disclosed by infinite action the path that leads to the gods. Again, Jamblichus not only considers them the first of men who were allowed to partake of the favor of the gods, but that the gods, when invoked, rejoiced in the rites of Egypt. Thus it is clearly to be seen, my readers, that the sons and daughters of Egypt have the honor of being the first to introduce the many sciences.

It will no doubt be very interesting to our readers to bring to their minds something relative to the Coptic population—the only representatives of the once noble, wide-spread, and flourishing church of Alexandria and Egypt. On this subject Dr. Duff gives the following information, collected on the spot: "Their very language, (the Coptic,) has now ceased to exist as a living, spoken tongue, having been supplanted by a jargon of Arabic; and though it is still retained as the language of sacredness in their public services of worship and devotion, like Latin in the Popish churches, it is intelligible to few or none of the hearers."

Reader, would you not like to go and visit Egypt, and see her plains and rivers, and mountains—Mount Sinai that we read so much about in the Scriptures? In visiting Egypt, please take a look at the road; see where the children of Israel crossed over. You may imagine that you see her deserts and her lakes; and, in conclusion, you may imagine that you see her places of worship, of devotion to God, but alas, these have dwindled away.

For the Christian Recorder.

MAN'S RESIDENCE.

DEAR READERS:—In conclusion upon this subject, I will notice some of the labors that men have to perform, whilst getting their bread by the sweat of their face. I first notice that a number of men have no other employment but to serve the drudges of mankind. Smiths, farriers, farmer's servants, grooms, hostlers, &c., are slaves of brutes—washing, carrying, shoeing, feeding, and waiting upon them both by day and by night. A sultry air, and clouds of smoke and dust are the elements in which men labor. The confused noise of water falling, steam hissing, and fire-engines working, wheels turning, hammers beating, ore bursting, and bellows roaring form the dismal concert that strikes the ear; while a continual eruption of flames ascending from the mouth of their artificial volcanoes, dazzle their eyes with horrible glare. Massive bars of hot iron are the heavy tools they handle. Cylinders of the first magnitude, the enormous weights they heave. Vessels full of melted metal, they carry about streams of the same burning fluid, the fiery rivers which they conduct into the deep cavities of their subterranean moulds I have seen at times sparks flying in every direction around the men while they have been at work, with thousands of drops of the liquid-hissing iron, the horrible showers to which they have been exposed Yea, while they have stood to catch a breeze, they have even bedewed the burning sand with their streaming sweat. These had a reason to remember the just sentence of an offended God: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat thy bread all the days of thy life."

I learn that birds of passage by mere instinct find the north and south more readily than mariners by the compass. And the untaught spiders weave their webs, and the uninstructed bees make their combs to the greatest perfection; but fallen man must serve a tedious apprenticeship to learn his own business, and with all the help of master's tools and patterns, seldom proves an ingenious artist. Disobedience, thou breach of duty that opened the flood-gates of natural evil, and caused arduous labors to come in full tide upon mankind.—thou art the cause of the toils that mankind beg while on earth. Destruction stops not here—sin kills beyond the tomb. There are tribes of animals that are armed with poisonous tongues or stings, and use them against mankind with peculiar rage. By extracting the quintessence of the curse which sin, our moral poison, hath brought upon the earth, by infusing their subtle venom in our blood, which spreads its poison through our agonizing frame. Ah! answer, ye thousands, who died in the wilderness of the bite of fiery serpents. I appeal, also, to the multitude, who lie almost all countries that have shared their deplorable fate, and they yet remain without number; their bones lie bleaching beneath the green surface of the earth. They are often mentioned—but, alas! how long, how grievous do they appear to those that feel their severity! Could we number the sighs that have been made, or forced from the breast on their account, it might swell into a river. Hard labors and sweat make up but one innumerable calamity, incident to the wretched inhabitants of the world. Turn your eyes which way you please, some running, others groaning under the rod of God. To-day you may read that an impetuous steed hath hurried away, thrown off and dragged along his unfortunate master, his blood sprinkling the dust, and brains dashed against the rocks; to-morrow, you may hear that a vicious horse has darted his fron-fenced hoof into his attendant's breast or forehead, and has either lamed or killed him on the spot I look at the danger of those that ransack the bowels of the earth to get the black mineral that we burn; also, thousands more with iron instruments, opening the bosom of the earth, and forcing her to yield us maintenance, or with immense labor secure her precarious decaying fruits.

Notwithstanding man's artful contrivances, greedy birds and beasts eat up and trample down a part of the fruit of his rural labor, and appear to laugh at human power and craft. These are plain proofs that man who, according to his superior rank and primitive excellency, should in all things have the pre-eminence, is now a degraded being. We may rationally conclude, with the evangelical prophet, sin has separated between us and our God; that our sins have hid the Saviour's face from us, and eclipsed the sun of righteousness, and brought darkness upon our souls; or, as Job speaks, man is born to trouble as the sparks fly upwards; and with David, that the earth is full of darkness and cruel habitation; and with every impartial inquirer, that our depravity and God's justice concur to make this world a vale of tears, as well as a field of toil and sweat, —a vast prison for rebels already tied with the chains of their sins,—a boundless scaffold for their execution,—a Golgotha,—an Aceldama,—an immense field of torture and blood

Having dwelt so long upon the manner in which mankind finds itself situated with the surrounding objects, I may reasonably assume the conclusion of my argument, and affirm that if Adam corrupted the fountain of human nature in himself, we, the stream, cannot but be naturally corrupted. Friends of the RECORDER, for fear of being too tedious, I conclude, hoping to say more in future. Mr. Editor, I am doing well in getting the ten cent money, and also the two cent money, of which I will settle with you and Elder Campbell in this month. July.

WM. H. WINDER.

Frecho'd, N J.

Mount Holly, N. J., July 7, 1862.

MR EDITOR:—Please give this place in the Recorder this week. On the 6th of April last I was with Brother J. H Smith holding Quarterly Meeting at Evesham, eight miles from my home at which time I was taken with a paralytic stroke. I was brought home quite feeble, and the use of my left side entirely gone. It came under the notice of the Female Aid Society. Sister Mary Still, being a member of that Society, and knowing my condition, at once made it known to the Society, and through her influence they sent me three dollars by the hands of Sister Elizabeth Harris of Hornstown, Pa; and she gave me one dollar of her own private funds. They have acted the part of the good Samaritan, for which they have my sincere thanks and best wishes. May the Lord bless them and their institution Sister Harris is a mother in Israel, and a friend to ministers, a friend to the Book Concern, and all good institutions, with the character of a Christian.

I remain your humble servant in Christ evermore Yours respectfully,

SHEPHERD HOLCOMB

We clip the following from the Independent, our worthy exchange, and we are truly glad to learn that that most wicked and malicious attempt upon the part of a portion, and a large proportion, too, of the voters in Illinois has proved to be a failure. We knew that the people of Illinois were very wicked but we did not think that their hearts and minds were so far lost to reason and humanity as to be guilty of such an abominable attempt. But we are thankful that God is always above the devil, and defeats the mechanism of his schemes.—ED.

THE NEW CONSTITUTION IN ILLINOIS.

It is generally understood, and has been so represented in the newspapers, that the two anti-negro propositions, which were carried by strong majorities in the State of Illinois, in the late vote on the new Constitution, have thereby become authoritative amendments of the old Constitution, while the new Constitution has been rejected as a whole. We are glad to learn, on what appears to be good grounds, that these wicked clauses were only presented in the form of separate clauses of the new Constitution, and that they lack the technical words which are necessary to give them force as amendments of the old. Consequently, the new Constitution having itself been rejected by the people, the cruel clauses fall with it, and are of no force whatever, except as historical proofs of the existence of cruel prejudice among the people of Illinois in the year 1862. So a respectable clergyman writes, June 25, to his friend in this city:

"Owing to a failure on the part of the convention to order these clauses to be presented as distinct amendments to the old Constitution, they have fallen with the new Constitution. So our State authorities have decided For this the Lord be praised. That the convention did intend the clauses as amendments to the old, if the new failed, there is not a doubt. Hence the cunning trick to secure their adoption. They supposed that a majority, however small, would suffice for their purpose By a legal technicality they have signally failed Do we not see the hand of Providence in their defeat? A H H."

The "trick" by which this iniquity was intended to be effected, is thus described in a previous letter: Three clauses were proposed to be voted upon separately, and ballots furnished accordingly, viz:

1. For or against negroes' suffrage or holding office.
2. For or against the exclusion of negroes from coming into the State
3. For or against laws for excluding negroes from coming in, and from exercising the right of suffrage or holding office.

Multitudes who would not forbid negroes coming into the State, are not yet prepared to vote for negro suffrage. They would suppose themselves to be expressing their intentions by erasing "for" in the first proposition, and "against" in the other; and having thus accomplished their object, would simply strike out the whole of the third; while the knowing ones, who were in the plot, would all vote "For" in the third. By the adroit reversal of the propositions in 1 and 2, multitudes were inadvertently caught into voting the contrary of their intentions in regard to the second, while [illegible] their exclusion [illegible] while they supposed themselves voting favorably to them so far as the privilege of coming into the State The adroitness of the trick could only be equalled by its inhumanity, and both indicate an ingenuity and depravity among humans. The greater satisfaction at the frustration of the plot.

A Blow at the Mormons.—A bill to suppress and punish polygamy has passed both Houses of Congress. It imposes a fine of five hundred dollars and imprisonment for not less than one year, for having a plurality of wives. It also provides that no Church in any territory shall own more than fifty thousand dollars' worth of property. We believe the only votes against the bill in the Senate were by the California members, whose interests might be involved by their proximity to the Mormon territory, especially as the overland route to the Pacific lies through that section. What Brigham Young and his supporters will say or do about the [illegible] upon their peculiar institution" remains [illegible]

THE FREED BLACKS AT PORT ROYAL

Sansom Street Hall was well filled last evening with a large and appreciating audience, who had assembled to hear an address from J. Miller McKim, Esq., on the condition of the freed blacks at Port Royal, and to devise some measures for their relief. He commenced by stating that his mission was one of object and inquiry. By the success of our fleet over the forts at Port Royal, our troops were put in possession of nearly all the sea islands of South Carolina The planters fled to the mainland, carrying away with them as much of their property and house slaves as they could, but leaving the plantation slaves and those that were worthless. Besides this, they left vast stores of corn and cotton. The blacks showed themselves so loyal and well disposed that the Government took the idea to employ them at wages to gather the cotton and prepare it for shipment. All such the wages were but nominal, and were much reduced in value by the distribution of slave goods at high rates to the blacks, still they were content. The character of the cotton was the very best, as may be known from a recent sale in New York Of this about 12,000 pounds have reached New York The Government then through Mr Chase both applied itself to the idea to plant another crop of cotton, and of corn, for the coming year, and appointed Mr. Edward L. Price, then a private soldier at Fortress Monroe, general superintendent of the blacks at Hilton Head Schools were to be established, and much other work was to be done. Mr Pierce then went to Boston and raised a number of men and women to go to the work of educating the contrabands at Port Royal. Rev. Mr French also procured a number in New York, most of whom went at their own expense, and without remuneration. Meanwhile, the letters coming from that part of the country created considerable interest in the matter, and a meeting was held to raise means to carry on the work. The appeals of the committee were successful. They succeeded in raising about $5,000 in money, and a large amount of clothing, both new and second-hand, together with a large amount of material ready to be made up. Of the money, about $2,000 was spent in provisions, such as bacon, fish, and molasses. In a short time the most grateful acknowledgments came from Port Royal.

Not getting any information of the minutiæ of events happening there, the committee thought it expedient to send a person to that place, to observe and report to them the condition of affairs there The speaker was the chosen representative, who sailed for that place early in June, and staid some four weeks. There he spoke with many persons, and visited all places which he could visit. From his own experience he would say that the experiment was entirely correct, and that its ultimate success would be inevitable. It was proven in the fact that 14,000 acres of land are under cultivation in cotton, corn, &c., and if there be no severe and unnatural disaster, a crop will be yielded which will furnish such an argument against slavery, and in favor of free labor, that would be irresistible.

All of the slaves left did not work in the fields Many were too old, a great proportion were children, and a large number were at work on the fortifications There were but few implements of labor, and the blacks were indisposed to work on cotton. They would willingly work on corn and sweet potatoes, but cotton was their enemy. They could not eat it, but they could see the value of corn The private soldiers had told them not to work on cotton, and it was here that Mr. Pierce found a great difficulty, but kind words soon won over the negroes, and they soon went to work on the cotton. Another thing was the inexperience of the superintendents and overseers, but notwithstanding all these embarrassments the enterprise has been pushed on almost to completion, and it has been a decided success. If the generals in the field had been as successful in their line as Mr. Pierce has been in his, there would have been but little more of the rebellion to crush Another thing was the strongest professions of happiness by the negroes themselves They have now only the fear of the Secesh coming back, but they have confidence in Mr Pierce and his friends In their own words, they never ran such times before, but they were at most too good to last. Their only fear was a return of their old masters. This fear removed, and they would really be what their old masters rarely proclaimed them to be, "the happiest peasantry on earth"

At the churches, on Sunday, the negroes were taught by the teachers and superintendents to read the simple words of the English language, such as God is love, thou shalt not steal, and such easy moral sentences from the Bible, thus instructing them in reading, and at the same time inculcating the moral principles of Christianity. There they labored without reference to religious creed. No matter how much different their religious belief had been at home, they were there teaching the same truths, and working hand in hand.

The contrabands were neatly and cleanly clothed, many of them with the very articles which the ladies of the relief committee had sent to them. Besides, they rise early, and work hard and industriously. The work they are put at is task work, or, as they call it, "Government work," and when that is finished they hurry to their cabins to work at their own patches. The statement made by Mr. Wickliffe at the New York meeting, that every black man there had another black man or a white man to keep him at work, under the lash, is a gross untruth.

One of the most interesting features of the people were their songs. They are all converses; their roads are canals. When they go from one island to another, they go in boats, and as soon as they commence to row they begin to sing Their boat songs are all looking towards the coming kingdom and the happy Canaan. The only song not in the minor key was a new one which he had heard on going in a boat from Hilton Head to Beaufort, rowed by six stout members of the 1st Regiment of South Carolina Volunteers. [Applause.] A boat was met with others who asked what the new clothes meant. Our men replied, "We're Uncle Sam's chilen', now; none of your field hands; we're Uncle Sam's chilun'." [Laughter and applause.] But the song was of the following order:

"No more driver call for me
No more driver call,
No more driver call for me,
Many a thousand time.
No more fifty lash for me,
No more fifty lash;
No more fifty lash for me,
Many a thousand time."

THE DIFFICULTY.

Where is the difficulty? Not with the open enemies of the truth We know them, we know they hate the truth because it is truth, and no softening or palliating of it will make it acceptable. So far as they are concerned, our simple way is to utter the truth, as clearly and as pointedly as possible. The more what we say hurts and arouses them, the more sure we are that it is the truth, and has been set forth in the right way.

Where is the difficulty? Not with the open friends of the truth. They know its preciousness, and for it are willing to contend, and if need be, to lay down their lives They know how it is hated, how fierce is the war made upon it, how insidious the conspiracies and schemings of those who plot against it, and they feel that its friends must be earnest, untiring, and uncompromising in their advocacy of it. They want unmistakable utterances, a trumpet with no uncertain sound, and they look upon imprudence itself as more venial than timidity.

Where is the difficulty? It is with the secret enemies of truth. They wish to be thought on its side, though they hate it. They disguise their opposition to its essence under pretence of misusing the mode of its utterance by phrase it as you may, so long as the phrase embodies the truth, they will find fault with it.

Where is the difficulty? It is with those who don't know where they stand, or are not willing that others should know. They hide themselves in ambiguities and compromises, and wish others to do so. Earnestness is with them the unpardonable sin, and candor the most shocking of indiscretions

WHO IS BROWNLOW NORTH!

This may reasonably be asked by all who heard the remarkable address, which recently touched the consciences of many in the large audience who listened to Mr. North We therefore place before our readers some facts about him, drawn from reliable sources

His grandfather was the Bishop of Winchester, and brother of Lord North, so long the Minister George III His father had also preferment in the Church of England In early life, Brownlow North was also destined for the Church, but his tastes and pursuits led him to indulge in gaiety, and what the majority of persons consider a life of pleasure In November, 1844, while residing at Dirac Lodge, in the vicinity of Eaton, Mr North, while playing at cards one evening, suddenly felt a sensation as if he were going to drop down dead He rose up and said to his son, "I am a dead man—take me up stairs." His reflection then was, "Where am I to go as soon as I am dead?" a thought which now burst upon him, and I impressed him with his need of mercy. It was a moment of sharp inward conflict, for as he was about to kneel and call upon God for mercy, a maid entered the room to kindle the fire; for a moment he hesitated before her, but through God's grace he did get up, and in her presence threw himself down on his knees and began to call upon God. On the following day he made a public announcement to his friends in the house, and to others by letter, that from that instant he had become a changed man.

For months he strove to find God, and pardon, and peace; after spending hours of the night in earnest supplication, in agony of soul; but it pleased God to give him a view of the righteousness of God in Jesus Christ, and these precious words, "Him that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out," gave him rest, because he perceived that God's truth was pledged to forgive even him, if he believed in His Son.

About a year after this, circumstances quite unsought for by him, drew him out as a preacher; and the vividness of his convictions, the reality of this new life, and his knowledge of the human heart and of God's Word, have wonderfully fitted him for speaking to his fellows. In Scotland he has occupied the pulpits of nearly all denominations, and everywhere crowds wait upon his ministrations. In London, St James' Hall was a witness to the heart-stirring, plain statements of truth in 1860; and in Willis' Rooms, St. James', meetings were commenced for aristocratic circles, to which admission was by ticket, delivered only to such; the streets and squares in the neighborhood were crowded by carriages, and on successive Mondays, Mr. North spoke to these fashionables, the burning words of truth drawn from God's Word. During the last winter and spring, a course of addresses was given in a similar manner in Edinburgh, and we hear that the results are such as to encourage him to similar efforts [illegible] where

We believe Mr Brownlow North still belongs to the communion of the Church of England.

GLADSTONE AND DISRAELI.

I was eager to hear Mr Gladstone, for, by common consent, he is now regarded as the most accomplished orator in England. He is a tall man, long faced, high forehead, large nose, hair brown, scanty, but, what is of it, long. While Sir Stafford was attacking him he sat calmly, with his eyes closed, his feet crossed, and his head bent forward When he rose to speak, he stood by the table, put his right hand frequently behind his back, under his coat, and knocked for emphasis on the table with his left. He moved his body considerably, so that his coat tails were flung about in the manner that Punch delights to record His voice is low, soft, clear, and perfectly audible in every articulation to the most distant galleries His manner is remarkably persuasive. After a few keen thrusts at his antagonist, he assumed the attitude and used the tones of a man thoroughly in earnest, expostulating with a friend. His tones, and gestures, and attitudes, were perfectly natural, and the effect was very fine. The house listened in breathless silence, broken only by sounds of applause The genius of the man was shown by his power to make dry figures and the details of a budget not merely interesting, but fascinating. He never hesitates for the fittest word. His language is chaste and classical. I do not wonder that he will [illegible] influence in England It is quite likely that when Palmerston is no more, Gladstone will be Prime Minister.

Mr Disraeli followed him I was under the impression that he was a rapid and elegant speaker Such is not the case. He utters his words with slow, deliberate, emphatic articulation. No stream issues out, no fountain of inspiration bubbles up, no fiery passion urges—all is cool, self-possessed, but, at the same time, powerful, keen, unhesitating. Disraeli speaking reminds me of a strong man wielding an axe on a cold winter day: every blow tells; the edge is keen and clear, the arm is sinewy, but the work is done without any enthusiasm—without moving the finer feelings or touching on the outmost verge of the sublime or beautiful. You would feel it a relief if Disraeli could speak more rapidly, but you are out in the least afraid of his running dry. In appearance he is younger than I would have expected. Bare-faced, bushy-haired, his Jewish features appear to good advantage. He is a tall and well-built man, and stands erect, and indulges in but few gestures while he speaks

MR BEECHER

A New York correspondent of the Pittsburg Christian Advocate speaks in the following unamiable tone of this gentleman:—

"Rev Henry Ward Beecher has dropped politics of late and gone to billiards. What a reproach on the ministry! He has never time to visit his sick nor bury them if they die, but can go to billiard saloons and spend hours looking at others gambling for stakes of $500 a side, and where hundreds are betting around him on the game of chance. On the third of last month he attended such a billiard match in Irving Hall. The players were Michael Foley, of Ohio, and Dudley Kavanagh, of New York. Mr Beecher's presence was hailed with a burst of applause, and it is said he took great interest in the game Whether he took part in the betting this deponent saith not; but I will venture to say he was not guilty of opening the meeting with prayer Mr. B.'s popularity has waned very much latterly. A few years since his church was too small for the congregation, and they purchased lots and started the project of a new church capable of seating 6000 persons, but the whole affair has entirely fallen through, never to be revived. Even his present house is not filled on ordinary occasions, and at the last pew-letting their receipts fell off over $10,000, thus necessitating a reduction in their minister's salary"

CREEDS

The Chronicle on "The Use of Creeds," discourses thus sensibly

Many are morbidly opposed to creeds, as if they were wrong in principle, as if they were a substitute for the Bible, some mode rule of belief, or something got up on purpose to divide and distract religious people. The times that Christians would all be one if it were not for their belligerent creeds. As it is quite possible that creeds, institutions, foundations, organizations and formularies may in some cases keep persons apart who are in heart and sentiment one. But these are exceptional cases The differences of judgment as to what is Bible teaches preceded the existence of creed Athanasius held different views of Christ at redemption from Arius, Augustine from Pelagius, Calvin from Servetus, and Wesley from Whitfield, before either of these men had embodied his views in a distinct creed As the different conclusions of people were owing to growth of divergent views and reasonings, and not the cause of those divergencies, so in religion, opposing creeds are not the cause but the consequence of the different conclusions to which men come in reading the Bible. Removing the creeds does not make them so; and generally those who are most determined in their efforts to sweep away all the old creeds, dominated by the desire of introducing something they have invented They fight not because they oppose their principles, and cry out against others' articles of faith to make way for their own. Or they make war upon written formularies to give the greater currency to those which are un-written. The sects most zealous in opposing our standard creeds are most of all pertinacious in pressing their own interpretations, judgments, and usages.

Creeds are an expression of religious conservatism, we may add, or they are a means of recording and perpetuating to future ages the results of past labor and investigation. If the past generations had left us nothing of the kind, written or oral, and we had every one to begin anew to work out from the Bible our religious opinions and beliefs, instead of diminishing it would infinitely increase our differences and disputes. There would be as many creeds as there are active intellects to assert their pre-eminence, or ambitious hierarchs to plume themselves with the honors of leadership. Creeds, instead of exasperating divisions, as many suppose, are our great security against their endless multiplication.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Dr. Hamilton, in the following graphic passage, clearly shows that he almost, if not altogether, despairs of any such concessions being made as even moderate and half Dissenters long for.

MOSES, STAND FIRM!

I wish it, I dare hardly say that I hope it. The difficulties of any alteration in a body so composite and heterogeneous as the present Church of England are very great; and even improvements which traverse no principle are met by the grand old English obstinacy. "Eadem ferme, Musæ!" used to be shouted by the boys of Seville when a Hebrew heretic was led to the stake, and when a friar would be thrusting a crucifix into his face. For fear the poor Jew should recant, so that they would lose the amusement of the auto da fe, these young reprobates shouted "Moses, stand firm!" And so cought the enemies of the Church of England to be at this moment exclaiming When Lord Ebury and a few others are trying to popularise the service by suggesting re-arrangements and abridgments, it is to be feared that the heads of the church will resist the improvement; and in that resistance it is the policy of the church's enemies to support them valiantly. "Stand firm, bench of bishops! stand firm, Convocation! Not a single omission, not one word of curtailment. Prayers an hour and twenty minutes long, till your children are nodding, or saying, 'O, what a weariness!'—an hour and twenty minutes long, till the artisan who has been coaxed out to morning worship vows that he will never so be entrapped again. The marriage service, every jot and tittle, from 'Dearly beloved' down to 'amazement,' till you send all the ever-sensitive to be joined together in the registrar's office, or the Dissenting chapel. And, by all means, the damnatory clauses in the Athanasian creed and the excommunication-service on Ash Wednesday; for a little occasional cursing is so comfortable. Steady, bench of bishops! Stand firm, Moses!"

CONVERSION OF A BOHEMIAN VILLAGE.

We are indebted to a Continental journal for the following interesting account of the conversion to Protestantism of a village in Bohemia:

In the Great Mountains there is a Bohemian district called Smail, which wholly professes the Romish religion, and in which no one would suspect the existence of ancient Protestant or Hussite traditions. Nevertheless, in the gorges of the mountains, and in the caverns, may be seen, carved upon the rock, cups, with the initial letters of the sacramental terms of body and blood. This well-known symbol is sufficient to attest that these solitary valleys of old served as an asylum to the disciples of Huss. Here is now situated the little village of Spalov, which numbers forty-three houses, and is inhabited only by poor mountaineers Five leagues separate it from the nearest Protestant place, Kraschnitz. In March, 1860, the pastor of Krischnitz saw two peasants arrive at his modest parsonage. They came from Spalov to announce to him that almost the whole village had decided to forsake Romanism, and to enter into the Lutheran Church M Molnar, (that is the name of the pastor), to prove their resolution, confined himself to pointing out to them the provisions of the law, relative to abjurations. But very soon afterwards they returned with the certificates of the civil authorities in due form. Sixty men and women of Spalov delayed not to enroll their names amongst the Presbytery of Krischnitz. In September took place their solemn abjuration, and their admission into the Church, and on the 9th December of the same year, the first act of public worship was celebrated at Spalov itself, in the house of a peasant, in the midst of a numerous concourse of the Romanists of the neighborhood, who were serious and orderly. The pastor had chosen for his text John viii. 31 and 32. Next day Divine service attracted a still larger number; the Lord's Supper was celebrated, and eight new converts joined themselves to the rising Church. A great number of spectators openly expressed their desire to follow this example. All hearts were full of joy. They could not separate from one another. In the course of the afternoon, the day being serene, the Christians of Spalov assembled together before the house which had offered hospitality to the pastor, and at sunset, men, women, and children all accompanied him for the space of three miles. Since then he has visited them as often as his other duties would permit, and cannot but praise God for the progress which they are making, young and old, in knowledge and in sanctification. The first donation that they received (it came to them from the National Church of Mecklenburg) enabled them to procure for themselves a sufficient number of Bibles and works of edification, and to purchase a communion service.

Spalov will probably be the centre of a Protestant movement, which will propagate itself widely in the Roman Catholic population of the country. It will require a church and a pastor, then a school and a teacher. In a parallel case Rome would have her hands full of gold. Very recently, on the frontiers of Eastern Prussia, she has built eight churches for ten, for fifty, for a hundred Catholics lost in the midst of the Protestants. Protestants will surely not abandon the poor mountaineers of Spalov.—The Missionary Herald.

DENMARK.

Religious Condition of Copenhagen.—Copenhagen presents a large field for missionary labors Many who before were careless, are now inquiring the way to heaven There are a number of laborers of other denominations, who are all preaching in their own peculiar way The city of Copenhagen contains, according to the last census, 155,115 inhabitants, divided as follows:—The Established Church (the Lutheran) numbers 150,119; the Reformed, 331; Roman Catholics, 749; Greek Catholics, 24; Anglicans, 65; Presbyterians 8; Methodists, 7; Moravian Brethren, 1; Herrnhuts, 7; Evangelists, 2; members of the Apostolical Communion, 8; Evangelical Lutheran Free Church, 75; Baptists, 189; Mormons, 200; Jews, 2858; not connected with any denomination, 10; altogether, 155,143 These numerous denominations are the fruits of the religious liberty we enjoy, whereby every man has the privilege to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience.—Chronicle

It is reported that two hundred able-bodied slaves in Maryland, owned by masters in the West River district of Anne Arundel County, have laid down their hoes and refuse to be held in bondage any longer. They offer violence to no one, but they refuse to be compelled to work for others without compensation. This spirit is believed to be spreading among the whole slave population in the State. Slavery may thus abolish itself in Maryland—saving trouble and expense.

The Great Rebellion—Virginia.—THE BATTLE IN FRONT OF RICHMOND.—The following is an official statement of our losses at the battle at Fair Oaks:—

Killed,	980
Wounded,	3627
Missing,	1222
Grand total,	5,829

ORGAN INTERLUDES.

The following we give as a specimen of logic applied to music:

Straws show which way the wind is blowing. Interludes are straws. The musical current tends strongly towards display; hence we find interludes flying in the face of every devout sentiment, and putting our eyes out just when we are beginning to see.

"I don't agree with you about interludes," said Mr. Smith; "the singers need a rest between the verses."

"What do you think Smith says?" said I to a Handel and Hayden Society man. "He says, 'the singers need to take breath between the verses.'"

"Nonsense!" said the Handel and Hayden man. "Just tell those singers that they havn't got breath enough to sing the choruses in our oratorios, a half an hour's matter or more, and see how they'll take it. Stuff! reasons are plenty as blackberries, when we want to follow our inclination The fact is, a simple psalm tune proves nothing, except it be modesty, which isn't to demand; but a voluntary shows that I know a thing or two"

"Queer thing! these voluntaries. I was thinking how funny it would be if they were adopted in prosaic, as well as in poetic speech. I call on my friend Smith, we'll say: 'Good evening, Mr. Smith; well, the current of events moves on; then McClellan is approaching Richmond. (Interlude; I whistle 'Robin Ausir.') Gen. Hunter's proclamation is making some stir The President and his cabinet seem to be not well agreed about it. (Interlude; 'The Fine old English Gentleman.') Fremont's position I don't well understand, nor why he and Banks don't form a coalition with McDowell (Interlude; 'How gently sweet Afton.') The atrocities of the rebels in this war out herod Herod! Who would have believed that slavery had eaten out every feeling of humanity! (Finale; 'Rockaway.'")

"That man's lost his wits," mutters Smith; "or is it a paralysis that he has to throw off by that whistling spasm? He, he, ha! I declare, I do believe he thinks it is pretty!"

J. W. K.

CONGREGATIONAL SINGING IN GERMANY.

The schools in Germany have been great helps to the congregational singing. Very frequently the schoolmaster is also the organist of the congregation. Learning the catechism and singing hymns form part of the regular school exercises. Hymns are committed to memory, and sung to the same melodies used in the church service. Thus singing year after year in the school, trains the children for singing in the congregation. Herein lies the difficulty with respect to our American congregational singing. Sacred music is taught only in rare and exceptional cases, in our common schools. The children may help to sing a few hymns once a week, in the Sabbath School. But the little that might be gained here, is to a great extent lost by the practice of light modernized airs, which we never sing in our church service. The popular Sabbath School music books are a positive injury, a hinderance to the cultivation of church music, just because their trifling sentimental airs beget a distaste in the minds of the young, for solid church melodies. In the German schools they have but one set of hymns for old and young, as they have but one Bible. The hymns they learn and sing in youth, are learned for a life-time, and remain to them a thing of beauty and a joy forever.

The Germans have but few melodies, though many hymns; and as a general rule, always sing the same tune to a hymn. Sometimes they use one tune for a number of different hymns. The tunes are named after the hymn for which they were originally composed. Thus, "Wer nur den lieben Gott lasst walten" is always sung to the same tune, which is named after it. When a hymn is to be sung to its tune, the minister says, "Nach der Melodie, War nur," &c. This reduces their church melodies to a comparatively small number, and simplifies their church music. Our plan is the reverse.—We multiply tunes and tax the patience of old and young in introducing new ones. If every L. M hymn would be sung to Old Hundred, Windham, Luther's Hymn, and Ward, and to no other, how readily all the children could learn to sing L. M. hymns. This is the German plan. The praise of our churches is throttled by incessantly thrusting upon them new tunes. Where this praise-encumbering process is not allowed

The Social Civil and Statistical Association of the Colored People of Pennsylvania open a [illegible] to-night, to hold their [illegible] other points where they may be located, and re[illegible] ask the [illegible] sons and others in this city, or elsewhere, in money or clothing.

Any amount of value received will be acknowledged, with the name of the donor, in the Recorder, where a constant record will be kept.

Subscriptions may be sent to Jacob C. White, at the office of the Christian Recorder, 241 Lombard Street, and also to William Still, 107 North Fifth Street, and to Rev. E. Weaver, 619 Pine Street.

PAID.

Statistical Society,	$50 00
Clinton Miller,	2 00
William Still,	5 00
Robert Adger,	2 00
Henry Madison,	2 00
Catherine Johnson,	2 00
Vasti Locke,	2 00
Wm Warrecke,	2 00
Harriet Shorter,	1 00
Sarah S. Hawkins,	1 00
Rev. Jonathan C. Gibbs,	1 00
James P. Clay,	1 00
Benjamin F Hill,	2 00
S M S.,	2 00
Elizabeth Gordon,	1 00
F. J. Dreer,	5 00

It affords us pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of ten dollars, the proceeds of Miss Anna E. Dickinson's lecture at Concert Hall for the contrabands, contributed to the S. C. and Statistical Association, to be applied as intended. WM. STILL.

Cor. Sec. of S. C. and Statistical Association of the Colored People of Penna.

Domestic Items.

THE GREAT BATTLE OF THE SEVEN DAYS.

By a careful and laborious comparison of the best sources of information, we have endeavored to connect and harmonize the events connected with the movements of the Army of the Potomac, during the fearful battle of the Seven Days!

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 25

At the White House, on Wednesday, matters were progressing as usual, with the exception that there had been a check in the landing of stores of all descriptions, whilst those on the landings were being rapidly loaded in wagons and moved off towards the left flank. Several steamers, with large strings of vessels laden with forage and subsistence, had also been started down the river, with orders to proceed to City Point, on the James river.

This reversal in the course of transportation occasioned considerable comment and speculation, but was ascertained to be the fulfilment of an order direct from Gen. McClellan. So he supposed it to be intended for the supply of Gen. Burnside's army, which rumor said had reached the James river to co-operate with him. An order was also received from headquarters early on Wednesday to prohibit any one from coming forward to the lines on any consideration whatever, unless the parties belonged to the army. This order was so peremptory that even those connected with the press, some of whom had come down to forward their reports by the mail-boats, were prevented from returning, and others, who had smuggled themselves through, were promptly sent back.

On the same day General Casey came down and took command of the small land force, not exceeding 600 men, and in the evening was notified to prepare at any moment for the entire evacuation of the post, and the preservation, so far as practicable, of the public property. Similar orders were also sent to Col. Ingalls. He immediately communicated with the fleet, and a division of men, armed with axes, proceeded during the night to cut down the trees around White House, and subsequently all the way along, above and below the Pamunky bridge, so as to give them free play for the use of their guns. On the same evening we had a report from headquarters that a division of the rebels, the forces of Generals Jackson and General Ewell, were approaching and threatening to open the way by the right flank for a raid on the White House. In the meantime the trains on the railroad were kept running night and day, carrying forward nothing but ammunition and munitions of war, with siege and rocket trains, and field pieces.

The down train of cars due at 7 o'clock on Wednesday evening had not arrived, which added to the excitement among the sutlers and camp followers. At half-past 10 o'clock in the evening, however, the train arrived, bringing down about ninety wounded men, it having been delayed for their accommodation. They were nearly all of Gen. Hooker's division, and had participated in the gallant advance on the left of the centre on Wednesday morning, driving the enemy from their rifle pits, and reporting that they had secured and held what is known as Tavern Hill, an important position commanding the city of Richmond. This is the "important point" alluded to in the despatches of Gen. McClellan, detailing the affair. The entire loss on our side was reported to be about two hundred and twenty wounded and sixty killed. A large number of those wounded were, however, very slight, many of them being able to walk from the cars to the hospital boat. Thus ended the events of Wednesday.

THURSDAY, JUNE 26TH.—DOINGS ON THURSDAY.

The fact that the gunboats had taken position in front of the landing with their guns out and shotted, and the sweeping away of the trees, which was still progressing, gave renewed activity to the rush of camp followers for passes by the mail boat to Fortress Monroe, and our population commenced to be rapidly depleted.

The down train from the front reported all quiet with the exception of certain mysterious movements within our lines that were not understandable to civilians. The immense stock of stores and forage at Dispatch Station, eleven miles from White House, were being carried off with great rapidity, and subsequently we learned that an immense train of wagons had been running from that point all day, with forage and stores, and that the greatest activity in their removal was being observed. In the evening it was announced that not a bale of hay, a bushel of corn, a barrel of beef, or a box of crackers was left.

Throughout the day, at White House, the greatest vigilance was observed in and around the headquarters of General Casey, who had pitched his tents on the beautiful lawn in front of the White House, the building itself being occupied as the private quarters of the Sisters of Charity—and here let me add that it is quite a small building, having not more than six small rooms in it; the outbuildings and servants' quarters being seperate from the residence. An immense train of wagons was also moving forward from the subsistence and commissary department throughout the day, and the immense stocks of stores were being rapidly diminished. The trains on the railroad were still steadily moving forward with ammunition, and continued throughout the night. Cavalry scouts had also been sent out in various directions during the day, and preparations were made for obstructing the roads.

At dusk a new panic was occasioned by the discovery that bales of hay had been piled over and about all the large masses of subsistence stores on the landings, indicating the probability that it might become necessary during the night to apply the torch to them, to prevent them falling into the hands of the enemy.

The reports from the front on Thursday evening continued favorable, heavy skirmishing having taken place on the right, resulting in the repulse of the enemy, and a few more of the wounded arrived, who reported everything progressing most satisfactorily, whilst all the indications were that a general battle along the whole line would take place next day. (Friday.) The trains were kept in motion all night, carrying forward munitions of war, whilst the wagon trains were still lining the roads with commissary stores.

FRIDAY, JUNE 27TH.—FRIDAY'S FIGHT.

Shortly after the close of Thursday's fight, came an order from Gen. McClellan to Gen. Fitz John Porter, directing the withdrawal of his corps to a position two miles this side of Gaines' mill, the ground we now occupy. At three o'clock A M the morning back of the corps, who had been sleeping on their arms all night, began. Gen. McCall, in accordance with instructions, opened with his artillery upon the enemy. The latter thought this the renewal of the preceding day's fight, and returned a vigorous response from their guns. Shot and shell flew in antagonistic direction with dangerous liveliness. Gradually Gen. McCall's troops withdrew, which the enemy naturally mistaking for a victory on their side, caused them to follow on in hot haste. Of course our rear column yielded the ground slowly, the more to make the enemy believe that they were being beaten. Meantime, Gen. Sykes' division led the retreating column, followed by Gen. Morell's division. Along the advance there were but little indications of a retreat, the men moved slowly, and all, ignorant of this backward movement, were anxious to know the cause of it.

THE BEGINNING OF THE GENERAL ENGAGEMENT

Between three and four o'clock the general engagement began. The taking no note of time, as seen from its face, is ordinarily true. There is no taking note of time, however, in the excitement of battle. I was never so astonished as when I looked at my watch and saw it was seven o'clock. There had been three hours of continued heavy artillery and musketry battle; it seemed less than one hour. The air was full of the roar of cannon and musketry, and shouts of the men; moving artillery, and regiments and brigades [illegible] in three hours? No [illegible] manding general, could you catch his ear, might tell [illegible] The sparrow, as it falls to the ground, alone knows the events of those three hours, the names of those whom bullet or shell, or bayonet had called to their final account [illegible] from mortal wounds—those who had been taken prisoners, in short, the fluctuating fortunes of the conflict.

A RESPITE

A respite comes. And now the result of the short engagement is partially revealed. Bodies of the slain lay about in every direction. Burne on stretchers and prostrate in moving ambulances and on the ground are men covered with blood and every wound incident to the battle-field. Dwellings and barns and sheds are converted into temporary hospitals. We hear of officers who have been killed and privates who have bravely met their death in the face of the enemy.

RENEWAL OF THE FIGHT.

The fight was shortly renewed again. It was evident the enemy had been reinforced. They were bolder in their demonstrations, and now came rushing from the woods. Our men were ready to meet them, and again there was desperate fighting, this time more desperate than before. The mutual yells of the men as they advanced to fire upon one another could be heard above the roar of the artillery. This was the most exciting and earnest fight of the day. The cannon let fly grape, shell, and canister; the volleys of musketry were incessant, and dashing charges and counter charges were made with bold impetuosity. No battle was ever more earnestly fought. Officers and men acquitted themselves with great gallantry.

At one time our columns pushed the enemy from their position, and then the latter came back with overwhelming force on our troops. Our men gave way but for a moment. With a yell and a bound they would dash against the enemy. I am satisfied from the recitals of every one that, for deeds of personal daring, no battle of the present war can present more numerous or notable examples. I only regret my inability at present to make their heroism and names known to the public.

ARRIVAL OF REINFORCEMENTS.

As mentioned above, it was evident that the one army had been reinforced. The freshness and vigor of their fighting showed it, and the statements of prisoners confirmed it. They greatly outnumbered us. Only one corps remained to prevent defeat, and that was asking for reinforcements. They were asked for and given. I do not know the exact order of their coming, but before the day's work ended, there had come across the Chickahominy to our aid, General Slocum's division, and Generals Palmer, French and Meagher's brigades, besides two or three departments of cavalry. The fresh arrival gave new impetus to the struggle. The new men, like those they aided and relieved, fought with the courage and desperation of old and well tried veterans. General Meagher's men went into the fight with coats off, and their sleeves rolled up, and fought with the fierceness of tigers. All General Palmer's men wore straw hats. They made these hats visible in the thickest of the fight. Their utility as a mark as night advanced, and the air grew darker, I am afraid lost more than one poor fellow his life. I make signal mention of this brigade, not that they fought better than any others in the fight, but because of their conspicuousness on the field. Duryea's Zouaves, too, were alike conspicuous on account of their uniforms. They fought, as did all the regulars under General Sykes, to whose brigade they are now attached, with undaunted courage.

CLOSE OF THE DAY'S WORK.

The sun went down in brightness and beauty. Its departing rays shed their twilight hues upon the contest of carnage going on. It was half past nine o'clock when the firing ceased, and the day's work of battle was over. We compelled the enemy to retreat, and held the ground we were told to hold. The closing firing was between the enemy and Gen. Smith's division, on our left.

THE STRENGTH OF OUR FORCES.

In the first part of the day only General Fitz John Porter's corps was engaged on our side. His troops, with the reinforcements coming over after it, must have swelled our numbers to about forty-five thousand men.

SATURDAY, JUNE 28

The affair of Saturday partook more of the nature of a battle than the engagements of Thursday or Friday. General Fitz John Porter has covered himself with glory. He selected a very strong position, and, having posted his forces in an admirable manner, was prepared to hold it against any force of the enemy. The brave men of this command all fought with heroic courage, and the volunteers vied with General Sykes' regulars in making steady movements, and carefully executing the commands of their officers.

Time and again, vast hordes of rebels moved up in solid columns upon our troops, but our regular batteries so often mowed them down in a most destructive manner. Slowly discharges of shell, grape, and canister in regular salvos seemed to sweep down whole companies.

As soon as confusion in the rebel ranks was apparent, General Porter ordered General Meagher's Irish Brigade to charge bayonets, which they did in the most gallant and heroic style, bare-headed, in their shirt sleeves, occasionally with three rolled up.

This charge had an excellent effect. The rebels were driven back with great slaughter, and General Porter was preparing to move upon them over the piles of the rebel dead and dying, when the enemy again advanced steadily, strongly reinforced.

Now the Pennsylvanians gave them the benefit of all their splendid rifles, while the batteries played upon them as before, crossing and [illegible] Indeed, the slaughter upon either fields during this war has never been anything to compare to this. The rebels staggered under their losses, and our forces were advancing steadily upon them, driving them back at every point, when a staff officer rode up with an order from the commander-in-chief to Gen. Porter, directing him to fall back with his command, and cross the Chickahominy.

The order was executed in fine style, and our troops did not miss a man, the enemy being too severely punished to follow us closely. The only difficulty was with the Pennsylvania Reserves and Meagher's Irishmen—their commanders asserting all their powers to induce these brave men to cease firing. They saw the advantages gained by hard fighting, and they were anxious to follow up the success.

Four trains of cars, loaded with forage, were ordered to Despatch, on Saturday, but meeting the enemy's pickets on the road, the trains were backed down near the White House, the cars were burned, and the four locomotives were blown up. This was a great loss, but it was enhanced by the destruction of stores, &c., at the White House—everything there being in flames. Elegant ambulances, and loaded baggage-wagons were rolled down to the river bank; and, there being no time to burn them, they were cast into the river.

SUNDAY—JUNE 29.

On Sunday morning the corps of Sumner and Franklin were left in the works at Fair Oaks, with instructions to evacuate and protect the baggage and supply trains on their way to James river. They had hardly left their position, and were falling back on the railroad and Williamsburg turnpike, when the enemy discovered the movement, and immediately started in pursuit with their whole force.

So rapidly did they approach, that our officers had barely time to place their men in position to receive them before they were upon them.

The enemy advanced in an attack about 2 o'clock, which was promptly met by our men. The battle lasted until dark, during which the enemy suffered terribly. They advanced in a solid mass to within a short distance of our artillery, and the effect of our guns on their ranks was fearful. They were killed and wounded by hundreds.

At dark the enemy were repulsed, and forced to abandon their position. This latter took place about one and a half miles above Savage Station.

While the battle was in progress, [illegible] events were transpiring. The railroad bridge over the Chickahominy was burned, and a train of twelve cars, under a full head of steam, was run overboard. All the commissary and quartermaster stores were committed to the flames, together with a large amount of ordnance stores.

The large house at the station, and the adjoining grounds, which were filled with our sick and wounded, whom it was impossible to remove, were left under the charge of our surgeons, with all the necessaries at hand for their comfort. They number about seven hundred, and are now in the enemy's hands.

The troops which had fought the battle of Sunday retreated, under the cover of night, to White Oak Swamp Bridge, a distance of about twelve miles, there to await the approach of the enemy.

Sunday night two gunboats went up the Appomattox river, towards Petersburg, and both got aground. The Island Bota, attacking fast, was abandoned and burned, to save her from falling into the hands of the enemy. She was [illegible]

MONDAY—JUNE 30

The fight of our left wing on Monday, at City Point, was most terrific, the enemy having two or three to our one.

The battle commenced with our land forces, and, after about four hours' fighting, our gunboats got in range, and poured into the rebels a heavy and incessant fire. This fire the rebels stood for about two hours, and then retreated.

Our troops have captured, notwithstanding the disadvantages under which they labored, a large number of artillery pieces and prisoners. The retreat of the enemy was attended with great disorder. Their loss has been very heavy.

In the retreat, many of our sick and wounded were necessarily left behind.

Each side took guns and large numbers of prisoners. Among those taken from the enemy are, Col. Lamar, of Georgia, ex-M. C., the noted secessionist of long-standing, and Col. Pondimon, of a Louisiana regiment, formerly of Cincinnati. A whole brigade was captured by Heintzelman—a small brigade, 1,600 strong. Perhaps three thousand were taken during the day.

The loss of the enemy in killed and wounded alone yesterday (Monday) is said not to have been less than four thousand.

The Richmond Examiner says it thinks that "the division which went into the fight on Monday fourteen thousand strong, could only muster six thousand men for duty, and that the loss of life exceeds that of any battle or siege yet fought." It adds, "The conflict was terrible, and by half-past 8 o'clock the enemy had been driven a mile and a half. At half past 9 o'clock, the enemy, being heavily reinforced, made another stand. The loss on our (the rebel) side was terrible. The situation being evidently powerless against such overpowering forces, Gen. Hill slowly retreated, amid the vociferous cheers of the Yankees."

Stonewall Jackson is undoubtedly killed.* The Richmond Despatch announces his death. He fell while leading a charge of two rebel divisions. He never appeared on the battle-field in full uniform, but always led his troops into action in person, after forming them and giving instructions to subaltern officers.

His first practised the "rebel relief" system of fighting—relieving those under fire with fresh troops ALWAYS after ten rounds had been delivered. In this way he kept his small army fresh. He was opposed to delay in attacking an enemy, and thought men should always be taken immediately into action after marching to the position of the enemy.

He obtained the sobriquet of "Stonewall" at the battle of Bull Run. During that affair General Lee asked him "if his brigade had not better retire under the heavy fire they were sustaining?" "No, sir," said General Jackson; "I will stand here like a stone wall!"

He graduated with high honors in the same class with McClellan just as the Mexican war broke out, immediately entered service with Gen. Scott as a brevet lieutenant, and was made full lieutenant for gallant conduct in the memorable campaign from Vera Cruz to Mexico.

As for his outer man, he looks at least seven years older than he is; his height about five feet ten inches; his figure thick-set, square-shouldered, and decidedly clumsy; his gait very awkward, stooping and rather long strides. He often walks with his head somewhat on one side, and his eyes fixed upon the ground, imparting to his whole appearance that abstracted quality which a young ladies describe as "absent-minded." A lady who has known him long and well has told me that she never saw him on horseback without laughing—short stirrups, knees cramped up, heels sticking out behind, and chin on his breast—a most unmilitary phenomenon. In society he is quiet, but cheerful, not loquacious, but intelligent and shrewd; in religion the bluest kind of a Presbyterian, and extremely strict in his church observances. In Winchester he took a very active part in revivals, and habitually led the Union prayer meetings.

Such is the rebel Napoleon, for whom his people venture to claim that in four weeks he has marched three hundred and fifty miles and won four victories; that he has crippled or dispersed the forces of Milroy and Schenck at Luray, and McDowell and Banks at Front Royal and Winchester, Fremont at Cross Keys, and Shields at Port Republic; that he holds Mallowell in check to take care of Washington and Maryland, and monopolizes, for the amusement of the world, the attention of six distinguished Generals.

When lately he fell back to Winchester from pursuing Banks, he said to the people there, "When we left you last March we promised to return, and here we are. Now, with much more confidence, we promise to return again, and soon. Only be prudent and patient."

And to the women: "When the Union troops come in again, as they will, do not forget your aprons."

The surgeon of one of the Indiana regiments and two of his brother officers were captured by Ashby's cavalry, and taken Lafayette Jackson. Immediately on hearing their names, he said, "It was you, gentlemen, who lately saved the property of a dear friend of mine in the valley from the fury of your own men. I thank you. Have you any means of transportation back to your regiment?"

"We have not, General."

He then gave them horses, an escort and one hundred dollars, and then courteously dismissed them on their parole.

General Rhett was also killed.

A force from the gunboats landed at City Point, and burned the place, together with the wharf and adjacent warehouse, which had been used as shelter by the rebel sharpshooters to annoy boats on their passage up the river.

TUESDAY, JULY 1ST.

The fight was renewed early on Tuesday morning by the enemy, who evidently expected to crush our army. It lasted about three hours, resulting in considerable loss to both parties. The enemy then returned, leaving the field to our troops. They again advanced about 3 o'clock, P. M., in considerable force, but retired after being shelled by the gunboats and artillery for about two hours, without coming near enough for the use of musketry.

The loss of our army during these seven days' engagements is not known, but twenty thousand is considered as near an estimate as can, at present, be given in killed, wounded, and missing. Many of these at present unaccounted for may have straggled away through the country, and may hereafter return.

The loss of the enemy in killed must have been very heavy, far exceeding that of our army.

We have taken about seven hundred prisoners, among whom are three commissioned colonels and one major.

The use of field artillery during the seven days amounted to about thirty guns.

The army is now encamped, on Tuesday evening, three miles north west of Haxall's Landing, on high, rolling ground, on the banks of the James river, fifteen miles from Richmond. The transports at once began unloading supplies at the wharves.

Opinion of General McClellan.—The Commanding General felt confident of successfully meeting any attack that the enemy might make on his present position. The moving of the army over to James river was not a part of the general plan, as has been stated. The attack of Jackson's forces on the right, last Thursday and Friday, made this movement a necessity, in order to save the army from total annihilation, as the reinforcements received by the rebels gave them a force double that of the Army of the Potomac.

Among the prisoners taken during the battle were a number belonging to Beauregard's army.

Our brave troops drove the enemy before them. We captured a large number of prisoners and took several guns, and in every respect won the day.

"At 8 o'clock, on Tuesday, Jackson and Huger's divisions attacked General McClellan's left flank on the west bank of the Chickahominy, 17 miles from Richmond. Later in the day, General Magruder fell upon his right flank. Fighting was going on up to nine o'clock on Tuesday night. Heavy firing from the gun-boats on James river was heard on Tuesday morning. A number of Federal transports are in the river with reinforcements from General Burnside, but they have not yet landed."

The above extract from the Examiner relates to Tuesday's battle, in which, according to Gen. McClellan's despatch, the rebels were badly whipped.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 2D.

General McClellan, in conference with Commander Rogers of the Galena, Flag-Officer of the James River flotilla, having selected Harrison's Bar as the location of the new base, yesterday, the army commenced the very difficult undertaking of withdrawing to that position.

Tuesday was raining and the weather was disagreeable. By night the entire army was in the position selected, and as vantage ground. About as General McClellan said, it will be able to hold against almost any force for any length of time. The position is one of great natural beauty, and by the co-operation of the gunboats. The position cannot be flanked, by no matter how superior the force, while in front no attacking force can approach without encountering the combined fire of the army and navy.

Supplies of all kinds, and in abundance, had arrived, and the entire army was in the best possible spirits, encouraged for a renewal of the conflict. The position where the army is now encamped is between eight and ten miles below City Point (on its opposite side,) and about 27 miles from Richmond. This increased distance between the army and Richmond, on what it was believe, to the measure of loss resulting from the withdrawal.

From prisoners it is gathered that the loss of the rebels cannot be much short of 30,000, while, from all causes—killed, wounded, prisoners, and missing—ours, it is believed, will not exceed 10,000. The enormity of the rebel force is established, and it could not have been much if any less than 200,000.

While the army exhibits nothing approaching to demoralization, [illegible] wish[illegible] pected to assume the offensive without reinforcements.

* The latest reports contradict this

The James River is filled with vessels and steamers, most of them upward bound with stores and supplies. Upward of twenty gunboats are in the vicinity of Harrison's Landing, whose water armament is probably 75 guns of the heaviest description.

Gen. McClellan's first business will be to entrench himself, and for this work supplies of tools have been forwarded. The mails will be forwarded regularly.

Gen. Shields' army arrived at Fortress Monroe on the morning, and proceeded up the James River. They now lie in reach the Peninsula. They reached McClellan on Wednesday.

From Washington on Wednesday night, the sky in the direction of Richmond was illuminated for several miles in extent. An illumination of the city, in honor of a victory was the explanation most generally accepted.

THURSDAY, JULY 3D.

There was no fighting before Richmond on Wednesday, nor on Thursday up to 5 o'clock in the afternoon. Everybody will be glad to learn that the worn-out soldiers of the Union have this much time for rest. Six days of fighting and marching, in hot weather, through swamps and over dusty roads, is enough to wear out an army of giants. It is evident that the enemies has been completed by our new position, sheltered as it is by the gunboats. Though the rebels have suffered terribly, they have still an overwhelming advantage in numbers, and could have brought into the field many more divisions of fresh troops; but these terrible shells from the Galena, co-operating with the scarcely less dreadful fire of our land artillery, were too much for even the recklessness with which their desperate leaders pressed their six days' battle. They meant to crush our army by sheer force of numbers, wearing us out by incessant attacks in superior force.

As a fitting close to the details we have systematized, we give the

Address of General McClellan to his Army, on the 4th of July

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, CAMP NEAR HARRISON'S LANDING July 4th, 1862.

SOLDIERS OF THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC:—Your achievements of the last ten days have illustrated the valor and endurance of the American soldier. Attacked by superior forces and without hope of reinforcements, you have succeeded in changing your base of operations, by a flank movement, always regarded as the most hazardous of military expedients. You have saved all your material, all your trains, and all your guns, taking in return guns and colors from the enemy.

Upon your march you have been assailed day after day with desperate fury by men of the same race and nation, skilfully massed and led.

Under every disadvantage of numbers, and necessarily of position, also, you have in every conflict beaten back your foes with enormous slaughter.

Your conduct ranks you among the celebrated armies of history.

No one will now question that each of you may always with pride say, "I belong to the army of the Potomac."

You have reached this new base complete in organization and dominated in spirit.

The enemy may at any time attack you. We are prepared to meet them. I have personally established your lines. Let him come, and we will convert our repulse into a final defeat.

Your Government is strengthening you with the resources of a great people.

On this our national birthday we declare to our foes, who are rebels against the best interests of mankind that this army shall enter the capital of the so-called Confederacy, that our National Constitution shall prevail, and that the Union, which can alone insure internal peace and external security to each State, must and shall be preserved, cost what it may in time, treasure, or blood.

GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN,
Major General Commanding.

Brighter Prospects.—TUESDAY, July 8.—McClellan is everywhere pushing the enemy back and advancing his lines. Reinforcements are now being forwarded to him as fast as possible. Burnside is marching to his relief, and in a few hours Pope will be moving Southward with an invincible army of one hundred thousand men. The cause of the rebellion is upon us, and the people and the Government are fully aware of the great emergency. Richmond depends upon the reinforcement of McClellan. When he moves upon it, he will lead forward an army of five hundred thousand veterans. The strategy of McClellan is every where developing. That rebellion which was likened to a hydra-headed monster at first, is now found to have but one head, and that is at Richmond. In a few hours three of our ablest commanders will be thundering at three gates of Richmond.

Vicksburg.—Vicksburg has probably fallen, and the Mississippi is free, and of course belongs to the American people. Davis and Farragut have done it, and in accomplishing this great work have cut the rebellion in twain!

Good News from McClellan!—Fortress Monroe, July 5.—Fresh troops arrived here from Washington yesterday, and went up the James river in the evening.

Four small steamers, with four barges in tow, arrived at Fortress Monroe this morning, laden with artillerymen, horses, &c., and were doubtless bound up the river.

A skirmish took place, yesterday morning, near our left wing, which resulted in the defeat of the rebels. We took one thousand rebel prisoners, and three small batteries, and our cavalry followed them up till they passed beyond White Oak.

For the last two days the rebels have shown little disposition to fight, and yesterday relinquished their ground and batteries almost without resistance.

Pacific Railroad Bill.—On Friday the Senate, by a vote of 33 to 5, passed this bill, with some amendments in which the House concurred. The main route which it fixes, is to commence at a point on the 100th meridian of longitude, within the territory of Nebraska. Of the branches one commences at Sioux City, another at another point on the western boundary of Iowa, which will probably be at or near Omaha City, or the mouth of the Platte River, both of these branches to be constructed by the Union Pacific Company, which constructs the main road. The Kansas branch, commencing opposite Kansas City, is to be constructed by a Kansas company, and with this branch the Hannibal and St. Joseph road is authorized to form a connection. The main road is to run by the most direct and practicable route, the location subject to the approval of the President. The bill grants the credit of the government to the company for the sum of sixty-five millions for forty years, and when the road is completed, a portion of the public lands on each side of the track. Private capitalists and enterprise are expected to do the rest. The length of road contemplated by the bill is 2,425 miles. The construction of this road is one of the greatest undertakings of the age, and will develop the resources of the vast country through which it will pass. All along the route hundreds of villages and cities will spring up, and it is probable that in twenty years' time the population between the Sierra Nevada and the Pacific will bear a handsome comparison, in numbers, with the present inhabitants of the Free States. It will also tend to bind the Union closely together, and consolidate the Atlantic, Pacific, and intermediate States by the strongest commercial and other ties.

BOARDING
IN BROOKLYN.

MRS. S. PLANT (formerly Richardson) respectfully announces that she has opened a first class BOARDING & LODGING HOUSE at No. 97 HIGH STREET, Brooklyn—where she is prepared to accommodate the public on the most reasonable terms.

Her house being located in a very pleasant part of the city, and within five minutes' walk of Fulton Ferry, is made thus a very desirable and convenient place.

BOARDING.

Mrs. AMIA WILLIAM, of Cape May, will open the Banker House for the season, for the accommodation of all who wish to spend the season there, and she will spare no pains to make all comfortable. Those wishing to spend one, two, or three days, will find the Banker House the right spot. Prices very reasonable. 1-sp4t

COAL, STOVES, &c., &c.

The subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally that he has taken the store,

NO. 107 NORTH FIFTH STREET,

formerly occupied as the Anti-Slavery Office, (where he has been engaged for the last fourteen years,) to occupy it hereafter as a place of business for the sale of

COAL, STOVES, &C.

Having made arrangements with one of the first Coal Dealers in the city, to furnish the best qualities of Lehigh, Schuylkill, &c., at the lowest Cash prices, he hopes to give full satisfaction in this branch of his business.

He will also keep constantly on hand a general assortment of good NEW and SECOND-HAND STOVES, FURNACES, &c.

Persons wishing Stoves taken down, stored away, put up, or cleaned, can be promptly accommodated by applying as above.

He hopes by energy and strict attention to business to obtain a fair and equal patronage.

WM STILL,
107 North Fifth Street, Philadelphia

REFERENCES

J M McKim,	Dr Casper Wister,
[illegible]	James Mott,
Dickson Parrish,	Thomas Whitemarsh,
Prof A D Cleveland	W H Burleson.

Advertisements.

THE DAUGHTERS OF HOPE GRAND UNION Temperance Society met, it being the thirteenth anniversary, April 10th, 1861. Representatives from Lodges are as follows:—

From Garnet Union No 4, D. of T., from Phœnix Union, No. 8, D. of T.; from Northern Union, No. 16, D. of T. Webb's Union, of Chambersburgh, Pa. from Dr Bias' Union, of Carlisle, Pa.; from Mount Olive Union, No. 19, D. of T.; from Vankrekin Union, No. [illegible] D. of T., of Norristown, Pa.

Officers installed to their several positions are as follows:—

Grand P., Sister Bennet; Grand Associate, Sister Burris; Grand Treasurer, Sister Fawcett; Grand Conductress, C. Thompson; Grand Sentinel, A. E. Dorhart; Grand Chaplain, Sister Hall

G. P. P., Sister E. Roberts. G. P. P. Sister Anderson,
" " E. Bowles, " " J. J. Bias,
" " M. H. Beaney, " " E. A. Clark,
" " S. Simmons, " " White,
" " S. Davis, " " S. Hall.

THE DAUGHTERS OF CORNISH SOCIETY.

THE STATED QUARTERLY MEETINGS of the Society are held on the first Wednesdays of February, May, August, and November.

The meetings of the Board are held on the Wednesday previous to the regular stated meetings of the society.

Mrs. SARAH CARTER,
President.
Mr. L. R. SEYMOUR, Sec'y.

THE BOOK DEPOSITORY
OF THE
AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH,
No. 619 Pine Street,
PHILADELPHIA.

We keep on hand, in connexion with our other books, a full [illegible] Catechisms, Question Books, Catechisms, Nos. 1, 2, and 3. We have a good assortment of such books as are generally used in the Public Schools. Also, Stationery, Inks, Pens, Paper, Envelopes and Blank Books.

THE DEATH-BED OF THE REV. JOHN WESLEY.

Wanted Canvassing Agents for this splendid farm engraving which should be in every house of an admirers of that great and good man. The most liberal inducements are offered to those selling this print. Send for Catalogue and Instructions.

WM SMITH Proprietor.
1102 South Third Street, Philadelphia

WANTED.—The charge of a Public School. Reference as to ability can be given. Apply to J. W. A., 1641 Belmath St.

ONE-PRICE CLOTHING.
OF THE LATEST STYLES,

Made in the Best Manner, expressly for RETAIL SALES. Lowest Selling Prices marked in Plain Figures. All Goods made to order warranted satisfactory. One-Price System is strictly adhered to. All are thereby treated alike. JONES & CO.,
Dec25-1y 604 MARKET STREET

GOOD NEWS

To Ladies Dressmakers and to those wishing to make their own dresses or make the materials, plain, figured, or large bombazine, can learn to cut and fit perfectly, [illegible] Dresses, Boys' and Men's Pants, Vests, Jackets, Coats and Over coats

Local and Travelling Agents Wanted.

Address [illegible]
Care of Wm. Wood & Co.,
Publishers, Chicago, Ill.

(Or apply to Mrs Mary C. Weaver, wife of the Editor of this paper.)

MRS. E A. PALMER'S
DRY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS STORE.
NO 105 NORTH FIFTH STREET.
PHILADELPHIA

A General Assortment of Hosiery, Trimmings, Dry Goods, &c

Dress, Shirt making, and Plain Sewing, promptly attended to. Jan18—1y

COAL! COAL!! COAL!!!

The subscriber is selling the best qualities of Lehigh and Schuylkill Coal at the following very low prices

Lehigh Stove Coal, per ton	$5 25
" Egg "	5 00
" Broken and Screened, per ton,	5 00
" Nut "	5 00
[illegible] Coals, and Lime and Cement for sale if ordered.

Orders left at the Store Room, No. 107 North Fifth St., will be promptly attended to. WM STILL.
Jan5—1y 107 N. Fifth St., Philada.

KEELY'S PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY
E. W. corner Fifth and Coates.
PICTURE GALLERY AND ROOMS ON THE FIRST FLOOR.

Strangers should not fail to call and examine.
Admission Free.

JAMES DOWNS,
DEALER IN
NEW AND SECOND HAND
CLOTHING,
No 225 South Second Street.
No. 17—3mo. PHILADELPHIA

WILLIAM STILL'S
STOVE STORE,
107 NORTH FIFTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

The subscriber would respectfully inform his friends and all in want of good stoves, that he has now on hand a great variety of superior PARLOR COAL and CHAMBER STOVES, including Gas burning, as well as other patterns, which he is selling at very low rates. He buys entirely for cash, of the best wholesale furnishers, and of course can sell much cheaper than those buying on the usual credit system. At any rate his friends are invited to give him a call and examine for themselves before purchasing elsewhere, as he feels that they would be convinced that it would be to their interest to give him their patronage. Coal meters constantly on hand. WM STILL.

JOSEPH H. COLE,
CONTINENTAL RESTAURANT,
NO. 717 LOMBARD STREET, PHILA.,
(Above Seventh St., under Philadelphia Institute.)

Where he continues to keep always on hand the very best assortment of OYSTERS and other refreshments hoping that all his friends and the public in general will favor him with their patronage.

☞ Meals served at all hours. Families supplied with Oysters of the best quality and flavor at the shortest notice.

☞ Also, public and private waiting done on the most reasonable terms. 1y

Mrs. S. Downes Hawkins
HAS NOW OPENED
NEW SPRING GOODS,
consisting of Bolaines, Brilliants, Calicoes, &c. Hoop Skirts of all sizes, from 15 cents to $1 25. A large lot of linen Hdkfs., from 8 to 25 cents. Also, cheap Hosiery and Gloves.

N. B.—Mantuamakers are invited to examine my assortment of Dress trimmings of the latest styles, as will be sold cheap for cash at the Old Establishment,
615 Lombard Street

THOMAS CHARNOCK,
GENERAL FURNISHING UNDERTAKER,
NO 427 SOUTH 6TH ST.,
Second Door Below Bethel Church.

Horses and carriages with every requisite for the business furnished at the shortest notice, and on the most reasonable terms.

The undersigned, in returning his sincere thanks for the liberal patronage bestowed upon him for the past seven years, would inform his friends and the public that he has taken the store recently occupied by Mr. Wm. Gibbons, No. 427 South 6th street, where he will be pleased to receive a call from all who may favor him with their patronage. Having had a long experience in the business, he flatters himself that he will be able to give satisfaction to all who may favor him with a call.

May19-1y

For the Christian Recorder

BUCKS COUNTY SS TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS MAY COME.

I, the subscriber, a Justice of the Peace, in and for the county of Bucks, do hereby certify that I am acquainted with Jonathan Johnson, Quaker, Bucks County, who was married to Samuel Johnson, who was married before William Hawk, Esq., of Bristol, Bucks County, as appears by record on his docket, and after careful examination and mature reflection, I feel myself fully safe in saying that the said Johnson had a wife living at the time he married the said Emily Rodney; and further say that I have the evidence of Daniel Kenderdine, [illegible] preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Charles Emmons, (Class leader) and Benjamin Cummings, (who is colored) that he had one or more wives living at the time he married the said Emily Johnson, and the evidence, on affirmation, of the said Emily Johnson, that he had a wife living at the time she married him, which at the time she married him, she had no knowledge of.

Affirmed and entered before me, May 6th, 1862. } her
Wm Blakey, J. P. } Emily X Johnson, mark.

REV. LEWIS S. LEWIS'
FAMILY LINIMENT
IS PREPARED WITH GREAT CARE,
EXPRESSLY FOR FAMILY USE.

Its composition is very simple, containing nothing that is injurious in any form, and there is no danger in its use from exposure to the weather. No family should be without it. Having a wish to benefit mankind in general, and those afflicted in particular—and having had recourse to the article in several cases of rheumatism, bunions, chilblains, and other lameness, it proving to be a remedy in every case—I therefore recommend it to the public.

CERTIFICATES.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov. 27, 1861

Rev. L. S. LEWIS—Dear Sir: I have been afflicted with the rheumatism eleven years, during which time I tried almost everything, but received no cure relief. For the last four months my limbs and joints were so swollen, that at times I could not walk or use my slippers. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and at the first application was instantly relieved. After using one or two bottles, I was enabled to enjoy the free use of my limbs. ANTHONY RANDOLPH

NEWPORT, R. I., October 29, 1861.

Rev. L. S. LEWIS—Dear Sir: I have been affected for a number

EL DORADO

BY SALLIE SHIDDER.

'Twas autumn noon! beneath a lofty oak
Idly I dream'd upon the hill-side green;
And all around nature's golden veil of light
Had shed a glory o'er the harvest scene.

Below there spread a field of ripened corn,
Half reap'd, half waving in the passing breeze,
Waiting a couch within the empty barn
That stood with drowsy team 'neath neighb'ring trees.

The farmers, weary of their mid-day toil,
Had homeward turned their eager steps to find
Home welcome rest around the groaning board,
Leaving their graceful sheaves and me behind!

And farther off, the sparkling, jewell'd belt,
The river shone where stately ships went by,
While snowy sails, through clefts of verdure seen,
By fleecy clouds seem'd married in the sky.

The balmy air just stirr'd the yellow grain,
And save the cattle's low, no sound arose,
But now and then an insect's droning chirp,
To stir the silence of the day's repose!

And floating downward thro' my leafy screen,
A single ray, like Jacob's ladder seemed,
That upward reached to heavens of far off years,
Where phantoms of the past like angels gleamed.

Hours that come no more, and hopes long gone,
The mem'ries of lost loves, and friendships dead,
Pale ghosts of passionate meetings and farewells,
The shadows of old dreams and tales oft read!

But most these last, for from my listless hand
Had dropp'd the book my thoughts long linger'd o'er,
A stirring chronicle of times gone by,
What men believed and did in days of yore.

Strange stories of the sea, and legends wild,
As this one by the ancient Arabs told,
Of Satan's hand outstretching from the wave
To grasp the ship whose venture was too bold.

And those long cherished fables of the west,
The Golden City and the Fount of Youth;
And all the list of brave, heroic men,
That died in searching for their trusted truth.

Till mine own fancy, set aflame by dreams
Of wonders hidden 'neath the Southern Cross,
In secret forests of that gorgeous land,
Stayed not of life and hope to count the loss.

Saw only two brave Walters proudly sail,
From shores whose giant queen bade each "God speed,"
And "were them in her heart," while outward bound,
Their fearless minds to danger gave no heed.

Foretting all the while a foreign grave,
Where Raleigh's son slept 'neath a tropic sky—
Whose sire's last words were on a scaffold spoke—
"So hearts be right, what matter how heads lie?"

For all my thoughts were busy with the tale
Of that old Spanish sailor, who alone
Had walked thro' El Dorado's gilded streets,
And seen the Inca on his ivory throne!

Till in my vision I arose and passed
Thro' opening ranks of plumed and bowing grain,
That, like an army of raised dead, closed up,
With warning whispers that the quest was vain.

And at the river's edge I found a ship
That swiftly bore me over distent seas;
Until the waters freshened 'neath the keel,
The suits were wafted by a scented breeze.

And up a wid'ning stream, upon whose shore
Panthers and serpents, birds and lilies drank,
As once in Eden, by Euphrates' wave,
Untamed, untrained, they shar'd the same green bank.

Until at last we anchored in a lake,
Bearing an emerald island on its breast,
Wherein a marble structure stately rose,
Whose open gate seemed waiting for a guest.

In front a fount of liquid gold sprung up,
In jewelled basin sparkling still to fall;
And just beyond its porphyry columns, rose,
Strewn o'er with precious dust, the palace hall.

Within four gorgeous lamps burned, day and night,
Before an altar, whereon dazzling shone
A burnish'd, golden sun, whose glowing rays
Circled the Emp'ror on his ivory throne.

In silver robes the people of the land
Bowed over down before their hidden king,
And each received a priceless crown, whose hand
The tribute of a crystal heart could bring.

A stranger 'wildered by the flashing light,
I turned aside where other galleries led,
Where pictures hung whose colors were of gems,
And topaz stars lit sapphire domes o'erhead.

Thro' piles of ingots and an India's wealth,
That no sun sunshine caused our useless feet;
I reached the entrance of the Goldsmith's street!

I cannot tell the lustre and the wealth
That dazzled all my senses in a maze,
The sudden blindness struck my wond'ring sight,
In one swift flashing of a diamond's blaze.

And stung with pain I strained my smarting eyes,
Still darkened by the brightness of the stone,
Till, from the veiled glories of a dream,
Came recognition of a scene well known.

The waving corn, the river winding past,
The shining scythes, the empty, waiting wain,
And the great tree, thro' whose thick clustered leaves
A noonday beam, straight darting, made my pain.

While pondering o'er the meaning of my dream,
I raised the book, and on its open page
The rare, quaint author had his moral writ,
Anew'ring my thoughts in warning to his age:

"Lost, lost, forever lost the old belief
In golden quests, that lured men o'er the seas!
Yet, readers dear, still keep an earnest faith
In distant mysteries more rich than these.

"For still the eternal fount of life and youth
Flows pure and fresh from out the great, white throne,
And still the gilded city waits for guests,
Whose streets are gold, whose walls are precious stone.

"And but one mortal, Christ's beloved John,
Has seen this El Dorado's priceless state,
Wherein no sunlight but God's glory shines,
And ever open stands each pearly gate.

"O! weary wanderer through a desert world,
See that the heart be crystal clear from sin
That lay'st before thy Sov'reign's dazzling throne,
That, crown'd with light, thy soul may dwell therein!"

CALENDAR FOR JULY.

KITCHEN AND FRUIT GARDEN

It is a luxury to see things grow now. The change is visible from day to day. The peas are in their glory, the beans blossoming, the tomatoes full of green fruit, and the corn beginning to tassel. Follow up every department of the garden with the hoe and the watering pot. Make the most of the sick spout and other sources of liquid manure. Water newly set trees, and dwarf pears and grapes, keeping the mulch moist. Nothing will swell the fruit like liquid manure. Keep down the weeds and [illegible]. We may as well have two or three crops as one.

Asparagus—The cutting season is over, and the plants should be stimulated, to repair the damage of the repeated cropping. Clear of weeds and give a good dressing of stable manure or compost, an inch or two thick.

Beans—Gather for use as they fill. Early beans may still be planted for a late crop of string beans, or for seed. They make an excellent pickle.

Beets may still be planted for winter use. Hoe frequently, and thin to eight or ten inches in the row. They bear transplanting as well as a cabbage. Any surplus will be good for the cow and pigs, if not for greens.

Blackberries—Tie the new shoots to the trellis or stakes. Shorten in the main stem and branches to help the forming of fruit buds, and pull up small canes unless you wish to multiply them. Branches heavily laden with fruit should be carefully and securely tied up.

Cabbage and Cauliflower—Still sow and transplant for late crops. There is always a large home market for these and for turnips. If the stumps are left where the heads are cut for table use, a large amount of succulent food will grow for fall feeding.

Celery—Transplant until the last of the month for late crop. Hoe and water often. The more water the better, if there is good drainage. The excellence of this vegetable depends upon rapid growth.

Corn—Still plant sweet corn for late use, and for drying. What is not wanted for the table, will find a ready market in the pig and cow yards.

Cucumbers may be planted for pickling. Guard against insects, and hoe and water until the vines cover the ground. Pickled cucumbers with good cider vinegar are wholesome, used in proper quantities.

Currants—Gather as they ripen, and eat freely every day, from the bush and for dessert. They are one of the best safeguards against fevers and summer complaints. They should be ripe for jellies, and fully matured for wines and preserves. The bushes may be pruned, cutting out old woods as soon as the fruit is gathered. The juice preserved and bottled, makes the basis of a refreshing beverage. This fruit is so easily grown and is so healthful that every farmer should have a full supply. Watch against the currant aphis, scale, and the borer.

Egg Plants—Keep well hoed, and forward by stimulating manure, lest the frost cut them off.

Espaliers, or trees trained to trellises, or against walls are ornamental and more productive. They need to be pinched in, and where that has been neglected, superfluous woods should be cut out. Thin the fruit where much has set. Size and quality will both be improved.

Gooseberries are by far too rare in the farmers' garden. The first pickings make good sauce and pies. The later are fair eating, from the bushes and at dessert. Keep mulch around them to prevent mildew.

Grapes—Continue to thin out and pinch back the shoots. Thin the bunches to one or two on a shoot. One gives the best fruit. A crop is frequently spoiled by the inexperienced, by leaving too much fruit to ripen. Also thin the bunches, removing small and imperfect berries. Keep the border free from weeds and all other crops. Grapes are enough for one piece of ground. Mulching and liquid manure are beneficial, until the fruit begins to turn. In summer pruning, the new shoot that is to bear the fruit should be left to grow, until it is two or three leaves beyond the last bunch. From two to four bunches will set on a shoot if the vines are vigorous. Nip off the shoot at the third leaf beyond the last bunch, as soon as the berries are of the size of small peas. If the vines are young, not more than one bunch should be left to mature. In old vines two may be left, the lowest bunches. The uppermost bud is the axil of the last leaf will soon start. This should be left to grow a while, and then be pinched off, leaving but a single leaf. The bud by this leaf will start after a little while, and the pinching process is to be repeated. At the base of every leaf-stalk such shoots (called "laterals"—by the Germans "thieves") may start, and if allowed to grow, will destroy the main bud, which forms at the base of each leaf. Treat them as directed for the leading bud. Pinching in the laterals ensures well matured buds for the next year's fruit, and though the process involves considerable labor, it secures the most perfect grapes.

Herbs—The best are dried in the shade, and preserved in boxes that will hold their aroma. Cut while in bloom.

Hoeing is a substitute for manure and water, and is always in order, until the plants cover the ground.

Insects require the constant attention of the gardener. They are alike destructive to fruits and vegetables, and should be trapped by all possible methods. Study their habits and experiment to destroy them. Encourage the presence of birds, toads and chickens. After this month chickens will do little harm in the garden, and will live mainly upon insects.

Lettuce is very refreshing at this season, and should be much more generally used than it is. Grow the kinds that head well, and still plant for a succession.

Manure all backward plants by top-dressings and manures in solution. You can drive a plant as easily as a pig, if you only know how. With plenty of manure, there is no need of a lagging garden. A shovelful of poultry droppings dissolved in eight gallons of water will make a good permasive to all reluctant plants.

Melons—Cultivate as cucumbers. Put a board or flat stone under them as they grow large.

Onions—Weed and cultivate without drawing the dirt around the bulbs. If the maggot troubles the plants, try a weak solution of oil soap, say a pound to eight gallons of water. Apply with a watering pot. Thin the plants, if you desire very large onions. Seed may still be sown to provide very small bulbs for planting next spring.

Peas—Sow for late use, if your vines do not mildew late in the season, and if you desire peas amid the profusion of autumn fruits and vegetables. We have never found late peas very much appreciated. Save the best pods for seed, and pick as soon as dry. Clean up the pea ground as soon as the vines grow yellow, for turnips or other late crops.

Potatoes will have nearly got their growth this month. Plant cabbage or turnips between the rows at once, or clean the ground when all are dug, for spinach and other late crops.

Preserving fruits and vegetables. Lay in a full supply. Fruits can now be made a cheap luxury the year round. They are much cheaper than pills.

Raspberries—Cut down old canes as soon as the fruit is gone, and thin out the new ones, unless you want to multiply them. Three or four canes to a stool is enough. Keep the ground around them well hoed, but do not disturb the roots.

Rhubarb has had its season, and now that fruits are getting plenty, it may be left to recuperate. If it has been hard plucked. If fruit should be scarce, it may be preserved in the same manner, or dried in the same way as apples. The late growth also makes a good wine, if that name is proper for anything but the juice of the grape.

Seeds—Pay strict attention to sowing the seeds of cabbage, turnips, and all plants that mature early. After the pods begin to turn yellow, they will ripen more securely in the house, or under some shelter.

Strawberries—After bearing is over, weed the beds, and cut the runners that are not wanted for new plants. Prepare new beds, making them deep and rich, where you want them to last for several years. Most varieties do best in hills in the garden. With liquid manure they will do well on quite poor soil.

Thinning is generally very much needed among carrots and all the root crops—among melons and fruits. One good fruit or vegetable is worth many poor ones.

Tomatoes—Some recommend training to trellises and on brush. They ripen quicker on the ground, and for this reason we let them follow their bent. Pinch off the ends of the branches, and keep them within bounds. They will make better fruit.

Transplant to fill vacancies everywhere. A good deal may be done to remedy poor seed, or the ravages of insects this month. This can be done in the hottest weather with a little care.

Weeds are not useful or ornamental. Keep the hoe and cultivator moving, and the garden clean as a parlor.

SENSIBILITY OF A CONQUEROR

The morning after the battle of Waterloo, Dr. Hume waited upon the Duke of Wellington to report the list of the killed and wounded, and to take his directions. He found him worn out with fatigue, and buried in a deep slumber. When awakened he was ready for the duty, and commanded the doctor to read the list, which took him more than an hour. The doctor looked up at once, and saw the Iron Duke wringing his hands in sorrow, while the big tears rolled down his cheeks. Though knowing that his country would be intoxicated with joy at what he had achieved, and would be ready to load him with its highest honors, he displayed no thought of personal glory, and no unbecoming exultation over a fallen enemy, but felt as a man who had discharged a solemn duty at a painful sacrifice of human life and happiness.

A lady consulted Abernethy. "Do you know my usual fee?" said he. Two guineas were laid on the table. Putting them into his pocket, he drew out a sixpence and said, "There, take that, and buy a skipping-rope, for you want exercise. Good morning."

Family Circle.

A STORY FOR THE LITTLE FOLKS

THE WILD HONEYSUCKLE

There was once an old king who had more wealth than any other ten kings put together. He had a little daughter called Angelina, and he loved her as he did his own soul. He thought so much of her, that he would not have taken all the gold in California for one of her beautiful brown curls. He looked forward with great pleasure to the time when she would be a young lady, and would dazzle every one by her wit and beauty.

But God, who is stronger than all kings, was thinking otherwise. A malignant fever came and took away the lovely Angelina.

Her aged father was almost wild with grief, and staid night and day in his bedroom with the windows closed. Forty days passed after the death of the little princess, but the king would not see any one. One night, as he lay asleep, he dreamed that his departed Angelina said these words to him:—"Dear father, you ought not to weep for me, because I am so happy here. I have no pain now, and am living with God. Do stop weeping, father, and seek some other child who will be a daughter to you. Call together all the little girls in the land, and choose the one who has a wild honeysuckle in her hair. She will love you and you will love her. She will be worthy to be queen some day instead of me."

The next morning the old king felt much better than usual, and every one noticed the great change. He even smiled to one of his attendants. He called all his great men and friends around him, and told them to make it known that on the twelfth day all the girls in the country who wished to see the king, must come before him, and each one to have no diamonds or gold in her hair, but only a single flower. He would choose one from the number to be his daughter.

The news spread through the whole country, and every little girl thought she was going to be the king's daughter.

There was living in a distant province of that kingdom, a brave and wealthy nobleman, who had three young daughters. They were named Laura, Lauretta, and Laurencia. They were so beautiful that the sun was proud to shine on them, and the flowers in the garden always felt honored to be trodden by their beautiful feet.

The eldest one, Laura, said:—"What a pity the king don't want the girls to put diamonds in their hair! They would be much prettier than flowers."

"Flowers or diamonds," exclaimed Lauretta, "I am beautiful enough with either."

"Flowers are nature's ornaments," said Laurencia, "and they are too beautiful to be plucked. But since the king will have it so, let us go out and gather a wild flower apiece, for they are prettier than any in our garden."

So each one took her basket and put a piece of bread and cake in it, and started out into the forest. But after wandering a good while together and finding no flowers, Laura said:—"Let each one of us take her own way, and at two o'clock we will meet together at the great oak that we have always called Peter."

Then the three sisters separated. Laura strolled along the winding paths a long time, but finally, getting very tired, sat down beneath a beautiful hickory-tree. She took out her bread and cake, and began to eat her lunch. While sitting so comfortably on her mossy seat, a poor old ragged woman came up to her and very kindly said:—"Good morning, beautiful princess."

Laura looked at her very scornfully, and turned aside her head. Then the old woman spoke again:

"Will you, beautiful princess, allow me to sit down and rest myself beneath your cool shade? And will you have the goodness to give me a piece of bread, for I am very hungry?"

Laura became very angry, and said:—"Away with you, old beggar; I never have anything to do with poor, miserable people like you."

The old woman tottered off then as well as she could, but murmured to herself:—

"Stony heart, proud girl;
Honeysuckle, leave her!"

For a long time Lauretta had been seeking flowers, but had found none to suit her. So she sat down under a fir tree, to rest herself. She was just taking out her bread and cake, when the old woman came close up to her, and, wishing her good-day, said:—

"Beautiful princess, pardon my intrusion. But I am very old, and tired and hungry. If you will allow me to sit down under this shady fir tree, and will give me a small piece of your bread, I will be very grateful to you. Oh, how I wish I was young again!"

But Lauretta answered proudly:—"Why do you trouble me, you miserable old beggar? Isn't the forest large enough that you should want to sit down under this tree? and isn't there enough bread in the village that you should come out here and beg from me?" Then she threw a piece of bread crust at her feet. But the old beggar woman walked off, whispering as she left her:—

"Hard heart, proud girl;
Honeysuckle, leave her!"

During all this time, Laurencia had gone a great distance, and had not found a flower which she thought would be proper to put in her hair to go before the king. She became very tired, and at last sat down under a large wild grape vine, that was climbing up some little trees. She was just putting her piece of bread to her mouth as she saw the old woman tottering towards her. When she had come up she said:—

"Beautiful princess, I need hardly tell you that I am old and tired and hungry. You can see that for yourself. If you will let me sit under the grape vine with you, and will be so kind as to give me a little piece of bread, I will thank you as long as I live."

With all my heart," answered Laurencia, kindly, as she broke her piece of bread, and gave her the larger part. Then she took all her cake, and laid it in the old woman's other hand. As soon as she had done this, she poured out into her drinking-cup some water from the bottle that she had brought with her, and handing it to her, said:—"Take this, old lady. I trust it will refresh you. You need it more than I do. And after you have rested, I will show you the way out of the forest, and take you to my father's, where you will be well cared for."

After the old woman had refreshed herself, she asked Laurencia to follow a few steps into a wind ing path. The kind girl left her basket and followed her. They soon came to a little cleared piece of ground, where three flowers were growing—a tulip, a lily, and a wild honeysuckle. The old woman plucked them, and putting them in Laurencia's hand, said:—

"Kind heart, humble girl;
Honeysuckle, choose it!"

Then the old woman walked rapidly away, and Laurencia never saw her afterwards.

The time was now approaching for the sisters to meet under the old oak Peter. Laurencia put the flowers in her basket, and started off. As she proceeded she said to herself:—"I hope the old woman has seen my sisters, and given them beautiful flowers, and told them, too, which one to choose."

When the three sisters met, and Laura and Lauretta said they had found no flowers, they were filled with envy when Laurencia opened her basket and showed them hers. As they were older than she was, and always had their own way, they said that she must divide her flowers with them both.

Laurencia was grieved at their words, and answered:—"Dear sisters, you know I am always willing to share my gifts with you. Here, Laura, here is this beautiful tulip; if you prefer it, you may have it." Laura thanked her, and said it was the flower she wanted.

Then said Laurencia to Lauretta:—"Here, my sister, is this lovely yellow lily. I make you a present of it. The wild honeysuckle I will keep for myself."

"So you ought to do," replied her sisters, "for you are homelier than we are, and the youngest, too. Of course, you ought to take the poorest flower."

The time came for selecting a princess, and all day the king, surrounded by his great men, received the beautiful girls that came into his great throne-chamber and walked up before him. Thousands had entered and gone out again. The evening came on, and it was growing very dark. The king's face grew sad, and he feared that he could find no princess to take the place of his departed Angelina. By and by the three sisters came in—one with the tulip in her hair, the other with the yellow lily, and the third with the wild honeysuckle. Laura and Lauretta passed up, but the king, after admiring their beauty, shook his head at them, and said he could not choose either one of them. Then Laurencia walked modestly up before him. The king smiled, and, taking her in his arms, kissed her. She wore the wild honeysuckle in her hair, and the noblemen shouted for joy. A hundred lamps shone forth as quick as lightning, and a band of music struck up the most beautiful strains that had ever been heard in the palace. All the bells in the city rang out merry peals, and the people put on their holiday clothes. All the fountains shot forth glad streams, and every garden bloomed with fresh beauty. The king was happy, and Laurencia was his daughter.

THE HOME ACROSS THE RIVER.

"Mamma, won't you please tell us a story—just one," pleaded little Harry Seymour one Sabbath evening. "Yes, mamma, please do—just one," echoed another voice. "It is too dark to read, and not quite time to light the gas;" and little Clara, climbing up to her favorite seat on mamma's lap, sealed her petition with a kiss.

Unable to resist the earnest pleaders, Mrs. Seymour commenced the following story, which she called "The home across the river."

"Once, on the banks of a broad river, there lived two children, a little girl and boy. Neither of them had ever seen their Father, who dwelt on the other side, but they knew he loved them dearly, for a long letter came from him had described the beautiful home he was preparing for them in a bright city across the river, whose streets were of gold, and whose gates were of pearl, a city where their Father reigned as King. Now, although the children had not done anything, nor ever could do anything to deserve so glorious a kingdom, there was something for them to do before they could live in that beautiful home. The letter, which their Father had sent must be answered. They must thank him for the home he was preparing—ask that it might be given them, and then strive to increase in love towards their Father and each other day by day. Moreover, the letter told them that, in a little while, perhaps before another sunset, a messenger would cross the river to take one of the children home. Happy would be the little one whom the messenger should summon, if he or she had fulfilled her Father's wishes, for the dark river would soon be crossed, and the Father would joyfully welcome his child to the beautiful home on the other side. Before the sunset, a snow white dove might have been seen winging his flight across the river, bearing an answer from the little girl. In it she thanked her Father for the beautiful home so freely offered, begged that it might be hers, promising to strive more earnestly, day by day, to grow in love; and every morning and evening the dove would be sent by the child, bearing words of grateful love to that Father who had been so very kind.

The little boy, however, delayed answering the letter, and when his sister begged him not to wait any longer, for fear he might be summoned home, his reply would be, "Not to-day, wait till to-morrow, the messenger will not come for us so soon."

One evening just as the sun was setting, a boat was seen approaching the shore. The children knew that it came from the land across the river, and joy beamed in the little girl's eyes as the messenger, turning towards her, said:

"I've come for you. Are you ready?"

"Oh, yes; I have been waiting. I am ready to go home," was her reply.

But tears stood in the eyes of the other child, for he knew that everything would seem so very desolate without his darling sister, and then the thought flashed to his mind, If the messenger had come for me, my reply could not have been like hers.

"Kiss me good-by, darling brother," said the child; "I'm going home to my Father, so do not cry, but oh! remember before another sunset the messenger may come for you."

Thus saying the child entered the boat, and watched it glide from the shore. The last sunray had vanished, and the little one trembled as she looked upon the water. It was so very deep, so dark, and seemed so cold; but suddenly the river seemed glorious with light, and looking up, the child saw it was radiance reflected from the brightness of that home on the other side. Soon the little one was welcomed by that Father whom she already loved so well. Soon a bright crown shone on her brow, and in that glorious kingdom she reigned forever."

After Mrs Seymour ceased speaking there was silence for some time, and then Harry exclaimed: "You did not end about the little boy, mamma; did he never reach home?"

"The messenger came soon after and found him also ready," was the reply.

"I know the beautiful home across the river is heaven," said Clara, "and God was the little children's Father; but what was the letter, and who was the messenger, mamma?"

"The messenger was Death, and their Father's letter was the Bible. Am I not right, mamma?" asked Harry.

"Yes, darling," replied his mother, "and the letters sent every night and morning were prayers, while the stream which had to be crossed was the river of death."

"And the first letter which the little girl wrote, was not that a prayer for God to make her good, and to take her at last to heaven?" asked Clara, timidly.

"My little daughter is right," said Mrs. Seymour, "and I only trust that my children will be always ready to go home."

Have you answered the loving letter written to you in the Bible? Do not say "I will to-morrow." The messenger may come for you before another sunset. Go to that loving Saviour now. Ask Him to take your sinful heart away, to prepare you for that bright home in heaven, and then strive more earnestly each day to be like Him. Then, whenever God's messengers shall come he will find you ready. Ready to go home.

New York Observer.

THE HONEST MATCH GIRL

It was a cold, clear day. Icicles were hung glittering in the sunshine, and the wind, fierce and cutting, came whistling around the street corners. Near one of them stood a poor thinly clad girl with an old basket on her arm. A tattered shawl scarcely covered her shivering shoulders, and through the worn, broken shoes peeped her bare feet. If you could have looked into her basket, you would have seen nothing but four or five boxes of matches—her whole stock. "Matches! matches! please buy my matches," she murmured in a low voice. How much there is in a voice sometimes. There was many a tear, and many a sob, in the trembling tones of the match girl. It was so unlike the usual loud, eager cry of little street merchants, that an old gentleman, who was with much difficulty trying to mount the slippery door-steps of a house near by, turned to look at her. His benevolent heart was touched with her poverty-stricken aspect, and he quickly beckoned her to come to him.

"Have you matches for sale, my dear?"

"Yes, sir," and she held up her little store.

"My poor child, I will buy them all. Here is a dime for you," and he dropped the piece of money in her hand.

The slight fingers closed eagerly upon it, and a flush of joy brightened the thin, wan cheek as she said, "I thank you, sir. O, thank you! I can buy an orange now for Molly."

But the old man had not heard her as he entered the house. And without taking time to look at her money, she bounded off up the street, and into a long dark alley. As one end of it was her home—one room in a house, if possible, more dingy and miserable-looking than the rest. On a low bed lay a little girl moaning in extreme pain. The bed-covering was very county; but the poor little thing was so feverish that she was insensible to the cold. A bright spot burned on each cheek, and a wild light glittered in her large blue eyes.

"Milly, dear little sister!" said the match girl, bending over her, "would you rather have an orange than anything else?"

"O, yes, Lucy! my mouth is so parched, it would do me good, I think."

Lucy reached the fruit shop before she thought of looking at the piece of money in her hand. There, to her great surprise, instead of the dime lay a bright shining two dollar and a half gold piece. The gentleman made a mistake, was the thought which instantly flashed through her mind. What a temptation! "Now I can buy two for Milly, and two besides," whispered the tempter. Then another voice within whispered, "But the money is not yours. The gentleman made a mistake. To keep it would be the same as stealing." "It is the same as stealing," she repeated aloud, and a sunny memory of sweet still Sabbath evenings (long ago they seemed in her hard life) flitted through the mind when she had learned at her mother's knee, among the rest, the command, "Thou shalt not steal." And with a resolute step she turned from the tempting oranges, and took her way to the old gentleman's house. In another half hour she had told him all; of her temptation to keep his money; of her little sick sister at home, with none of her past history. When she had finished, tears stood in the old man's eyes as he laid his hand upon her head, and asked her if she would bring Milly, and come to take care of him in his old age. "I have buried all my own dear little ones, Lucy," he said, "and if you and Milly come to me, you shall take their place in my heart and home."

In a few days Lucy and her little sister were in their new home, surrounded by every comfort. Truly honesty, with religion, brings its own reward.

RENA.

WHAT A BAYONET CHARGE IS.

"What do you suppose we keep our bayonets bright for, but to scare the enemy?" a distinguished general said to one who was inquiring into the nature of bayonet charges, and a Marshal of France: "It is not the number of killed, but the number of frightened, that decides the issue of a battle." Jomini says distinctly that he saw a bayonet fight but once in all his military experience; and it is related by one of the historians of Napoleon's wars, that when the French were once charging the Prussians with the bayonet, when the latter would not or could not retreat, there ensued a spectacle unexpected by the officers of either side. The French and Prussian soldiers, when they got within striking distance, apparently by mutual consent, clubbed their muskets, and fought desperately with their arms thus reversed.

Amongst the novelties announced to be exhibited in London during this season is a petrified "aborigine," discovered in a stalactite cave in South Australia.

A TROUT FACTORY IN CONNECTICUT.

Messrs Burnham, Kellog & Ives, of Hartford, have a large trout factory in operation in Glastenburg, Conn., where trout are hatched by artificial means. The number now in the pond is between 40,000 and 50 000, and rapidly increasing. When the stock reaches the number of half a million, they estimate a yield of 50,000 pounds per annum. As they will bring in market from 25 to 50 cents per pound, this amount would afford a very pleasant net income. The fishes are fed regularly, and have a man in constant attendance. Their food consists of small fishes and shad spawn in season. Millions of suckers are raised to feed the hungry beauties of the pond.

METHOD OF OBTAINING SKELETONS OF SMALL FISHES

Some time since I was employed in making observations on the produce of some of the ponds in the neighborhood of London, and I discovered that the tadpole was a very serviceable animal in anatomizing the very small fishes, as well as some of the larger sorts, generally found in such places—the tadpole acting in the same manner on the ant. I have tried the experiment several times, and on various sort of fishes, and was always successful, particularly with that very little one called by children Stickleback; even in those the skeleton was at all times perfect. My method is this:—I suspend the fish by threads attached to the head and tail, in a horizontal position, in a jar of water such as is found in the pond, and change it often, till the tadpoles have finished their work, which, if two or three tadpoles are allowed to work on so small a fish as the species just mentioned, they will complete in twenty-four hours. I always select the smallest sort of tadpoles, as they can insinuate themselves between the smallest bones, without destroying their articulation.

Philadelphia Markets.

APPLES.—Green, 4.00@4.50; dried, 5@6¼.
ASHES.—Pots, —@—; Pearls, —@—; Soda Ash, 2¼@3¼.
BARK.—Quercitron, first quality, 38.50@34.00; second quality, 30.00@31.00; third quality, 25.00@26.00; Spanish Oak, sort, 11.00@12.00; Chestnut Oak, 9@10.
BEEF.—Mess, barrel, 12.00@15.00; Prime, 6@7; dried beef, 9@10.
BEESWAX.—Yellow, 32—@33.
BREAD.—Crackers, 4@5.
BUTTER.—Firkin, 12@16; in kegs, 9@12; Roll, 14@16; Goshen, 14@16.
CANDLES.—Sperm, 28@29; Adamantine, 15@17½; Carbon mould, 11@12; Dipped, 10@10½.
CHEESE.—Ohio, 5½—New York, 7@8.
COFFEE.—Cuba, 20@22; Java, 25@27; Laguayra, 20@21; Maracaibo, 20@23; Mocha, 25@28; Rio, 18@22; St. Domingo, 19@20.
CRANBERRIES.—
DRIED BEEF.—9@10
FEATHERS.—American, 40@43.
FISH.—Mackerel, No. 1, 8.00@8.50; No. 2, 6.00@8.00; No. 3, 5.25@6.00; No. 3, 3.50@3.75. Herring, pickled, barrel, 2.00@4.50; box, 12@14.
FLAX.—Jersey, 8@9.
FLOUR.—Penna., 4.50@4.62; extra, 4.62@5.50. Western, 4.31@4.37. Rye flour, 3.25@3.62. Corn meal, —@—.
FRUIT.—Raisins, box 3.25@3.40, quarter boxes 1.75@1.90; Ginger jar, 11@13; Citron, 55@60; Oranges, 3.00@4.00. Lemons 4.00@5.00. Currants, 10@12. Figs, 18@20. Almonds, soft, 32@35; hard, 20@30. Groundnuts, bushel, 1.75@2.40.
GRAIN.—Wheat, Penna. red, 1.17@1.25; white, 1.35@1.45; Southern red, 1.30@1.36; Southern white, 1.30@1.37. Rye, Penna., 66@67; Southern, 63@64; Corn, yellow, 52@54; white, 56@60; Oats, Penna., 40@41; Southern, 36@38. Beans, white, 1.50@1.75.
GUANO.—Nothing doing. Season over.
HOPS.—
LARD.—Leaf, 8@9; Western, 8@9
LUMBER.—White Pine, Susq., 14@15; Yellow Pine, Virg., 13@14; Hemlock, Lehigh, 9.00@9.50; Albany White Pine, 25 dressed, 28. Shingles, cedar, M., 2.00@2.25.
MOLASSES.—Cuba, 21@22, Porto Rico, 35@40. New Orleans, 40@45. Sugar House 25@—.
OILS.—Olive, gallon, 1.11@1.15; Linseed, 85@87; Whale, crude, 50@55; winter, 58@60; fall, 58@60. Sperm, winter, 1.56@1.60; spring and fall, 1.30@1.35; Lard oil, spring, 55@58; winter, 60@62; petroleum, 14@21.
PEACHES.—Dried 6@7. Pared, 15@20.
PLASTER.—Soft, 3.25@3.37.
PORK.—Mess, 10.50@11.50; Hams, smoked, 7@9; in pickle, 5@6; Sides, 5½@6; in salt, 3½@4; Shoulders, smoked, 3½@4; in salt, 2½@3.
POTATOES.—Bushel, 65@75.
RICE.—6.75@7.12.
SALT.—Liverpool, 2.25@2.28. Turk's Island, 30@31.
SEEDS.—Clover seed, 5.00@5.25. Flaxseed, 2.00@2.05. Timothy, 2.75@3.00. Herd grass, 2.00@2.25. Canary Seed, 2.25@2.50.
SUGARS.—Havana, white, 8.00@9.50; yellow, 7.25@8.50; New Orleans, 7.50@9.00; Cuba, 6.00@8.00. Lovering's D. R. loaf, 10½; refined loaf, 10½
WOOL.—Prime or Saxony, 48@50; American, No. 1, pulled, 40@42; Merino, 42@45.

A visitor of the British Museum, after having seen the curiosities that were there shown him, inquired of the assistant, "Pray, sir, have you the skull of Oliver Cromwell in this house?" to which the assistant answered, "No, sir." "Well, sir," said the stranger, "I wonder at that, as they have one at the Ashmole Museum at Oxford."

COOPERSTOWN SEMINARY.

Spring Term of 14 weeks opens March 28th.

AN EFFICIENT CORPS OF TEACHERS,

[illegible] Board and Tuition in Common English, $40 per annum.

Send for a Catalogue. Address,

R. C. PLACE, A. M.,
Cooperstown, N. Y.

—Jan 17

ESTABLISHED IN 1790.

McALLISTER AND BROTHER,

OPTICIANS,

No. 728 Chestnut Street,

PHILADELPHIA,

Nearly Opposite Masonic Hall,

(Late of 504 Arch street, above Fifth, for many years.)

Manufacture, Mathematical Instruments, Spy Glasses, Microscopes, Thermometers, Opera Glasses, Telescopes, Pocket Compasses, Barometers, Surveyors' and Hydrometers, Drawing Instruments, Levels, Pocket Rules, Magic Lanterns, Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Pictures. By Wholesale or Retail.

Illustrated Catalogues furnished on application and sent by Mail Free of Charge. 1y1

NINTH STREET WALL PAPER AND WINDOW SHADE WAREHOUSE,

No. 210 North Ninth St., abv. Race.

CHARLES H. GRIGG would respectfully invite the attention of purchasers to his new and beautiful stock of

WALL PAPERS AND WINDOW SHADES,

Of the latest styles, which, for quality, variety, and cheapness, cannot be surpassed.

All ordinary paper sells for 1½ cents per piece, by competent workmen, and perfect satisfaction guaranteed.

Borders and other large shades of every description painted to order in a superior style.—Picture, Transom and shade trimming in great variety.

☞ A Call is Respectfully Solicited.

LIPPINCOTT & CO'S

New and Improved Style of

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,

FOR CARTES DE VISITE.

The subscribers respectfully invite attention to the following styles of Photograph Albums of their own manufacture.

These are especially designed for reception of Card Portraits of Friends and celebrities, and present decided improvements over any heretofore made.

The list embraces all the various sizes suitable for the Pocket or Centre Table.

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS FOR THE POCKET

(A.)	Bound in cloth, gt. edge, with clasp, holding 12 Portraits,	$0 75
(B.)	" " " " "	1 00	1 10
(C.)	" Morocco " " "	1 25	1 40
(D.)	" " " " "	1 50	1 60
(E.)	" Tur. blue, Gilt Edge,	2 00	2 50
(F.)	" " " " "	2 50	3 00

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS FOR THE CENTRE TABLE

No. 1	Bound in cloth, gt. ed. with clasp, holding 20 Portraits,	$1 00
2	" " " " "	1 50	1 75
3	" " " " "	2 00	2 25
4	" Morocco, " "	2 50	3 00
5	" " " "	3 00	3 50
5½	" " " "	3 50	4 00
6	" " " "	4 00	4 50
7	" Tur. blue Antique tint clasps,	5 00	5 50
8	" " " "	6 00	6 75
9	" " " "	7 50	8 50
10	" Tur. gt mountings	9 00	10 00
11	" " " "	10 00	11 00
12	" " " "	12 00	13 00
13	" " " "	14 00	15 00

☞ Any of the above Nos. with ornamented tooled edges, $1.00 extra.

13 (closing the bound in Turkey Morocco, Antique, two clasps, holding 150 Portraits, —— $ 7 50

14 (closing the bound in Velvet, gilt mountings, two clasps bound, holding 200 Portraits, —— 11 00

☞ Nos. 14 and 15 with ornamented tooled edges, $2.00 extra.

IMPERIAL QUARTO ALBUMS.

This superb Album is intended either for the full size oval portrait, as popular in every household, or for Groups and Landscapes.

No. 16	Bound in cloth, elegant clasp,	holding 20 Portraits,	$9 00
17	" " " "	30	12 00
18	" Tur. Mor. full elegant clasps	20	15 00
19	" " " "	30	20 00
20	" " " "	40	25 00

The attention of the Trade, and those who deal in Photographic Portraits, is invited to the above Albums.

☞ A liberal discount to the trade.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT & CO.,
23 and 24 North Fourth Street,
Philadelphia.

ap 1 3m

PERRY & FITZGERALD'S

PROCESS FOR MAKING LIGHT, NUTRITIOUS, AND UNADULTERATED BREAD, WITHOUT FERMENTATION.

The new process of bread-making, patented by Perry & Fitzgerald, remov

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Published by the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, for the Dissemination of Religion, Morality, Literature and Science.

Rev. Elisha Weaver, Editor. PHILADELPHIA, JULY 19, 1862. Vol. II.—No. 29.—New Series.—Whole No. 80.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

Is published every Saturday on behalf of the

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,

BY

REV. ELISHA WEAVER,

General Book Steward,

No. 619 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

Notice.—All letters and matters pertaining to the Book Concern or business, one of papers, and all moneys belonging to Book Concern, or for paper must be directed to Rev. Elisha Weaver, P. O. Box 436, Philadelphia, and all matters sent by express, and in our city, must be directed to E. Weaver, No. 619 Pine St.

All articles or matter for the Christian Recorder, must be directed to E. Weaver, Box No. 436, Philadelphia.

TERMS.

Two Dollars a year, payable in advance. Single copies, five cents

ADVERTISEMENTS.

We collect Advertisements of all descriptions, suitable for a religious newspaper, which will be published as follows:

Cards or Advertisements, inserted in one year provided they do not exceed eight lines, ten dollars, paper included, or eight dollars without the paper—six months, for six dollars, paper included.—three months, four dollars.—one month, $1 50, paper in each case included.

CORRESPONDING EDITORS OF CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Rev. J. P. CAMPBELL, Rev. A. W. WAYMAN,
" J. M WILLIAMS, " B. T. WILLIAMS,
" G. H. GRAHAM, " C. BURCH,
Rev. L. ROSS.

Poetry.

THE BATTLE FIELD.

BY WM. C. BRYANT.

Once this soft turf, this rivulet's sands,
Were trampled by a hurrying crowd,
And fiery hearts, and armed hands,
Encountered in the battle cloud.

Ah! never shall the land forget
How gushed the life-blood of her brave—
Gushed, warm with hope and courage yet,
Upon the soil they fought to save.

Now all is calm, and fresh, and still,
Alone the chirp of flitting bird,
And talk of children on the hill,
And bell of wandering kine are heard.

No solemn ghosts go trailing by
The black-mouthed gun and staggering wain;
Men start not at the battle cry,
Oh! be it never heard again!

Soon rest those men who fought; but thou
Who mingled in the harder strife
For truth which men receive not now,
Thy warfare only ends with life.

A friendless warfare lingering long,
Through weary day and weary year;
A wild and many weaponed throng
Hang on thy front, and flank and rear.

Yet nerve thy spirit to the proof,
And blanch not at thy chosen lot,
The timid good may stand aloof,
The sage may frown, yet faint thou not.

Truth, crushed to earth, shall rise again;
The eternal years of God are hers;
But Error, wounded, writhes in pain,
And dies among its worshippers.

Another hand the sword shall wield,
Another hand the standard wave,
Till from the trumpet's mouth is pealed
The blast of triumph o'er thy grave.

Yea; though thou lie upon the dust,
When they who helped thee flee in fear,
Die full of hope and manly trust,
Like those who fell in battle here.

THE SCHOOL-BOY PASSING THROUGH THE CHURCH-YARD.

Oft in the lone church-yard at night, I've seen
By glimpse of moon-shine, chequering thro' the trees,
The school-boy, with his satchel in his hand,
Whistling aloud to bear his courage up,
And lightly tripping o'er the long flat stones,
(With nettles skirted, and with moss o'ergrown,)
That tell, in homely phrase, who lie below.
Sudden he starts, and seems, or thinks he hears
The sound of something purring at his heels:
Full sore dismayed, he dares not look behind him,
But quick as thought he overtakes his fellows;
Who gather round, and wonder at the tale
Of horrid Apparition, tall and ghastly,
That walks at dead of night, or takes his stand
O'er some new-opened grave; and (strange to tell!)
Evanishes at crowing of the cock.

Blair's Grave.

For the Christian Recorder.

Washington, July 9th, 1862.

Mr. Editor:—The weather is excessively warm here; but is something milder now than it was a few days ago. Several persons gave out on Monday by being overpowered with heat. The pastor of Israel Church was taken very sick on Sabbath morning just as he was commencing to preach, and had to be conducted home; but his health has considerably improved.

The 4th of July was a high day among all parties here. Our people who made ice cream, mineral water, and like things, severely suffered, while tongues and lips, in every direction, were seen very freely spinning out such confabulations as were adapted to their several tastes. One of the grandest affairs, however, that marked the progress of the day was the annual celebration of the grand Sabbath-school union.

This association consists of a union of all the Sabbath-schools in the city, which meet every quarter to hear reports from the several schools, and to make such arrangements as are best adapted to the better advancement of that inestimable institution. This Sabbath-school confederacy was originated by Bishop Payne and the lamented Rev. John F. Cook, and has been in existence 17 years; and from what I can learn, it has been productive of a vast amount of good, and the interest of every school, by it, is made one in common.

They meet in a grand anniversary every 4th of July, at which time they elect officers, hear and deliver addresses, and transact such business as is compatible with the occasion.

The anniversary this year was so largely attended that the church (the 15th Presbyterian) which was selected for their accommodation, proved entirely too small, and they had to adjourn to Union Bethel, which, though larger, was by far too small. The officers who most prominently figured on the Fourth, and, indeed, who are the present officers of the Union Association, are the following gentlemen, viz.: John Thomas Johnson, President; James Wormly, Recording Secretary; Perry Rydel, Corresponding Secretary. I would remark here that Mr. Johnson is a man of rare attainments, and it is a wonder to me he has not long since risen to national popularity

The speakers on the occasion consisted of 1st. Rev. James A. Handy.

2d. Rev. Brother Haymer, of the Zion.
3d. Judge Day, of New Haven.
4th. Rev. W. Seaman, of Conn.
5th. Mr. Charles Brown, of this city.

It is but due to remark that the addresses were listened to with becoming attention, and some were exceedingly eloquent, and one particularly was very ordinary.

Mr. Joseph B. Williams, who has gained considerable notoriety through the country, from being the projector of the Central American scheme, is still in Washington, perambulating the streets as large as if he contemplated the final achievement of his desires. However much some of us may differ from the policy urged by Mr. Williams, I think that Mr. Williams is actuated by motives pure to the race he represents, and would not knowingly exert an influence which would detrimentally culminate in our injury.

I was in the Senate the other day, and had the pleasure of listening to Senator Lane pleading the cause of the colored man. And, while listening to him enter into our feelings and sympathies so accurately, I could hardly credit the idea that it was a full-blooded white man speaking; and, indeed, the Senate is almost abolitionized. Yesterday two Senators hitherto known as exceedingly conservative surprised every one by offering and advocating a bill to enlist and equip colored soldiers into the United States army, with the understanding that freedom is to be the result. The same surprise was made in the House by a representative hitherto known as conservative; and the fact is that Gen. McClellan's defeat before Richmond has made a great many emancipational converts. And, in this connexion, I would state that Gen. McClellan is severely spoken of in nearly every republican speech delivered in Congress as not the man. While I am opposed to Gen. McClellan, yet I hear him denounced in Congress so severely that it excites my sympathy; and Gen. Halleck is not dealt with any more tenderly. The truth is, every victory the Southerners gain tends to loosen the chains of slavery, and every one the Northerners gain tends only to tighten them, and it will be so till the North is brought to her senses.

And God's plan of teaching her sense is through Southern victories. I have noticed in several instances whenever the Union army is repulsed or the safety of the Government is menaced, there is an appeal to negro sympathy, from parties high in position, but so soon as the tide turns, so soon is he discarded. And I now hear it rumored in all quarters that it is probable that negroes will be organized into regiments and armed for the war, and one Congressman proposed to arm him and place him in front of the battle. This is very well so far as it goes; but my impression is that they will have a hard time raising negro regiments to place in front of the battle or anywhere else, unless freedom, eternal freedom, is guarantied to them, their children, and their brethren. To talk about freeing only those who fight and should happen to escape the ball, is all gammon. If our people have not got too much sense for that, they have too much instinct; at all events they will not do it.

Gen. Hunter's answer to the Government in relation to arming the colored people of South Carolina, met with hearty applause in all quarters. It is regarded as the boldest piece of gallantry that has yet been set forth. I have been told by some gentlemen, who pronounce themselves rather pro-slavery, that it was the very answer this Government needed. The Senate contemplated adjourning on Wednesday next, though several are opposed to it, unless they adjourn to meet again very soon.

The contrabands who come here are dying very fast. It is supposed that some fatal disease is among them. There were some frail sisters got to fighting the other day, and the police arrested them after they had bloodied each other's head and broke a few noses, and when the police started off to the work-house with them, they cried out murder several times, and our people, supposing it to be a slave-catcher, started off with rocks, sticks, and every imaginable missile; but, on discovering the truth of the matter, justified the police. Had it been a slave-catcher, sad would have been his condition.

H. M. T.

For the Christian Recorder

REPLY TO WASHINGTON LETTER.

Mr. Editor:—I have read in your paper of July 5th, a letter headed:—For the Christian Recorder, from Washington, with the initials H. M. T., in which a reference is made to one of the ministers of the A. M. E. Zion connexion, and a society organized at Alexandria, Va. The reference is small, but pregnant with misrepresentations and prejudices, as a matter of course. The reference says: "Rev. John Green, a local preacher of the Zion Wesley Church Island, as they call themselves." The writer seems to be ignorant of the matter, and says so, report says. Rev. John Green is not a local preacher; he is a member of the Southern Annual Conference of the A. M. E. Zion Connexion in America. It is not true that he is a local preacher; he is a missionary appointed from the Conference, and had a right to preach in Alexandria if there was a door open, which he did, and called a certain number together for organization, and called Rev. J. P. Hamer to organize them, as he could not legally do it. It is not true that Rev. Green went to Alexandria to organize. The writer says he (Green) carried his congregation from Washington, and, when he returned, his congregation returned with him—which is not true. The truth is, that Rev. Green was in Alexandria before the day arrived for organization; the Elder did not go until the day arrived; the congregation referred to by H. M. T., or a part of them, went with the Elder. Rev. Green was seen on shore before the boat landed. The Elder returned to Washington the same day; that portion of the congregation referred to returned with him. Green was left in Alexandria. So, it cannot be true that he had taken his congregation with him, and that they returned with him.

I suppose H. M. T. fears that our people will manifest that zeal and interest for the spread of their connexion as are manifested by other connexions. It has always been the custom, when there was a new society to be organized, or a new church to be dedicated, that the people of the same connexion and others flow to it. Here the intelligent can see that the principle of prejudice is obvious. "I was at his Church Island the same day," says the writer, "and one of the orators stated that the reason there were no more people at church was because they had all gone to Alexandria to the consecration of a new church," which is a misrepresentation. The speaker said they had gone to Alexandria to the organization of a new society, and further says that he would like to organize a church in Richmond, Va., if he could, but would dislike to have his audience go and return with him—that such a course would not be conducive of much harm to his opposer in flesh or in the world; I think that such a circumstance would be conducive of much good, and would be taken meekly by a man of truth—but it would increase the vanity of H. M. T., no doubt, if it was possible for the writer to organize a church in Richmond; the greatest dislike he would have would be to see or hear of an organization of the A. M. E. Zion Church in the same city. The writer being a professed minister of Christ, is lacking in that gravity, dignity and forbearance which should characterize a Christian minister. These things lacking, he is foppish—and his remarks, like himself, are futile.

J. P. H.

Washington, D. C., July 10th, 1862.

For the Christian Recorder.

Mr. Editor:—Dear Brother:—Permit me to say a few words through the Recorder, to inform all who are friendly to Christianity and the prosperity of our beloved Zion, I am again encouraged for another year, if I continue to trust in the good Lord. Last Sabbath, the 22d, and second Sabbath home, we had a soul-cheering time from the presence of the good Lord. Our members turned out well, and I believe numbers brought the presence of the Lord with them. In the evening, Elder Rue, the missionary appointed to North Carolina and Virginia mission, preached a very interesting and instructive sermon. His text was taken from Psalm cxxvi. 5, 6. After he affectionately bid mine and sister farewell till they saw him again, either at Newport or at the judgment seat of Christ, your unworthy brother got up, and, with a feeling that I never experienced before, for I never have had the pleasure to solicit aid for one of our own brethren to go to a field of labor where our brethren and sisters are in slavery, and one of our own brethren could preach deliverance. When I arose, my soul filled newly with sympathy and hope. Our church was filled. I invited them to come forward with money and many prayers with it, and our members, and congregations, and friends to the cause of humanity and Christ. We presented Elder Rue with the noble sum of $26 25. May the good Lord continue to bless them. After we received the money, we received two in church as full members. Truly the Lord is with us. Elder Rue left on the following evening for his field of labor. Our first quarterly meeting for this station will be on the 13th of July. I could say something about our interesting Sabbath School, but I will close. Pray for us.

W. Damond.

Newport, June 28th, 1862

For the Christian Recorder

FROM LOUISVILLE, KY.

Mr. Editor—Dear Brother: Please accept of this short communication

I have delayed to write for some time, because I had nothing of general interest to send you for publication.

In the first place, times are quiet here at present, the general excitement has died out, and things are moving along after the old rate again. Our churches are all open. We have one night in the week to worship. The patrol system has ceased to act upon the colored people, and we are getting along much better than we were some time ago

Our church held a fair a few days since, from which we realised a little over two hundred dollars, which helped us very much indeed, and in return for which we cannot but express our gratitude to God. To our dear friends in Louisville who patronised our fair so nobly, we desire to say that they have our warm and sincere thanks—not only for their liberal and generous patronage, but for the good order that prevailed during the fair.

We must say for the Recorder, that it is the best paper that ever was published by colored men in the United States of America, and I doubt whether it ever had a superior at any time or anywhere. Its style just suits the times, and I am sure it has some of the best writers of any paper ever printed by colored men, and my prayer to God is, that the Recorder may live while there are colored men on this continent to support it. We sell from twelve to fifteen numbers every week, and were I somewhere else, with the same population, one hundred copies would not supply the people.

We have not been able to hold any protracted meeting this year, in consequence of the excitement that prevails in the land, but the church is still alive, and is progressing most nobly—thank God.

We hope to have our much esteemed and worthy General Book Steward and Editor present at our Conference, which will meet on the 28th of August.

We have no fears at this time about getting a permit to hold our Conference meeting in Louisville.

B. L. Brooks.

Louisville, Ky., July 11, 1862.

NOT YET

"Not yet," said a little boy, as he was busy with his trap and ball. "When I grow older I will think about my soul."

The little boy grew to be a young man.

"Not yet," said the young man. "I am now about to enter into trade. When I see my business prosper, then I shall have more time than now."

Business did prosper.

"Not yet," said the man of business. "My children must have my care. When they are settled in life I shall better be able to attend to religion."

He lived to be a gray-headed old man.

"Not yet," still he cried. "I shall soon retire from trade, and then I shall have nothing else to do but to read and pray."

And so he died. He put off to another time what should have been done when a child. He lived without God, and died without hope.

Virginia.—The Alexandria Seminary, we learn, has been finally abandoned. Six students had adjourned to meet the professors at Staunton, where Dr. Sparrow and Dr. Packard were in attendance. Out of these students, all but one were drafted under the Virginia conscription act. This effectually broke up the institution. Dr. Sparrow proceeded to Hanover county, Virginia, near the North Carolina line, where he is now engaged, we think, in a parish. Dr Packard remained some time with his wife's family in Fauquier, where, we regret to learn, he has suffered severely from sickness. It is not improbable he may soon visit his relatives in the North

THE BEHEMOTH AND THE UNICORN.

This pool is crowded with buffaloes; and how oddly they look, with nothing but the nose above water!

Yes; and observe that their mouths are all turned up stream toward the fountain, and on a level with the surface, as if, like Job's behemoth, they trust that they can draw up Jordan into their mouths. (Job xl. 15—23.)

Do you suppose that the buffalo is the behemoth of the Bible?

It is not easy to adjust Job's magnificent description in all the details to the buffalo, yet I am inclined to believe that these black, hairless brutes are the modern, though immensely belittled representative of that chief of the ways of God, who eateth straw like an ox, who lieth under the shady trees in the covert of the reeds and fens. The shady trees cover him with their shadow, the willows of the brook compass him about. (Job xl. 15, 21, 23.) All these particulars are exact enough, and, indeed, apply to no other known animal that can be associated with the Jordan. Large herds of buffaloes lie under the covert of the reeds and willows of the many brooks which creep through this vast marsh, and we shall see them all day, as we ride round it, wallowing in the mire like gigantic swine. They are larger than other cattle of this region. Some of the bulls are indeed rough and monstrous fellows, with bones black, and hard "like bars of iron." With the aid of a little Oriental hyperbole, I can work up these buffaloes into very tolerable behemoth. And in justification of our version of Psalm l. 10 may be cited the fact, that the general word for cattle in the dialect of this country is behim or behaim, evidently from the same root as the Hebrew behemoth.

These circumstances and characteristics render it probable that these very unpoetic animals are the identical behemoth of Job. Buffaloes are not only larger, but far stronger than the ordinary cattle of Syria, and a yoke of them will carry a plough through tough sward or stiff soil which utterly baffles the tiny ox. At times, too, they are unruly, and even dangerous. A friend of mine, near this village below us, saw a cow rush at a woman, knock her over, and then throw herself upon her with such fury that the poor creature was instantly crushed to death. The cow had been alarmed and maddened at the seizure of her calf; and, unless greatly provoked, they are quiet and inoffensive.

The fact that the region east of the Hôleh was the land of Uz—the home of Job—coincides, at least, with the idea that the buffalo is the behemoth of his most ancient poem.

Is this an admitted geographical fact?

The tradition of antiquity was to that effect, and I see no reason to question it. To ridicule the extravagant mania for pilgrimages in his time, Chrysostom says that many people made long journeys into the Hauran to visit the dunghill upon which the patient patriarch sat and scratched himself with a potsherd. This shows the opinion of that early day in regard to the land of Uz, and modern research confirms the tradition. With a little antiquarian generosity to assist me, I can locate the whole family of Aram. This Hôleh may have derived its name from Hul, the brother of Uz. If so, then they and their descendants must have been familiar with the reeds, and fens, and brooks of this great marsh, the chosen resort of the buffalo, and had often seen them as we do to-day, lying at the birth-place of the young Jordan, as if they could draw him into their open mouths. (Job xl. 23.)

Gether, the next brother, was probably the Gesher from whom the district immediately around the eastern side of this lake took its name. Maacah, wife of David, and mother of Absalom, was from this little kingdom, and bither that wicked son fled after the murder of his brother. (2 Sam. xiii.) As for Mash, or Mas, (Gen. x. 23) his name may be perpetuated in that Mas, or Mais el Jebel, which we passed the other day on our way to Hûnin. It is proper to inform you, however, that these locations are somewhat hypothetical, and even similarity of names is no very safe basis for such theories. The word Hôleb, for example, is now applied to any low, marshy plain, like this on our left

I thought that critics were pretty nearly agreed that the buffalo is the reem—the unicorn of the Bible!

And this may be so, though I have my doubts. The description of the unicorn in the 39th chapter of Job does not suit the buffalo: Will the unicorn be willing to serve thee, or abide by thy crib? Canst thou bind the unicorn with his band in the furrow, or will he harrow the vallays after thee? Wilt thou trust in him, because his strength is great? or wilt thou leave thy labor to him? Wilt thou believe him, that he will bring home thy seed, and gather it into thy barn? (Job xxxix. 9—12.) Now it is implied by all this that the reem is a wild, stubborn, untamable animal, that utterly refuses the yoke and the service of man. This is inapplicable in every item to the buffalo, a patient servant of all work. Other references to the reem or unicorn speak of the horn in a way equally inapplicable to that of the buffalo. He has two instead of one, and they are ill-shaped, point backward and downward in an awkward manner, and are not particularly formidable as weapons, either offensive or defensive. They would hardly be selected for the poetic image of strength.

If, therefore, the reem be the buffalo, it must have been some other species than the one known in Egypt and this part of Syria. As to the unicorn, I think it more than doubtful whether there ever was such a beast, although there is a vague tradition of this kind among the Arabs of the desert, and in some other parts of the East, and even in Africa. It may be a species of rhinoceros. If not altogether fabulous, such reports probably refer to some animal yet unknown to modern discovery. Certainly the fierce-looking monster on her majesty's escutcheon was never copied from these sluggish and disgusting friends of the marsh and mud. If the Hebrew word translated kine in Pharaoh's dream will include the buffaloes, I should not hesitate to render it thus, because these animals are very common in Egypt, and delight to bathe and wallow in the Nile. It would be altogether natural, therefore, that the king should see them coming up out of the river; and certainly, when old and lean, they are the most "ill-favored" brutes in the world. The original word, however, is the name for ordinary cattle; and in these hot countries all kinds delight to stand in the rivers, not only to cool themselves, but also to keep off the swarms of flies which torment them. The conditions of the dream do not require that the kine should be buffaloes.

The Land and the Book.

Methodist Church South.—The same journal contains the following: "From the True Presbyterian, (Louisville,) of June 13th, we have information of an informal meeting of the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, with several of the General Conference officers, at Atlanta, Ga. It will be remembered that the General Conference of this Church, which was to have been held at New Orleans last month, was indefinitely postponed. The bishops, it will be seen, have divided their work into districts, and their support has been secured upon the Conference. The Missionary Treasury is reported to be without funds to meet outstanding drafts."

Methodists in New Jersey.—From the New York Methodist we gather that the Methodist Church in New Jersey has 45,222 members and probationers; 375 churches; 250 ministers; 322 Sabbath Schools, 7461 officers and teachers; 41,160 scholars; 133,225 volumes in Sabbath School libraries.

PATRIARCHAL WEALTH

GEN. XII. 16, XIII. 2

It is well that we should entertain some distinct ideas respecting the real condition of the patriarchal fathers as to wealth and power. The history dwells so little on these matters, that it requires some experience of the corresponding condition of life, as it still subsists in the East, to apprehend the force of the few intimations which do incidentally transpire.

There are probably few readers who conceive farther of Abraham's establishment, than that it consisted of one, or at most two or three tents, with some half-a-dozen servants, and flocks of sheep and other cattle feeding around. Now this is altogether wrong. His encampment must have formed, so to speak, quite a large village of tents, with inhabitants equal to the population of a small town or a large village. Great numbers of women and children were to be seen there, and some old men; but not many men in their prime, these being for the most part away, from a few to many miles off, with the flocks, of which, immediately around the tents, there was probably less display than the lowest of the common estimates of Abraham's station would assume.

We are told that Abraham was "very rich," and it is stated of what his riches consisted; but we are not told of the quantities of these riches be possessed. However, by putting things together, we may arrive at some notions not far from the truth.

We have the strong fact to begin with, that Abraham is treated by the native princes and chieftains of the land, as "a mighty prince," an equal, if not a superior, to themselves. Then we learn that his house born slaves, able to bear arms and to make a rapid march, followed by a daring enterprise, were not less than 318. A body of such men can be furnished only by a population four times its own number, including women and children. We can, therefore, not reckon the patriarch's camp as containing less than 1272 souls; and this number of people could not well have been accommodated in so few as a hundred tents.

Now as to the cattle. One of the most tangible statements we can find, is of the wealth of the same sort, which, in or about the same age, rendered Job "the greatest of all the men of the East,"—making some allowance for the fact, that Job was not exactly a nomade shepherd, but cultivated the ground also, and had a fixed residence. His wealth consisted of 7000 sheep; 3000 camels; 1000 (500 yoke of) oxen; and 500 asses. Now it appears to us, that the wealth of a camp whose chief numbered above a thousand dependants, could not well have been less. Let us, however, test this by another computation. Jacob, when he was returning to Canaan with the pastoral wealth he had gained during his twenty years' sojourn in Padanaram, set apart a selection from his stock of animals wherewith to placate his offended brother. Now, as we know the number of the animals in this costly offering, we should have something to go by if we could tell what proportion this present bore to the whole. Was it a tenth, the proportion which Abraham thought a fit offering to a king? We think it was probably more, because Esau feared to impoverish his brother by taking so much from him, and was only prevailed upon to do so, by Jacob's declaring that he had still enough. Take it then, at one fifth. Now it is hardly to be supposed that the wealth which Jacob had been able to acquire by his twenty years' service in Mesopotamia, was at all comparable to that which had been formed by Abraham in the course of more than thrice the time, on the basis of a large inheritance, and enhanced by his acquaintance in Egypt; and still less to the same property as increased during a long lapse of years by Isaac; and least of all, to the property which was formed when Jacob's own separate acquisitions were added to the paternal stock. Let us therefore make what, under the circumstances, is a very moderate calculation—let us assume that Jacob's offering to Esau was one-fifth of his substance; and that Jacob's whole substance was equal to one-third of the patriarchal property of the same kind in Canaan—under this view, the first column in the subjoined table shows Jacob's offering to Esau; the second column gives that amount quintupled; the third exhibits the latter amount trebled; and the fourth column shows Job's property of the same kinds, for the sake of comparison:—

	Esau.	Jacob.	Patriarch.	Job.
Goats,	220	1100	3300
Sheep,	220	100	3300	7000
Camels & colts,	40	200	600	3000
Oxen,	20	200	600	1000
Asses & foals,	20	100	300	500

These calculations appear to us to be corroborated by their near coincidence with the account of Job's wealth. The only serious difference is in camels, and that is very great. The difference as to sheep is more apparent than real; for although Job had twice the number of sheep assigned to the patriarchal family, he has no goats; and the patriarchal goats and sheep together, form a number only 800 less than the 7000 sheep of Job

The chief difference is caused by either the extraordinary abundance of camels in the account of Job's wealth, or the extraordinary deficiency of these animals in the stock of Jacob. We have counted the foals in the estimate of the latter, and yet the number is small in proportion to that of other animals. Upon the whole, we incline to think that Jacob, coming from Mesopotamia, where to this day camels are few in comparison with those possessed in and on the borders of Arabia, had not the usual proportion of these animals, and that, with respect to them, the estimate formed on the basis of his present to his brother, does not adequately represent the wealth of the patriarchs in Canaan. There is every probability, that the number possessed by them was as large in proportion to their other cattle, as in the case of Job

It cannot fail to strike the attention of the most cursory reader, that horses, which form so important a part of the modern Bedouin's possessions, are altogether absent in the statements of the same kinds of wealth belonging to Abraham, Jacob, and Job. It is scarcely possible that the animal should have been unknown to them. In fact, although Job did not possess horses, his book contains the most magnificent description of a war horse that has ever been given (Job xxxix. 19.) Again, although there is no mention of horses among the animals which Abraham received from the King of Egypt, this cannot well have been owing to the want of them in that country; for they are found in the most ancient sculptures, and are in this very book mentioned as present in the funeral procession of Jacob from Egypt, to the land of Canaan. The truth probably is, that horses were in these early ages, used entirely for warlike purposes, and that the powerful patriarchs were averse to the responsibility attached to the use or possession of such animals, especially in a country like Canaan, to which the use of horses, even for war, does not seem to have at this time extended. This view of the exclusively warlike character of the horse in early times, throws some light upon the injunction in the law against the use of horses. (Deut. xvi. 6.)

Editor's Table Disquisition.

In the excavations now taking place at Pompeii, two hundred and twenty workmen are employed, and a railroad has been laid through the city to facilitate the carrying off the superincumbent soil. It is one hundred and twenty years since Pompeii was exhumed, and only one-third of the city has been yet brought to light.

FAILING LOVE.

"Your face has lost something, Helen. What is it?"

There was a look of concern in the speaker's inquiring eyes.

"Ten years have passed, dear friend!" answered the lady.

"Ten years of sunshine—fruitful years—Helen, should give the heart an abundant store of corn and wine. Your hives are full of honey."

The shade fell deeper on Helen's face.

"I am pained at this," said the friend. "Your letters have not betrayed the existence of a secret trouble."

"I was guarded."

"Guarded!"

"You know," answered Helen, rallying herself, and affecting a lighter state of mind, "that every house has its skeleton."

"Real or imaginary. Most of these skeletons are but shadows."

"Mine is real."

The two friends, met now for the first time in ten years, looked at each other in a strange way. The lightness of tone had died out in the sentence—"Mine is real."

"The best of husbands, good children, and a home like this! Where stands the skeleton? I can see no place for so unseemly an intruder."

"And yet, Margaret, the intruder is here grinning at me all the while, and growing more and more ghastly."

"Dear Friend, how you afflict me!"

Helen Ashby's face had become pale in this reference to a hidden sorrow which had never found voice before.

"It almost kills me to say it, Margaret; but—" Mrs. Ashby checked the sentence ere it found utterance.

"But what? Trust me, Helen. God gives wisdom to love. Through my love He may send healing to your soul. Let me look down into this haunted heart-chamber; let me see the ugly skeleton!"

"I am not loved as I once was, Margaret!" There was a cold shiver in Mrs. Ashby's voice.

"Not so loved, Helen!"

"Not loved by my husband." Tears fell silently over Mrs. Ashby's face.

"You are under a dark delusion."

"No. Love has been steadily failing for years—slowly, almost imperceptibly, but surely. I shudder at the contrast when I measure its height and depth, its length and breadth to-day, and then think how immeasurable it seemed ten years ago!"

"I am pained beyond expression, dear friend! Surely you are in a dream! My brief observation of your husband, since I came, reveals nothing like coldness or alienation. He is kind, gentle and tranquil. As I watched his countenance last night, while he talked, and dwelt on the sentiments that fell from his lips, I could not help saying, 'He is fast growing to the stature of a man—that is, of an angel!' This could not be, if he were getting cold towards the wife of his bosom."

"Oh, he is good, and true, and excellent!" answered Mrs. Ashby. "A purer, better man does not live. I reverence, I idolize him! He stands in my sight the embodiment of human perfection! But all the while I am conscious of an increasing distance between us. We are not so close together as we were one, two, three, four or five years ago. My friend, this is terrible! Is it to go on—this widening of the space between us—until he vanishes out of sight, and I am left shivering alone in a universe of darkness? Give me annihilation rather!"

This was the skeleton in Mrs Ashby's house; no phantom of the imagination, but a real skeleton. The friend sat long before replying. What Helen now said brought into light some things casually noted since her arrival—some things which had been felt as inharmonious. Let us briefly refer to them: An awkward or confused servant spilled some water on the table, at teatime, in filling a glass. Mrs. Ashby, instead of passing the incident without notice, reproved her sharply. Mr. Ashby was talking at the time in a cheerful, animated voice. He became silent, but resumed in a few moments. The most ordinary observer would have perceived a change of tone, marked by a certain depression of feeling. Soon after the conversation was resumed, Mr. Ashby referred to a lady acquaintance, and spoke of her as an accomplished singer, when his wife threw in some remarks disparaging to her as a woman. To these Mr. Ashby offered a few mildly spoken excuses; but his wife tore them away with an unseemly asperity of manner, that, say the least of it, was unbecoming. Her husband changed the subject. Again he mentioned with praise a lady friend; and again Mrs. Ashby came in with a "but" and an "if," veiling the good and exposing the defects of her character. Two or three times during the meal Mrs. Ashby spoke impatiently to the children, and with a quality of tone that left on the ear an unpleasant impression.

The friend now recalled these little inharmonious incidents. They gave her a glimmer of light.

"Love is never constrained," she said, after a long pause.

Mrs. Ashby sighed deeply.

"True love is of the soul. Why do you love your husband?"

"Because," answered Mrs Ashby, "he is in my eyes the embodiment of all manly perfections. He is just, pure, truthful, full of gentleness and goodness."

"And if such be his qualities, Helen, can he love in a wife anything that is not pure and gentle, truthful and good? Have you ever asked yourself a question like this?"

Mrs. Ashby's form was lifted to a sudden erectness. Her brow contracted slightly; her eyes lost something of their softened expression; her lips grew firm.

"Forgive me, Helen, if I hurt or offended. I love you too well to give fruitless pain," said the friend. "I was only trying to lead your thoughts inward. If, as you seem to fear, your husband is receding from you, it must be in consequence of inharmonious states of mind—of dissimilarities, or antagonisms. There must be affinities, or there can be no conjunction. Our souls must be beautiful, if we would be truly loved. Have you ever pondered these things? If not, the time has come when you should, in all faithfulness and all seriousness, do so. If your husband be indeed advancing towards all true manly excellence, be growing in spiritual stature, will he not, unless you also advance and grow towards womanly excellence and perfection, recede from you—get so far beyond as to be out of sight? Are not spiritual laws as unfailing as natural laws?"

Mrs. Ashby's face had already lost its gathering sternness. Her friend paused

"Why have you said this to me?"

"Because I love you, Helen, and desire your happiness."

Mrs. Ashby sighed deeply, dropped her gaze, and sat looking inward for a long time. Then she sighed again, and looked up into the face of her friend.

"What have you seen, Margaret? Deal with me honestly, as a friend."

"A temper and disposition which your husband cannot approve."

"Margaret!"

"You have asked me to deal honestly, as with a friend. Shall I go on?"

"Yes, yes; speak of all that is in your mind."

"Your husband is gentle and considerate, ready to excuse faults, free from hardness and [illegible]"

"No more so!"

"I saw that your impatient words, when a servant spilled water on the table last evening, jarred his feelings. He was talking cheerfully at the time; but the change in his tone that followed showed a depressed state. It was plain to me [illegible] than you hurt the servant. Then I noticed that as often as he spoke in favor of certain persons, you placed evil against their good, and not in the most amiable spirit. Once or twice he tried to defend the good, and then you set yourself against him with a degree of asperity that must have produced in his mind a sense of pain. He did not contend, though, I fear had he done so, you would have been all ready for a sharp conflict. Before tea was ended, your husband, who conversed at the beginning in an easy, cheerful way, was sitting almost silent. Evidently you had reacted upon him in a manner to depress his feelings. I did not comprehend this at the time, but it is plain enough now."

"I think, Margaret," said Mrs. Ashby, as her friend ceased, "that you had an unjustifying glance last evening. A stranger listening to your speech, would set me down as ill-natured, if not quarrelsome. Henry would smile to hear you. I am not perfect, I know, and my husband understands this, and makes all due allowance for infirmities of temper?"

"Can he in spirit, Helen, conjoin himself to these or any other infirmities? Does their indulgence draw him nearer or away from you? Can he love them?"

Mrs. Ashby's countenance changed. She did not reply.

"Would he choose to live forever conjoined to a disturbing and inharmonious spirit? No matter how feeble the disturbance or slight the lack of harmony, if conjunction must be eternal, would not conjunction be avoided as a calamity? We cannot bind the soul, my friend, by any laws but its own. Love is drawn by likeness of quality—affinities combine. If you and your husband are to reach an eternal union, you must love and delight in the same things. You must be of like quality. Your hearts must so beat that the flow of life is reciprocal, and the pulses move in unity. You must become like him, or he must become like you. In which contingency lies the surer hope? Answer to your own soul, my friend. If he is receding from you, getting all the while to a farther distance, why is it? What does it mean? Is he arising or descending? Growing better or worse? Which is it, Helen?"

"He is rising. He is growing better."

"And yet receding."

"I have felt it for a long time, Margaret."

"Then gird your loins—bind sandals to your feet—up, my friend, and press onward in the way you see him going, and draw once more close to his side. As you love him with a pure heart, tenderly seek for the graces of spirit, for the quality of soul he loves. Cultivate all heavenly affections. Be gentle, kind, considerate, loving—in a word, seek all the Christian graces—and there will be no happier wife in all the land. With such a husband as yours—and I will take your own portraiture—what can stand in the way of all felicities but an undisciplined will?"

"If he will only love an angel, there is no hope for me," replied Mrs. Ashby. "I am but a woman infirm of will, stumbling along darkly in my path of life. Oh, Margaret! you are giving me light only to show me the hopelessness of my case."

"Not so," replied the friend. "Your husband is not very far away from you. If I were talking with him of his own state, he would use language quite as strong as yours. The infirm will, the darkened way, the stumbling feet—they are his, as well as yours and mine. Those who are in advance of us do not walk as seriously as we think. There are always difficulties in the way, and the farther advance we make, while in this world, the more of them we shall find; but for these a higher strength, with patience and humility, are given. Begin by shunning such things as, in the light of reason and God's Word, you know to be wrong. Lay a tranquil hand on your temper, and hold back from utterance all harsh words that can do no good. Have charity for the weaknesses, the infirmities and short comings of others; and if you cannot speak approvingly, say so ill. So shall you move onward in the way your beloved is going; so shall you draw near to him in spirit; so shall his soul reflect your soul, and that unity of life be attained which makes of two, one forever."

"And you think there is hope for me, Margaret—hope of winning back that love that seems vanishing?" said Mrs. Ashby. "I see the way it has gone, as my eyes follow your pointing finger."

"The lovely are beloved, Helen."

"I must become lovelier then."

"In spirit; for love is of the spirit. If you indulge in passion, ill-nature, envies, evil-speaking and uncharitableness, can one who is trying to put these unclean things out of his heart—who turns from them as foul and hateful—draw closer to you, and take you as the embodiment of all perfection into his soul? It is simply impossible, Helen. The good cannot love us, unless we are beautiful in spirit. To ask them to do so is to require an impossibility."

More than a minute passed. Then lifting her eyes from the floor, where they had been resting, Mrs. Ashby said, "Where- I was blind, now I see. Oh, my friend, you have come to me as angel to lead me out of the wilderness into a plain way. If my husband is advancing while I stand still, what wonder is it that he recedes? If I do not walk by his side as he ascends the mountain of spiritual perfection, the necessity that divides us is of my own creation. As you have urged, my friend, so will I do—gird up my loins, bind sandals to my feet, and press onward in the way he is going."

"And sooner than you think for, Helen," was answered, "will you be at his side. He is not very far in advance. The road to perfection of life is never passed over with rapid feet. Very slowly the steps are taken. Your husband loves you, but he cannot love in you what is unlovely. Put away all the unbeautiful things that veil your attractions. Be in his eyes gentle, loving, charitable and kind. Be more ready to see as he sees than find ground of difference. If you do not see in the light of his understanding, wait and reflect, but do not argue and oppose. To be truly united as to the spirit, is to be one in affection and thought. If there is no harmony in your thoughts, the closer you draw together the more you will disturb each other. But why should I say more? Your eyes are open and you see. The way is plain, walk in it, and find peace and joy. You have a true man for a husband; be to him a true wife, and happiness beyond an

The Christian Recorder.

Philadelphia, July 19, 1862.

NOTICE.

Quarterly Meeting—Rev. R. Roberson.

There was a noble Quarterly Meeting held at Frankford. We were with Father Roberson on the occasion, and we had a blessed time indeed. We have never seen anything to compare with it in interest and number present before in Frankford. The church and yard (and part of the street) were completely crowded with people eager to be present at the meeting

Early in the morning the sacred ceremony of the love-feast was celebrated, and at 11 o'clock Father Murys, a local deacon, preached an interesting sermon, followed by some three or four short exhortations. At 3 o'clock we preached and consecrated the Sacrament.

PASTOR'S NOTICE.

Rev. J. P. Campbell, pastor of A. M. E Church, Sixth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. Residence—No. 832 Carpenter Street, bet. Eighth and Ninth Streets.

PLEASURE TRIP.

The A. M. E. Mission Sabbath School of Kaighnville, New Jersey, under the charge of Rev. Peter Gardiner, of the Camden circuit, will have its pleasure trip on Thursday, the 24th instant, at Maple Grove, near the place known as Diamond Cottage.

Several addresses will be delivered by Rev. Peter Gardiner, Rev. Elisha Weaver, and several others. Rev. W. D. W. Schureman will speak upon the occasion.

JACOB F. DERRIXON,
HENRY MACKEY,
HENRY HARRISON, } Com. of Arrgts.

All other usual business and work will necessarily be postponed for two weeks.

NOTICE.

MR. EDITOR:—Please insert the following notice:

The Burlington Sabbath School walk will take place on the 17th day of July.

J. H. SMITH, Elder.
J. H. LONG, Pastor.

A WORD.

Our brethren will be glad to read a letter from John M. Wilkinson, our missionary in Kansas, who is doing a great work out there. The Lord be with him.

We would just say to brother Wilkinson that we have received no letter from him since the one he sent informing us of the safe arrival of the books.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

Mr. Samuel Smithers, per Rev. W. T. Truxun,	1 00
Rev. Isaac J. Findel, of Milton, Del.,	1 00
Charles Simpson,	1 00
Emma S. Cooper,	1 00
Miss C. Peterson, of Camden, New Jersey,	1 00
Of Rev. H. M. Turner, of Washington, D. C.,	2 00
Of James Tilmon, of Bridgewater, Pennsylvania,	1 00
Of Jane Ann Murray, of Frankford, Pennsylvania,	2 00
Of Charles Anderson, Bridgewater, Pennsylvania,	1 00
Of Miss M. J. Davis, of Burlington, New Jersey,	1 00
Of E. S. Cooper,	1 00
Of Charles Simpson, per Rev. Henry Davis, each,	1 00
Martha Hammer,	1 00
Rev. Theodore Gould, on ac't,	2 00
Miss S. Steward, of Goldtown,	50
Miss J. A. Waterman, Mount Holly,	2 00

NOTICE.

INDIANA ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

This Conference will meet on the 15th day of August, in the city of Indianapolis. Bishop Quinn, who is the senior Bishop, will preside. Bishop Nazrey is expected to be present. He is now in Canada. As this Conference will commence on Saturday, of course it will hold over till Sabbath.

Perhaps we ought to say that our noble Bishop PAYNE is also expected to be present at this Conference, as Bishop Quinn has extended an invitation to both him and Bishop Nazrey to be present on the occasion.

The brethren of the Indiana Conference may anticipate a good time at their Conference—and as Indianapolis is the place where we received the first appointment to go and convey the good news and glad tidings of the gospel of the blessed Jesus, we shall consider ourselves one of the number who will eagerly look forward to the coming meeting of Conference.

We have two reasons for this feeling—and the first is, that after the toils and cares of another year, God, through his mercy and goodness, has spared our unprofitable lives; and when we meet once more we shall have the pleasure of extending to each other the right hand of friendship and brotherly love. And oh! just imagine for a moment what must be the emotions and gratitude of each Christian minister at such an instant. Language would utterly fail to adequately express them. What—to meet and report the past labors in God's service? Yes! Well, this is a great and good work.

The second reason is, that Indianapolis is our old home, where we have been stationed, and, of course, we have a great many friends there, both white and colored, whom we shall greet with joy when we meet again. We shall feel quite at home in the capital of Indiana, though several of our old friends have departed this life, and have gone to another and better world—most, if not all, of them having crossed the waters of the Jordan, and safely gained the beautiful shore of Canaan's fair and happy land. We are travelling on to meet them there in that bright and beautiful land where friends meet, never again to be parted.

The Rev. W. R. Revels, Md., who is stationed in the city of Indianapolis, we assure the brethren, will make all necessary arrangements. By the way, I wonder if Brother Revels would not like to have say one hundred copies of the Recorder forwarded on the same day that Conference opens, to be disposed of among the brethren and friends in attendance.

The Missouri Conference will assemble in the city of Louisville, Kentucky, on the 28th day of August. We shall notice this Conference more fully in another number.

ARMING OF THE COLORED PEOPLE, AND THE CONFISCATION BILL

Congress has passed a decree empowering the President of the United States to employ as many of the colored people as he may think necessary. Well, this is all good enough, and right—but, after all, there is a question of no little importance which ought to and will concern the people, that we believe must be the salvation of this country, (we mean the blacks,) and it is this: What provision has Congress made, or empowered the President, in relation to guarantying to the colored people of this country full protection from her laws, and the privilege of enjoying all the rights accorded to other human beings in the United States of America? If provisions are made satisfactorily to our mind, we will frankly state that there is no class of people in this country who are or will be more loyal in every sense of the word than the colored people, or who will do as much service and honor to this—the country of their BIRTH! Every true, honest-hearted and patriotic man and woman who knows anything about the history of this country must acknowledge that the blacks are loyal, and did most positively shed blood, and freely, too, to gain the independence of America.

Can any one who has read the history of General Jackson and the Generals of his day, dare to say that the blacks did not fight like heroes, and for their services were promised their freedom and all the rights that white men enjoyed? The man who denies this truth should remember that he will have to stand before the bar of an Almighty God, and suffer the dread power of His wrath heaped upon him

In concluding our remarks upon this point, let us say that we believe that God's hand is visible in the present struggle, and that there will never be any peace in this country until the black man has a hand and a say-so in the bringing about of peace.

We are not a prophet, nor the son of a prophet, but mark our words—and when this is to be done, let such Generals command them as Fremont, Siegel, Hunter, and many others whom we need not name; then, when the battle is ended, and universal liberty and peace proclaimed, we shall truly have the noblest and best government in the world.

Confiscation.—We would just say that Congress has at last, we believe, fixed on a confiscation bill, which is very good as far it goes—but it does not go quite far enough, and ought to have come to the usual high and honorable standard (mark) which is common in all wars, if there is any truth in history, and that is to have made a clear sweep, which it is more than likely will have to be done yet before the matter is finally disposed of and peace again restored.—ED

TIME ENOUGH.

How often have we heard this expression made use of, "Time enough;" and very common it is in our English books, too—yes, even in most all kinds of business, whether spiritual or political in Church or State, we hear the phrase, "Time enough." Now we propose to take up the various "Time enough" one by one:

1st. How often is it that so many people, when they lie down to sleep, and the hour comes to get up, they will lie still and say to themselves that it is "Time enough;" and this "Time enough" is indulged until broad day-light is visible, and then they have to jump up in a hareem-scarem style—the time has come and gone some time before he or she arose; but, according to their views, it was "Time enough." We might say that "Time enough" and indulgence are very much like twin brothers; they both amount to nearly the same thing.

2d. Very frequently, when people are going on a journey, and have to go by public conveyances, they think it time enough when they fix their own hour for meeting the aforesaid conveyances; they then commence bustling and buzzing about most thoughtlessly until near the certain moment appointed for the starting of the conveyance. After much unnecessary delay and waste of time, the hour for starting is at hand—some distance is to be travelled, and no time to do it in, and the unfortunate individual suddenly becomes aware of the fact. The hour is at hand, after much waste of "time enough," without the presence of mind. Things are thrown on the person in any manner, and he starts for the public conveyance—probably to find that he has left his carpet-bag and the essential objects of the journey behind him, and, to crown all, finds, on arriving at the starting-point, that he is just in time to be too late! "Oh! it's gone! it's gone!" he ejaculates in despair. His expectant friends look eagerly for the arrival of the conveyance with anxious hearts, but, to their astonishment, he does not appear, and all their kind preparations to receive him are in vain. Yet all the mishaps which befel him, and the consequent mortification and chagrin of his friends, arose from his thinking it was time enough, until it was too late. Reader, this is no fancy sketch It is an every-day occurrence.

3d. Let us see how it is in regard to church matters. It is often the case with persons who attend church, and who well know the hour for commencing the services, too, to say, "It's time enough;" and then they sit and loll about on the strength of their idea that it is time enough, and, after a very great delay, commence to prepare for church—and, at the very time they commence to dress, the pastor has commenced the exercises, and they hurriedly throw on their garments and start for church—and when they get there they find that church is almost out. They enter the door, and go up the aisle with a heavy and noisy tread, and attracting the attention of the entire audience, (who are generally alive to anything but the words of the preacher,) and finally take their seats away up in the Amen corner. This is not a rare occurrence—it is an old-time habit that they have imbibed from youth. "Time enough" has led many a one away—and when a bad habit is once formed, it strikes its roots so deep that it is difficult to eradicate it. Firm in their belief that their time enough system is right, it is almost impossible for any one to lead or convince them to the contrary

4th. There is another time enough habit which is more fearful in its consequences than all the rest. We allude to those persons who are living without a hope in Christ. It is always time enough with them to talk about the welfare of their souls. "Oh, it's time enough," they will tell you. See them again, and still "It's time enough." What a dangerous habit for any rational being to fall into! Again, the time enough system is procrastinated until at last sickness overtakes them, and fever and pain are so great that they cannot pray; they see the great danger of time enough, and promise that if the good Lord will spare them to get up again, they will abandon their former habits, and seek the Lord. God, in his mercy, permits them to once more regain their former health and vigor, but alas, to their shame be it told, how often do they forget all their good resolves, and once more relapse into their former vicious and sinful time enough habits, and thus they have gone on, and on, till the wrath of God falls upon them, and the scene is changed. Stretched upon the death-bed, we behold their pale brows damp with the clammy finger-touch of the death-angel; eternity looms up before them, and their spirits fast fleeting to an unknown world—lost forever.

Now, dear readers, you that have been indulging in a like manner, take warning from what we have said, and determine never to set under the influence any more of this dread foe of all mankind—Procrastination.—ED.

For the Christian Recorder

FROM INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Indianapolis, July 12, 1862.

MR. EDITOR:—There is nothing of interest that I can write to you from this place at present. We are making preparations for Conference, which is near at hand, and many of your old friends are anxiously looking forward to the time, hoping to again have the pleasure of seeing your friendly face, and greeting you with a hearty shake of the hand.

Right Rev. Bishop Quinn passed through here last week en route for Kansas, and will visit many intermediate points in his district. The Bishop is looking well, and is in good spirits. His stay in our place was short, but it was cheering to us to see the veteran pioneer again travelling over and surveying the ground where he has bestowed so much labor in planting our beloved Zion in early days. God grant that his useful life may be long spared to continue to do good, and see fruits of his long and faithful labors.

Faithfully yours,
W. R. REVELS, M. D

GENERAL BOOK STEWARD'S REPORT.

The Christian Recorder Reported from Jan. 1st, 1861, to May 1st, 1862.

CASH RECEIVED

1861
Feb.	1.	Taken in for the Recorder, ..	6 60
	3	" " " ..	3 80
	4	" " " ..	5 80
	5	" " " "	3 55
	6	"	4 91
	7	"	6 26
	8.	"	2 68
	10.	"	10 50
	11	"	5 93
	12	"	3 85
	13.	"	85
	14	"	2 25
	15	"	4 51
	17	"	10 80
	18	"
	19	"	3 70
	19	Donation from Bethel Sab. School,	35 00
	20	Taken,	5 00
	21	"	7 25
	22	"	4 75
	24	"	25
	26	"	5 82
	26.	"	4 09
	27	"	10
	28.	"	11 14
		Sum total, up to March 1st,	$240 14
March	1	Presented by Mr Burris .	18 00
	1.	Taken,	16 16
	3.	"	11
	3.	"	2 00
	4.	"	6 35
	5	"	3 00
	6	"	1 39
	7	"	3 56
	8.	"	9 74
	10.	"	62
	11	"	6 06
	12	"	12 00
	13	"	1 00
	14	"	8 38
	15	"	5 10
	17	"	20 10
	18.	"	87
	19	"	3 00
	20	"	80
	21	"	2 42
	22	"	2 80
	24	"	1 60
	25	"	8 71
	26	"	1 05
	27	"	1 01
	28.	"	5 55
	29	"	1 84
	31	"	2 15
		Sum total, up to April 1st,	$91 14
		Sum total, up to Dec. 1st,	$48 17
April	1	Taken,	15 22
	2	"	1 04
	3	"	15
	4	"	3 24
	5	"	2 03
	7.	"	8 64
	8	"	85
	9	"	1 78
	10	"	6 10
	11	"	26
	12	"	40
	15	"	87
	16	"	1 18
	20.	"	3 20
	22	"	2 70
	24	"	1 16
	25.	Presented by St. Louis A. M. E. Sab. School,	30 00
	26.	Taken,	40
	26.	"	1 00
		Sum total, up to May 1st,	$74 82

☞ The sum total received from January, 1861, to the 1st of May, 1862, is $1610 49

TO THE DISTRICTS OF PHILADELPHIA, NEW ENGLAND, OHIO, INDIANA, AND MISSOURI, OF THE A. M. E. CHURCH MINISTERS.

Dear Brethren:—As we have a number of superannuated ministers on the list in said Districts, therefore it will be expected that the ministers and preachers, on their circuits and stations, will do all they can to collect the two cent money; and we also recommend that the Class leaders be instructed to collect and set the amount on the Class book opposite each member's name, as also all the collections called, per Discipline, for the Annual Conference, and publish the same once every quarter, that it may be seen who they are that work for God and his cause. We think it is time to give credit to those of our people who do work, so that God's name may be glorified.

For the Christian Recorder.

FROM LEAVENWORTH, KANSAS

Leavenworth City, Kansas, July 11, 1862.

MR. EDITOR:—After writing two communications to your paper, and seeing no account of either of them, I have come to the conclusion that they failed to reach you. Therefore, I seize the present moment to drop a few lines to you, which you will please insert in the Recorder, which may afford pleasure to the brethren to know that the good work is prospering in Kansas, and our charge in getting along very well at this time, both spiritually and temporally. Peace and harmony abound among us. There has been quite a number of accessions to the church recently, many of whom bid fair to be useful in the service of the Church.

I made a visit to Lawrence, thirty-five miles from this place, on the first of last month, and found a goodly number of our people there. I preached for them three times, and was successful in organising a society there with sixty members, and there is a very flattering prospect there of the Church.

We have just completed our church in Leavenworth City, and Bishop Quinn and Rev. John Turner are to be here on the 26th of this month, and on the 27th to dedicate the church, and as that time will be a bush-meeting near the city. We are looking for a good time. The brethren regard it as a special privilege to be favored with a visit from the Bishop. I hope and pray that the good Lord may preserve his health and guard him safely to our city, as I think a visit from him would be attended with great good, in this new country, in the establishing of the church. A great portion of our people have escaped from the house of bondage, and have but little knowledge of the A. M. E. Church, but they are advancing rapidly in every respect, and are showing to them that argue their inferiority and inability to take care of themselves, that it is not the case.

The colored ladies of our city deserve no little credit for what they have done in assisting the sick and burying the dead among those out of bondage, when they were not able to help themselves. They organized themselves into a society called the Female Union Aid Society some three months ago. They turned out in uniform last Tuesday evening, and marched in procession to the A. M. E Church, where addresses were delivered to them by Rev. R. Caldwell and myself, on the subject of charity. They performed well.

More anon. J. M. WILKERSON.

☞ We have received a most excellent piece from Rev. R. H. CAIN and others just as we are going to press. Our contributing brethren will please send in their matter by Saturday or Monday. By conforming to this rule they will oblige us very much.

THE RICHMOND BATTLE

Terrible has been the contest before Richmond, and it is sad to think that it is not yet all over. On Wednesday, the 25th of June, General McClellan advanced his left wing, which brought on a severe fight; but the movement was successful. On the next day, a heavy attack was made upon his right wing, but our men held their position well, and during the night, fell back two or three miles. On Friday, the contest was again renewed, and thus it continued, fighting against immense odds all day, and changing their position during the night, until Monday night, when our wearied and exhausted troops gained the position they desired. The movement was a success, for General McClellan had not men enough to hold his extended line, while his new position is the best possible one for operating against Richmond; is high, healthy, and the one which he desired to gain at first, but was prevented by the presence of the Merrimac and other rebel gun-boats in the James River. Such an extensive flank movement, embracing troops, munitions, and commissary stores, was never before so successfully made in the presence of a greatly superior foe; and however the campaign may terminate in the Peninsula, it will ever remain celebrated in the history of warfare. The enemy, maddened at McClellan's success, made a most obstinate and persevering attack upon his new position on Tuesday, the 1st of July, and although the fight lasted most of the day, yet the enemy was repulsed with but little loss on our side His suffering on Monday was terrific, in consequence of the immense amount of artillery which McClellan was enabled to bring successfully into action, which hurled a perfect storm of grape and canister by the hour, into the close and compact ranks of the enemy, until in one place they are said to have used for a breast-work the dead bodies of their fallen comrades, where they lay piled several feet high. The Richmond Examiner admitted afterwards, that this day's fight was a perfect slaughter, and in evidence of the fact, stated that Gen. Hill's division, the best in their army, went into the fight 14,000 strong, and on the next day could muster only 6,000; and this was but one of the three or four divisions engaged.

The proobs loss on either side, is not known; it has been estimated as low as 12,000 killed, wounded and missing, on our side, but it is believed that this is below the truth, still it is asserted by those who ought to know, that 20,000 will certainly cover the whole. The Richmond papers state their loss at 30,000, while rebel prisoners, deserters, and Union officers who were constantly on the field, estimate it much higher, and some over twice that amount. Prisoners assert that from 200,000 to 250,000 rebel soldiers are around Richmond, and that not less than 150,000 were engaged in the seven days' fight; while it is believed that Gen. McClellan could, under no circumstances, bring 90,000 into the field, and in consequence of his extended lines, and scattered divisions, did not at any time have over 45,000 men in action.

Gen. McClellan's position is now regarded as safe and tenable, under any circumstances, and it is generally thought, that he will rest his men a little, and await reinforcements, before he makes a final assault upon the rebel capital. Why recruiting should have been suspended months ago, and McClellan left with an inadequate force, it is difficult to say; but those who are not in the secret, are getting pretty unanimous in the opinion that this war has been managed and mis-managed by civilians and politicians about long enough. The truth seems to be, that neither Congress nor the Administration has ever realized the immensity of the work which they have on hand; and those very parties, including the New York Tribune, who found most fault with McClellan's apparent inefficiency last winter, and shouted, "On to Richmond," are now the loudest in their complaints that the war department is not supplying him with a force sufficient to do anything decisive.

As the Governors of the loyal states have offered the President all the troops necessary, it is to be hoped that this terrible war may be speedily terminated by such a tremendous blow, that our posterity to the latest generation may have no occasion to do the work over again.

"THE LORD'S DAY."

It would, perhaps, be difficult to find a Scriptural passage which might more happily be employed to describe the origin and devoutly cheerful character of our Sunday—the Lord's day—than the following:—"This is the day which the Lord hath made: we will rejoice and be glad in it." (Ps cxviii. 24.) While all the historical associations cluster around our "holy day," which rendered the Sabbath holy in the eyes of a Jew, the Lord's day is invested in addition with a hallowed character which is altogether its own. The Saviour had repeatedly referred to His resurrection on the third day, as the most impressive sign which men could receive of His divine character and mission. So important is this event, that St Paul represents it (1 Cor. ch 15) as the great criterion by which either the emptiness and vanity, or else the life and power of the Christian's faith are to be determined. The first day of the week, the day on which the Prince of life rose from the grave, consequently acquired a profoundly significant character in the eyes of the first believers. This impression was deepened by the circumstance that the Lord chose the same day of the week for appearing again to the disciples, who were assembled with closed doors; the expression "eight days" in John xx. 26, as in Luke ii 21, is simply the Jewish mode of expressing the fact that one week had elapsed. Further—the wonderful event of the effusion of the Holy Ghost also occurred on the first day of the week, at the festival of Pentecost. (Acts ii 1.) The Lord was crucified on a Friday; ancient records testify that according to the usual interpretation of Lev. xxiii 15, 16, the day of Pentecost, to which reference is here made, occurred on the first day of the week The earliest traces of the Christian observance of Sunday, in place of the Jewish Sabbath day or Saturday, occur in Acts xx 7, and 1 Cor. xvi 2 John, the beloved disciple, furnished the church with the legitimate or Christian name of the day, when he called it "The Lord's Day." (Rev. i. 10.) The apostles, who were divinely guided in all their movements when they organized the church, were unquestionably empowered by the Divine Head of the Church to transfer the day which had, from the time of the creation, been specially consecrated to the worship of God, from the close to the beginning of the week. Old things, old modes of worship, old names passed away—all things were made new under the New Covenant

While the Christian's holy day—the Lord's day—still reminded him of the original work of the creation which had been completed in six days, and most happily embodied the spirit of the commandment: "Remember the Sabbath day, &c.," it received a far more impressive character, as the weekly commemoration of that new creation which Christ effected, when he rose as a victor from the grave. Such considerations led the early Christians to regard the Lord's day, as the most cheerful and happy day of the week; on that day they unitedly approached God in their public worship, and shared in the blessings conferred by the means of grace. No fasting nor any signs of mourning were tolerated on that day—it was the Lord's day, the day that proclaimed anew the grace and tender love of Christ. BANGS.

INTERVENTION IN AMERICAN AFFAIRS.

Some of the papers warmly, and others faintly, encourage this project, and urge immediate action upon parliament. None of them, however, save one, have had the frankness to avow the motive that has impelled England to the cowardly course she has pursued ever since our troubles broke out The Dispatch makes a clean breast of it, as follows:—

"We were never anxious to disclaim our distrust and fear of the American Republic. We did not seek to conceal our opinion that it was for our interest—that we were morally and politically justified in entertaining the desire—that it should be so divided as to cease to be formidable to mankind."

It is to be hoped that this frank confession will do the soul of England good. It is undoubtedly truthful, and very fairly explains the national hostility which our Government and loyal people have had to endure under the sickening denomination of this country's "strict neutrality." That this hostility still exists, even in high places, is very evident MR. GLADSTONE'S pet phrase now, when speaking of the contest between loyalty and rebellion, is "that miserable war now raging in America" On this phrase he harps in all his recent speeches, whenever he seeks to impress his audiences with the conviction that all the present distress in manufacturing England grows out of the want of American cotton.

ENGLAND EXPORTING COTTON.

And now a few more words on that subject. Last Monday's Times was a very curious paper in more respects than one. In the money article of the Hebrew Samson, after enumerating the bales of cotton now in the country, and comparing the present stock with that of the previous years, he states that the weekly consumption is 30,000 bales, and then makes the following astounding admission, viz.:—"We have also been exporting weekly at the rate of 14,000 bales!" I think you will say with me, "I thank thee, Jew, for teaching me that fact."

That there may be no fear that this was an accidental mistake, I quote also from the same paper the official report of the Liverpool Cotton Market of the 23d, which says:—"There has been a large attendance of the trade here to-day, who have operated more freely than for some time past, especially when they were fortunate enough to find desirable lots, and sales are from 20,000 to 30,000 bales; two-thirds of the business is on speculation and for export."

There you have, undesignedly, at least, one of the real secrets of the distress in the manufacturing districts, so long and so impudently attributed solely to the American war. Fourteen thousand bales per week during the last year, would amount to 728,000 bales, and this aggregate has actually been sent out of the country, while the rest has been used merely for purposes of speculation. This Government was prompt enough, not long ago, to prohibit the shipment of saltpetre, gunpowder, etc., etc. Why have they not put an end to the exportation of cotton? I fancy it would be difficult for them to find a satisfactory answer to this question were it pressed upon them. I am endeavoring to find a member of Parliament bold enough and honest enough to repeat those statements in the House of Commons, and do not quite despair of success.

This subject is so important, and the facts now being developed so thoroughly confirm the views I have hitherto expressed, that I venture to quote another authority, even at the risk of being tedious. The official report of the Manchester market, of the 24th, contains the following passage:—

"Both spinners and manufacturers are a good deal alarmed at what is taking place in the Liverpool Cotton market, and the diminishing stock of the raw material. There is still an impression that affairs may take such a turn in America as to seriously affect prices here immediately, if not permanently, and the high rates to which everything is being forced by the speculative spirit now so rife are regarded with anything but confidence. * * * Many manufacturers, having very much lightened their stocks by recent sales, appear disposed to hold aloof where full rates are not offered, and others are in hand to seek for business. The price of cloth still lags much behind its value, according to the rate at which cotton is selling, and those who can afford are holding back in the expectation of reaping advantage by working off cloths are rather scarcer."

In addition to the foregoing, the Liverpool Cotton report of the 24th says:—"The excitement in the Cotton market continues unabated, and this day's business exceeded 20,000 bales, 12,000 bales on speculation and export."

Thus, already have leaked out two of the causes of the distress of which we have heard so much of late, and if we have ever felt the least inclined to sympathize with England on account of it, I think we may now safely wipe our eyes and rest assured that no responsibility at all rests with us.

As regards cotton, the Government finds it easier, and thinks it more to its interest to suffer the "American War" to be saddled with the responsibility of an evil resulting from its own misdoings, than to issue the necessary order which would have prevented the draining of the country of the raw material, albeit such a course would also have prevented a few speculators from realising colossal fortunes. So far as we are concerned, the matter will regulate itself, and impartial history will relieve us from the responsibility so impudently attempted to be thrust upon us.

THE SLAVE TRADE TREATY.

MR KINNAIRD endeavored last Monday, to draw out some expression of the House of Commons in reference to the Slave Trade Treaty, and made a few complimentary remarks on the subject He failed, however, to elicit more than a single brief response from MR. SOTHERON ESTCOURT, who said that it must not be supposed, because the House did not enter into the discussion of the subject at so late an hour, that it did not take an interest in the question and fully appreciate the value of the concession made by the American Government This is all the notice that has been taken of a step so important, and for not taking which we have been abused and vilified for the last quarter of a century. We have, however, the admission of Earl RUSSELL and Lord PALMERSTON, in either House of Parliament, that "the United States had behaved in the handsomest manner," and that "the American Government had proposed this treaty," instead of being urged to it by some other party Lord SHAFTESBURY still preserves an ominous, and what I suppose he regards a dignified, silence on the whole subject. There is no more capital for him to make out of it.

AFFAIRS IN LONDON.

The underwriters at LLOYD'S are wearing longer faces than ever at the knowledge that they will have to pay the insurance money on the Elizabeth, news of the capture of which has reached them. The owners of these vessels and cargoes are making a good thing out of these captures, and we need not feel much sympathy for the set of grasping cormorants on whom the losses fall.

THREE Oratorios, lately given by JENNY LIND, have netted the handsome sum of about thirteen thousand dollars, the whole of which has been judiciously distributed among the most praiseworthy and needy benevolent institutions of London. The expenses in each case amounted to about twenty-five hundred dollars more.

MR. TRAIN'S tramway is already numbered among the things that were—a gang of men, under the Sheriff's authority, having commenced taking it up on Friday last.

THE presentation of the "freedom of the city" to Mrs. GEORGE PEABODY is to take place on the 10th of July. With that, I venture to say, will end every public or private recognition of the "munificent gift," which, for all the good it will ever do the "poor of London," for whom it was nominally designed, might as well have been thrown into the Thames.

I do not know that I have ever told you that the accursed system of imprisonment for debt, which civilized England clung to so disgracefully when almost every other nation had long abolished it, is at last effectually at an end. A thorough clearance has been made of the prisoners in confinement (one of whom had been in captivity for no less than forty-seven years!) and in a few days the Insolvent Debtors' Court holds its last sitting. The old Fleet Prison and the Marshalsea are even now only known as antiquarians, and the remaining Bastile—the Queen's Prison—is about to be converted into a Hospital. Except in cases of fraud, imprisonment in future can only extend to a period of from four to eight weeks.

I have hitherto omitted to mention that since the permanent establishment of the American Legation, at No 5 Upper Portland Place, Mr. and Mrs. ADAMS give weekly receptions, on Monday evenings, which are attended by many of our countrymen, as well as by the elite of English society. They are the very pleasantest affairs imaginable, unostentatious, informal, and as social as any one could desire. It is a long time since the house of an American Minister in London has been the scene of so pleasant a re-union as I attended there on Monday last; indeed, it is some time since we have had a Representative at this Court who remembered that in becoming an Ambassador he should not cease to be an American to Americans.

THE awards of the different juries at the Great Exhibition have been made up, and it is said they will be publicly announced on the 11th of July. Of course, everything concerning them is supposed to be kept profoundly secret, but I have contrived to learn a single fact, viz.: that the American piano will receive a first medal. Every foreign juror voted in their favor, but the English jurors opposed them in a body. In spite of this latter depreciation they are unquestionably the best instruments in the Exhibition.

Your readers will be surprised, and some of them pained, to learn that the Rev. J. W. C. PENNINGTON, the well-known colored clergyman, formerly of Hartford, Ct., is now the inmate of one of the Liverpool prisons. He was accused of stealing from a bookshop a copy of POPE'S HOMER'S Odyssey, of the value of only a few shillings. He was followed into the street and the book found on his person, bottomed up in his coat. The evidence was so clear that, in spite of his appeals to his character and standing, his intimacy with Dr. RAFFLES and other eminent English clergymen, the efforts of excellent lawyers, and the aid of the American Consul, the Judge was compelled to convict him, and sentenced him to a month's imprisonment, with hard labor. The act and its motive were alike inexplicable. I do not know what his friends and patrons, Lord SHAFTESBURY and the Duchess of SUTHERLAND, will say about it—or what course may be taken by the University of Oxford, which some time ago conferred upon him (as a designed rebuke of the American Universities) the degree of D. D.

I cannot forbear to quote the following passage from Mr. CHARLES MACKAY'S last letter to the Times, published this morning. In spite of its authorship, appearing as it does in the Times, it is calculated to produce a wonderful effect upon the public mind, and scarcely anything else is to day talked of. I forbear comment; his language speaks distinctly enough for itself. He says:—

"The people of Europe may be certain that the defeat of MCCLELLAN—which is possible but not probable—would be of no real advantage to the Confederates. It would but prolong the agony of the contest, and cause such an uprising of the excited Northern people as would place at the disposal of the Federal Government any number of men it chose to ask for. The South, unless it enrol and arm its slaves, an ultimatum of hard necessity, on which it looks with alarm and repugnance, is not in a position to raise an extra 100,000 men for any emergency whatever; while the North, vast as its armies already are, can double or treble them in case of need, and will do so at a word from the President, rather than stop short in the work it has commenced. A Confederate victory at Richmond might give the Powers of Europe a welcome opportunity of recommending the South to lay down its arms, and the North to grant a general amnesty; but it would be of no real help to the cause of Southern Independence, unless upon the untenable supposition that the great Powers of Europe were prepared at the eleventh hour to make that cause their own, and brave the certain consequences of a war with the United States Recognition of the South was once as possible as it would have been wise and humane; but that day has long since passed and can scarcely be said to have outlasted the evacuation of Manassas. At the present time, with a whole harvest of laurels upon its brow, the North might listen to the pleadings of Europe for mercy to the vanquished; but any attempt at recognition, even should victory smile upon the Confederate arms at Richmond, would awaken such a spirit of vengeance as would be ominous of a more dreadful war than France or England would care to engage in for interests so remote, or advantages so problematical."

I will just add, also, without a word of comment, that the official report of the cotton market, published in to-day's Times, shows that the sales of cotton this week amount to 114,000 bales, of which no less than 64,000 bales were for export.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

THE GREAT AMERICAN DESERT—A NOVEL ENTERPRISE.

In the acquisition of Territory from Mexico we acquired not only good, bad and indifferent lands, but we got a desert, and so large in its dimensions, so formidable in its withering desolations, that we are as much at a loss to know what to do with it as was the party who drew the elephant. Professor Blake, who from his position of geologist, accompanying the exploring and surveying expedition of Capt. Williamson, of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Survey, acquired a personal and familiar knowledge of this "waste and delightful" (desert at death,) in a recent lecture in San Francisco, in speaking of the Colorado Desert, pronounced it as fine a specimen of the desert as that of Lybia or Sahara. It extends from the base of San Bernardino southwesterly one hundred and eighty miles, parts of its surface being below our boundary line in Sonora. Its area is some nine thousand square miles; and excepting the Colorado, which cuts across its lower end, is without river or lake It stretches off to the horizon on all sides without one glimpse of vegetation or life. Its surface is ashy and parched; its frame of mountains rise in ragged pinnacles of brown rock, bare even of soil. Words are unequal to the task of describing its apparent expanses, the purity of its air, the silence of its night, the brilliancy of the stars that overhang it, the tints of the mountains at daybreak, the looming up of those beyond the horizon, the glare of the midday sun, the violence of its local storms of dust and sand.

Parts are entirely destitute even of sand, being smooth, compact, sun-baked clay; other parts are covered with heaps of sand, disposed like snow-drifts in waves of fifty and eighty feet in height. Near the mountains along the Colorado there is a terrace as flat as the floor, and paved with pebbles of nearly uniform size, of porphyry, jasper, quartz, cornelian, and agate, all rounded by the action of the water, and polished till they glisten, by the driving sand. In this respect, again, the porch of our Great Desert is like that which outlines the Lybian Desert. Doubtless the northern part of the desert is the dry bed of an ancient lake of fresh water, whose beach lines are strongly marked. Probably, at a comparatively recent period, the water of the California Gulf covered all the clay surface of the desert. It lies below their level now, and if a channel were cut through the natural embankment of the Colorado, it would be doubtless covered again with water. It is very probable that the Colorado Desert region was uplifted within historic times. Earthquakes occasionally agitate its surface, and in 1852 there were eruptions of mud and hot water in the central parts of the valley.

The National Intelligencer says that an enterprise is on foot for converting this formidable desert into a fruitful field by introducing water from the Colorado River on and over it, thus causing verdure to replace sterility, "causing the desert to bloom as the rose."

The propagator of this enterprise having devoted several years in the preliminary work, and having fully determined the practicability of the measure by actual instrumental surveys, now awaits the action of Congress to make cession of this Sahara to the State of California, in compliance with the expressed wish of her Legislature. It cannot be doubted that Congress will at once comply with the application made by California, and allow the parties to go on with this novel work, which promises to be of so much benefit to the government and mankind.—Scientific American.

LETTER FROM ILLINOIS.

The Hessian fly has done great damage to the wheat crop in this section of country, and during the past month many farmers have plowed up their wheat fields and planted them with corn. The fly is a stranger among us, and this is its first visitation. It is very capricious in its visits. A friend had twenty-five acres of new ground in wheat, in which he had but one wheat-stalk to every foot of ground; while a neighbor on the other side of the fence, with land of the same kind, and a crop put in at the same time, and yet lot entirely alone by Mr. Fly, and a good wheat crop is the result. It may be that the Hessian fly goes into a state of chrysalis like the army worm, and that this is the solution of the phenomenon.

It is a singular fact that the late-sown wheat is very much the best this year; and another peculiarity of this season is, that new land is not giving half the yield that new ground usually does, and also that the old ground in wheat is far outstripping the new. "Early sown wheat on new ground is sure gold" has passed into a proverb among Illinois farmers, but this year has proved an exception to the rule. The spring was late and wet, which not only injured the wheat crop, but the corn. Much of the seed corn rotted in the ground, and had to be replanted, and the corn-fields, as a general thing, never looked more backward at this season of the year than they do at present. Nothing but a late fall will save our corn crop. Some farmers have been but once through their corn yet, whereas, in ordinary years, the third plowing should have been done by this time—the last week in June.

Grass looks fine; so do potatoes and other root crops, as is generally the case when so much rain falls as we are having at present.

Potatoes have been selling at fifty and sixty cents a bushel lately, quite a contrast to this time a year ago, when they rotted by hundreds of bushels in pits, in the farmers' fields, and no one to carry them away. If help had been as plenty as usual, farmers would have fed them to their cattle, but they are dangerous food unless cut up

Much sorghum is being raised this year, and the time is not far distant, I think, when Illinois will be sweetly independent of the South. Our farmers, too, are beginning to give their attention to sheep-raising, which is one of the good signs of the times. Much corn has been sold this past season for ten cents a bushel, while Ohio farmers were paying twenty cents. Hundreds of thousands of tons of hay go to waste uncut every year in Illinois, while the Ohio far the heart and kidneys, and washed them in palm wine and other strong drugs of an astringent sort. Then they drew the brains through the nostrils with a hooked piece of iron, and filled the skull also with such binding drugs. They then anointed all the body with oil of cedar, myrrh, cinnamon, and the like, for some thirty days; by this means it was kept whole, without even losing its hair, and kept pure, without any sign of decay. Afterward, it was soaked for forty days in salt of nitre, then washed, wrapped in linen swaddling-bands dipped in myrrh, and rubbed with a gum which the Egyptians used instead of glue.

This was their process of embalming. The body was then restored to the relatives. If they were persons of rank, they placed it in a coffin, and kept it in their houses, or in fit tombs made for the purpose. In those early days, coffins were not always used in Egypt. The upper part of the coffin was designed to give a likeness of the deceased, and was often set off with figures and paintings, according to its state.

Jacob was carried for burial to Hebron, two hundred miles from Goshen, and his family mourned for him with sore lamentation for seventy days. At funerals in after years, they sat with their faces covered, ashes sprinkled on their heads, crying out with a doleful voice, wringing or clapping their hands, smiting their breasts or thighs, and uttering expressions of sorrow. The mourning commonly lasted seven days, sometimes a month, as for Aaron and Moses; sometimes seventy days, as for Jacob; and widows would even pass their lives in sorrow and loneliness, like Judith, and Anna the prophetess.

Joseph himself, who was thirty years of age when he first stood before Pharaoh, and spent eighty years in prosperity in Egypt, died one hundred and ten years old, and was embalmed and put into a coffin in the costliest style of Egypt, but not carried at once back to Canaan. His body was kept by the Israelites in Egypt, as a pledge that God would surely bring their offspring into the possession of Canaan, and it should not be buried till that promise should be fulfilled.

The Jewish historian, Josephus, tells us that the other sons of Jacob lived happily in Egypt, and when they died, were all carried into the land of Canaan to be buried.—Child. Mag.

TO MOTHERS.

The first book read, and the last book laid aside by every child, is the conduct of its mother.

1. First give yourself, then your child, to God. It is but giving him his own. Not to do it, is robbing God.
2. Always prefer virtue to wealth—the honor that comes from God to the honor that comes from men. Do this for yourself. Do it for your child.
3. Let your whole course be to raise your child to a high standard. Do not sink into childishness yourself.
4. Give not heedless commands, but when you command, require prompt obedience.
5. Never indulge a child in cruelty, even to an insect.
6. Cultivate a sympathy for your child, in all lawful joys and sorrows.
7. Be sure that you never correct a child until you know it deserves correction. Hear its story first, and fully.
8. Never allow your child to whine, or fret, or to bear grudges.
9. Early inculcate frankness, candor, generosity, magnanimity, patriotism, and self denial.
10. The knowledge and fear of the Lord are the beginning of wisdom.
11. Never mortify the feelings of your child by upbraiding it with dulness; but do not inspire it with self-conceit.
12. Pray with and for your child, often and fervently.
13. Encourage all attempts at self-improvement.
14. Never deceive nor break a promise to a child.
15. Reprove not a child severely, in the presence of strangers.

Remember that life is a vapour, and that every child may be called out of time into eternity, say day.

American Baptist.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.—The following table gives the number of communicants in each diocese:

New York,	26,854
Pennsylvania,	16,150
Connecticut,	12,184
Western New York,	11,711
Maryland,	10,928
Massachusetts,	8,266
Virginia,	7 990
South Carolina,	6,126
Ohio,	6,068
New Jersey,	5,956
Rhode Island,	3,390
Illinois,	3,146
Michigan,	3,076
Wisconsin,	2,926
North Carolina,	2,792
Kentucky,	2,502
Georgia,	2,184
Vermont,	2,114
Alabama,	1,864
Louisiana,	1,798
Maine,	1,483
Tennessee,	1,395
Mississippi,	1,356
Indiana,	1,270
Missouri,	1,168
Delaware,	1,077
Iowa,	989
Minnesota,	863
New Hampshire,	843
Texas,	812
California,	654
Florida,	641

CONTENTS OF THE SCRIPTURES.

FROM AN OLD WORK OF TORSHELL.

GENESIS—The cabinet of the greatest antiquities.

EXODUS—The sacred rule of law and justice.

LEVITICUS—The holy Ephemerides (daily observances).

NUMBERS—God's arithmetic.

DEUTERONOMY—The faithful mirror.

JOSHUA—The holy war.

JUDGES—The mirror of magistrates and tyrants

RUTH—The picture of a pious widow.

SAMUEL, KINGS—Sacred politics

CHRONICLES—The holy annals.

EZRA, NEHEMIAH—An idea of church and state reformation.

ESTHER—The great example of God's providence.

JOB—The school of patience.

PSALMS—The soul's soliloquies; the little Bible; the academy of conscience; the rose garden; the pearl island.

PROVERBS—Divine ethics, politics, economics

ECCLESIASTES—Experience of the creature's vanity

CANTICLES—The mystical bride song.

ISAIAH—The evangelical prophet

JEREMIAH—The pathetical mourner.

LAMENTATIONS—The voice of the turtle (turtle-dove.)

EZEKIEL—Urim and Thummim in Babylon.

DANIEL—The apocalypse of the Old Testament.

HOSEA—Sermons of faith and repentance.

JOEL—The thunderer.

AMOS—The plain-dealing reprover.

OBADIAH—Edom's whip.

JONAH—The prophetical apostle of the Gentiles

MICAH—The wise men's star

NAHUM—The scourge of Assur (Assyria.)

HABAKKUK—The comforter of captives.

ZEPHANIAH—Preparation for sad times.

HAGGAI—Zeal for God's house

ZECHARIAH—Prophetic hieroglyphics

MALACHI—The bound-stone of the two Testaments.

MATTHEW, MARK, LUKE, JOHN—The four trumpeters proclaiming the title of the great King.

ACTS—The treasury of ecclesiastical story

ROMANS—The principles of Christian faith; the catholic catechism.

I. CORINTHIANS—Apostolical reformation

II. CORINTHIANS—[illegible]

GALATIANS—The epistle to the Romans epitomized

EPHESIANS—The opening of the great mystery of salvation

PHILIPPIANS—An apostolical parænesis (encouragement, exhortation.)

COLOSSIANS—A brief rule of faith and manners

I. THESSALONIANS—Practical theology

II. THESSALONIANS—Eschatological theology

I. TIMOTHY—The sacred pastoral

II. TIMOTHY—The title of the Scripture pleaded

TITUS—Agenda, or church order.

PHILEMON—The rule of relations

HEBREWS—A commentary upon Leviticus

JAMES—The golden alphabet of a Christian.

I. PETER—A theological summary

II. PETER—The encouragement of a spiritual warrior

I. JOHN—The glass of love, or charity

II. JOHN—The pattern of a pious matron

III. JOHN—The mirror of hospitality.

JUDE—A picture of false prophets

REVELATION, Divine Redivivus—The opening of the treasury of future events

ODDS AND ENDS.

The Worst Breed of Dogs in the World.—The dogs of war.

Why is number two like a double victory? Because it is twice one (won.)

Treat your family kindly, but pat your horse and cattle nightly to the rack

If a man thinks he belongs to a superior caste, probably the cast is in his eye.

When was beef-tea first made in England? When Henry the Eighth dissolved the Pope's bull

The great object of an author, a painter, an orator is to see himself printed at with the finger, and hear it said, "That's he!"

In a church, the hottest situation is the gallery, because the cold air lies nearest the floor till it has become heated, when it ascends towards the roof of the building

"Children," said a considerate matron to her assembled progeny, "children, you may have everything you want, but you mustn't want anything you can't have."

While stopping a short time at Neshanne, Pa., one day last week, we were for the first time inside the large church there. Among other things we saw was an old Dutch Bible printed in 1537. It had a wooden binding, and was not much damaged, considering its old age.

The silk line, as spun by the worm, is about the five hundredth part of an inch thick; but a spider's line is perhaps six times finer, or only the 3000th part of an inch in diameter; inasmuch that a single pound of this attenuated substance might be sufficient to encompass our globe.

Sir Thomas Lethbridge—"Why, you have never opened your mouth this session," said Sir Thomas Lethbridge to Mr. Gye. "I beg your pardon, Sir Thomas," replied Mr. Gye; "your speeches have made me open it very frequently. My jaws have ached with yawning."

ABSENCE OF MIND.—Talking of absence of mind (said the Rev. Sidney Smith,) the oddest instance happened to me once in forgetting my own name. I knocked at a door in London, and asked if Mrs. B. was at home. "Yes, sir; pray what name shall I say?" I looked in the man's face astonished—what name?—Ay, that is the question—what is my name? I believe the man thought me mad; but it is literally true that for a space of two or three minutes I had no more idea of who I was than if I had never existed. I did not know whether I was a Dissenter or a layman; I felt as dull as Sternhold or Hopkins. At last, to my great relief, it flashed across me that I was Sidney Smith. I heard also of a clergyman who went jogging along the road until he came to a turnpike. "What's to pay?" "Pay, sir! for what?" asked the turnpike man. "Why, for my horse, to be sure." "Your horse, sir! what horse? Here is no horse, sir." "No horse! why," said he, suddenly looking down between his legs, "I thought I was on horseback."

THE LIBERIAN REPUBLIC.

The first settlement was commenced at Cape Montserrado, now the city of Monrovia, April 25th, 1822. Other colonies followed, when, in 1839, they were merged into a commonwealth. July 26, 1847, independence was declared and a Republic formed, which has since been self-sustaining, waving its flag of liberty over a happy people

All the officers of the Government are colored men, and are chosen or appointed from among themselves. Its population consists of about ten thousand American-born persons of color, five thousand emancipated and civilized Africans, and several hundred thousand natives who are subject to its jurisdiction and laws. The English language prevails, churches of the prominent denominations abound, and common schools and seminaries are not wanting. A College building has been completed at a cost of twenty thousand dollars, and a well qualified faculty selected. Domestic slavery is prohibited, and the slave trade forbidden under penalty of death

Its territory has been equitably purchased. It extends along the Western Coast of Africa, for six hundred miles, and inland from thirty to fifty. The soil is very fertile and well watered. Agricultural pursuits are receiving increased attention, and its coffee, sugar and other commodities are constantly reaching foreign points. Palm oil and other valuable products are shipped, and its power is even now felt in the commercial world. Forty craft, built, owned and manned by the Liberians, trade along its coast and the West African seaboard, and larger vessels are similarly engaged and run to this country and to England.

The United States government has now formally acknowledged the independence of Liberia, and will enter into treaty relations with her. This act of justice to a nation connected to us by commercial ties and religious and political affinities, should have been performed long since. The most enlightened Powers have already recognised its nationality, and formed treaty relations with it, and reaped commercial benefits from these acts of national civility. Having been favored by our people, to a portion of whom it sustained a relation of dependence in its infancy, it has gratefully received our trade on the best terms Our opening of intercourse with this growing African State will react favorably upon the descendants of that continent in this country, and awaken an interest that must issue in the happiest results.—Cin. Herald

The Social, Civil, and Statistical Association of the Colored People of Pennsylvania open a subscription list to aid the freed men at Port Royal and other points where they may be located, and respectfully ask the co-operation of the colored citizens and others in this city, or elsewhere, in money or clothing

Any article of value received will be acknowledged, with the name of the donor, in the Recorder, where a constant record will be kept.

Subscriptions may be sent to Jacob C. White, at the office of the Lebanon Cemetery, 711 Lombard Street, and also to William Still, 107 North Fifth Street, and to Rev. E. Weaver, 519 Pine Street.

PAID.

Statistical Society,	$50 00
Clayton Miller,	2 00
William Still,	5 00
Robert Adger,	2 00
Henry Minnern,	2 00
Catherine Johnson,	1 00
Vasti Locke,	2 00
Wm. Warricks,	2 00
Harriet Shorter,	1 00
Sarah S. Hawkins,	1 00
Rev. Jonathan C. Gibbs,	1 00
James P. Clay,	1 00
Benjamin F Hill,	2 00
S M. S.,	2 00
Elizabeth Gordon,	1 00
F. J. Dreer,	5 00

It affords us pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of ten dollars, the proceeds of Miss Anna E. Dickinson's lecture at Concert Hall for the contrabands, contributed to the S. C. and Statistical Association, to be applied as intended. WM. STILL.

Cor Sec. of S. C. and Statistical Association of the Colored People of Penna.

Domestic Items.

The Southern Press on the recent Battles, and the present position of McClellan.—The Richmond Dispatch, June 30, says of the battles up to that date.

STONEWALL AT WORK.

But "where is Jackson!" ask all. He has travelled fast, and is heading the retreating foe, and as night closes in all is anxiety for intelligence from him. 'Tis now about 7 P. M., and just as the rout of the enemy is complete—just as the last valleys are sounding in the enemy's ear, the distant and rapid discharges of cannon, tell that Jackson has fallen upon the retreating column, broken it, and captured 3,000 prisoners. Far in the night his insatiable troops hang upon the enemy, and for miles upon miles are dead, wounded, prisoners, wagons, cannon, &c., scattered in inextricable confusion upon the road. Thus for four hours did our inferior force, unaided by a single piece of artillery, withstand over thirty thousand of the enemy, assisted by twenty-six pieces of artillery.

In total we captured many prisoners and thirty pieces of artillery up to five, P. M., Friday, and in the battle of Gaines' Mills, captured twenty-six field pieces, 15,000 stand of arms, six stand of colors, three generals, (Reynolds, Saunders and Rankin,) and over 4000 prisoners, including dozens of officers of every grade, from colonels to lieutenants of the line.

THE FEDERAL FORCE.

Every arm of the service was well represented in the Federal line—cavalry were there in force, and when our men emerged from the woods, attempted to charge, but the three brigades of the right and Jackson's three brigades on the left, closed up ranks and poured such deadly volleys upon the horsemen, that they left the ground in confusion, and entirely for their infantry to decide the day.

MONEY WAS FOUND

quite abundantly among the slain. Some men interring the dead, often searched the pockets, &c., one man finding not less than $150 in gold; another fished out of some old clothes not less than $500; another $1000 in Federal notes. Watches, both gold and silver were found among the spoils, one lucky individual having not less than six chronometers ticking in his pocket at one time. As a general thing, more money was found upon the dead on the field than on any other on which we have heard.

CLOTHING IN ABUNDANCE

was scattered about, and immense piles of new uniforms were found untouched. Our men seemed to take great delight in assuming Federal Officers' uniforms, and strutted about were comically, much to the amusement of dusty, powder-begrimed youths, who sat toiling and smoking in the shade. Every conceivable article of clothing was found in these divisional camps, and came quite apropos to our needy soldiery, scores of whom took a cold bath, and changed old for new under clothing, many articles being of costly material and quite unique.

THE AMOUNT OF AMMUNITION FOUND

was considerable, and proved of very superior quality and manufacture. The exact amount captured, we have not yet ascertained, but from the immense piles of boxes scattered through the camps, we conjecture that the enemy had laid in quite an unusual supply, expecting to use it, doubtless, upon our devoted men, and as they would did our troops stand, as they do, at "long taw," and not come to "close quarters."

THE CANNON AND ARMS CAPTURED

in this battle were numerous, and of very superior workmanship. The twenty-six pieces were the most beautiful we have ever seen, while immense piles of guns could be seen on every hand, many scarcely having the manufacturer's finish even tarnished. The enemy seemed quite willing to throw them away on the slightest pretext, dozens being found with loads still undischarged. The number of small arms captured, we understand, was not less than fifteen thousand, of every calibre and every make.

THE FEDERAL WOUNDED

were collected together, and formed a very large field-hospital. The court yard of a farm house was selected, and scores could be seen reclining on the grass, and expert surgeons operating with much skill and zeal. By mutual agreement, surgeons are not considered prisoners of war; hence, at the close of the late battle, many Federal surgeons remain d behind, and their services seems to be very much appreciated by the men. As many as could be, were conveyed to town, and attended to, good conveyance being furnished and much care manifested for their welfare.

Rebel View of McClellan's Position—Its Impregnability admitted.—The Rebel Press growling for News.—Washington, July 11.—The Richmond Examiner of the 7th, has been received here. Discoursing upon General McClellan's present [illegible] says: "We believe all that was known in this city yesterday, outside of the Bureaucracy, was that the enemy had taken a strong position, with one of his flanks resting on the river, above Berkeley, completely under cover of his gun-boats, and his extreme right reaching to Herring Creek, where his position is defended by an almost impassable morass. It was supposed that the enemy would have been attacked yesterday, but there had been no fighting up to the last accounts we have from the lines. It is not to be supposed that the enemy has selected these plantations as the scene of his last great stand, without good reasons. The first and most apparent of these, is that the western landing is perhaps the very best on the James river, and the stream for miles up and down, being broad and deep, affords both excellent sea room and anchorage for his gunboats and transports. But this is by no means the only advantage of the position. On the west of Berkeley, are innumerable impassable ravines, running from near the Charles City road, on the north to James river, making a successful attack from that quarter next to impassible. Within a quarter of a mile of where these ravines begin, Herring Run creek crosses the Charles City road, and running in a southeasterly direction, skirts on the north and east the plantations of Berkeley and Westover, and empties into James river at the extreme eastern boundary of the latter. The whole course of this creek is one impassable morass, while along its northern and eastern banks extend the heights of Evelington, a long range of hills that overlook the Westover and Berkeley estates, and which offer an eligible position for heavy guns.

"It will be seen that, protected on the south by the river and his gunboats, on the west by impenetrable ravines, and on the north and east by Herring creek and the heights of Evelington, the enemy's position presents but one pregnable point, the piece of level country northwest of Westover, from a quarter to half a mile in width, lying between the head of the ravines and the point where Herring creek crosses the Charles City road. But it is certain that the enemy, with his immense resources of men and machinery, will, in a very brief period, obstruct by art this only natural entrance to his stronghold. Already it is within range of his gunboats, and of his siege guns planted on the Evelington hills. Another day may see it strewn with felled timber and bristling with field batteries. In enumerating the advantages secured to the enemy in his present position, his superior facilities of transportation must not be omitted. Wants of ammunition and stores must be supplied a distance of nearly thirty miles, his steamers and transports are running up to the very doors of his tents. For the benefit of distant readers, we may here properly say something of the character of the country in which, suddenly and unexpectedly, the scene of war has been shifted. Ten days ago, when McClellan beleaguered Richmond, with the exception of about five miles of the Chickahominy low ground, he occupied the most barren, and at the same time, the worst watered and most unhealthy region of Eastern Virginia. Agues, hoop-poles and whortleberries have been always the only sure crops of the country within a radius of ten miles about the Seven Pines, taking that point as a center, and but two living streams cross the Nine-mile, Williamsburg road, between Richmond and Baltom Bridge. On these two roads, with the Seven Pines as their headquarters, the very pick and flower of the Northern army was concentrated, and here, for weeks, their vigor and numbers melted away, under the influence of miasma, bad water, and Southern sun, but by this hasty trip through White Oak Swamp, McClellan has emerged with thinned ranks into a more genial land. A broad, fresh river flows before him, while his tired and hungry hordes will find boundless supplies in as fair and rich a valley as the sun shines on. The country of the lower James river is the garden spot of Virginia. Nowhere does soil better repay the toil and skill of the husbandman."

The Examiner says to its own Government. "There has already been enough trifling and abuse of the public mind by the suppression or reserve of facts on the part of the Government. If the Commanding General could write a dozen lines, giving the result of the fight at Gaines' Mills, why on each succeeding day might we not have had a bulletin of equal length simply stating the results. It would have cost but a trifle of time, and would have conferred an incalculable benefit upon the whole country in composing the public anxiety. If the first official display of our success has not been fully sustained by sub equent events, and if the public expectations which were then raised to such a height are to be reduced, we believe that our people can bear the disappointment, without waiting to hear the facts drop out through the slow and forced confessions of them in authority. If McClellan had effected a communication with the river, why was not the fact boldly and unreservedly announced, instead of leaving it to the public news by reports of surrounding pickets of his army, straggler swamps, and in the neighborhood of mill ponds, and other false and vague sources, intended to break the fall of public expectation? Let the public, at least, under the impression of general facts. We know that the value of our troops has so far prevailed, and that the enemy has been passed from the lines of intrenchment of this city, but what may be the strength of the relevant remnant of his army, whether that remnant is yet involved by our lines, or has escaped from our grasp, or has been reinforced for another grand battle, are questions which everybody has been asking for the last week, and which the Government plainly refuses to answer by withholding from the people all information whatever of the battle of Richmond."

Upon the strait to which the rebels are now reduced, the Examiner says:

"The scene of active operations has been removed to such a distance from Richmond, that it is difficult to obtain any news of the incidents of each day, but from what is generally understood of the situation, it appears to admit only of the severe alternative of an immediate assault upon the enemy, or the falling back of our lines."

With reference to the continued danger of Richmond, the Examiner says:

"It is sincerely to be hoped that the ability of our generals, and the dauntless courage of the Southern armies will soon relieve this portion of our State from the presence of the invader. In them under Heaven is our only hope. So long as the enemy holds undisputed possession of the lower James river, so long is the capital of the Confederacy menaced."

Items of News.—The new financial bill just passed by Congress is of great importance. It is evidently designed as a ground work for a complete system of national banking, doing away with most or all of the disadvantages of a national bank. The currency of the country will be relieved, and the frequency of financial crashes and panics in consequence of the supposed lack of specie will be prevented by the inauguration of this system.

Our Reports by mail from the army of the Potomac are encouraging. The health of the army was improving at last advices. The President's visit had created great enthusiasm, and reinforcements were still constantly arriving at Harrison's Landing. The President declares his confidence in the army and its commander, and says matters there "are all right."

From the Southwest we have some interesting news by mail—to the 30th ultimo from Vicksburg, and to the 5th instant from White river. No further reliable news had been received from Gen. Curtis. The bombardment of Vicksburg continues at intervals. Gen. Pitch is progressing satisfactorily with his expedition up the White river.

Our Government has finally agreed upon a plan for a general exchange of prisoners. The relief will come too late for some, but all will be overjoyed at the consummation of being soon released from a hard bondage.

Prospects.—"All quiet along the lines!" is the latest intelligence from the army of the Potomac, and it is reported that the enemy has drawn in his picket and outpost guards, and is retreating, but in what direction we are left to speculate. Can it be that the enemy, alarmed at the threatening attitude McClellan holds towards his Southern line of retreat, forces him to look to it instantly, and, finding it in danger of destruction, he is already retreating towards Danville? To the North he sees approaching Pope's splendid army; a retreat to Lynchburg or the mountains would end the war by its own disadvantages; to meet McClellan's army, strengthened by heavy reinforcements of fresh troops, is not to be thought of, and it seems to us there is but one way for the rebels to prolong the war for a few months, and that is by a well-conducted retreat to Danville, naturally a strong position, and one which may be made as good a depot for stores as Richmond, even with fewer railroad terminii, because it is much nearer the sources of supply, and so far inland that no aid could be looked for by us from gunboats. A retreat to Danville would certainly secure sufficient time to the enemy to recuperate and fortify. Let us hope that he will be allowed to start upon his journey southward, but that he may be attacked in the flank, (which, in retreating, will have to be discovered to McClellan) and that he may be totally discomfited. Private advices, for the last few days, from the Peninsula, have assured us that the enemy contemplated retreating, but we refrained from publishing anything that might cause undue excitement among the people, unless properly substantiated by official advices from Washington. On Monday last the enemy seemed to be desirous of appearing in a demonstrative mood. He ran a field battery down to the south bank of the James river, below Harrison's Landing, and fired for some hours upon such of our tran ports as were passing up and down the river, which had the effect to draw our gunboats from above the mouth of the Appomattox. On the same day the smoke of burning buildings arose from every point in front of our lines, and led to the starting of a rumor that Richmond had been destroyed. As a very good blind to our army, the enemy subsequently set fire to the woods in front of our lines, which had the effect of smoking our troops out, and forcing them to fall back about five miles. All this would seem to indicate that the enemy was severely hurt in the great Seven Days' Battle, and that he could no longer conceal the hopelessness of his cause from his people, and that a retreat South had been rendered necessary by the demoralization of his forces.—Post

Died.

In this city, June 10th, of congestion of the lungs Sister HARRIET LEWIS, formerly of Philadelphia, aged 24 years.

Sister Lewis was an exemplary member of our church and of her class. What made her Christian life so righteous was her decision for God and heaven No darkness came on—no cloud of life changed her confidence or happiness in the good Lord. The severe affliction, that only lasted twelve days, did not prevent a sweet smile from ever lingering on her countenance. When first attacked by the insidious disease, she said, "This will take me home." She continued calm and happy in the knowledge of her dear Saviour until about half-past ten in the evening, when she (not being able to speak) waved her hand to those around her, and fell asleep in Jesus.

"Write blessed are the dead that die in the Lord," &c. WM. DAMOND.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NOTICE.

To the friends of Religious Literature and human progress of the City and County of Philadelphia:

This certifies that Miss Mary Bell is a legally authorized agent for the City and County of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, to solicit subscribers and donations for the Christian Recorder of the African Methodist Episcopal Church of America.

We, therefore, take great pleasure in recommending Miss Bell to the citizens and friends as a lady every way worthy of such a position, as well as trustworthy, and we do hope, as the enterprise is commendable, that those to whom she may present this writing will not turn her away without either subscribing or contributing to this great cause.

(Signed) ELISHA WEAVER,
Editor & General Book Steward.
No. 619 Pine St., Phila

BOARDING IN BROOKLYN.

MRS. S. PLANT (formerly Richardson) respectfully announces that she has opened a first-class BOARDING & LODGING HOUSE at No. 97 HIGH STREET, Brooklyn—where she is prepared to accommodate the public on the most reasonable terms.

Her house being located in a very pleasant part of the city, and within five minutes' walk of Fulton Ferry, is made thus a very desirable and convenient place.

BOARDING.

Mrs. AMIA WILLIAM, of Cape May, will open the Banker House for the season, for the accommodation of all who wish to spend the season there, and she will spare no pains to make all comfortable. Those wishing to spend one, two, or three days, will find the Banaker House the right spot. Prices very reasonable. 1-sept

COAL, STOVES, &c., &c.

The subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has taken the store.

NO. 107 NORTH FIFTH STREET,

formerly occupied as the Anti-Slavery Office, (where he has been engaged for the last fourteen years,) to occupy it henceforth as a place of business for the sale of

COAL, STOVES, &c.

Having made arrangements with one of the first Coal Dealers in the city, to furnish the best qualities of Lehigh, Schuylkill, &c., at the lowest Cash prices, he hopes to give full satisfaction in this branch of his business

He will also keep constantly on hand a general assortment of good NEW and SECOND-HAND STOVES, FURNACES, &c.

Persons wishing Stoves taken down, stored away, put up, or cleaned, can be promptly accommodated by applying as above.

He hopes by energy and strict attention to business to obtain a fair share of patronage.

WM. STILL,
107 North Fifth Street, Philadelphia

REFERENCES.

J. M. McKim,	Dr. Caspar Wister,
Samuel Rhoads,	James Mott,
Dillwyn Parrish,	Thomas Willimess,
Prof. C. D Cleveland.	W. H. Furness.

Advertisements.

THE DAUGHTERS OF HOPE GRAND UNION Temperance Society met, it being the thirteenth anniversary, April 10th, 1861. Representatives from Lodges are as follows:—

From Garnet Union No 4, D. of T., from Phœnix Union, No 6, D of T., from Northern Union, No. 10, D. of T., Wesley Union of Germantown, Pa., Union De Bias' Union, of Carlisle, Pa., from Mount Olive Union, No. 19, D. of T., from Tenebrucle Union, No. 15, D. of T., of Norristown, Pa

Officers installed to their several positions are as follows:—

Grand P., Sister Bennett; Grand Associate, Sister Barris; Grand Treasurer, Sister Fawcett; Grand Conductress, C. Thompson; Grand Sentinel, A. E Dubbart; Grand Chaplain, Sister Hall

G. P. P.,	Sister E. Rogers,	G. P. P.	Sister Abrahams,
"	" E. Bowen,	"	" J. P. Black,
"	" M. H. Henry,	"	" E. A. Clarke,
"	" S. Newman,	"	" White,
"	" S. Davis,	"	" S. Hall.

THE DAUGHTERS OF CORNISH SOCIETY.

THE STATED QUARTERLY MEETINGS of the Society are held on the first Wednesdays of February, May, August, and November.

The meetings of the Board are held on the Wednesday previous to the regular stated meetings of the society,

Mrs. SARAH CARTER,
President.

Mr. I. B. SEYMOUR, Secretary.

THE BOOK DEPOSITORY OF THE AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH, No. 619 Pine Street, PHILADELPHIA

We keep on hand, in connection with our other books, Sabbath School Books of various kinds, Question Books, Catechisms, Nos. 1, 2, and 3. We have a good assortment of such books as are generally used in the Public Schools Also, Stationery, Inks, Pens, Paper, Envelopes and Blank Books.

THE DEATH-BED OF THE REV. JOHN WESLEY.

Wanted Canvassing Agents for this splendid large engraving which should be in every household. Liberal terms and good men. The most liberal inducements offered to those selling this print. Send for Catalogue and Instructions

WM. SMITH, Publisher,
160 South Third Street, Philadelphia.

WANTED.—The charge of a Public School. Reference as to ability can be given. Apply to
J. W. A., 1641 Hollands St.

ONE-PRICE CLOTHING, OF THE LATEST STYLES,

Made in the Best Manner, expressly for RETAIL SALES. Lowest Selling Prices marked in Plain Figures. All Goods made to order warranted satisfactory. Our One-Price System is strictly adhered to. All are thereby treated alike. JONES & CO.,
Dec20-1y 604 MARKET STREET

GOOD NEWS

To Tailors, Dress makers, and to those wishing to be such. Also to owners of sewing machines, sheet-iron, and large shuttle-eye lie in—can buy (prepaid directions which are D. Hunter has) you can [illegible] Patent Thread Tension Drivers, Screw and Screw Feeder, Guide, Gauges, Screw and Screw-driver.

Local and Travelling Agents Wanted.

Address REV WM BRADLEY,
Carversville, Bucks Co. Pa.

Or, apply to Mrs. Mary C. Webster, (while at the Editor of this paper,) 619 Pine st., Philada. Pa. Jan12-1y

MRS. E. A. PALMER'S DRY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS STORE. NO. 105 NORTH FIFTH STREET PHILADELPHIA

A General Assortment of Hosiery. Trimmings. Dry Goods, &c

Dress, Shirt making, and Plain Sewing, promptly attended to. Jan12-1y

COAL! COAL!! COAL!!!

The subscriber is selling the best qualities of Lehigh and Schuylkill Coal at the following very low prices

Lehigh Store Coal, per ton,	$4 75
" Egg "	4 75
" Broken and Screened, per ton,	4 50
" Nut "	4 00
Schuylkill, Stove, and Egg and Broken, and Screened,	4 25
" Nut "	4 00

Orders left at the Store, No. 107 North FIFTH St., will be promptly attended to. WM. STILL.
Jan12-1y 107 North Fifth Street.

KEELY'S PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY

N. W. corner Fifth and Coates.

PICTURE GALLERY AND FRAMES ON THE FIRST FLOOR.

Strangers should not fail to call and examine. Admission Free.

JAMES DOWNS,

DEALER IN

NEW AND SECOND HAND

CLOTHING,

No 225 South Second Street.

No. 17—3mo. PHILADELPHIA

WILLIAM STILL'S STOVE STORE,

107 NORTH FIFTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA

The subscriber would respectfully inform his friends and all in want of good stoves, that he has now on hand a general variety of excellent PARLOR, COOK and CHAMBER STOVES, including Gas burning, as well as other patterns, which he is selling at very low rates. He buys entirely for cash, of the best wholesale fountries, and of course can sell much cheaper than those buying on the usual credit system. At any rate his friends are invited to give him a call and examine for themselves before purchasing elsewhere, as he feels that they would be convinced that it would be to their interest to give him their patronage Coal orders constantly on hand. WM. STILL.

JOSEPH H. COLE, CONTINENTAL RESTAURANT,

NO. 717 LOMBARD STREET, PHILA.,

(Above Seventh St., under Philadelphia Institute.)

Where he continues to keep always on hand the very best assortment of OYSTERS and other refreshments—hoping that all his friends and the public in general will favor him with their patronage

☞ Meals served at all hours Families supplied with Oysters of the best quality and flavor at the shortest notice

☞ Also, public and private waiting done on the most reasonable terms. 1y

Mrs. S. Shorter Hawkins
HAS NOW OPENED
NEW SPRING GOODS,

consisting of Dolaines, Brilliants, Calicoes, &c Hoop Skirts of all sizes, from 15 cents to $1 25 A large lot of linen Bibbs, from 8 to 25 cents Also, cheap Hosiery and Gloves.

N. B.—Mantuamakers are invited to examine my assortment of Dress trimmings of the latest styles; all will be sold cheap for cash at the Old Establishment,

615 Lombard Street

THOMAS CHARNOCK, GENERAL FURNISHING UNDERTAKER,

NO. 427 SOUTH 6TH ST.,

Second Door Below Bethel Church.

Hearses and carriages with every requisite for the burying, furnished at the shortest notice, and on the most reasonable terms. T. C. having purchased the right to various patent improvements, is also prepared to furnish it in connection with his usual [illegible] March 6-1y

For the Christian Recorder.

BUCKS COUNTY SS.—TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS MAY COME.

I, the subscriber, a Justice of the Peace, in and for the county of Bucks, do hereby certify that I am acquainted and know Emily Johnson—formerly Rodney, who was married to Samuel Johnson, who was married before William Rank, Esq., of Bristol, Bucks County, as appears by record on his docket; and after careful examination and mature reflection, I feel myself fully safe in saying that the said Johnson had a wife living at the time he married the said Emily Rodney; and further say that I have the evidence of Daniel Emmons, (local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church) Charles Emmons, (Class leader) and Benjamin Cummings, (who is exhorter) that he had one or more wives living at the time he married the said Emily Johnson; and the evidence, on affirmation, of the said Emily Johnson, that he had a wife living at the time she married him, which, at the time she married him, she had no knowledge of.

Affirmed and subscribed before me, May 6th, 1862. } her Emily X Johnson, mark.
Wm Blakey, J. P. }

REV. LEWIS S. LEWIS' FAMILY LINIMENT

IS PREPARED WITH GREAT CARE,

EXPRESSLY FOR FAMILY USE.

Its composition is very simple, containing nothing that is injurious in any form, and there is no danger in its use from exposure to the weather. No family should be without it. Having a wish to benefit mankind in general, and those afflicted in particular—and having had recourse to the article in several cases of rheumatism, luminas, rhibiains, and other diseases, it proving to be a remedy in every case—I therefore recommend it to the public.

CERTIFICATE.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov 27, 1861

Rev L. S. LEWIS—Dear Sir: I have been afflicted with the rheumatism eleven years, during which time I tried almost everything, but received no sure relief. For the last four months my limbs and joints were so swollen, that at times I could not walk or use my slippers. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and at the first application was instantly relieved After using six or ten bottles, I was enabled to enjoy the free use of my limbs. Rev GEORGE A. RUE.

NEWPORT, R. I., October 29, 1861.

Rev. L. S. LEWIS—Dear Sir: I have been affected for a number of years, more or less, with a pain and weakness in my chest, arising from some cause unknown to me. I made two applications of your Liniment, and was relieved. I was attacked with the diphtheria, and was cured by using your Liniment. Its worth has proved itself ten times its cost. ANTHONY RANDOLPH.

NEWPORT, R. I., Nov. 19, 1861.

Rev. L. S. LEWIS—Dear Sir: I have been cured of stiffening in my joints by using your Liniment. I recommend it to all who are thus troubled. RICHARD WHITE.

NEWPORT, R. I., Nov 17, 1861.

Rev. Mr. LEWIS—Your Liniment is, truly, all that it is recommended to be. I have tried it, and it has successfully cured my business. SOPHIA TAYLOR.

NEWPORT, R. I., Oct 7, 1861.

Mr. LEWIS—Dear Sir: I have had a pain and stiffness in my neck and back for some time. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and applied it twice, which effected a cure. I recommend it to the public. Mrs EVELINA DEMOND

PROVIDENCE, Dec 19, 1861.

Rev. L. S. LEWIS—Dear Sir: For upwards of three years I have been very lame at times, arising from a sprain. I have tried a great many things, without any definite results. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and was effectually relieved. Mrs. PRUDENCE A. MORSE.

NEWPORT, R. I., Oct. 10, 1861.

Rev. Mr. LEWIS—I have been afflicted with the rheumatism for some time. I used your Liniment, which has removed it successfully. It has also cured my swelled joints. Mrs ELIZABETH THOROUGHGOOD

NEWPORT, R. I., Nov. 20, 1861,

Rev. Mr. LEWIS—My boy was troubled with the chilblain I applied your Liniment a few times, and it cured him. Mrs. ADELINE JONES.

STEAMER PERRY, Sept. 2, 1861

Rev. Mr LEWIS—I have used your Liniment for rheumatic pains of long standing—also, lameness in the feet, &c. It is a perfect remedy where other things have failed. Mrs. SUSAN GARDINER.

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND, Aug 10, 1861

Rev. L. S LEWIS—I have been afflicted for upwards of seven years with

THE LATE LORD MACAULAY

Dr. Milman, in his Memoir of the late Lord Macaulay, just published, alluding to his parliamentary career and love of letters, says: "But throughout the period of his life, the great inward struggle was going on within his mind between the ambition of public usefulness, of parliamentary and official distinction, and the love of letters, which will rarely brook a rival on the throne, the still higher ambition, as he thought, of adding some great work to the treasures of English thought and English literature. In the office at Whitehall, or the Horse Guards, on the benches of the House of Commons, amid the applauses or admiring silence of the House, his heart was in his library, and among his books. He yearned for a place not so much among the great parliamentary leaders and the famous statesmen of the land—the Chathams, Burkes, Foxes—as among the immortal writers in verse and prose—the Miltons, Clarendons, Addisons, Gibbons. The auditory which he coveted was that vast expanding world throughout which the English language is spoken; the fame, that will only die with the death of English letters. Throughout the whole time of his absence from England, on his voyage to India, and on his return, in India, as far as leisure would allow, and during his parliamentary and official career, he was still, with his indefatigable industry, heaping up stores of knowledge,—stores which could not overload his capacious and retentive memory—memory whose grasp and self-command seemed to expand with its accumulating treasures—memory which disdained nothing as beneath it, and was never perplexed or burdened by its incalculable possessions. As a curious instance of his range and activity of reading, among the books which he took with him to India were the many huge volumes of St. Chrysostom's works. Their still almost pure and harmonious Greek, and their importance in the history of religious opinion (always a subject of deep interest), carried him through a task which has been achieved by few professional theologians. As an illustration of his powers of memory, he has said, and he was a most unboastful man, that if Milton's great poem were lost, he thought that he could accurately commit to writing at least all the first books of 'Paradise Lost.'"

REMARKABLE FOUNTAIN IN FLORIDA.

A writer in Ballou's Boston Pictorial gives the following description of a remarkable fountain in Florida:

Taking a narrow path, I crossed through some dense underwood, and all at once I stood on the banks of the Wakulla Spring. There was a basin of water one hundred yards in diameter, almost circular. The thick bushes were growing to the water's edge, and bowing their heads to the unrippled surface. I stepped into a skiff and pushed off. Some very large fish attracted my attention, and I seized a spear to strike them. The boatman laughed, and asked me how far below the surface I supposed they were? I answered, about four feet. He assured me that they were at least twenty feet from me, and it was so. The water is of the most wonderful transparency. I dropped an ordinary pin in the water forty feet deep, and saw its head with perfect distinctness, as it lay on the bottom. As we approached the centre, I noticed a jagged gray limestone rock beneath us, pierced with holes; one seemed to look into unfathomable depths. The boat moved slowly on, and now we hung trembling over the edge of the sunken cliff, and far below it lay a dark, yawning, unfathomable abyss. From its gorge comes forth, with immense velocity, a living river. Pushing on just beyond its mouth, I dropped a ten cent piece into the water, which is there one hundred and ninety feet deep, and I clearly saw it shining on the bottom. This seems incredible, but I think the water possesses a magnifying power. I am confident that the piece could not be seen so distinctly from a tower one hundred and ninety feet high.

We rowed on towards the north side, and noticed in the water the fish which were darting hither and thither, the long flexible roots, and the wild, luxuriant grass on the bottom, all arrayed in the most beautiful prismatic hues. The gentle swell occasioned by the boat, gave to the whole an undulating motion. Death-like stillness reigned around, and a more fairy scene I never beheld.

INTELLIGENCE OF WHITE MICE.

The attachment of cats to a particular place, and the efforts they will make to return to it, even from a great distance, are well known; but it is something new to learn that mice are actuated by a similar feeling. Mr. John Ferguson, Ritchie's Lane, Hewkhill, indulges in the hobby of rearing white mice, and has generally a considerable number of them under his care, quite tame, and taught to perform many little tricks. Not long ago he disposed of two of his stock to a gentleman, whose residence is distant about half a mile from his own. One day recently, the gentleman had left open the door of the cage in which his two mice were lodged; and when he discovered his mistake, one of the mice had disappeared, and could not be found. On Sunday evening, the original owner of the mice was surprised on seeing a stranger white mouse crouching in a corner of his room. It readily allowed itself to be taken, and on examining it, he saw that it was one of the two which he had disposed of. The mouse was draggled and dirty-like, and evidently fatigued, which was not to be wondered at, considering the difficulties it must have had to encounter in its return to its original home. On being fondled a little, however, it soon revived; and after being a short time beside its old companions, it became as brisk and lively as ever.

OVERDOSING.

Dr. Holmes has little faith in homeopathy, but quite as little in the curative power of drugs, or the expediency of the large doses which many allopathic physicians give their patients. In his lecture on "Currents and Counter Currents," he uttered the following wholesome truths, which startled some of the faculty:

Invalidism is the normal state of many organisms. It can be changed to disease, but never to absolute health by medicinal appliances.—There are many ladies, ancient and recent, who are perpetually taking remedies for irremediable pains and aches. They ought to have headaches, and backaches, and stomach-aches; they are not well if they do not have them. To expect them to live without frequent twinges, is like expecting a doctor's old chaise to go without creaking; if it did, we might be sure the springs were broken.—There is no doubt that the constant demand for medicinal remedies from patients of this class, leads to their overuse; often in the case of cathartics, sometimes in that of opiates.

I will venture to say this, that if every specific were to fail utterly; if the cinchona trees all died out, and the arsenic mines were exhausted, the sulphur burned up; if every drug from the vegetable, animal and mineral kingdom were to disappear from the market; a body of enlightened men, organized as a distinct profession, would be required just as much as now, and respected and trusted as now, whose province should be to guard against the causes of disease; to eliminate them, if possible, when still present; to order all the conditions of the patient so as to favor the efforts of the system to right itself, and to give those predictions of the course of disease which only experience can warrant, and which, in so many cases, relieve the exaggerated fears of sufferers and their friends, or warn them in season of impending danger. Great as the loss would be, if certain active remedies could no longer be obtained, it would leave the medical profession the most essential part of its duties, and all, and more than all, its present share of honors; for it would be the death-blow to charlatanism, which depends for its success almost entirely on drugs, or at least a nomenclature that suggests them.

There is needfulness, then, or danger, in expressing the opinion that, after all that has been said, the community is still overfed. The best proof of it is, that we famous take so little medicine as those of doctors. I suspect those of apothecaries, and that old practitioners are more sparing of active medicines than younger ones.

WALKING

Of all forms of exercise, walking is the most useful, as it brings into play the greatest number of muscles, without unnatural strain upon any. It also leaves free scope to the external motion which allows of simultaneous occupation of the mind. Another advantage is that it admits of complete regulation, both in degree and duration according to the strength, time or wishes of each individual. Those who have weak lungs or heart, must be satisfied with gentle walking and on level ground. Although exhilarating to invalids generally it is often a laudable task to keep the mind free from severe or sustained thought when walking. How to the advantage of a companion with whom cheerful conversation can be kept up, or observing surrounding objects, whether in town or country so as to divert the mind from study and care. The pursuits of natural history are good in this way, and hence, also the chief hygienic of shooting and field sports, excitement and diversion of mind accompanying the actual exercise. Those who are engaged in business, where the dwelling and the place of business are at a distance from their place of residence, ought to walk at least part of the way, both in the morning and afternoon, if confined within doors during the day. Literary and professional men ought to walk more than they generally do. The time is not lost, as the mind will always be revived to work with greater energy. The brain will do as much work in one hour, when there is a fine glow of pure oxygenated blood, as in double time, when the nervous system is exhausted, and the veins congested with dark blood. Artificial stimulants may quicken thought for a time; but their effect diminishing by habit, the quantity has to be increased, and injury in other ways is done to the system

PAPER HANGINGS.

It is a point not sufficiently borne in mind as a general thing, that the apparent size and height of a room are, of necessity, either increased or diminished by the nature of its paper hangings. Papers of a large pattern greatly reduce the apparent size—those of a large and flowing pattern the height. A paper in which perpendicular lines predominate, although the pattern be large, does not so much affect the apparent height. To cover a small room with paper of a large pattern is a great mistake, and a still worse mistake is it to paper the ceiling. The best effect is produced by using papers in which the pattern and colors are quiet and harmonious, and do not strike the eye. The walls of a room are like the background of a picture, and should be treated so as to relieve and set off the objects in front of them, and to give repose to the eye. A paper presenting sudden contrasts in color, and strongly marked lines in the pattern, forms the worst possible background for pictures, and the most unfavorable accompaniment to furniture, draperies, and objects of taste; the spotty effect of such papering interferes with all the minor objects in the apartment, and gives an unpleasant and bewildering effect. Modern paper hangings are frequently made to represent columns, friezes, pilasters, &c., dividing the room into compartments. But, notwithstanding the beautiful execution of some of these papers, they cannot be recommended as in good taste, for the reason that the introduction of real objects of the kind would not be consistent, in a situation where their support is not needed. The introduction of flowers and conventional forms, for the ornamentation of room walls, is not unnatural, and may therefore with consistency be adopted.—Germantown Telegraph.

THY NEIGHBOR AS THYSELF.

The disciples of Christ have not been appointed to fulfil his designs and accomplish this work of human renovation without ample guidance and instruction. We have already remarked that Christ introduced his teaching on something new and more comprehensive and searching in its requirements than those of the Jewish law, as understood and obeyed by the scribes and Pharisees. He announced it as a new commandment. He said: "For I say unto you, except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom." Matt. v. 20. To emphasize the distinction between their teaching under the Jewish dispensation, and his own, he proceeds: "Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not kill; and whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment: but I say unto you, that whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause, shall be in danger of the judgment. Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not commit adultery; but I say unto you, that whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart. Ye have heard it said by them of old time, Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths; but I say unto you, Swear not at all; neither by heaven, for it is God's throne; nor by the earth for it is his footstool. . . . But let your communication be yea, yea, nay, nay, for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil. Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy; but I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you: that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven, for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sendeth rain on the just and unjust." Matt. v. 21—43. These are emphatic indications of the profound and pervading nature of Christ's teaching. They give depth and meaning to all his precepts; he asks no eye-service, no external conformity which does not flow from internal obedience.

When, therefore, he lays down the great law upon which piety towards our fellow-men is founded, he means not to exact mere outward conformity or obedience, but he gives it as the law of our hearts, feelings, and affections towards men. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," is a fundamental law of Christianity, having all the force and depth which can attach to a command of Christ. There is no other command, no other duty of religion of more binding force than this. It is no more our duty to repent of our sins and forsake them, no more our duty to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and be saved, no more to accept of salvation on the terms offered in the gospel, than it is to love our neighbor as ourself. The complications of human life are infinite, human relations are so varied that it would seem impossible to follow them in detail by precepts suited to every circumstance. Christ has, however, overcome this difficulty, and given us a law of Christian life, level to every understanding, and reaching to every individual. The law of Christ concerns each person for himself. Obedience must be personal. Every one capable of devising and doing for himself, can devise and do something for his neighbor. This law contemplates the full exercise of the moral, intellectual, and physical powers on the part of each individual. It is only by this exercise that each person can render a full obedience; it taxes not only the whole natural powers of the man, but also looks for that growth of power which follows the proper and constant exercise of those faculties by which men grow to the proper stature of perfect men in Christ. Men's minds are burdened under our religious system with the duty of extending, so far as it may be applicable, all the good they have secured for themselves to the benefit of others within the reach of their efforts. The thought and discrimination implied in this is vast and deep. It implies the bringing a mighty power of human intellect and influence to bear upon the great ends Christ has in view. Imagine the result of a proper obedience to this law of studying and doing for the benefit of others what we do for ourselves, on the part of all the disciples of Christ! Can any one conjecture the effect of such an application of moral, intellectual, and physical power, under the influences of religion and its spiritual energies? But the good intended by the obedience required is not any more for the benefit of those whose advantage is sought, than it is for those who also do the work. This love from neighbors and the effects to which it gives rise, react on the giver, because the power as a means of [illegible] doing good and it is because the reward is not only by the benefit it receives, but by the exercise which it must have in obedience to a divine law.

Family Circle.

WAITING FOR 'PA

Three little forms in the twilight gray,
Scanning the shadows across the way;
Six little eyes, four black, two blue,
Brimful of [illegible]
Watching for 'pa.

May, with her plaits and the golden hair,
Gentle face beaming with smiles just now,
Willie, the rogue, so loving and gay,
Stealing sly kisses from sister May,
Watching for 'pa.

Nellie, with ringlets of sunny hue,
Closely nestled between the two
[illegible]
Watching for 'pa.

Oh! how they gaze at the passers by
"He's coming at last" they gaily cry;
"Try again, my pets!" exclaims [illegible]
And Nellie adds, "There's the twilight star
Watching for 'pa."

Jack rode and smiles as, with busy feet,
He lights the lamps of their quiet street.
That sweet little group he knows full well,
May and Willie, with golden-haired Nell,
Watching for 'pa.

Soon joyous shouts from the window-seat,
And eager patter of childish feet,
Gay musical chimes ring through the hall,
A manly voice responds to the call,
"Welcome, papa."

Child at Home.

ACTING A LIE.

Mrs. Hanson went away one afternoon, leaving her little daughter with the care of the baby, who had not been quite well for several days. She told Helen to sit by her little sister, and not leave her at all while she was gone, for if she should kick the clothes off, she might get cold and be worse, and if she should waken and try to get up, she might fall from her crib and hurt her very much.

"You may sit by her very quietly," said Mrs. Hanson, "and study your multiplication table, the last half of the eights, and when you have learned that you may finish the handkerchief you were hemming for papa. It is only two days to Christmas, and you want to finish the handkerchief, so that Maggie can do it up nicely for you."

Helen promised she would do the best she could, and, taking her Arithmetic, seated herself by little Abbie, feeling quite happy that mamma had placed so much confidence in her, and thinking she would take "such nice care of baby."

For a time she studied very busily, stopping only once or twice, just to tuck up the chubby little foot which peeped out from the warm blankets, and to kiss the fat, dimpled hand that hung so temptingly over the side of the crib.

Presently she heard the voice of her little playmate, Katie Bell, in the next room, and dropping her book, she crept noiselessly out, for fear her merry laugh and voice might waken the baby sleeper.

Katie was full of the surprise which she had planned for Christmas, and Helen was so interested to hear that she forgot entirely her little charge, and followed Katie out to the gate, talking very busily, until the striking of the church clock reminded her of her mother's return, and with a trembling heart she ran in as fast as her feet could carry her.

As she entered the nursery, baby Abbie was lying on the floor, all tangled in her blankets. Helen ran to her, laid her carefully in the crib again, wiped the little red eyes, and sang and rocked her till she was fast asleep.

Then she took her Arithmetic, but her mind was ill at ease, and she could not fix it upon her book. She did not know how long little Abbie had laid there, for she had cried herself to sleep, and the cheeks were still wet with tears when she took her up. And then she feared she was hurt, or had taken cold.

When Mrs. Hanson came in, Helen was still sitting by the crib, and seeming to study very earnestly. Her mother smiled very sweetly and approvingly upon her.

"Has baby been good, Helen?"

"Yes, mamma," said the little girl. "She cried once, and I rocked her to sleep again."

"And how have you got along with your lesson?" said Mrs. Hanson.

Helen colored as she answered, "It seems real hard, mamma, and I have not got it perfectly yet."

"Then you have not sewed any?"

"No, mamma."

"I am sorry, for I wanted very much you should finish both to-night, and I was detained so much longer than I expected. I thought you would have plenty of time, baby is so quiet. However, it is of more consequence that she should be well taken care of, and I feel quite proud of my faithful little nurse."

Helen blushed still deeper, as she felt how unworthy she was of her mother's words of praise, but she said nothing, and soon went out to play, as her mother told her she might, till tea-time. But she was not happy, for although she had not told a lie in so many words, she felt she had deceived her mother. She had acted a lie, and that was just as bad as to tell one.

Little Abbie slept unusually, with her eyes half open, and tossed about in her crib. When Mrs. Hanson felt her head, it was very hot. She took her up, and bathing the feverish head in cold water, discovered quite a bunch on one side of it. There was also a bruise upon the left arm! She knew it was not there when she put her to sleep, and sent immediately for Helen to come to her. As she looked up at the guilty face, she knew something wrong had happened, of which Helen had not told her, but she called her to her side, and showing the bruises, said very quietly, "Helen, do you know how these came here?"

Helen was shocked, and surprised and frightened. She had not seen them before, but she could not tell a lie if she could set one, and hiding her face in her mother's lap, she burst into tears, and sobbed out the truth, saying,

"I did not mean to, mamma, I know I didn't; but I forgot"

Mrs. Hanson felt very much grieved. She had confided in her daughter, and had been deceived, and her heart felt very sorry.

"I only meant to be gone a minute, mamma, and baby was so fast asleep, I thought she would not waken till I got back."

"You did wrong to leave her at all, Helen, when I had charged you so particularly not to; but after you had disobeyed, you should have told me at once when I came in, that I might have attended to these bruises, for I fear Abbie is badly hurt;" and she stroked very lovingly the little head that was turning so restlessly from one side to the other.

"Do you think baby will really be sick for this, mamma?" asked Helen, in a distressed voice, for she dearly loved her baby sister.

"I cannot tell," said Mrs. Hanson. "I hope not, but it might have proved something very serious, had I not discovered it in time."

Helen went to bed with a heavy heart, and as she knelt to say her prayers she asked more earnestly than ever before that she might be forgiven, and kept from doing so again; and then she asked God to make the little sick one well. Her first thoughts in the morning were of Abbie, and jumping out of bed, she ran silently to her mother's room, where the night-lamp was still burning very dimly.

Mrs. Hanson had not undressed through the night, and as Helen went in she sat bending over the little sleeper. Helen felt as if her heart would burst, as she asked how baby was. How she trembled, and feared to hear the answer, and how relieved did she feel when her mother told her Abbie was sleeping more quietly, and that the slight moisture on her forehead told that the fever that had threatened their little pet had passed away, though she was very weak and would not be quite well for ways to come.

How thankful [illegible] Helen felt to her kind Heavenly Father, and oh, how did the lesson sink into her heart, and make her pray every day that she might never, never again be left to act a lie. [illegible]

Corals, agates and crystals are found on many a stormy shore; thus the soul finds God's most precious gifts in the rugged path of sorrow

---

All that is known is but an index to the unknown

From the Youth's Evangelist.

THE LITTLE SHRIMPER.

Very few of our little readers could guess what kind of fish the boy represented in our picture has in his net. If we were to ask you, you would only guess, as few of you have ever seen such fish. They are called shrimps, and are found in abundance on the coast of Great Britain. They are caught by women and children, who wade into the sea and scoop those little fish up in such a net as the boy holds in his hand. This little fellow makes a living for himself, and helps his widowed mother in this manner. His father was a fisherman. He was drowned one stormy night by his little vessel being driven on a rocky part of the coast. So little Sammy, who was a good boy, and had attended Sabbath School in the neighboring town, determined to try to make a living for himself and help his mother by catching shrimps, and selling them to the town's people. The people know him to be a good boy, and he can always find customers for all the shrimps he can catch

A LONG STORY BRIEFLY TOLD.

There was a certain king, who, like many Eastern kings, was very fond of hearing stories told. To this amusement he gave up all his time; but yet he was never satisfied. The exertions of all his courtiers were in vain. He, at last, made a proclamation, that if any man would tell him a story that should last forever, he would make him his heir, and give him the princess, his daught in marriage; but if any one should pretend he had such a story, but should fail—that is, if the story did come to an end—he was to have his head chopped off.

For such a prize as a beautiful princess and a kingdom many candidates appeared; and dreadfully long stories some of them told. Some lasted a week, some a month, some six months. Poor fellows! they all spun them out as long as they possibly could; but all in vain. Sooner or later they all came to an end, and, one after another, the unhappy story-tellers had their heads chopped off.

At last came a man who said that he had a story which would last forever, if his majesty would be pleased to give him a trial.

He was warned of his danger; they told him how many others had tried, and lost their heads; but he said he was not afraid, and so he was brought before the king. He was a man of a very composed and deliberate way of speaking, and after making all requisite stipulations for time for his eating, drinking, and sleeping, he thus began his story:—

"Oh, king! there was once a king who was a great tyrant. And, desiring to increase his riches, he raised upon all the corn and grain in his kingdom, and put it in an immense granary, which was built on purpose, as high as a mountain.

"This he did for several years, till the granary was quite full up to the top. He then stopped up doors and windows, and closed it up fast on all sides.

"But the bricklayers had, by accident, left a very small hole near the top of the granary. And there came a flight of locusts, and tried to get at the corn; but the hole was so small that only one locust could pass through at a time. So one locust went in and carried off one grain of corn, and then another locust went in and carried off another grain of corn, and then another locust went in and carried off another grain of corn, and then another locust went in and carried off another grain of corn, and then another locust went in and carried off another grain of corn, and then another locust went in and carried off another grain of corn, and then another locust went in and carried off another grain of corn, and then another locust went in and carried off another grain of corn, and then another locust went in and carried off another grain of corn, till at last the poor king could bear it no longer, and cried out—

"Oh, man, that is enough! Take my daughter! take my kingdom! take anything—everything; only let me hear no more of your abominable locusts!"

And so the story-teller was married to the king's daughter, and was declared heir to the throne; and nobody ever expected a word to come from the rest of the story. [illegible] came to the end of the locusts. The [illegible] was [illegible] by the [illegible] one device of this wise man

THE SUNSHINE AND SHADE OF WAR.

Dear Children:—O how we long for the time when the rude blast of war will be unknown; when the frightened steed and its gay rider will be thought of as the world's foe; when brazen cannon and trampling legions shall be remembered by all as a calamity that will never return; but in war's stead will be the sound of the anvil, the ploughman's merry voice, and the hum of industry with prosperity and reining peace; that time "when the lion shall lie down with the lamb."

America at war with her own people! Shame! Who would have thought that such would ever be! Sweet land of the freeman that nurtures the brave, hide your fratricidal deeds from the world; unbosom not to the nations of the earth the truth that your children shed your blood; keep forever locked in your secret chamber the bloody deeds and cruel wrongs inflicted by those whom you raised to wealth and power. Never allow the historian or scribe to ferret out the savage acts and crimes committed by Southern land men upon your loyal sons! During the past two months I have seen that done by our foe on the poor, unfortunate soldiers that fell into their hands which would make a savage blush! In the reverses of war we expect mercy, as we look to God for such; but often our soldiers find none from slave-drivers' hands But I will not tell you of wicked acts, nor would you care for hearing them.

Military glory is a fable! The greatest battle ever fought was a wholesale murder. The conqueror's wreath, to deck his unrelenting brow, should be the bones of his victims gathered from blood-bought conquests on battle-fields. His robes, to attire his form, that he may meet the gaze of a wondering people as he treads the earth he has desecrated, should be the shrouds of the desolate widows whom he brought on to an early grave; his glory should be his shame. The benefactors of the human race are not aspiring soldiers seeking fame at the cannon's mouth. The philanthropists are not warriors rejoicing amidst carnage, and glorying in rivers of tears. The true benefactors of man are those who alleviate suffering, and try to raise humanity above things of earth, and open their eyes to sins of every day. He is a braver soldier who brings souls to repentance and Jesus than he who plants a standard on an enemy's rampart. He is a Christian soldier who aids the weak and gains a name for doing good. He is a true warrior, and possesses a manlier bosom and loftier spirit, who strives to do his duty to his God and fellow-man, than he who ever encouraged life offering on battle-fields. He is a brave soldier that goes forth to teach the heathen to pray and read the Bible. It is the Bible that points the way to a delightful land where war will never be. One of the greatest warriors of to-day has said, "The Bible is the cannon that will liberate Italy. And I recommend all Italians to read the Bible, for it is the book that will make Italy free." May the Lord give us a heart and spirit to "search diligently the Scriptures," that we may be Christian soldiers to "fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life."

War is necessary sometimes; and we believe the war in which we are engaged is a righteous one, and we are rejoiced in being able to say to you there is a good prospect for the speedy overthrow of Rebellion, and the return of peace to our dear land. We may have reverses, but God has manifested, by our many successes, that He is our leader, strength, and fortress. Dark clouds that hung over our country, are dispelling, whilst sunbeams of Victory, Peace, and Union, are shedding their bright rays over a trustful people. Our foe, defeated at every point by the superior generalship of our chieftain, is retreating South, demoralized and disheartened. Truly, Jehovah is on our side. Our arms are crowned with triumph in every battle. God is watching over and taking care of our army. He is guiding our generals and giving them lasting victories. Children, pray that God will continue to be with us, and crown our soldiers' efforts with renewed victories to the making of peace. Let us remember that "by strength shall no man prevail," and ask Jehovah to hasten harmony within our borders. May we realize, and live accordingly, that there is a land where there is no strife, for those who "die the death of the righteous."

Your friend, SOLDIER.

Near Richmond, Va.

Pittsburg Markets.

APPLES.—None in market.
ASHES.—Pots, 4(@4¼; Pearls, 5¼(@5½; Soda-ash, [illegible]
BREAD.—Water crackers, ₱ pound, 6c.; Butter do. 7c., Sugar do. 8c.
BEANS.—Small white, 1.25@1.50 ₱ bus.
BROOMS.—Common to fancy, 1.25@2.50 ₱ dozen.
BUCKETS, &c.—Buckets, per dozen, 1.50@1.75; Tubs, per dozen, 7.50.
BUTTER.—Fresh roll, 8@9c. ₱ pound; packed, 7@8c.
BACON.—Plain hams, 6[illegible] sugar cured, 7½ @ 8; sides, 6@6½; shoulders, 4@4½; country &c. less
CHEESE.—Western Reserve, 6@7. Goshen, 10.
CANDLES & SOAP.—Dipped, 10c.; Mould, —; Adamantine, 16c.; Rosin Soap, 4½c.; fancy, 10c.
COTTON YARNS, &c.—Cotton Yarn, ₱ pound, from Nos. 5 to 10, —— and one cent advance each No.; cotton chain, —— colored do. —— cotton wick, —— batting, —; fancy do., ——
CORDAGE.—Hed-cords, per dozen, 1.50@3.00.
DRIED FRUIT.—Apples, ₱ bushel, 1.50@—; Peaches, 2.50@3.00.
DRIED BEEF.—10c@10½c ₱ pound.
EGGS.—Barrel or box, 8@9c. ₱ doz
FLOUR.—Superfine, from store, 4.00@4.15; Extra, 4.00@4.70; Extra family, 5.00@5.15. Rye, 2.87½c
FEATHERS.—Fresh, 35@40c. ₱ pound.
FISH.—Large No. 3 Mackerel, 8.00@8.50; Baltimore Herring, 6.00; Lake Fish, ——@——; Codfish, 5@6c.
FEED.—Sales of feed at 65@70 ₱ 100 pounds.
GRAIN.—Wheat, Red, 90@1.00; White, 1.00@1.15 Rye, 60@65. Oats, 27@28. Corn, 35@40.
GLASS.—City brands, 8x10, 2.15 ₱ box of 50 feet; 10x12, 4.00; Country brands, 8x10, 3.25; 10x12, 5.75.
GROCERIES.—Sugar by the barrel, 8@9; hhd. —@—. N. O. Molasses, 45@47; Golden Syrup, 75. Coffee, 20@21. Rice, 7@8.
NOMINY.—3.00 ₱ barrel
HAY.—Sales at Scales, $12@15 ₱ ton
IRON.—Common bar, 2½@2¾c.; Blooms, —; Pig Metal, $22@26.
LARD.—No. 1, 7@8c.
LEAD.—Ac. Bar, —@—; Pig, —@—
LEATHER.—[illegible]
LIME.—[illegible]
NAILS.—[illegible]

tancement. Cut spikes, 4.50 ₱ keg, for 3 to 4½ inch
NAVAL STORES.—Turpentine, [illegible] gallon; Rosin, ₱ barrel, ——@——; Tar, ₱ barrel, ——
OILS.—Linseed, 75 ₱ gallon; Tanners', —; Lard
POTATOES —40@50.
[illegible]
RAGS.—Mixed [illegible]
SALT.—No. 1, 1.75 ₱ barrel; Extra, —@—
SHEETINGS.—Nos. 1 and 2, —@9½ ₱ yard
SEEDS.—Flaxseed, 1.60@—— ₱ bushel; Timothy, 1.75@2.00; Clover, 4.75@5.00
TALLOW.—[illegible]
WHITE LEAD.—No. 1, 2.50 per keg.
WOOL.—[illegible]

Advertisements.

CONFECTIONERY AND FRUIT STORE.
WILLIAM H SHUGARD,
(Successor to Thomas Pell)
Wholesale Confectioner and Fruiterer,
No. 232 North Third Street, above Wood,
PHILADELPHIA,
Manufacturer of Confectionery, Jujube Paste, Gum Drops, Cordial Drops, Chocolate Drops, Sugar Drops, Liquid Bottles, Jelly Cakes, Cream Chocolate, French Toys, White Sugar Toys, &c., &c.
AND DEALER IN
Oranges, Lemons, Raisins, Currants, Citron, Figs, Dates, Prunes, Almonds, Walnuts, Filberts, Cream Nuts, Ground Nuts, Fire Crackers, Syrups, Tamarinds Liquorice, Rock Candy &c. &c. &c.
The attention of Dealers is requested to an examination of my stock, which will be found equal to any in Philadelphia.
N. B.—Orders by mail or otherwise, promptly attended to.

SUPERIOR FRENCH CONFECTIONS,
MANUFACTURED BY
AUGUSTUS TILLMES, No. 1202 CHESTNUT ST.,
Put up neatly in 1, 2, and 5 pound boxes, without extra charge. Also, [illegible] suitable for Holiday presents. A fine selection of Fancy and Staple Confectionery on hand.
A. TILLMES, 1202 Chestnut St.

THOMAS JOHNSTON,
REAL ESTATE, COLLECTING,
AND INSURANCE AGENT,
MONMOUTH, ILLS
June19-1m

ST. LOUIS
SUNDAY SCHOOL THEOLOGICAL
AND TRACT DEPOSITORY.
The American Sunday School Union and American Tract Society each maintained for many years depositories of their respective publications in this city. These are now united under the care of the subscriber, and he has added thereto a select assortment of the publications of the various evangelical denominations, with those of private publishers, which are sold at publisher's prices.
Catalogues and specimens of Sunday-school papers sent on application. New Books received as soon as issued. School books and stationery.
Address J. W. McINTYRE,
No. 9 South Fifth Street, St. Louis, Mo.

COOPERSTOWN SEMINARY.
R. C. PLACE, A. M., PRINCIPAL.
Fall Term opens August 22, 1862.
Pupils from a distance are expected to board in the institution, unless special arrangement is made with the Principal by the Parents or Guardian. Terms for Board, Washing, Fuel, Furnished Room and Tuition in English, including Composition, Declamation, Arithmetic, Grammar and Geography, per term of Twelve weeks. The above, with higher English studies, with Latin and Greek, $16. Music, French, German, Drawing, Painting and Book-keeping, at low rates. Payable invariably in advance. Pupils received at any time, and charged from the time of entrance through the term. No deduction made when entering a week or more after. Leave of absence during the term, except in cases of protracted sickness. For particulars, address the Principal.
—Jan 17 Cooperstown, Otsego Co., N. Y.

ESTABLISHED IN 1796.
McALLISTER AND BROTHER,
OPTICIANS,
No. 728 Chestnut Street,
PHILADELPHIA,
Nearly Opposite Masonic Hall,
(Lately removed from the old stand, Chestnut St., above Second.)
Spectacles, Mathematical Instruments, Spy-Glasses, Philosophical Apparatus, Opera Glasses, Thermometers Microscopes and Microscopic Objects, Tape Measures, Pocket Books, Magic Lanterns, Dissolving Views and Stereoscopic Pictures. [illegible]
Catalogues furnished on application, and [illegible] Sent Free of Charge. ☞

SAMUEL WORK, WILLIAM McCOMB.
WORK, McCOUCH & CO.,
BANKING HOUSE OF
No. 36 South Third Street,
PHILADELPHIA.
Dealers in UNCURRENT BANK NOTES and GOLD, SILVER and WESTERN Paper bought on the most favorable terms.
BILLS OF EXCHANGE on New York, Boston, Pittsburg, Baltimore, Richmond, Cincinnati, St. Louis, &c., &c., constantly for sale.
COLLECTIONS promptly made on all accessible points in the United States and Canada.
DEPOSITS RECEIVED, payable on demand, and interest allowed as per agreement.
STOCKS and LOANS bought and sold on commission, and BUSINESS PAPER negotiated.
Refer to Philadelphia and Commercial Banks, Philadelphia; Read, Drexel & Co., Winslow, Lanier & Co., New York, and Cromelin and Richards Banks, Pittsburg
June—ly.

GROCERIES
FOR FAMILY USE.
HENRY FLOYD, GROCER,
AND
DEALER IN CHOICE TEAS, COFFEES, SPICES, &c.,
No. 607 SOUTH TWELFTH STREET, BELOW VINE,
PHILADELPHIA.

NINTH STREET WALL PAPER
AND
WINDOW SHADE WAREHOUSE,
No. 210 North Ninth St., abv. Race.
CHARLES H. CRIGG would respectfully invite the attention of purchasers to his new and beautiful stock of
WALL PAPERS AND WINDOW SHADES,
Of the latest styles which, for quality, variety, and cheapness, cannot be surpassed.
All ordinary papers using for 12½ cents per piece, by competent workmen, and perfect satisfaction guaranteed.
Store and other large shades of every description painted to order in a superior style.—Fixture, Tassels and shade trimming in great variety.
☞ A Call is Respectfully Solicited.

PURE WHOLESOME BREAD
THE UNFERMENTED BREAD
Is the most pure, wholesome and nutritious BREAD that can be used.
Its superior quality is certified by several hundred of our most prominent physicians, who use it exclusively
Families supplied in all parts of the city, and the Bread is kept by all prominent grocers.
W. E. CAMP, Exclusive Manufacturer,
6:5—1y. Corner of Broad and Buttonwood Sts.

THE YOUTH'S EVANGELIST
Is published twice every month, and is prepared expressly for use in the Sabbath Schools of the Reformed and United Presbyterian Churches. It is printed on clear, white paper, and embellished with fine engravings in every number.
Every number has a Psalm or part of a Psalm, set to music suitable for use in Sabbath Schools.
THE TERMS ARE PRE-PAYMENT, AS FOLLOWS:

	AMOUNT PAYABLE.		POSTAGE PAID.
For a single copy,	$0 25	16 copies to one address,	$4 00
4 copies to one address,	1 00	20 " " "	5 00
7 " " "	1 75	50 " " "	12 50
10 " " "	2 50	100 " " "	25 00
13 " " "	3 25	200 " " "	50 00
16 " " "	4 00

As by law, the packages must weigh at least 3 ounces, others for less than 16 copies cannot be sent postage paid.
We have secured the services of a number of valuable contributors, who will furnish original articles for every number, which will add much to the interest of its columns.
It is the intention of the subscriber to make the Youth's Evangelist a help in parents and Sabbath School Teachers in the training of the youth committed to their care, and a welcome visitor in all the families of said Sabbath Schools of the Reformed and United Presbyterian Churches.
All communications, whether for insertion or on business should be addressed to JAMES M. FERGUSON,
P. O. Box, 816, Philadelphia, Pa.
Agents.—Thomas Johnston, Monmouth, Illinois. John Fleming, Xenia, O. M. J. Murdoch, United Presbyterian Office, Pittsburg, Pa. Spratt & Lyon, Allegheny, Pa.

THE TRUE PSALMODY,
OR
The Bible Psalms the Church's only Manual of Praise.
Prepared under the inspection of the Ministers and Elders of the United and Reformed Presbyterian Churches in Philadelphia. 18mo. pp. 240. Price—10 cents.
A specimen of Psalm sent by mail, post paid, on receipt of twenty cents, in postage stamps or currency. Address WILLIAM S. YOUNG, Publisher, 1624 Race Street, Phila.

A LIBERAL PROPOSITION. BIBLE
[illegible] Pages, [illegible] Large Type. With Metrical Psalms, One dollar and Thirty-one cents.
Published by WILLIAM S. YOUNG,
1624, Race Street, Phila.
Or, WM. S. REMOUL, 20 St. Clair Street, Pittsburgh

A NEW THEOLOGICAL AND MISCELLANEOUS BOOK STORE IN PHILADELPHIA
WILLIAM S. RENTOUL,
BOOKSELLER & IMPORTER,
No. 25 SOUTH SIXTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA, PENNA
[illegible] from Pittsburg to Philadelphia, where he will be found as above.
He trusts that in his new location he will continue to be favored with that [illegible] as he has [illegible] in the [illegible] and [illegible] Books bought and exchanged. Orders for foreign books will be carefully attended to.
☞ A full supply of [illegible] and other publications of the United Presbyterian Board of Publication will be kept always on hand. Books and Tracts recommended by them all which will be sold at low rates.
☞ A full and new [illegible] stock, at the above stand. All orders by mail or express will be promptly executed. Catalogues mailed free on application.

PIANOS & MELODEONS
The largest, most elegant, and cheapest stock in the City, and on the most reasonable terms.
Every instrument warranted in appearance and quality to stand for ten years.
J. E. GOULD,
11th and Chestnut Sts. Philadelphia

SABBATH SCHOOL LIBRARIES
BEAUTIFUL, NEW AND SAFE BOOKS
AT LOW PRICES,
RECENTLY PUBLISHED FOR LIBRARIES
P

No. 30

first sheet missing.

The Annual [illegible] Statistical Association of [illegible] People of Philadelphia [illegible] upon list to aid the freed men at Port Royal and other points where they may be located, and respectfully ask the co-operation of the colored citizens and others in this city, or elsewhere, in money or [illegible]

Any amount of value received will be acknowledged, with the name of the donor, in the Recorder, where a constant record will be kept.

Subscriptions may be sent to Jacob C. White at the office of the Lebanon Cemetery, 711 [illegible] Street, and also to William Still, 107 North Fifth Street, and to Rev. E. Weaver, 619 Pine Street.

Statistical Society,	$50 00
Clayton Miller,	2 00
William Still,	5 00
[illegible]	2 00
Henry Minturn,	2 00
Catherine Johnson,	2 00
Vasti Locke,	2 00
Wm. Warnicke,	2 00
Harriet Shorter,	1 00
Sarah S. Hawkins	1 00
Rev. Jonathan C. Gibbs,	1 00
James P. Gray,	1 00
Benjamin F. Hill,	2 00
S. M. S.,	2 00
Elizabeth Gordon,	1 00
F. J. Dreer,	5 00

It affords us pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of ten dollars, the proceeds of Miss Anna E. Dickinson's lecture at Concert Hall for the contrabands, contributed to the S., C. and Statistical Association, to be applied as intended. WM. STILL.

Cor. Sec. of S., C. and Statistical Association of the Colored People of Penna.

Domestic Items.

Jefferson Davis demands the Recognition of the Confederate States by England and France.—The following is a special despatch to the New York World:—

Reliable advices received from Richmond state that Jeff. Davis has sent a special messenger to the Emperor of France, and to the Queen of England, with despatches of a private nature, demanding the immediate recognition of the Southern Confederacy. The demand is said to be followed by a voluminous bundle of documents, including letters written by the English and French consuls at Richmond, testifying of the unanimity manifested by the inhabitants of that city in forming a separate Government, and of their ability to maintain it.

A letter received in Cincinnati, from Engineer Joe Perry, of the steam-driver Dexter, states that his vessel, and another have been engaged in the work of dismantling the forts on the James river, and removing obstructions therefrom. Mr. Perry speaks of the arrival of gunboats specially adapted to the work of engaging Fort Darling successfully. It may thus be seen that the James river flotilla is not wholly occupied in conveying transports to and from Harrison's Landing, but has commenced operations looking to the downfall of the rebellion, at least in Virginia.

The shipment of Pennsylvania rock oil, or petroleum, from this country to Europe, during the first six months of the present year, amounted to considerably more than one million of dollars. This, for a trade that is in its infancy, is a large business.

The President's Appeal to the Border States.—The Representatives and Senators of the Border Slaveholding States having, by special invitation of the President, been convened at the Executive Mansion, on Saturday morning last, Mr. Lincoln addressed them as follows from a written paper held in his hands:

GENTLEMEN:—After the adjournment of Congress, now near, (shall have no opportunity of seeing you for several months. Believing that you of the Border States hold more power for good than any other equal number of members, I feel it a duty which I cannot justifiably waive, to make this appeal to you.

I intend no reproach or complaint, when I assure you that in my opinion, if you all had voted for the resolution in the gradual emancipation message of last March, the war would now be substantially ended. And the plan therein proposed, is yet one of the most potent and swift means of ending it. Let the States which are in rebellion, see definitely and certainly that in no event will the States you represent ever join their proposed Confederacy, and they cannot much longer maintain the contest. But you cannot divest them of their hope to ultimately have you with them so long as you show a determination to perpetuate the institution within your own States. Beat them at elections, as you have overwhelmingly done, and, nothing daunted, they still claim you as their own. You and I know what the lever of their power is. Break that lever before their faces, and they can shake you no more forever.

The practical part of the reply of the majority, is in these words—But we have already said that we regarded this resolution as the utterance of a sentiment, and we had no confidence that it would assume the shape of a tangible practical proposition, which would yield the fruits of the sacrifice it required. Our people are influenced by the same want of confidence, and will not consider the proposition in its present impalpable form. The interest they are asked to give up, is to them of immense importance, and they ought not to be expected even to entertain the proposal, until they are assured that when they accept it, their just expectations will not be frustrated. We regard your plan as a proposition from the Nation, to the States to exercise an admitted constitutional right in a particular manner, and yield up a valuable interest. Before they ought to consider the proposition, it should be presented in such a tangible, practical, efficient shape as to command their confidence, that its fruits are contingent only upon their acceptance. We cannot trust anything to the contingencies of future legislation. If Congress, by proper and necessary legislation, shall provide sufficient funds and place them at your disposal to be applied by you to the payment of any of our States or the citizens thereof, who shall adopt the abolishment of slavery, either gradual or immediate, as they may determine, and the expense of deportation and colonization of the liberated slaves, then will our States and people take this proposition into careful consideration for such decision as in their judgment is demanded by their interest, their honor and their duty to the whole country.

We have the honor to be with great respect,

C. A. WICKLIFFE, Chairman.

The Minority speak thus:—That we, few of us though there may be, will permit no man from the North or from the South, to go further than we in the accomplishment of the great work before us. That, in order to carry out these views, we will, so far as may be in our power, ask the people of the Border States, calmly, deliberately, and fairly, to consider your recommendation. We are the more emboldened to assume this position from the fact, how become history, that the leaders of the Southern rebellion have offered to abolish slavery amongst them as a condition to foreign intervention, in favor of their independence as a nation.

If they can give up slavery to destroy the Union, we can surely ask our people to consider the question of emancipation to save the Union.

The Army of Virginia.—Highly Important Movements.—Advance to Gordonsville.—An Important Railroad Junction of the Rebels Destroyed.—WASHINGTON, July 18.—We feel at liberty to state, that yesterday, a portion of the army of General Pope entered the important town of Gordonsville, Va., unopposed, and duly destroyed all the railroad paraphernalia at that point—the junction of the Orange and Alexandra and Virginia Central Railroads. Three-fourths of the troops, munitions and supplies of every description, for the Rebel army at Richmond, of necessity, passed through Gordonsville by rail. The blow, therefore, is a most important one, more especially as it is the first of a series which, we trust, will do more to cripple the efficiency of the Rebel army at Richmond than aught that has yet occurred.

As will be seen, General Pope has commenced his campaign in a vigorous and earnest manner. He has determined to put a stop to the half-give policy, which has heretofore prevailed in Eastern Virginia. The effects of this stringent course will be salutary. The people of Eastern Virginia who are really for the Union, will be protected and indemnified—those who are disloyal will be punished. His idea of making the army subsist as it does, is an excellent one, and will go far to simplify the operations of the troops.

Mitchell.—The department of General Mitchell toward the inhabitants of Huntsville, is said to have been marked at times by remarkable demonstrations of personal eccentricity. We are informed that he would make his appearance on the public square with a most austere countenance, and, discovering a group of the male inhabitants, talking or playing marbles, that he would gesticulate in the most imposing manner, and cry out, with an awful voice, "Traitors, out of my sight!" "Rats, to your holes!" and so forth, so that the poor butternuts did not know whether to be most amused or alarmed.

The new Currency.—PHILADELPHIA, July 18, 1862.—A great relief was experienced to day among business men and storekeepers, in the matter of small change. The signature of the President, making postage stamps a national currency, has removed the strain put upon those who required much small coin. Besides accommodating the community, the bill makes the issuing of "promises to pay" by any corporation, or individual, a punishable offense. The act of the President has not only restored the whole North, from its financial lapse, but it will have the effect of bringing [illegible] thrown on the market, but it also prevents the existence of hard times—a want of specie—from constantly assailing the minds of our people. The moral effect of this postage change movement will be worth millions [illegible] Before, everybody was asking "What is to become of us?" "We must have shinplasters," would be the reply. "I would sooner have nothing" was the invariable remark. But now everybody laughs at the idea of holding post office stamps as money, yet at the same time, they very readily pocket them. From a dreadful depression, storekeepers have branded into an extraordinary elation, and the retail business men are chuckling again.

The stamps, other than those in common use, are described as follows: The five cent are chocolate color, with the head of Jefferson; the ten-cent green, with the head of Washington, the twelve-cent black, with like head; the twenty-four blue, with same head, the thirty yellow, with head of Franklin; the ninety blue, with portrait of Washington as a young general. The stamps now in use differ from the old ones, in the fact, that the figures are in the upper corners.

Special Despatches from Warrenton, convey the information that General Pope's army of Virginia is moving on rapidly and successfully. Charlottesville has been visited, and when last heard from, General Hatch was gallantly driving the rebels beyond Madison, north east of Charlottesville, where he had captured a rebel colonel and a considerable number of other prisoners. General Hatch will probably take possession of Stannardsville Gap, an important pass of the Blue Ridge Mountains, which will place him in a [illegible] position from which he cannot be dislodged, and one that will furnish ample stores for his troops.

The Fast accomplished by the Rebel gunboat Arkansas, in the river Mississippi, is important, if the particulars be true. Our officers were aware of the fact, that this vessel was lying up the Yazoo river, and some one is certainly to be blamed for allowing her to come out. It is evidently another Merrimac affair Fortunately, she cannot do any further harm, as Col. Ellet, Jr., can soon attack, and no doubt sink or capture her, with his fleet of rams.

From General McClellan's Army we have the report that it is quiet, and the belief that Richmond is being evacuated, gains ground. A refugee from the Rebel capital says, the Rebels acknowledge a loss of thirty-two thousand men, killed, wounded and missing, in the recent seven-days battle. This is nearly three times as heavy as the Federal loss, and we shall see how great a victory we gained before Richmond after awhile, when all the facts are published.

General Nelson has arrived in Nashville, with large reinforcements, and has assumed command. He will at once turn his attention toward young Morgan, and it is to be hoped that he will destroy the Rebel forces, and capture this renegade Louisville Rebel leader.

Table of Distances in Virginia.—Taking Richmond as the centre, the table shows at a glance the distance of different points in Virginia from that city.

From Norfolk to Richmond,	101 miles.
" Suffolk to Richmond,	85 "
" Cape Henry to Richmond,	150 "
" Hampton to Richmond,	106 "
" Fortress Monroe to Richmond,	100 "
" Yorktown to Richmond,	70 "
" Williamsburg to Richmond,	60 "
" Fredericksburg to Richmond,	75 "
" Washington to Richmond,	150 "
" Winchester to Richmond,	150 "
" Gordonsville to Richmond,	70 "
" Staunton to Richmond,	120 "

Ex President Van Buren.—The Kinderhook (N. Y.) Rough Notes says the health of Ex-President Van Buren has not improved within the past week, and very slight, if any, hopes are entertained by his friends of his ultimate recovery.

Pope's Army.—A cavalry expedition sent out by Pope, under General King, on the 19th instant, after a forced march during the night, made a descent upon the Virginia Central Railroad, at Beaver Dam Creek, twenty-five miles west of Hanover Junction, and thirty-five miles from Richmond.

They destroyed the track for several miles, together with the telegraph line, burned up the railroad depot, which contained forty thousand rounds of musket ammunition, one hundred barrels of flour, and much other valuable property, and brought in a captain, who was in charge, as a prisoner.

The whole country around was thrown into a great state of alarm. Only one private was wounded on our side.

The cavalry marched eighty miles in thirty hours. The affair was most successful, and reflects high credit upon the commanding officer and his troops.

Great Britain.—The news of the fighting before Richmond, has been received in England, and excited great attention.

The London Daily News treats the result of the fighting, as a serious reverse to the Federals, and a likely to lengthen out rather than shorten the war.

The London Times says that the strategical movements of General McClellan are purely unintelligible, and adds that the recent events must infuse new energy into the Confederate arms, and may produce results calculated to lead to a cessation of hostilities, and eventually to the termination of the war.

Replanting France.—The French Government is seriously occupied by a scheme for replanting the mountains of France, the great diminution of timber-trees creating considerable alarm. The Commissaries of Woods and Forests have announced to the commercial authorities, that they will supply all persons with seeds and plants who will undertake to plant the mountain-sides. Landed proprietors who plant at their own expense, will be entitled to a premium.

Turkey.—A battle was fought on the 1st, near Yenikyl, and resulted in the complete victory of the Turks. The loss of the Montenegrins is killed and wounded, is from 500 to 600—the Turks, 150.

Syria.—I think it will be news to you to learn that the Holy Land is rapidly being put in telegraphic communication with the balance of the world. A company of labourers and artizans, escorted by a detachment of Turkish troops, left this city last week for the purpose of erecting the poles, and placing the wires along the coast, to put us in communication with the great city of the Constantines, while another has gone down the coast, via Sidon, Tyre, Jaffa, and Gaza, for the city of Alexander the Great.

The Beirut and Damascus telegraph having proved a complete success, as well as a great convenience, is also being extended over towards the "Great River," and thence, I am told, it will be carried via Babylon, to connect with the Indian lines. Surely "the sick man" is rapidly renovascing.

Old Berytus, Phœnix-like, is rapidly rising from its ashes, and bids fair, from present appearances, to take rank worthily as capital of Julia Felix resuscitated. Houses seem to spring up, mushroom-like, as if by magic, and amongst them hospitals, hospices, seminaries, and divers other charitable institutions in first-rate style—principally, however, on European foundations.

Central Park, New York.—The park is about two miles and a half in length, and about half a mile in width, and contains eight hundred and forty-three acres. The reservoirs are nearly in the centre of the park, and occupy one hundred and forty-one acres. The lakes and ponds cover twenty-nine acres. The carriage-roads, bridle-roads, walks, and transverse streets occupy about one hundred and five acres. The carriage-roads are nine miles in length; the bridle-roads, five miles; and the walks, twenty-three miles. The bridges of the park attract much attention. There are thirty-seven in all, constructed of different kinds of stone, of brick, and of wood. The number of persons visiting the park during the year was 2,404,650. Of these 1,951,293 were pedestrians, 73,547 equestrians, and the remainder in carriages. The number of streets for disorderly conduct, during the year, was only ninety-three. This is a remarkable fact, showing the wholesome and restraining influence of the park upon the thousands who visit it. Provision has been made by the Commissioners for supplying boats, with boatmen, for rowing on the lakes, and carriages of every description for driving.

New York Central Railroad.—This has become the greatest live stock carrying railroad in the country, now employing not less than seven hundred cars. In 1855 the average monthly freight accepted at West Albany was $2,000. In 1861 it was $67,000, and thus far in this year there is a handsome increase over the corresponding period last year.

The Reciprocity Treaty.—It appears, from an official report of the Secretary of the Treasury, showing the quantity and value of the different articles of merchandise imported into the United States from the British North American Provinces, under the Reciprocity treaty, that in 1854 the total value was more than $13,000,000; in 1860 it was over $12,500,000; and in 1861, $20,000,000.

The table shows in the last year a falling off in fish, fruits, hides and wool, and an increase in animals, ashes, bark, butter, cheese, coal, eggs, flax, flour, grains, meats, tires, lumber, &c. The value of animals was $1,740,000; fish of all kinds, $1,302,000; flour and breadstuffs, over $3,000,000; grain, $1,500,000; lumber, [illegible] The respective amounts of other imports are not enumerated.

The News from Mexico by the steamer Columbia, [illegible] Matamoras had been attacked by the French at Oriziba, and routed. On the 30th ultimo, the supply train of the French army at Orizaba was captured, and the troops there are said to be in a starving condition. Three [illegible] From Acapulco it has been captured by the Mexicans, and the despatches published in the city of Mexico. The French are having an unhappy time of it.

Killed and Wounded.—The number of killed and wounded in battle during the present war, is not as great as many have imagined. We have gone over the records, commencing with the breaking out of the rebellion, and we believe the following figures embrace the whole number on the Union side, with the exception of the loss sustained in the late engagement near Richmond:

	Killed	Wounded
Bull Run,	481	1,011
Davis Creek, Mo.,	223	721
Lexington, Mo.,	39	150
Bull's Bluff,	223	226
Belmont,	84	238
Mill Spring, Ky.,	39	207
Fort Henry,	17	31
Roanoke Island,	40	252
Fort Donelson,	446	1,735
Fort Craig, New Mexico,	62	140
Pea Ridge,	203	972
Attack of the Merrimac,	261	108
Newbern,	91	466
Winchester,	143	540
Pittsburg Landing,	1,735	7,882
Yorktown,	35	120
Forts Jackson and St. Philip,	30	114
Williamsburg,	456	1,411
West Point,	11	100
McDowell,	37	225
Near Corinth,	40	140
Banks' retreat, estimated,	100	300
Hanover Court House,	58	200
Skirmishes,	600	1,740
Total,	5,791	20,309

At the battle of Waterloo, alone, the loss on the side of Great Britain, in killed and wounded, was nearly four thousand more than our entire loss thus far in the present war.—New York Herald.

Names of the Recent Battles.—The following are the names which it seems have been assigned to the recent battles in front of Richmond:

Thursday, June 26—Battle of Mechanicsville.

Friday, June 27—Battle of Gaines' Mill.

Saturday, June 28—Battle of the Chickahominy.

Sabbath, June 29—Battle of Peach Orchard; battle of Savage's Station.

Monday, June 30—Battle of White Oak Swamp; battle of White Oak Creek; battle of Charles City Cross Roads.

Tuesday July 1,—Battle of Turkey Bend.

Personal.

Thurlow Weed, Esq., in his letter to the Common Council of New York, furnishes the following bit of autobiography:

Born upon the banks of the Hudson river, my advent in the city of New York, in the year 1807, was in the capacity of a cabin-boy to the sloop Jefferson, Capt. Jacobus Bogardus, of Catskill, and my first entrance to the city, from Countess slip up Broad Street, with the trunk of a passenger on my shoulder, as well remembered incident. Subsequently, in 1810, 1817 and 1818, I wrought there as a journeyman printer. Having, therefore, obtained an early foothold in our great metropolis, and witnessed its wonderful growth, its unparalleled prosperity, and its solidifying material and intellectual glories, during a period which has augmented its population from less than one hundred thousand to more than a million, you will pardon the weakness which confesses its pride in being invested with the freedom of a city destined to become what London is—a centre and depository of the wealth, power and wisdom of the world.

Hon. Robert H Pruyn at Honolulu.—The Polynesian, of March 28, has an account of the arrival of the American Minister to Japan at Honolulu, and his reception by their majesties, the King and Queen. The following gentlemen were also presented: William Ingraham Kip, Jr., Esq., Secretary of Legation; Robert G. Pruyn, Attaché; George S. Fisher, Esq., United States Consul, Kanagawa; E. E. Rice, Commercial Agent, Hakodadi; and George Mann, Esq. The reception took place in the evening, and on the following day the minister and his suite were entertained by a dinner at the Royal Palace.

Jeff Davis' Early History.—A trifling little rebel paper in Kentucky professes to doubt the truth of our statement respecting the origin of Jeff. Davis. What we state is well known to hundreds of our best citizens of Carnahan and Todd counties, Kentucky. Jeff. Davis' father lived for a number of years in a log cabin situated in what is now the town of Fairview, twelve miles from Hopkinsville, Kentucky. The house is now weatherboarded and used as a tavern. Old Davis was a man of bad character, a horse trader, a swindler, and of very low habits. A fine horse was missing on one occasion in the neighborhood under such suspicious circumstances that he found it safest to leave the country immediately and fly to Mississippi. Jeff. Davis is his illegitimate son, born some miles distant from his father's house, and taken home by him when several years of age. These are notorious facts. Some of Davis' relatives still live in that part of Kentucky. We would never have alluded to the sinister bar on Jeff.'s escutcheon, were not his friends continually prating about Southern gentility and the low breeding of Union people. Our own opinion is that Jeff.'s birth dors him more credit than any portion of his subsequent life.—Nashville Union.

Rev. Dr. Grundy.—We quote the following information concerning the Rev. Dr. Grundy, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church in Memphis:

"He named especially a Presbyterian minister, a parson Grundy, (belonging, as we understood, to the old Grundy family in Tennessee,) whose faith had never failed, even in the darkest times. The Secessionists had turned him out of his church, but his friends rented a hall for him, where he still preached to large audiences with a boldness that defied persecution. 'And when the United States get possession of Memphis,' said the gentleman, getting excited, 'we are going to build him a church five stories high, and he shall preach in every story of it!' Such courage deserves its reward. He who has dared every thing in the hour of danger, will not be forgotten in the hour of victory."

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NOTICE

To the friends of Religious Literature and human progress of the City and County of Philadelphia.

This certifies that Miss Mary Still is a legally authorized agent for the City and County of Philadelphia, Penna., to solicit subscribers and donations for the Christian Recorder of the African Methodist Episcopal Church of America.

We, therefore, take great pleasure in recommending Miss Still to the citizens and friends as a lady every way worthy of such a position, as well as trustworthy, and we do hope, as the enterprise is commendable, that those in whom she may present this writing will not turn her away without either subscribing or contributing to this great cause.

(Signed) ELISHA WEAVER,
Editor & General Book Steward.
No. 619 Pine St., Phila.

BOARDING IN BROOKLYN

MRS. S. PLANT (formerly Richardson) respectfully announces that she has opened a first class BOARDING & LODGING HOUSE at No 97 HIGH STREET, Brooklyn—where she is prepared to accommodate the public on the most reasonable terms.

Her house being located in a very pleasant part of the city, and within five minutes' walk of Fulton Ferry, is made than a very desirable and convenient place.

BOARDING.

Mrs. AMIA WILLIAM, of Cape May, will open the Bathaker House for the season, for the accommodation of all who wish to spend the season there, and she will spare no pains to make all comfortable. Those wishing to spend one, two, or three days, will find the Bonaker House the right spot. Prices very reasonable. [illegible]

COAL, STOVES, &c., &c.

The subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has taken the store,

NO 107 NORTH FIFTH STREET,

formerly occupied as the Anti-Slavery Office, (where he has been engaged for the last fourteen years,) to occupy it henceforth as a place of business for the sale of

COAL, STOVES, &c.

Having made arrangements with one of the first Coal Dealers in the city, to furnish the best qualities of Lehigh, Schuylkill, &c., at the lowest Cash prices, he hopes to give full satisfaction in the branch of his business.

He will also keep constantly on hand a general assortment of good NEW and SECOND HAND STOVES, FURNACES, &c.

Persons wishing Stoves taken down, stored away, put up, or repaired, can be promptly accommodated by applying as above.

He hopes by energy and strict attention to business to obtain a fair share of patronage.

WM STILL,
107 North Fifth Street, Philadelphia

REFERENCES

J. M. McKim,	Dr. Caspar Wistar,
Samuel Rhoads,	James Mott,
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]

PERRY & FITZGERALD'S

PROCESS FOR MAKING LIGHT, NUTRITIOUS, AND UNADULTERATED BREAD, WITHOUT FERMENTATION

The new process of bread making, patented by Perry & Fitzgerald, requires the following which have hitherto rendered it impossible to manufacture perfectly pure, sweet, and palatable bread. The entire process is performed by mechanical means, and is as follows:

The process consists in mixing the flour in a closed vessel and the application of pure carbonic gas under pressure, by which the dough is made to rise, and is then subjected to the heated iron pans, for baking, in the brief space of from ten to twenty minutes. The "change" is usually 300 pounds, and each machine completes the operation, in all its details from the putting in of the flour to the discharging of the dough, in from twenty five to forty minutes.

The invention of Perry & Fitzgerald effects a revolution in the processes of bread making, giving a system of wholesome manufacture not subject to the fermentation and evils of fermentation, but short and certain in its results—I. because, by the rapidity then of mechanical by means of labor, and in the superior value of the article produced, it produces large profits upon the capital employed. 2. Because each small amount of capital, as well as the protection afforded by the patent, gives adequate security against competition. But whilst preventing unequal competition it produces none of the evils of a monopoly, because it leaves the consumer at all times in possession of his former means of supply, to be resorted to, at will the more profitable [illegible]

The application of pure carbonic acid gas, under pressure, is a mechanically kneaded dough-room, as the invention of Perry & Fitzgerald, did not occur to Dr Dye, though he seems to have had a dark foreboding of the importance of the artificial use of the gas, since he states, hyp-thetically, that "if water, highly impregnated with carbonic acid gas be used for kneading the dough, the resulting bread will be open and spongy. Could a light article," he continues, "be produced in this way, then, as the sugar would remain undecomposed, the bread would be as much the sweeter and more nourishing."

What, to Dr Dye, was certainly a deeply comprehended chemical truth has been practically developed by the brilliant invention of Perry & Fitzgerald. Possessing with bold choice means so gratefully recommended, or showing the most perfect beneficial results as exhibited

ITS SUPERIORITY.—The superiority of unfermented bread is by no means new. Dr Cullen, who wrote more than seventy years ago, says—

"In Scotland, nine tenths of the lower class of people, and that is the greater part of the whole, live upon unfermented bread, called unfermented farinaceous in other forms; and there are not a more healthy people anywhere to be found. In the course of fifty years that I have practised among them, I have had occasion to know this, and have hardly met with a disease, of any consequence, that I could join to the use of unfermented substances."

At a later period, Professor Thompson, of Glasgow, in his work on the "Food of Animals," after alluding to the facts referred to above by Dr. Cullen, and other kindred facts, observes:—

"Such, then, being such last evidence in fav ored the wholesomeness of unfermented bread, it became important to discover in what respects it differs from fermented bread. The result proved to this person (fermenta tion) may be considered to be merely the superinduction of the particles of which the loaf is composed, so as to render the same more readily digestible by the gastric organs of the human stomach. But, as this object is gained at a sacrifice of the nutritive parts of the flour, it becomes a matter of interest to ascertain the amount of the loss sustained in the process."

The result of Professor Thompson's experiments showed a difference in favor of unfermented bread of nearly seven per cent, more than that made by the ordinary process. In other words, there was a loss of nearly one fifteenth of the nutritive proportion of the flour, when by the process of fermentation, was driven into the air and lost.

We come now to a more particular consideration of the superiority of the bread made without fermentation, or the use of chemical agents, over the bread made by them processes. Although, from what has already been said, this superiority appears in most vital contrast, yet the public will be better satisfied to have the points stated specifically, for it only needs that the advantages secured by this method be exhibited in order to its universal introduction in the manufacture of bread.

I. In CLEANLINESS.—Instead of the dough being mixed by the naked hands, as before, the bread from the moment of the flour to the completion of the baking, is not, and scarcely can be, touched by any one. "One handed operation attained in its manufacture," says Dr Willard Parker, "is its entire cleanliness." Says Dr Wetherby: "The process is not only purely scientific but preeminently cleanly."

II. IN PRESERVATION OF ALL THE NUTRIENT PRINCIPLES OF THE FLOUR.—As the raising of bread depends upon the production of gas, by the fermentation of flour, it takes a perfect particular or epoch nutrient. All the constituents of the flour remain wholly undamaged, while the process of raising bread by fermentation inevitably sacrifices some of them, as has been already shown.

III. ITS UNIFORM CHARACTER.—Bread made by the New Process is uniformly light, sweet, and nutritious. The conditions being always the same, the result is always a perfect loaf, a uniform and producing bread of the same quality. It retains its moisture much longer than fermented bread, and may be eaten warm with impunity. The process also imparts a perfect freedom from all acidity, even in the richest varieties. Says the London Times:

"The objectionable consequences of fermentation being excluded, the constituents of the flour are left both unchanged and unconcentrated, the resulting loaf being a wholesome pure."

IV. ITS WHOLESOMENESS.—Being free from the deleterious substances which are the product of fermentation, it retains its nutritious qualities, by the old modes, the bread made by the New Process is easy of digestion, and agrees with the most delicate stomach. "Indigestion," says Dr Cox, (late of the N. Y. Medical College,) "it will be invariable, as they will be able to use it where the fermented manufactured bread has been found to be especially failed as an article of diet." Says the [illegible] Journal and Gazette:—

"Since the introduction of the new method, several there have already been realized from members of the medical profession, who have recommended it in their practice, as well as from non-professional persons, accounts of the really astonishing results that have followed its use in cases of deranged digestion and constipation. Many persons have reported their recovery to health, after years of suffering and misery, by the simple use of the bread as a diet. Many cases have also been reported by medical men of positive, in which certain distressing forms of dyspepsia, which had remained intractable under every kind of treatment, have yielded as if by magic, almost immediately after adopting the use of the unfermented bread.

"The beneficial effects of the new bread are attributable to two causes. The one to the absence of the prejudicial matters imparted to ordinary bread by the process of fermentation, and the other to the presence in the bread, unremoved, of those elements which are the essential agents of digestion and assimilation."

The most eminent members of the medical profession, both in Great Britain and in the United States, not only speak in the highest terms of the same with which it is directed, and its perfect, nourishing qualities, but especially of its peculiar palatableness, and wonderful keeping properties. The absence of acidity and other strong flavors, which, in a greater or less degree, are characteristic of fermented bread, renders the new bread peculiarly delicate to the taste.

IV. ITS RAPIDITY AND ECONOMY.—By the use of mechanical means, instead of manual labor, a barrel of flour is converted into baked loaves in forty-five minutes, whereas, by the ordinary process, four or five hours are occupied in the formation of the "sponge," and a further time in kneading, raising, and baking the dough.

"The cleanliness of the consumption of bread," says a correspondent of the Journal of the Society of Arts, "renders it an article peculiarly suitable to be prepared and supplied by a public company. And since the new process removes all the vicissitudes of manufacture, and the expense of the machinery gives a comparative monopoly, the supply of bread is placed at once in the same category with gas, water, or other articles of prime necessity."

VAN RIPER & CAMP,
EXCLUSIVE MANUFACTURERS,
Corner of Broad and Buttonwood Streets,
PHILADELPHIA.

THE FOLLOWING ENDORSEMENTS OF

SPALDING'S

CEPHALIC PILLS,

WILL CONVINCE ALL WHO SUFFER FROM

HEADACHE,

THAT A

SPEEDY AND SURE CURE IS

WITHIN THEIR REACH.

As these Testimonials were unsolicited by Mr. Spalding, they afford unquestionable proof of the efficacy of this truly scientific discovery.

MADISVILLE, COBB., Feb. 5, 1861.

MR. SPALDING.
SIR:
I have tried your Cephalic Pills, and I like them as well that I want you to send me two dollars' worth more.
Part of these are for the neighbours, to whom I gave a few out of the first box I got from you.
Send the Pills by mail, and oblige
Yours truly,
JAMES KENNEDY.

HAVERFORD, PA., Feb. 6, 1861.

MR SPALDING.
SIR:
I wish you to send me one more box of your Cephalic Pills. I have received a great deal of benefit from them.
Yours, respectfully,
MARY ANN STORKHOUSE.

SPRUCE CREEK, HUNTINGTON CO., PA., January 18, 1861.

H. C. SPALDING.
SIR.
You will please send me two boxes of your Cephalic Pills. Send them immediately.
Respectfully yours,
JNO. B. SIMONS.

P. S. I have used one box of your Pills, and find them excellent.

BELLE VERNON, OHIO, Jan. 15, 1861.

HENRY C. SPALDING, Esq.
Please find enclosed twenty-five cents, for which send me another box of your Cephalic Pills. They are truly the best Pills I have ever tried.
Direct A STOVER P. M
Belle Vernon Westmoreland Co. O.

BEVERLY, MASS., Dec 11, 1860

H. C. SPALDING, Esq.
I wish for some circulars or large show bills to bring your Cephalic Pills more particularly before my customers. If you have anything of the kind, please send to me.
One of my customers, who is subject to severe Sick Headaches, (usually lasting two days,) was cured of an attack in one hour by your Pills, which I sent her.
Respectfully yours,
W. B. WILKES.

ALGER'S PRONOUNCING BIBLE

922 Pages, Octavo. Price—$1 25. With Metrical Psalms, One dollar and Thirty-one cents.

Published by WILLIAM S. YOUNG, [illegible] Race Street, Phila

Or, WM. S. RENTOUL, 20 St. Clair Street, Pittsburgh

THE TRUE PSALMODY,

OR

The Bible Psalms the Church's only Manual of Praise.

Prepared under the inspection of the Ministers and Elders of the United and Reformed Presbyterian Churches in Philadelphia. 18mo. pp. 240. Price—[illegible]

[illegible] postage paid. Address WILLIAM S. YOUNG, Publisher, [illegible] Race Street, Phila.

Advertisements.

THE DAUGHTERS OF HOPE GRAND UNION Temperance Society met, it being the thirteenth convention, April 10th, 1861. Representatives from Lodges are as follows:—

From Garnet Union No 4, D. of T.; from Phœnix Union, No. 8, D of T.; from Northern Union, No. 16, D. of T.; Webb's Union, of Chambersburgh, Pa., from Dr Bias' Union, of Carlisle, Pa.; from Mount Olive Union, No. 18, D of T.; from Vanbrackle Union, No. 15, D. of T., of Norristown, Pa

Officers installed to their several positions are as follows:—

Grand P., Sister Bennet; Grand Associate, Sister Burris; Grand Treasurer, Sister Fausett; Grand Conductress, C. Thompson; Grand Sentinel, A. E. Dukhart, Grand Chaplain, Sister Hall

G. P. P.,	Sister E. Rossard,	G. P. P.	Sister Anderson,
"	" E. Bowers,	"	" J. P. Bacon,
"	" M. H. Bendt,	"	" E. A. Cassa,
"	" S. Newman,	"	" White,
"	" Davis,	"	" S. Hall.

THE DAUGHTERS OF CORNISH SOCIETY.

THE STATED QUARTERLY MEETINGS of the Society are held on the first Wednesdays of February, May, August, and November.

The meetings of the Board are held on the Wednesday previous to the regular stated meetings of the society.

Mrs. SARAH CARTER,
President.
Mr. L. R. SEYMOUR, Sec'y.

THE BOOK DEPOSITORY

OF THE

AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH,

No. 619 Pine Street,

PHILADELPHIA.

We keep on hand, in connexion with our other books, Sabbath school books of various kinds. Question Books; Catechisms, Nos. 1, 2, and 3. We have a good assortment of such books as are generally used in the Public Schools. Also, Stationery, Inks, Pens, Paper, Envelopes and Blank Books.

THE DEATH-BED OF THE REV. JOHN WESLEY

Wanted Canvassing Agents for this splendid large engraving, which should be in every house of all admirers of that great and good man. The most liberal inducements offered to those selling this print. Send for circulars and instructions.

W. W. SMITH, Publisher,
Nos. 9 and 11 North Second St., Philadelphia

WANTED.—The charge of a Public School. Reference as to ability can be given. Apply to
J. W. A., 1641 Belmont St.

ONE-PRICE CLOTHING,

OF THE LATEST STYLES,

Made in the Best Manner, expressly for RETAIL SALES. Lowest Selling Prices marked in Plain Figures. All Goods made to order warranted satisfactory. Our One-Price System is strictly adhered to. All are thereby treated alike.

JONES & CO.,
Dec 5—ly 604 Market Street.

GOOD NEWS

To Tailors, Dress makers, and to those wishing to be such. Also, to owners of sewing machines, shoe-keepers, and large families.—It is one day by printed directions which each Delineation contains, can learn to cut and fit perfectly, Ladies' Dresses, Boys' and Men's Pants, Vests, Jackets, Sack and Over-coats.

Local and Travelling Agents Wanted.

Address REV. WM. H. KELLY,
Carrollville, Bucks Co., Pa

Or, apply to Mrs. Mary C. Weaver, (wife of the Editor of this paper) 619 Pine St., Philada., Pa. Jan 18—ly

MRS. E. A. PALMER'S

DRY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS STORE,

NO. 105 NORTH FIFTH STREET.

PHILADELPHIA

A General Assortment of Hosiery, Trimmings, Dry Goods, &c.

Dress, Shirt making, and Plain Sewing, promptly attended to. Jan 18—ly

COAL! COAL!! COAL!!!

The subscriber is moving to her [illegible] quantities of Lehigh and Schuylkill, at the following low prices:

Lehigh Stove Coal, per ton,	$4 25
" Egg,	4 25
" Broken and Screened, per ton,	4 25
" Egg,	4 25
Schuylkill, Stove, and Egg, and Broken, and 6 pound,	4 25
Nut,	3 50

Orders left at the Store, No 107 North Fifth St., will be promptly attended to. WM. STILL.
Jan 4—ly

KEELY'S PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY

N. W. corner Fifth and Coates.

PICTURE GALLERY AND FRAMES ON THE FIRST FLOOR.

Strangers should not fail to call and examine.

Admission Free.

JAMES DOWNS,

DEALER IN

NEW AND SECOND HAND

CLOTHING,

No 225 South Second Street.

No 17—3mo. PHILADELPHIA.

WILLIAM STILL'S

STOVE STORE,

107 NORTH FIFTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

The subscriber would respectfully inform his friends and all in want of good stoves, that he has now on hand a general variety of excellent PARLOR, COOK and CHAMBER STOVES, including Gas-burning, as well as other patterns, which he is selling at very low rates. He buys entirely for cash, of the best wholesale founders, and of course can sell much cheaper than those buying on the usual credit system. At any rate his friends are invited to give him a call and examine for themselves before purchasing elsewhere, as he feels that they would be convinced that it would be to their interest to give him their patronage. Coal orders constantly on hand. WM. STILL.

JOSEPH H. COLE,

CONTINENTAL RESTAURANT,

NO. 717 LOMBARD STREET, P

MORE NURSES.

BY ELEANOR C. DONNELLY

Fold away your bright tinted dresses,
Turn the key on your powder and curls,
And the wealth of your tendril-like tresses
Braid away in a serious way;
No more delicate gloves, no more laces,
No more trifling in boudoir or bower,
But come with your smile in your faces,
To meet the stern wants of the hour.

Look around. By the torch-light insteadily,
The dead and the dying seem one—
What! trembling and paling already,
Before your dear mission's begun!
These wounds are more precious than ghastly,
Time presses her lips to each scar,
While she chants of that glory which vastly
Transcends all the horrors of war.

Pause here by this bedside. How mellow
The light showers down on that brow!
Such a brave, brawny visage! Fine fellow!
Some homestead is missing him now;
Some wife shades her eye, in the clearing,
Some mother sits moaning, distressed,
While the loved one lies faint, but unfearing,
With the enemy's ball in his breast.

Here's another, a lad, a mere stripling,
Picked up on the field almost dead,
With the blood through his sunny hair rippling
From a horrible gash in the head.
They say he was first in the action,
Gay-hearted, quick-handed and witty,
He fought till he dropped with exhaustion,
At the gates of that far Southern city.

Fought and fell 'neath the guns of that city,
With a spirit transcending his years.
Lift him up in your large-hearted pity,
And wet his pale lips with your tears;
Touch him gently—most sacred the duty
Of dressing that poor shattered hand!
God spare him to rise in his beauty,
And battle once more for his land!

Who groaned? What a passionate murmur!
"In thy mercy, O God! let me die!"
Ha! surgeon, your hand must be firmer—
That musket ball's broken his thigh.
Turn the light on those pure furrowed features,
Gray-haired and unknown? bless thee, brother,
O Heaven! that one of thy creatures
Should e'er work such woe on another!

Wipe the sweat from his brow with your kerchief,
Let the old tattered collar go wide.
See—he stretches out blindly to search if,
The surgeon still stands by his side.
My son's over yonder—a rebel!
'Twas—'twas his ball that entered my thigh.
And again he bursts out all a-tremble,
"In Thy mercy, O God! let me die!"

Pass on—it is useless to linger
While others are claiming your care;
There is need for your delicate finger,
For your womanly sympathy, there.
There are sick ones athirst for canteening,
There are dying ears raving of home,
There are wounds to bind up with a blessing,
And shrouds to make ready for some.

They have gathered about you the harvest
Of death in its ghastliest view;
The nearest, as well as the farthest,
Is here with the traitor and true.
And crowned with your beautiful patience,
Made sunny with love at the heart,
You must balsam the wounds of a nation,
Nor falter nor shrink from your part.

Up and down through the wards where the fever
Stalks noisome, and gaunt, and impure,
You must go with your steadfast endeavor
To comfort, to counsel, to cure.
I grant you the task's superhuman,
But strength will be given to you
To do for these dear ones what women
Alone in her pity can do.

And the lips of the mother will bless you,
Our angel, sweet-visaged and pale!
And the little ones run to caress you,
And the wives and the sisters cry "hail!"
But e'en if you drop down unheeded,
What matter? God's ways are the best.
You have poured out your life where 'twas needed,
And He will take care of the rest.

—HUDSON.

INHABITANTS OF THE OCEAN.

Take up a pinch of the soil over which lies 2,500 fathoms of sea-water, submit it to a microscope, and behold! though it looks and feels like fine clay, it does not contain a particle of sand, earth or gravel. Every atom under the lens tells of life and living things; the bed of the Atlantic is strewn with the bones and shells of the myriads of creatures inhabiting its waters—creatures so numerous that figures fail to convey an idea, or the mind to embrace their vast profusion. The navigator traversing the blue sea, sails for days in a fleet ship, through waters so thickly covered with small pulpy sea-nettles, or medusæ, that it looks to him like a "boundless meadow in yellow leaf." The savant following on his trail, places a single one of the sea-bubblers under a lens, and in one of its nine stomachs, finds 70,000 flinty shells of microscopic diatomaceæ, one of the many animalcules of the sea. Thus each creature in these thousand square leagues of medusæ was sucking from the sea millions of these diminutive creatures, and ejecting their shells, to fall, in a gentle, yet perpetual shower, down to the bed of the ocean, and there in time, form strata of siliceous and chalky matter, for future geologists to ponder over. And remember that upon all these medusæ prey legions of bigger creatures, and that into these helpless colonies, sails the huge whale, with cavernous mouth, and gulps down as many of them at every feast, as they do of the minute diatomaceæ.—Blackwood's Magazine.

THE GREAT AMERICAN DESERT—A NOVEL ENTERPRISE.

In the acquisition of Territory from Mexico we acquired not only good, bad and indifferent lands, but we got a desert, and so large in its dimensions, so formidable in its withering desolations, that we are as much at a loss to know what to do with it as was the party who drew the elephant. Professor Blake, who from his position of geologist, accompanying the exploring and surveying expedition of Capt. Williamson, of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Survey, acquired a personal and familiar knowledge of this "journada del muerta" (desert of death,) in a recent lecture in San Francisco, in speaking of the Colorado Desert, pronounced it as fine a specimen of the desert as that of Lybia or Sahara. It extends from the base of San Bernardine southwesterly one hundred and eighty miles, parts of its surface being below our boundary line in Sonora. Its area is some nine thousand square miles; and excepting the Colorado, which cuts across its lower end, is without river or lake. It stretches off to the horizon on all sides without one glimpse of vegetation or life. Its surface is ashy and parched; its frame of mountains rise in rugged pinnacles of brown rock, bare even of soil. Words are unequal to the task of describing its apparent expanses, the purity of its air, the silence of its night, the brilliancy of the stars that overhang it, the tints of the mountains at daybreak, the looming up of those beyond the horizon, the glare of the midday sun, the violence of its local storms of dust and sand.

Parts are entirely destitute even of sand, being smooth, compact, sun-baked clay; other parts are covered with heaps of sand, disposed like snow-drifts in waves of fifty and eighty feet in height. Near the mountains along the Colorado there is a terrace as flat as the floor, and paved with pebbles of nearly uniform size, of porphyry, jasper, quartz, cornelian, and agate, all rounded by the action of the water, and polished till they glisten, by the driving sand. In this respect, again, the porch of our Great Desert is like that which outlines the Lybian Desert. Doubtless the northern part of the desert is the dry bed of an ancient lake of fresh water, whose beach lines are strongly marked. Probably, at a comparatively recent period, the water of the California Gulf covered all the clay surface of the desert. It lies below their level now, and if a channel were cut through the natural embankment of the Colorado, it would be doubtless covered again with water. It is very probable that the Colorado Desert region was uplifted within historic times. Earthquakes occasionally agitate its surface, and in 1852 there were eruptions of mud and hot water in the central parts of the valley.

The National Intelligencer says that an enterprise is on foot for converting this formidable desert into a fruitful field by introducing water from the Colorado River on and over it, thus causing verdure to spread eternally, "causing the desert to bloom as the rose."

The propagator of this enterprise having devoted several years in the preliminary work, and having fully determined the practicability of the measure by actual instrumental surveys, now awaits the action of Congress to make cession of this Sahara to the State of California, in compliance with the expressed wish of her Legislature. It cannot be doubted that Congress will at once comply with the application made by California, and allow the parties to go on with this novel work, which promises to be of so much benefit to the government and mankind.—Newburyport Herald.

Family Circle.

CHERRIES.

They rivalled the apple-blooms in snowy profusion, and the branches were covered with tiny balls. The sun mounted warm and high in the heavens, and they blushed under his ardent gaze. I felt an increasing conviction that here there would be no disappointment; but it soon became palpable that another class of depredators had marked our trees for their own. Little brown toes could occasionally be seen peeping from the foliage, and little bare feet left their print on the garden soil. Humanity had evidently deposited its larva in the vicinity. There was a school-house not very far away, and the children used to draw water from an old well in a distant part of the garden. It was surprising to see how thirsty they all became as the cherries ripened. It was as if the village had simultaneously agreed to breakfast on salt fish. Their wooden bucket might have been the urn of the Danaides, judging from the time it took to fill it. The boys were as fleet of foot as young zebras, and presented upon discovery no apology or justification but their heels,—which was a wise stroke in them. A troop of rosy-cheeked, bright-eyed little snips in white pantalets, caught in the act, reasoned with in a semi-circle, and cajoled with candy, were as sweet as distilled honey, and promised with all their innocent hearts and hands not to do so any more. But the real pièce de résistance was a mass of pretty well developed crinoline which an informal walk in the infested district brought to light, engaged in a systematic raid upon the tempting fruit. Now, in my country, the possessor of unknown individuals in your own garden, plucking your fruit from your trees, without your knowledge and against your will, is universally considered as affording presumptive evidence of—something. In this part of the world, however, I find they do things differently. It doesn't furnish presumptive evidence of anything. If you think it does, you do so at your own risk. I thought it did, and escaped by the skin of my teeth. I hinted my views, and found myself in a den of lions, and was thankful to come out second best. Second? nay, third best, fourth best, no best at all, not even good,—very bad. In short, I was glad to get out with my life. Nor was my repulse confined to the passing hour. The injured innocents came no more for water. I am consumed with inward remorse as I see them daily file majestically past my house to my neighbor's well. I have resolved to plant a strawberry-bed next year, and offer them the fruit of it by way of atonement, and never, under any provocation, hereafter, to assert or insinuate that I have any claim whatever to anything under the sun. If this course, perseveringly persisted in, does not restore the state of qeo, I am hopeless. I have no further resources.

The one drop of sweetness in the bitter cup was, that the cherries, being thus let severely alone, were allowed to hang on the trees and ripen. It took them a great while. If they had been as big as bogsheads, I should think the sun might have got through them quicker than he did. They looked ripe long before they were so; and as they were very plenty, the trees presented a beautiful appearance. I bought a stack of fantastic little baskets from a travelling Indian tribe, at a fabulous price, for the sake of fulfilling my long-cherished design of sending fruit to my city friends. After long waiting, Halicarnassus came in one morning with a tin pail full, and said that they were ripe at last, for they were turning purple and falling off; and he was going to have them gathered at once. He had brought in the first fruits for breakfast. I put them in the best preserve dish, twined it with myrtle, and set it in the centre of the table. It looked charming,—so ruddy, rural and Arcadian. I wished we could breakfast out-doors; but the summer was one of unusual severity, and it was hardly prudent thus to brave its rigor. We had cup-custards at the close of our breakfast that morning,—very vulgar, but very delicious. We reached the cherries at the same moment, and swallowed the first one simultaneously. The effect was instantaneous and electric. Halicarnassus puckered his face into a perfect wheel, with his mouth for the hub. I don't know how I looked, but I felt badly enough.

"It was unfortunate that we had custards this morning," I remarked. "They are so sweet that the cherries seem sour by contrast. We shall soon get the sweet taste out of our mouths, however."

"That's so!" said Halicarnassus, my husband, who will be coarse.

We tried another. He exhibited a similar pantomime, with improvements. My feelings were also the same, intensified.

"I am not in luck to-day," I said, attempting to smile. "I got hold of a sour cherry this time."

"I got hold of a bitter one," said Halicarnassus.

"Mine was a little bitter, too," I added.

"Mine was a little sour, too," said Halicarnassus.

"We shall have to try again," said I. We did try again.

"Mine was a good deal of both this time," said Halicarnassus. "But we will give them a fair trial."

"Yes," said I sepulchrally.

We sat there sacrificing ourselves to abstract right for five minutes. Then I leaned back in my chair, and looked at Halicarnassus. He rested his right elbow on the table, and looked at me.

"Well," said he, at last, "how are cherries and things?"

"Halicarnassus," said I, solemnly, "it is my firm conviction that farming is not a lucrative occupation. You have no certain assurance of return, either for labor or capital invested. Look at it. The bugs eat up the squashes. The worms eat up the apples. The cucumbers won't grow at all. The peas have got lost. The cherries are bitter as wormwood and sour as you in your worst moods. Everything that is good for anything won't grow, and everything that grows isn't good for anything."

"My Indian corn, though," began Halicarnassus; but I snapped him up before he was fairly under way. I had no idea of travelling in that direction.

"What am I to do with all those baskets that I bought, I should like to know?" I asked sharply.

"What did you buy them for?" he asked in return.

"To send cherries to the Hudsons and the Mavericks and Fred. Ashley," I replied promptly.

"Why don't you send 'em, then? There's plenty of them,—more than we shall want."

"Because," I answered, "I have not exhausted the pleasures of friendship. Nor do I perceive the benefit that we all accrue from turning life-long friends into life-long enemies."

"I'll tell you what we can do," said Halicarnassus. "We can give a party and treat them to cherries. They'll have to eat 'em out of politeness."

"Halicarnassus," said I, "we should be mobbed. We should fall victims to the fury of a disappointed and enraged populace."

"At any rate," said he, "we can offer them to choose victims."

I suppose from some I have a good one. At any rate, the only one that held out any prospect of relief. Thereafter whenever friends called singly or in squads,—if the squads were not large enough to be formidable,—we invariably set cherries before them, and with generous hospitality pressed them to partake. The varying phases of emotion which they exhibited were painful to me at first, but I at length began to take a morbid pleasure in noting them. It was a study for a sculptor. By long practice I learned to detect the shadow of each coming change, where a casual observer would see only a serene expanse of placid politeness. I knew just where the radiance, awakened by the luscious swelling crimson globes, faded into doubt, settled into certainty, glazed into perplexity, fired into rage. I saw the grimace, suppressed as soon as begun, but not less patent to my preternaturally keen eyes. No one deterred me by being suddenly seized with admiration of a view. I knew it was only to relieve his nerves by making faces behind the window-curtains.

I grew to take a fiendish delight in watching the conflict, and the fierce desperation which marked its violence. On the one side were the force of fusion, a reluctant stomach, an unwilling œsophagus, a loathing palate; on the other, the stern, unconquerable will. A natural philosopher would have gathered new proofs of the unlimited capacity of the human race to adapt itself to circumstances, from the debris that strewed our premises after each fresh departure. Cherries were chucked under the sofa, into the table-drawers, behind the books, under the lamp-mats, into the vases, in any and every place where a dexterous hand could dispose of them without detection. Yet their number seemed to suffer no abatement. Like Tityus's liver, they were constantly renewed, though constantly consumed. The small boys seemed to be suffering from a fit of conscience. In vain we closed the blinds and shut ourselves up in the house to give them a fair field. Not a cherry was taken. In vain we went ostentatiously to church all day on Sunday. Not a twig was touched. Finally I dropped all the curtains on that side of the house, and avoided that part of the garden in my walks. The cherries may be hanging there to this day, for aught I know.

THE CHILDREN'S CITIES.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "CHARLES AUCHESTER."

There was a certain king who had three sons, and who, loving them all alike, desired to leave them to reign over his kingdom as brothers, and not one above another.

His kingdom consisted of three beautiful cities, divided by valleys covered with flowers and full of grass; but the cities lay so near each other that from the walls of each you could see the walls of the other two. The first city was called the city of Lessenland, the second the city of Confection, and the third the city of Pastime.

The king, feeling himself very old and feeble, sent for the lawyers to write his will for him, that his children might know how he wished them to behave after he was dead. So the lawyers came to the palace and went into the king's bed-room, where he lay in his golden bed, and the will was drawn up as he desired.

One day, not long after the will was made, the king's fool was trying to make a boat of a loaf to sail it upon the silver river. And the fool thought the paper on which the will was written would make a better boat,—for he could not read what was written; so he ran to the palace quickly, and knowing where it was laid, he got the will and made a boat of it and set it sailing upon the river, and away it floated out of sight. And the worst of all was, that the king took such a fright, when the will blew away, that he could speak no more when the lawyers came back with the golden ink. And he never made another will, but died without telling his sons what he wished them to do.

However, the king's sons, though they had little bodies, because they were princes of the Kingdom of Children, were very good little persons,—at least, they had not yet been naughty, and had never quarrelled,—so that the child-people loved them almost as well as they loved each other. The child-people were quite pleased that the princes should rule over them; but they did not know how to arrange, because there was no king's will, and by rights the eldest ought to have the whole kingdom. But the eldest, whose name was Gentil, called his brothers to him and said,—

"I am quite sure, though there is no will, that our royal papa built the three cities that we might each have one to reign over, and not one reign over all. Therefore I will have you both, dear brothers, choose a city to govern over, and I will govern over the one you do not choose."

And his brothers danced for joy; and the people too were pleased, for they loved all the three princes. But there were not enough people in the kingdom to fill more than one city quite full. Was not this very odd? Gentil thought so, but, as he could not make out the reason, he said to the child-people,—

"I will count you, and divide you into three parts, and each part shall go to one city."

For, before the king had built the cities, the child-people had lived in the green valleys, and slept on beds of flowers.

So Joujou, the second prince, chose the city of Pastime; and Bonbon, the youngest prince, chose the city of Confection; and the city of Lessenland was left for Prince Gentil, who took possession of it directly.

And first let us see how the good Gentil got on in his city.

The city of Lessenland was built of books, all books, and only books. The walls were books, set close like bricks, and the bridges over the rivers (which were very blue) were built of books in arches, and there were books to pave the roads and paths, and the doors of the houses were books with golden letters on the outside. The palace of Prince Gentil was built of the largest books, all bound in scarlet and green and purple and blue and yellow. And inside the palace all the loveliest pictures were hung upon the walls, and the handsomest maps; and in his library were all the lesson-books and all the story-books in the world. Directly Gentil began to reign, he said to himself,—

"What are all these books for? They must mean that we are to learn, and to become very clever, in order to be good. I wish to be very clever, and to make my people so; so I must set them a good example."

And he called all his child-people together, who would do anything for the love of him, and he said,—

"If we mean to be of any use in the world, we must learn, learn, learn, and read, read, read, and always be doing lessons."

And they said they would, to please him; and they all gathered together in the palace council-chamber and Gentil set them tasks, the same as he set himself, and they all went home to learn them, while he learned his in the palace.

Now let us see how Joujou is getting on. He was a good prince, Joujou,—oh, so fond of fun! as you may believe, from his choosing the city of Pastime. Oh, that city of Pastime! how unlike the city of dear, dull Lessenland! The walls of the city of Pastime were beautiful toy-bricks, painted all the colors of the rainbow; and the streets of the city were filled with carriages just big enough for child-people to drive in, and little gigs, and music-carts, and peat-chaises, that ran along by clock-work, and such rocking horses! And there was not to be found a book in the whole city, but the houses were crammed with toys from top to bottom,—tops, hoops, balls, battle-doors, bows, and arrows, guns, peep shows, drums and trumpets, marbles, ninepins, tumblers, kites, and hundreds upon hundreds more, for there you found every toy that ever was made in the world, besides thousands of large wax dolls, all in different court-dresses. And directly Joujou began to reign, he said to himself,—

"What are all these toys for? They must mean that we are to play always, that we may be always happy. I wish to be very happy, and that my people should be happy, always. Won't I set them an example!"

And Joujou blew a peony trumpet, and got on the back of the largest rocking-horse and rocked with all his might, and cried,—

"Child-people you are to play always, for in all the city of Pastime you see nothing else but toys!"

The child-people did not wait long, but jumped on rocking horses, some drove off in carriages, and some in gigs and music-carts. And organs were played, and bells rang, and shuttlecocks and kites flew up the blue sky, and there was laughter, laughter, in all the streets of Pastime.

And now for little Bonbon, how is he getting on? He was a dear little fat fellow,—but, oh, so fond of sweets! as you may believe from his choosing the city of Confection. And there were no books in Confection, and no toys; but the walls were built of gingerbread, and the houses were built of gingerbread, and the bridges of barley-sugar, that glittered in the sun. And rivers ran with wine through the streets, sweet wine, such as child-people love; and Christmas trees grew all along the banks of the rivers, with candy and almonds and golden nuts on the branches; and in every house the tables were made of sweet brown chocolate, and there were great plum-cakes on the tables, and little cakes, and all sorts of cakes. And when Bonbon began to reign he did not think much about it, but began to eat directly, and called out, with his mouth full,—

"Child-people, eat always! for in all the city of Confection there is nothing but cakes and sweets."

And did not the child-people fall to, and eat directly, and eat on, and eat always?

Now by this time what has happened to Gentil? for we left him in the city of Lessenland. All the first day he learned the lessons he had set himself, and the people learned theirs too, and they all came to Gentil in the evening to say them to the prince. But by the time Gentil had heard all the lessons, he was very, very tired,—so tired that he tumbled asleep on the throne; and when the child-people saw their prince was asleep, they thought they might as well go to sleep too. And when Gentil awoke, the next morning, behold! there were all his people asleep on the floor. And he looked at his watch and found it was very late, and he woke up the people, crying, with a very loud voice,—

"It is very late, good people!"

And the people jumped up and rubbed their eyes, and cried,—

"We have been learning always, and we can no longer see to read,—the letters dance before our eyes."

And all the child-people groaned, and cried very bitterly behind their books. Then Gentil said,—

I will read to you, my people, and that will rest your eyes."

And he read them a delightful story about animals: but when he stopped to show them a picture of a lion, the people were all asleep. Then Gentil grew angry, and cried in a loud voice,—

"Wake up, idle people, and listen!"

But when the people woke up, they were stupid, and sat like cats and sulked. So Gentil put the book away, and sent them home, giving them each a long task for their rudeness. The child-people went away; but, as they found only books out of doors, and only books at home, they went to sleep without learning their tasks. And all the fifth day they slept. But on the sixth day Gentil went out to see what they were doing; and they began to throw their books about, and a book knocked Prince Gentil on the head, and hurt him so much that he was obliged to go to bed. And while he was in bed, the people began to fight, and to throw the books at one another.

Now as for Joujou and his people, they began to play, and went on playing, and did nothing else but play. And would you believe it?—they got tired too. The first day and the second day nobody thought he ever could be tired, amongst the rocking-horses and whips and marbles and kites and dolls and carriages. But the third day everybody wanted to ride at once, and the carriages were so full that they broke down, and the rocking-horses rocked over, and wounded some little men; and the little women snatched their dolls from one another, and the dolls were broken. And on the fourth day the Prince Joujou cut a hole in the very largest drum, and made the drummer angry; and the drummer threw a dramstick at Joujou, and Prince Joujou told the drummer he should go to prison. Then the drummer got on the top of the painted wall, and shot arrows at the Prince, which did not hurt him much, because they were toy-arrows, but which made Joujou very much afraid, for he did not wish his people to hate him.

"What do you want?" he cried to the drummer. "Tell me what I can do to please you. Shall we play at marbles, or balls, or knock down the golden nine pins? Or shall we have Punch and Judy in the court of the palace?"

"Yes! yes!" cried the people, and the drummer jumped down from the wall. "Yes! yes! Punch and Judy! We are tired of marbles, and balls, and nine-pins. But we shan't be tired of Punch and Judy!"

So the people gathered together in the court of the palace, and saw Punch and Judy over and over again, all day long on the fifth day. And they had it so often, that, when the sixth day came, they pulled down the stage, and broke Punch to pieces, and burned Judy, and screamed out that they were so hungry they did not know what to do. And the drummer called out,—

"Let us eat Prince Joujou!"

But the people loved him still; so they answered,—

"No! but we will go out of the city and invade the city of Confection, and fight them, if they won't give us anything to eat!"

So out they went, with Joujou at their head; for Joujou, too, was dreadfully hungry. And they crossed the green valley to the city of Confection, and began to try and eat the gingerbread walls. But the gingerbread was hard, because the walls had been built in ancient days; and the people tried to get on the top of the walls, and when they had eaten a few holes in the gingerbread, they climbed up by them to the top. And there they saw a dreadful sight. All the people had eaten so much that they were ill, or else so fat that they could not move. And the people were lying about in the streets, and by the side of the rivers of sweet wine, but oh, so sick, that they could eat no more! And Prince Bonbon, who had got into the largest Christmas-tree, had eaten all the candy upon it, and grows so fat that he could not move, but stuck up there among the branches. When the people of Pastime got upon the walls, however, the people of Confection were very angry; and one or two of those who could eat the most, and who still kept on eating while they were sick, threw apples and cakes at the people of Pastime, and shot Joujou with sugar-plums, which he picked up and ate, while his people were eating down the plum-cakes, and drinking the wine till they were tipsy.

As soon as Gentil heard what a dreadful mess his people were making, he got up, though he still felt poorly, and went out into the streets. The people were fighting, alas! worse than ever; and they were trying to pull down the strong book-walls, that they might get out of the city. A good many of them were wounded in the head, as well as Prince Gentil, by the heavy books falling upon them; and Gentil was very sorry for the people.

"If you want to go out, good people," he said, "I will open the gates and go with you; but do not pull down the book walls."

And they obeyed Gentil, because they loved him, and Gentil led them out of the city. When they had crossed the first green valley, they found the city of Pastime empty, not a creature in it! and broken toys in the streets. At sight of the toys, the poor book-people cried for joy, and wanted to stop and play. So Gentil left them in the city, and went on alone across the next green valley. But the city of Confection was crammed so full with sick child-people belonging to Bonbon, and with Joujou's hungry ones, that Gentil could not get in at the gate. So he wandered about in the green valleys, very unhappy, until he came to his old father's palace. There he found the fool, sitting on the banks of the river.

"O fool!" said Gentil, "I wish I knew what my father meant us to do!"

And the fool tried to comfort Gentil; and they walked together by the river where the fool had made the boat of the will, without knowing what it was. They walked a long way, Gentil crying, and the fool trying to comfort him, when suddenly the fool saw the boat he had made, lying among some green rushes. And the fool ran to fetch it, and brought it to show Gentil. And Gentil saw some writing on the boat, and knew it was his father's writing. Then Gentil was glad indeed, he unfolded the paper, and therein he read these words,—for a good king's words are not washed away by water:—

"My will and pleasure is, that my dearly beloved sons, Prince Gentil, Prince Joujou, and Prince Bonbon, should all reign together over the three cities which I have built. But there are only enough child-people to fill one city; for I know that the child-people cannot live always in one city. Therefore, let the three princes, with Gentil, the eldest, wearing the crown, lead all the child-people to the city of Lessenland in the morning, that the bright sun may shine upon their lessons and make them pleasant; and cause to set the tasks. And in the afternoon let the three princes, with Joujou wearing the crown, lead all the child-people to the city of Pastime, to play until the evening; and Joujou to lead the games. And in the evening let the three princes, with Bonbon wearing the crown, lead all the child-people to the city of Confection, pluck fruit off the Christmas trees until time for bed, and little Bonbon to eat the cake. And at time for bed, let the child-people go forth into the green valleys and sleep upon the beds of flowers: for in Child Country it is always spring."

This was the king's will, found at last; and Gentil, whose great long lessons had made him wise, (though they had tired him too,) thought the will the cleverest that was ever made. And he hastened to the city of Confection, and knocked at the gate till they opened it; and he found all the people sick by this time, and very pleased to see him, for they thought him very wise. And Gentil read the will in a loud voice, and the people clapped their hands and began to get better directly, and Bonbon called to them to lift him down out of the tree where he had stuck, and Joujou danced for joy.

So the king's will was obeyed. And in the morning the people learned their lessons, and afterwards they played, and afterwards they enjoyed their feasts. And at bedtime they slept upon the beds of flowers, in the green valleys; for in Child Country it is always spring.

Atlantic Monthly

A new application of the photographic art has been introduced by Mr. Black, of this city, which must meet with the approbation of all lovers of the beautiful. It is a photograph on porcelain. The effect of the picture upon this purest of white surfaces is beautiful, there being a delicacy of finish which is peculiarly exquisite. The transparency of the porcelain gives a tone and character to the picture which all who are familiar with the porcelain shades will appreciate, although the photographic picture is as much superior to anything hitherto seen upon that material as sun-painting is to the work of the hand.

RASPBERR VINEGAR.

To one pound of fruit, pour on one quart of the best white wine vinegar; the next day strain the liquor on a pound of fresh fruit, and the day after the same; do not squeeze the fruit, but drain the liquor from it; the last time, pass it through a canvas, wet with vinegar; put it in a stone jar, with one pound of white sugar to every pint of juice, stirred until dissolved; then set the jar in a pot of water on a hot fire; simmer, and skim it, then take it off, and when cold, bottle it for use. No glazed or metal vessel must be used. It makes a delightful drink, in the summer season, used as a lemonade.

THE "FOURTH" IN A HOSPITAL

"The heat is very oppressive, and our hospital is full of wounded soldiers, who came on the afternoon of the 4th. Fortunately, most of them are not dangerously wounded, and they are in good spirits, though a furlough of a week to visit their friends at home, is ardently desired by all. Poor fellows! the condition they were in on their arrival is indescribable. The clothing of many was covered with mud and blood, and the wan countenances of these poor sufferers would have touched a heart of stone. A few hours, however, made a great change in their situation and feelings. The comfort of clean linen and the luxury of a good bed, with well prepared and nourishing food, put a new face on every thing. We had been very kindly invited to spend part of the day with a Sunday school, and Mrs. ——, one of the attentive friends of the sick in the hospitals of the District, sent her carriage for some of the nurses. The day was delightful; the contrast between our wards and the green woods, most refreshing, and the addresses of Hon. Mr. Wright, Rev. Brown, and others, eloquent and patriotic; but when we returned at about 5 o'clock to the hospital, the wounded were arriving in large numbers! Our recreation was now over, and until late at night all were busily engaged in making the poor sufferers comfortable. Such was our Fourth of July, a day of contrasts, of peace and war, with their different fruits. It is now a year since we left Pittsburgh, but it has passed away so strangely and rapidly that it seems almost a dream."

Philadelphia Markets.

APPLES.—Green, 4.00@4.50; dried, 5@6¼.
ASHES.—Pots, ——@——; Pearls, ——@——; Soda-Ash, 2¾@3¼.
BARK.—Quercitron, first quality, 33.50@34.00; second quality, 30.00@31.00; third quality, 25.00@26.00; Spanish Oak, cord, 11.00@12.00; Chestnut Oak, 9@10.
BEER.—Mess, barrel, 12.00@15.00; Prime, 6@7; dried beef, 9@10.
BEESWAX.—Yellow, 32—@33.
BREAD.—Crackers, 4½@6.
BUTTER.—Firkin, 12@16; in kegs, 9@12; Roll, 16@16; Goshen, 14@15.
CANDLES.—Sperm, 28@29; Adamantine, 16@17½; Tallow mould, 11@12; dipped, 10@10½.
CHEESE.—Ohio, 5¼ New York, 7½@8¼.
COFFEE.—Cuba, 20@22; Java, 25@27; Laguayra, 20@21; Maracaibo, 20@23; Mocha, 25@28; Rio, 16@22; St. Domingo, 19@20.
CRANBERRIES.——@——.
DRIED BEEF.—9@10.
FEATHERS.—American, 40@43.
FISH.—Mackerel, No. 1, 8.00@8.50; No. 2, 6.00@8.00; No. 3, 5.25@6.00; No. 4, 3.50@3.75. Herring, pickled, barrel, 2.00@3.50; box, 12@14.
FLAX.—Jersey, 8@8½.
FLOUR.—Penna., 4.50@4.62; extra, 4.62@5.50; Western, 4.31@4.37. Rye flour, 3.25@3.62. Corn meal, 2.50@2.90.
FRUIT.—Raisins, box, 3.25@3.40; quarter boxes, 85@95. Ginger, per pound, 14@18. Citron, 50@60. Oranges, 3.00@4.00. Lemons, 4.00@5.00. Currants, 10@12. Figs, 18@20. Almonds, soft, 22——; hard, ——@——. Grenadines, bushel, 1.75@2.10.
GRAIN.—Wheat, Penna. red, 1.17@1.25; white, 1.36@1.45; Southern red, 1.30@1.33; Southern white, 1.30@1.37. Rye, Penna., 66@67; Southern, 63@64; Corn, yellow, 52@54; waste, 50@60; Oats, Penna., 40@41; Southern, ——@——. Barley, white, 1.60@1.75.
GUANO.—Nothing doing. Season over.
HOPS.—10@20.
LARD.—Jersey, 8@8½; Western, ——@——.
LUMBER.—White Pine, Sound, 1.12 Yellow Pine, Virg., 1.30@1.45; Hemlock, Lehigh, 9.00@9.50; Albany White Pine, 25@28. Shingles, cedar, M., 2.00@2.25.
MOLASSES.—Cuba, 24@——; Porto Rico, 27@——; New Orleans, 1.10; Sugar House, 25@——.
OILS.—Olive, gallon, 1.11@1.15; Linseed, 85@87; Whale, crude, 50@55; winter, 58@60; fall, 56@60; Sperm, winter, 1.85@1.90; spring and fall, 1.30@1.35; Lard oil, spring, 55@58; winter, 60@62; petroleum, 14@24.
PEACHES.—Dried, 6@7. Pared, 15@20.
PLASTER.—Solo, 3.25@3.37.
POTS.—Mess, ——@——; Prime, ——@——.
Shoulders, smoked, 7½@8½; in salt, 5½@6.
POTATOES.—Bushel, 60@75.
RICE.—6.75@7.12.
SALT.—Liverpool, 25@28; Turk's Island, 30@31.
SEEDS.—Cloverseed, 5.00@5.25; Flaxseed, 2.00@2.10; Timothy, 1.65@1.75; Herd Grass, 80@90; ——@——.
SUGAR.—Havana, white, ——@——; Cuba, 7.25@8.50; New Orleans, 7.50@8.00; Cuba, 6.00@8.00. Lawrence's D. R. loaf, 16½; refined loaf, 16½.
WOOL.—Prime or Saxony, 48@50; American, No. 1, pulled, 40@42; Merino, 42@45.

W. L. PHILLIPS,
DEALER IN
BOOTS AND SHOES, HATS AND CAPS
Next door to the Post Office
MONMOUTH, ILLINOIS

CONFECTIONERY AND FRUIT STORE.
WILLIAM N SHUGARD,
(Successor to Thomas Fry,)
Wholesale Confectioner and Fruiterer,
No. 325 North Third Street, above Wood,
PHILADELPHIA,
Manufacturer of Confectionery, Jujube Paste, Gum Drops, Cordial Drops, Chocolate Drops, Sugar Drops, Liquid Bottles, Jelly Cakes, Cream Chocolate, French Toys, White Sugar Toys, &c., &c.
AND DEALER IN
Oranges, Lemons, Raisins, Currants, Citron, Figs, Dates, Prunes, Almonds, Walnuts, Filberts, Grape Nuts, Almond Nuts, Pine Cracker Syrups, Tamarinds, Liquorice, Rock Candy, &c. &c. &c.
The attention of dealers is requested to an examination of my stock, which will be found equal to any in Philadelphia.
N. B.—Orders by mail or otherwise promptly attended to.

ESTABLISHED IN 1790.
McALLISTER AND BROTHER,
OPTICIANS,
No. 728 Chestnut Street,
PHILADELPHIA,
Nearly Opposite Masonic Hall,
(Lately removed from their old stand, Chestnut St., above Second.)
Spectacles, Mathematical Instruments, Spy Glasses, Philosophical Apparatus, Thermometers, Barometers, and Microscopic Objects, Tape Measures, Patent Pumps, Magic Lanterns, Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Pictures. Re-Silvering a Specialty.
Specifications and Illustrated Catalogue furnished on application, and orders sent free of Charge. 6y1

WILLIAM McCOMB,
Exhaust and Blast, Pittsburgh
BANKING HOUSE OF
WORK, McCOUCH & CO.,
No. 36 South Third Street,
PHILADELPHIA.
Dealers in UNIVERSITY BANK NOTES and CHECKS. SECURITIES and WESTERN FUNDS bought on the most favorable terms.
BILLS of EXCHANGE on New York, Boston, Pittsburg, Baltimore, Richmond, Cincinnati, St. Louis, &c., &c., constantly for sale.
CREDITS opened and LOANS made on all accessible points in the United States and Canadas.
DEPOSITS RECEIVED, payable on demand, and interest allowed as per agreement.
DRAFTS and NOTES bought and sold on commission, and PROMPT RETURNS made.
Refer to PHILADELPHIA and COMMERCIAL BANK, Philadelphia; KANE, DALLAS & CO., WINSLOW, LANIER & CO., New York, and CITIZENS' and EXCHANGE BANKS, Pittsburg.

GROCERIES
FOR FAMILY USE.
HENRY FLOYD, GROCER,
DEALER IN COFFEES, TEAS, SPICES, &c.,
No. 607 SOUTH TWELFTH STREET, BELOW VINE,
PHILADELPHIA.

NINTH STREET WALL PAPER
AND
WINDOW SHADE WAREHOUSE,
No. 210 North Ninth St., abv. Race.
CHARLES H. GRIGG would respectfully invite the attention of purchasers to his new and beautiful stock of
WALL PAPERS AND WINDOW SHADES,
of the latest style, which for quality, variety, and cheapness, cannot be surpassed.
All ordinary paper hung for 12½ cents per piece, by competent workmen, and perfect satisfaction guaranteed.
Store and other large shades of every description painted to order in a superior style.—Pictures, Transfer and shade trimming in great variety.
☞ A Call is Respectfully Solicited.

CATECHISMS PUBLISHED BY THE U. P. BOARD OF PUBLICATION.
Kept constantly for sale by Wm S. Rentoul, bookseller, 28 North Sixth Street, Philadelphia, at the following low rates for cash
Brown's Catechism for young children; 75 cents per 100. (If mailed 25 cents more.)
Brown's two Catechisms mutually connected; (consisting of the Young Child's, and the brief exposition of the Shorter Catechism, pp. 96,) per dozen, 75 cents. (If mailed, 19 cents more.)
The Assembly's Shorter Catechism; per 100, eighty cents. (If mailed, 45 cents more.)
Ditto, with short and easy Questions for children, large type; per 100, $1.25. (If mailed, 45 cents more.)
Ditto, with proofs to words at length; per 100, $2.50. (If mailed, 87 cents more.) per dozen, 35 cents. (If mailed, 11 cents more.)
The New Pearl Catechism, being The Assembly's Shorter Catechism, with Scripture Proofs, Explanatory Notes and Analysis, pp. ——; 25 cents per dozen. (If mailed, 18 cents more; single copy by mail, post paid, 8 cents. (The Catechism the editors of the Presbyterian Banner say:—"We are very highly pleased with this publication of our Board. We are satisfied, that it is the best publication of the kind which has appeared. It should be by dearer into every Sabbath School.") Patterson on the Shorter Catechism, per dozen, $1.50. (If mailed, 50 cents more.) Single copy, 13 cents. (If mailed,

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Published by the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, for the Dissemination of Religion, Morality, Literature and Science.

Rev. Elisha Weaver, Editor. PHILADELPHIA, AUGUST 2, 1862. Vol. II.—No. 31.—New Series.—Whole No. 82.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

Is published every Saturday on behalf of the

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,

BY

REV. ELISHA WEAVER,

General Book Steward,

No 619 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

Notice.—All letters and matters pertaining to the Book Concern, subscribers, use of papers, and all matters belonging to the Concern, or the paper, must be directed to Rev. Elisha Weaver, Box No. 620, Philadelphia; and all matters sent by express, and in our city, must be directed to E. Weaver, No. 619 Pine St.

All letters or matter for the Christian Recorder, must be directed to E. Weaver, Box No 620, Philadelphia

TERMS

Two Dollars a year, payable in advance. Single copies, five cents

ADVERTISEMENTS.

We solicit Advertisements of all descriptions, suitable for a religious newspaper, which will be published as follows:

Cards or Advertisements, inserted for one year, provided they do not exceed eight lines ten dollars, paper included; or eight dollars without the paper.—six months, for six dollars, paper included.—three months, four dollars,—one month, $1.50, paper in each case included.

CORRESPONDING EDITORS OF CHRISTIAN RECORDER

Rev. J. P. CAMPBELL, Rev. A. W. WAYMAN,
" J. M. WILLIAMS, " R. T. WILLIAMS,
" G. H. GRAHAM, " C. BURCH,
Rev. L. ROSS

Poetry.

GOING HOME

"Will you come with me, my pretty one!"
I asked a little child,—
"Will you come with me and gather flowers!"
She looked on me and smiled.
Then in a low, sweet, gentle voice,
She said, "I cannot come,
I must not leave this narrow path,
For I am going home."

"But will you not," I asked again;
"The sun is shining bright,
And you might twine a lily-wreath
To carry home at night;
And I could show you pleasant things
If you would only come,"
But still she answered as before,
"No; I am going home."

"But look, my child: the fields are green,
And 'neath the leafy trees,
Children are playing merrily,
Or resting at their ease.
Does it not hurt your tender feet
This stony path to tread!"
"Sometimes; but I am going home!"
Once more she sweetly said.

"My father bids me keep this path,
Nor ever turn aside,
The road which leads away from him,
Is very smooth and wide;
The fields are fresh, and cool, and green;
Pleasant the shady trees;
But those around my own dear home
Are lovelier far than these.

"I must not loiter on the road,
For I have far to go;
And I should like to reach the door
Before the sun is low.
I must not stay; but will you not,
Oh, will you not come too!
My home is very beautiful,
And there is room for you."

I took her little hand in mine;
Together we went on;
Brighter and brighter o'er our path
The blessed sunbeams shone.
At length we saw the distant towers,
But ere we reached the gate,
The child outstripped my lingering feet,
Too overjoyed to wait.
And, as she turned her radiant face
Once more to bid me come,
I heard a chorus of glad songs,
A burst of "Welcome Home!"

Friends' Review.

THE THREE WEEPERS.

Sorrow weeps!
And drowns its bitterness in tears!
My child of sorrow,
Weep out the fulness of thy passionate grief,
And drown in tears
The bitterness of lonely years.
God gives the rain and sunshine mild,
And both are best, my child!

Joy weeps!
And overflows its banks with tears;
My child of joy,
Weep out the gladness of thy pent-up heart,
And let thy glistening eyes
Run over in their ecstacies;
Life needeth joy; but from on high
Descends what cannot die!

Love weeps!
And feeds its silent life with tears;
My child of love,
Pour out the riches of thy yearning heart,
And, like the air of even,
Give and take back the dew of heaven;
And let that longing heart of thine
Feed upon love divine!

HORATIUS BONAR, D. D.

AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH.

We clipped the following from The Christian Advocate and Journal, one of the best weeklies in this country or any other. We would have inserted it at the time when our exchange came, but for want of room. We know that we would have a more favorable opportunity.—ED.

There are in the African M. E. Church in the United States from thirty to forty thousand members, and three episcopal districts, under Bishops Quinn, Payne, and Nazrey, respectively. Bishop Payne called at our office the other day. He represents the work under his care as flourishing, and says that since the war commenced he has extended his line eight miles south of Washington, where he has established a church under the care of a competent missionary, who is assured of protection from the government. The doctrines of the church are the same as those of our own, though its system of government differs slightly from ours. It combines the offices of presiding elder and bishop in the same person. Moreover, each bishop is assigned an episcopal district, for which he is responsible for four years, and within which he not only presides in the Annual Conferences, but visits the circuits and stations, and supervises the entire work. The bishops are supported by public collections, and thus are bound to the people by cords of silver. In the Quarterly Conferences the pastor presides if he be ordained, otherwise a neighboring elder, under whose charge he is placed. The bishop, by traversing his field, is enabled, from his own observation, both of the churches and their pastors, to make his appointments without a cabinet, though he consults the more influential persons of the connexion in making up his list. The Canadian portion of this church found it necessary a few years since, from political causes, to form a separate connexion, although they are too weak to support a bishop, having in all only about two thousand members. They requested the services of Bishop Nazrey, which they enjoy at present with the consent of the General Conference, though this circumstance puts the bishop in an anomalous position, as he has episcopal jurisdiction in two distinct ecclesiastical organizations. This has unhappily occasioned some unpleasant controversy between himself and one of his colleagues, which, we are glad to learn, has terminated in an amicable agreement to refer the question to the ensuing General Conference. The New York Conference of this church was held last week in this city, Bishop Payne presiding. One of its societies has just purchased, for $24,000, the Sullivan Street Church, formerly occupied by the congregation of the Washington Square M. E. Church.

Rev. E. Weaver, the Editor of The Christian Recorder, and Mr. Brown, Editor of the Repository, called at our office with the Bishop. They are men of polite manners, and much intelligence. The Recorder is one of the best of our exchanges. Its editorial columns evince tact and ability, and its selections are made with remarkable judgment and good taste. We do not get much time to read monthlies; but we feel confident that the Repository, which is a literary monthly, is worthy of commendation. We look with much interest upon the African M. E. Church. As the war progresses its field must enlarge. We are assured that it will follow the army in its march.

If we had any influence with this body, we would say: Extend the circulation of the Recorder and the Repository; encourage the colored people everywhere to meet and express their loyalty to the government, their sympathy with the administration in its struggle with rebellion, and their readiness to serve it at any time and in any mode that it may indicate; encourage emigration to Liberia and the West Indies, as fields in which the Americanized Africans can best develop and employ their powers, carry civilization and Christianity to their brethren, and enlarge the borders of the African M. E. Church, which ought soon to be sending its missionaries, and planting its missions not only in Hayti, but in the valleys of the Nile, the Niger, the Senegal, and the Gambia.

For the Christian Recorder.

LETTER FROM BROTHER STROTHER.

MR. EDITOR:—I thought it might be somewhat entertaining to your readers to hear from Terre Haute. The spiritual condition of this charge is not what we would love to be able to inform you it was, yet our people seem to be in very good spirits, notwithstanding the pressure of the times, and I think our people are in a state of real progression. We have been able to keep up a day school all the year, which has just closed for the summer vacation. Mrs. Strother has taught ten months without cessation; during which time she has had from 35 to 50 scholars. During her ten months teaching she had two exhibitions, and at the end of her school term she had quite an interesting examination, in which several premiums were awarded for good performances on the part of those who received them. Some of these premiums were worn by scholars who had learned to read in the last ten months.

Brother W. J. Greenly has organized an excellent Singing School here, consisting of two classes: adult and juvenile. These two classes contain about 75 persons, and he is now requested to form a third class. We have also a good Sunday School on hand, which numbers about 75, for the use of which we have just received some 40 odd Bibles and Testaments of the best quality. We have only a short time since formed a beautiful chapel, (relief society,) which consists of about 30 members. You may also wish to know our number here as citizens. I had heard it said that it was five hundred, but the number falls much below that, as the result of my investigation will show. The number of families I find to be 60; the number over twenty-one, 147; under twenty-one, 126; the number able to read, 132; the number belonging to the A. M. E. Church, 70; the number belonging to the Baptist Church, 4; to the Catholic Church, 1; the whole number of persons of color belonging to religious societies, 75; the whole number residing in Terre Haute, 275; the number owning real estate, 18.

In speaking of local matters, I may mention a dispensation of God's providence, of recent occurrence in our midst, which has proved to be very scourging. It is the drowning of little Charles Hicklin, of some six years of age, which happened last Monday. He, with other boys, was sporting along the edge of the Wabash, opposite town, when little Charles' hat blew off his head into the river. The boy, as it seems, unhesitatingly stepped right into the river after it. The other boys who were present were unable to render sufficient assistance to rescue their playmate, hence Charles soon went down to rise no more until he was raised, some three days after, a lifeless body, of course. But the means used by which to find Charles' body were so simple and singular, that I must give you, Mr. Editor, and your numerous readers, a statement of them. After they had searched diligently from Monday until the following Wednesday, without success, a lady residing in the city (white) sent little Charles' friends word to get a loaf of bread, take out a plug, and put in an ounce of quicksilver, and plug it up again, and then drop the loaf on the surface of the water at the spot where the boy went in, then to follow it until it sank, and wherever it would sink there they would find the body. They took this lady at her word, and followed her directions, almost entirely faithlessly; and when they had followed the loaf (which they did by the use of a canoe) about four hundred yards, it sank, when George Salter, who was in the canoe, fell with his oar where the loaf sank, and the body of the boy came immediately to the surface

The writer was called upon a few minutes before he commenced this article to attend to the funeral. This occurrence was certainly very singular.

In speaking of our progress, I forget to mention our Literary Society. The young men of this place, with the assistance of W. J. Greenly, got up an excellent constitution, and have formed quite an intelligent debating club. One among the first questions they debated, was: "Has the use of ardent spirits caused more misery and distress than lying and stealing?" which was discussed with considerable interest, and quite ably.

I would also mention that our venerable Bishop Quinn reached this station on last Saturday, the 12th inst., (July,) on a tour West. He stopped with us until the following Wednesday morning, which was very acceptable to us, indeed, especially, as it was right at the time of my last Quarterly Meeting, which we had commenced at 10½ o'clock, A. M., on that day. The Bishop preached for us at 10½ o'clock, A. M., on Sunday, from the 84th Psalm, 10th and 11th verses. The people were wonderfully pleased, and thought that the Bishop made an excellent discourse. He left no grounds for dissemblers or indolent professors. He pruned on every hand. At 3 o'clock, P. M., he took the 26th and 27th verses of the 26th chapter of Matthew; with which discourse our people were also extremely well pleased. He told the audience that the phrase, "drink ye all of it," did not mean that one should drink all the wine, but that the Saviour meant that all of his disciples should drink of the wine, which language was also applicable to all his followers. He attended our Chapel Relief Society on Tuesday evening, the 15th, and responded to Miss Mildred Newman, who had been appointed to address the society on that evening, and who did deliver a splendid address. The Bishop followed her in what is said to be an able fatherly address. On the next morning, he left on the 10½ o'clock train for St. Louis, Kansas. B STROTHER

Terre Haute, Ind

For the Christian Recorder.

FROM CINCINNATI

July 23d, 1862.

MR. EDITOR—Dear Sir: The Democratic leaven has been at work here most gloriously. The Celts, that most turbulent race, as usual, have been the exponents of modern Democracy as expounded by Brooks, Wickliffe, and others—and which should more properly be termed Chivocracy. Their first exercises consisted in pouncing on our men while at their work, and, meeting with but slight resistance to their first essay, they became more bold and daring, until at length no colored man could pass along the streets without being assaulted by from five to fifty most loyal citizens, armed with clubs and boulders, and shouting as they came, "Kill the dom nogur!" When complaint was made to the city authorities, we were told that they had more important business on hand.

When some of our young men armed themselves, they were arrested, imprisoned, and, in one instance, fined. These acts by the municipal authorities encouraged the "Dimékrats." They accordingly threatened to burn every nagur's house in the city. On Tuesday night, the 15th inst., they stoned several houses, breaking the windows and doors. Coming across Allen Chapel in their course, they broke the doors, smashed the windows, and, on the following night, actually set fire to and destroyed several houses in the neighborhood. Fortunately a rain-storm came on before the fire had spread any distance, and, by extinguishing the flames, probably saved the flow of blood, as provisions were made to teach the Irish rebels a lesson that many would have died in learning!

Is it not a fact worthy the attention of men in high places that the colored people are particularly hated by the rebels? The present great rebellion was inaugurated in the South by a raid on the free blacks. In many States it was proposed, and in some enacted, to expel or enslave the free blacks.

And now, when neutral (?) men of KENTUCKY invite the invasion of their State by the amiable cut-throat MORGAN, the red-mouthed VALLANDIGHAM-"Dimékrats," commence mob-violence throughout Ohio on the inoffensive free blacks, without cause or provocation. We call on Americans (not Greeks) to mark this—the men whose fathers fought in State Street, Boston, at Bunker Hill, on Lake Erie and at New Orleans—men of whose fighting qualities NAPIER, JACKSON and WASHINGTON spoke in the highest terms of praise, that these men, who fought for the liberty of this country, are now abused—abused by secession-sympathisers—now attacked by rebels? Mark the fact that, when the present raid against the UNION first broke out, colored men were among the first to offer their services to the country—and, even for that offer, this same class of Democrats threatened mob-violence—and our patriotic officials politely informed us that this was a white man's war, and that the niggers had nothing to do with it. That may have been their opinion, but every step in the progress of the war to put down the rebellion has developed the fact that there is a very respectable colored individual in the wood-pile, and but little can be done in moving the wood without letting him out. Indeed, slaveholders themselves acknowledge that the only true loyal men in the South are the blacks—and yet the government hesitates to pull down the pile and let them out.

Slavery is most evidently the bone and sinew of the rebellion. Remove it by proclamation—invest the slaves with their natural rights—take them in the army—employ them as other men, and soon the cotton lords of the lash will be compelled to yield to coercion—the only thing they will ever submit to. More anon. ALEPH.

For the Christian Recorder

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. EDITOR:—We are moving on here as fast as the current of events can drift us along. Since the adjournment of Congress, the public appear to satiate their intellectual desires by coming over each other's sentiments, and comparing view with view

The removal of General Halleck to this department has given rise to considerable speculation among all classes—some approving of the plan, while others express their disapprobation in violent terms

The melancholy task devolves upon us of recording the death of Mr. John Brown, who died in Alexandria, on Thursday last. He was advised to visit that city as a means of recruiting his health—but how abortive often proves the advice of men. Mr. Brown was a man of immense size. He weighed nearly or quite four hundred pounds. His coffin could barely get in one of the largest hearses in the city. I counted seventeen men around his coffin when conveying him from the hearse to the grave; and I could but exclaim to a friend by my side, "There is the mammoth coffin, and here the giant grave." But, thank God, he died in the faith.

There was a grand charitable demonstration in Wesley Zion Church (which is under the pastoral care of Rev. John D. Brooks) on Sabbath afternoon, the 20th instant, under the auspices of a benevolent society of young men, entitled the "Sons of Levi," for the purpose of raising a collection for the benefit of the sick and afflicted contrabands in this city. The meeting was opened at half-past three o'clock, P. M., and after which the presiding officer, Dyer Shelvey, introduced to the audience the orators selected for the occasion, viz.: Mr. James L. N. Brown, Mr. George Newman, Cato Ward.

The addresses were very suitable and appropriate to the occasion, and showed very clearly the necessity and importance of extending the hand of charity to the poor and distressed people now residing in the city. After the addresses had been delivered, a collection of twenty-seven dollars was raised for the object above stated. I hear that this society is somewhat famous for its liberal gifts and charitable donations. I hope that other societies and associations in this city may imitate the worthy example set forth by this noble-hearted Society, for I know that a generous public will cheerfully respond.

There was a very interesting time at Israel Church on Monday night, the 21st instant. The pastor of said church had put some thirty-five subscription books into the hands of several members and friends of the church to solicit money from every one they could to aid in making certain repairs on the church, and a ten-dollar bill was the premium to the highest collector. The church was packed to overflowing by spectators to see who would get the prize, and to witness the presentation.

Rev J. M. Brown, being on a visit to the city to urge a stronger action in support of the Repository, was called upon to address the house—which he did in a most masterly manner. He very forcibly showed that the day for getting our people into dirty churches and dilapidated places of worship was gone by; and that if we ever expected to hold the rising generation and cluster them around the A. M. E. Church, we must first have respectable churches for the worship of God Secondly, Sabbath schools in which to train the minds of the children, with useful and efficient teachers. Thirdly, an educated and intelligent ministry that could meet the wants of our congregations, with many more useful and weighty remarks. He closed by appealing to our congregations everywhere to build parsonages, and to neatly furnish them.

By this time the several subscription books were brought in, and the moneys counted. Rev. A. W. Wayman then arose, with the fine Bible in his hand to present to the prize-taker. The entire church was spell-bound as to who had triumphed in the race. After a few preliminary remarks, he announced the name of THOMAS CEPHUS, which created loud shouts, hand-clapping, feet-stamping, &c. As soon as the house could be restored to order, Rev. A. W. Wayman proceeded with the presentation. Brother Cephus, after receiving the Bible, spent the balance of the evening in bowing to the audience and smiling. He collected $73!

The money brought into the church that night amounted to several hundred dollars.

I had the pleasure of visiting the Quarterly Conference of Rev. H. J. Rhodes on Wednesday evening last, and things were ordinarily encouraging. H. M. T.

Washington, July 26th, 1862

For the Christian Recorder

FROM PORT DEPOSIT.

July 25th, 1862.

REV. ELISHA WEAVER—Dear Brother: I take great pleasure in writing at this time to inform you how I am getting on here since my appointment. I found the circuit in tolerably good condition. The people seemed to be very glad to receive me, and I was much pleased to meet them.

After meeting the people here on Sabbath, I saw the need of some repairs being made on this house. I broached the subject while their hearts were warm, and they immediately responded to me and commenced the work—and by the time I returned from my tramp around the circuit, on my arrival, I found in front of our little church a good, nice and substantial pair of steps. This shows willingness and activity in the people. This being done, it seemed to have moved some of the good sisters about the church to turn their attention to the interior portion of the building, and truly they did so, and commenced the work in earnest—and, in a very short time, the interior portion of the church was completely renovated, being neatly white-washed and painted, and the aisle, altar and pulpit carpeted very neatly—and, to cap the climax, they purchased a neat little clock, and suspended it in a conspicuous position in the church.

My dear brother, I can truly say, were it not for the untiring zeal of the female portion of our Zion, in a financial point, I know not what would be the result.

The entire cost of the above work was $113 00. The balance due is $15.00. With a few people, Brother Weaver, and they very poor, that was quick and prompt work. But when such sisters as Mrs. Rachel Cornish, Mrs. Hester Gorsuch, Mrs. Eliza Poulson, and Miss Amelia Haynes get to work, what they intend to do must be done.

My Quarterly Meetings are closed. Spiritual affairs are going on very well. Let this suffice—I am not a man for display.

You have sent me your excellent paper, and I received it as a great compliment indeed. Notwithstanding, that does not pay you two dollars, but I expect to be in your city soon, and I will then pay for it; if not, I will send the money—for I love the Church, the Book Concern, and you and your prosperity

Farewell. D N. W.

NEW ENGLAND ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE A. M. E. ZION CHURCH.

CONTINUED.

Whereas, This Society having evinced their interest for the progress of God's cause in rendering us their aid, therefore

Resolved, That we return our sincere thanks for the same, with our prayers for their prosperity, and that the names of the officers be printed in the Minutes.

The Juvenile Missionary Daughters of Clinton presented $6,00 for the Missionary cause, for which the Conference gave their expression in the following resolution:

Resolved, That we return our sincere thanks to the Juvenile Missionary Daughters of Clinton for their liberality in contributing to our necessity at this time of need, and that for their prosperity we shall ever pray, and that the names of the officers be printed in the Minutes.

The Juvenile Missionary Fund of New Haven, by proxy, presented $6,00 for the Missionary cause. The following resolution passed unanimously:

Resolved, That inasmuch as the Missionary Fund of New Haven have evinced their sympathy with us in the Missionary cause, that we express our gratitude to them by a vote of thanks, praying for their prosperity, and insert the names of the officers in the Minutes.

Superintendent Bishop then addressed the Societies, applauding their benevolence, encouraging them in their efforts, thanking them for their sympathies, and wishing them success and prosperity through life, and a blessed inheritance beyond this vale of tears.

The Societies then withdrew with the usual preliminaries, and Conference adjourned.

Wednesday and Thursday afternoon was occupied in reading essays. Publicity having been given, a number of persons were present to hear them. They were as follows:

Geo. A. Spywood and Wm. B. Smith, on "Superannuated Preachers." J. Hicks, on "Advice to Young Preachers." Geo. H. Washington, on "Slavery." James A. Jones, on "Tobacco." Jos. O Smith, on "Chemistry." Gabriel Rice, on "Faith." S. M. Giles, on "Ministerial Biography." Abraham Roberson, on "Temperance." There were several others, but they were not prepared. Had I been a spectator, I might have given my opinion upon these essays as to their merit, but circumstances deny me that privilege Superintendent Bishop passed his opinion upon them; and though there was no prize given, the one on "Slavery" was pronounced as the best. I would have sent his decision on each one, but as I did not take notes of the exercises, I would not like to give the result of memory lest I should make a mistake.

Thursday evening, a Missionary meeting was held. In consequence of the inclemency of the weather, the audience was small; hence the exercises did not commence as soon as was intended, which shortened it and made it less interesting than it would have been. Rev. G. A. Spywood, President of the Mission Board, presided. The meeting was opened with singing, and prayer by the venerable Rev. Christopher Rush. The President then made a few remarks on the importance of the Mission cause, the interest which should be manifested in its behalf, the success of our effort since the organization of this Board, its great demand for laborers, and means to send them; concluding, he introduced the reading of the fifth annual Report

The Secretary, S. M. Giles, read the Report purporting as follows:

That the cause of religion is so appreciated by Christians, it becomes a source of gratification to them to hear of its progress, and such were the demands for laborers, that our limited advantages would be no apology for not doing what we could to save our fellow-creatures from ruin; that the Report of last year not being published, owing to some unavoidable hinderance, was much regretted, nevertheless, so far as the finance is concerned, it would be copied and published this year. It had been a matter of deep regret that no efforts were in progress in behalf of our mission in other Conference districts, but that this seeming indifference has been remedied by several of our sister Conferences, which have organized mission funds.

At the opening of the Conference the receipts were less than they had been, but, from the matter being made known, there was considerable assistance rendered. The receipts of the year ending June 19th, 1861, were $187,87; disbursements, $154,10; leaving a balance in favor of the fund, $33,27. The receipts of the year ending June 24th, 1862, were $228,94; brought forward from last year, $33,27; making a total of $258,21; disbursements, $254,94; leaving a balance in favor of the fund, $3,27. Of the amount disbursed through the last year, $172,00 was appropriated for the Missionaries' support, and $82,94 appropriated to send them to their fields of labor.

The prospects of the Missions were favorable. Through the indefatigable labors of Rev. J. W. Hood, with his associate, William H. Martin, in Nova Scotia, and Rev. J. G. Urling, Demerara, W. I., the cause of God was advancing, and the Missions were progressing. The Home Missions were not opened or commenced until last year, but, from the returns of the Missionaries, the prospect was encouraging. It was deemed essential to open a Mission in the South; though some brethren had been sent already, yet there was room for more. It was urged that some effort should be made as speedily as possible, so as to enable one of the Superintendents to visit the foreign Missions.

The Report being completed, the following resolution was proposed:

Whereas, The Missions of our Connexion are on the advance, and the gospel progressing among those who have long been deprived of its benefits, therefore

Resolved, That we shall pray for their prosperity, and do our endeavors to secure an interest in our congregations on its behalf, especially among our brethren who have been freed from the thraldom of slavery and permitted to enjoy all the advantages of the gospel.

This resolution was followed with some remarks by Rev. Wm. F. Butler and Jas. A. Jones, and finally put to the house and carried Superintendent Bishop then made some remarks in behalf of the Missions, and solicited a collection for their support. Previous to taking up the collection, the following resolution was read:

Whereas, The Missionary cause is the cause of God, and all Christians are in duty bound to aid in sending the gospel to those who sit in the regions of darkness, and without the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, therefore

Resolved, That this congregation be requested to give a liberal contribution to aid in this cause, and for the support of our Home and Foreign Missionaries who may be sent out from this Annual Conference to those who were destitute of the word of God

Rev. J. W. Hood and G. H. Washington were to have made some remarks on this resolution, but declined, owing to the lateness of the hour, therefore it was put to vote and carried.

A collection was then taken up, amounting to $3,16. The exercises were closed with singing a doxology, and benediction by Superintendent Rees. The whole exercises were interspersed with singing by the Choir.

The two days following were occupied in discussing matters pertaining to the Conference, and the propriety of sending delegates to our sister Conferences, reviewing the Report of the Board of Missions, and electing officers of the Board for the ensuing year

The Board of officers were as follows:

G. A. Spywood, President; S. M Giles, Secretary; Wm. F. Butler, Corresponding Secretary; Geo. H. Washington, Treasurer; Jos G. Smith, John Williams, Dempsey Kennedy, Standing Committee; Jos. Hicks, Agent

ELEVENTH SESSION

Conference convened agreeable to adjournment Subsequent to the usual formalities, the house proceeded to business Rev Washington presented a collection of $25 00, from the Hartford Church, for the benefit of the Conference. The following resolution was offered and unanimously carried:

Resolved, That this Conference tender a vote of thanks to the trustees and congregation of this church for their generous contribution in aid of the Conference.

The subject of Camp Meeting was introduced After considerable discussion it was decided that there should be two Camp Meetings,—one to accommodate the eastern, and the other the western portion of the district.

Several hours were spent in discussing points of law of the Discipline, which was very interesting. Subsequently the appointments were read out as follows:

New Bedford, Mass., Joseph Hicks. Boston, Mass., Wm. F. Butler. Worcester, Mass., Jos O. Smith. Springfield, Mass., James A. Jones. Hartford, Conn., J. F. Lloyd. Middletown, Conn., S. M. Giles. New Haven, Conn., John Williams. Bridgeport, Conn., G. A. Spywood. Providence, R. I., G. H. Washington. Cranston, R. I., Wm. Smith; G. H. Washington, overnight. Halifax, N. S., Dempsey Kennedy. Nova Scotia Mission, J. W. Hood and Wm. H. Martin. Home Mission, Abraham Roberson, Wm. H. Mallory. Superannuaries, Gabriel Rice, Nathaniel Stubbs

The last question was asked, and answered by the following resolution:

Resolved, That the next Annual Conference be held in Zion Church, Boston, Mass., on Saturday, June 13th, 1863, at 4 o'clock, P. M.

The Finance Committee and Board of Missions not being prepared to make their appropriation, the session adjourned to Tuesday morning, at 9 o'clock, A. M.

TWELFTH SESSION

Conference assembled at the appointed hour. Superintendents resumed their seats. After the disposition of some sundry matters, the venerable Ex Superintendent C. Rush arose and addressed the Superintendents and Conference. In his remarks he alluded to his invalid situation from the loss of sight, which rendered him of little use to the Connexion, yet, while he lived, he desired to do what he could, whether little or much; that he had been enabled to do so from the kindness and sympathy of the Superintendents and brethren, who were always ready to lend him and have him go with them; while it gratified him, he felt grateful to God for giving him kind friends, and thanked the brethren for their love and sympathy toward him in his helpless condition; that his prayer to God should ever be for their prosperity and His blessing upon their labors, and should it be the last time he ever met with them, he hoped to meet them in heaven.

The remarks of this venerable father made a deep impression upon the Conference, and called forth expression from both Superintendents and Conference,—remarks in which they expressed the gratification it gave them to have him in their midst. They thanked him for the advice and exhortation he had given them, and would try to profit by it; that they desire that he would always attend this Conference while he had strength to come. In confirmation of their desire, the Conference, by a unanimous vote, gave him an invitation to attend the Conference as a delegate whenever, and as long as he was able to do so.

He then arose and took an affectionate leave of the brethren, shaking hands with them one by one, and as he did so, gave words of advice and exhortation to each one. It was a solemn and affecting scene that will not soon, if ever, be forgotten.

The Report of the Finance Committee was as follows:

Superintendents' salary, $70,00; balance due, $37,14. Collected for preachers' allowance, $910,61; balance due, $276,35. Collected for Conference purposes, $98,48; disbursed, $98,48.

Statistics of Membership.—Members, 435; probationers, 77, local preachers, 5; exhorters, 6 Total, 523.

Sabbath School Statistics.—Scholars, 408; teachers, 94; library of books, 1420.

NOTE.—This is not a full account of financial statistics, as several churches did not make returns.

The remainder of the session was occupied in discussing several theological questions, which I did not hear, being officially engaged.

Thus after a session of twelve days, the Conference closed. Although it was interesting, it was very tedious, and was the longest ever held in this district. GAMMA.

AN ECCENTRIC MINISTER.

Amusing stories are told of some men richly gifted with every kind of sense but common sense. But we have never seen any incidents of this sort quite equal to those told of an eminent Scotch minister and professor, Rev. Dr. Lawson. His biographer, Dr. McFarlane, is responsible for the following:

Dr. Lawson's most troublesome infirmity was "absence of mind," which was constantly leading him into comical perplexities. Some of the instances are laughable:

"He had been sent on one occasion by his father to Goldie's mill, about a mile from Hallmyre, with a sack of grain, to be ground into meal for the family, as was then customary. The sack was laid upon a horse, which George was instructed to lead by a halter He proceeded along the road, never doubting that the animal was following him, but all the while poring over the pages of a book, or pursuing some train of thought. The horse, however, had contrived to free himself from the halter, and George arrived at the mill without either horse or sack, to the astonishment of the worthy miller, who predicted that much good could never come of a youth so thoughtless alike of man or beast. The horse was found quietly grazing by the way-side, not far from his father's house."

"One very rainy day, as Dr. Lawson was trudging along a road, a friend, whose door he was passing, saw the plight in which he was, and shoved an umbrella in his hand. As he went along, the rain still falling, a person met him who noticed that the umbrella was buttoned up in his great coat. Thinking that the umbrella had given way, he said: 'Doctor, I am sorry that your umbrella has not served you in this heavy rain.' 'Oh!' replied he, 'I have a good umbrella, but I have concealed it here, lest it get wetted by the shower.'"

"Mrs Lawson and he were once returning from a sacrament in the country. As was the custom then, they rode upon the same horse—she on a pad behind him. At her request he made a detour, that she might call on a friend Having slipped off the horse, Mrs. Lawson went and made her call, he promising to wait upon her return. She was not long gone when the horse quietly walked away, and soon reached Selkirk. 'Here,' called the doctor to the servant, 'come and help your mistress off.' The servant looked surprised, and told him that Mrs. Lawson was not upon the horse. He immediately rode back and took up his wife, who was making the best of her way homeward

"Once the servant rushed into the study, crying out 'that the house was on fire' 'Go tell your mistress,' said he. 'I have no charge of household matters.'"

IT is not the quantity but the quality of knowledge which determines the mind's dignity

CHRIST WOUNDED IN THE HOUSE OF HIS FRIENDS.

"Well, I've done one stroke of business," said Mr. Worldly-wise, as he walked into the counting-room of his friend Smith one cold, sharp morning.

"What now, Deacon?" said Mr. Smith, looking up from his desk

"Oh," replied he, rubbing his hands vigorously as he seated himself comfortably before the fire, "we've made X., Q. & Co. pay five per cent. more than we expected."

"How is that?"

"You know they thought they might pay seventy cents on a dollar. We, as committee of the creditors, of which—ahem—I am chairman,—(the deacon was very apt to be chairman on such committees,) fixed upon eighty cents as what we would be willing to take; but I have just come from there, and by turning the screw once more I have got them to agree to eighty-five per cent. on nine months, with interest. That'll make quite a difference to us, who have quite a large claim upon them."

"Well, Deacon, you're a shrewd man; but this will make a difference to them, too, and I don't think they can afford it."

"Yes, I suppose it will; but then, if a man fails, he fails and expects to begin at the bottom of the ladder"

"And you wouldn't help him to the second round when you could as well as not?"

"I must do the best I can for the creditors I represent."

"But there's X. He is such a good fellow. I wish you could have favored him a little. He has a large family, and in times like these we must be merciful, for there's no knowing who will need it next."

The deacon sat rather uneasily. He could not forget the look of sorrow and disappointment with which X. had met his persistent refusal to take any less, so as to give him a chance to help himself. The pale, haggard, anxious face haunted him. Conscience, too, whispered, he might have been a little more kind in his manner towards the unfortunate man, who, at one stroke, had been deprived of the hard-earned accumulations of a life, for he was now well advanced in years. "All stuff," he said to himself; "sick wife,—good many children,—no rich friend to call upon,—same old story." Then, with an air of much sympathy,—a sympathy which says so comfortably, "don't touch my pocket,"—a sympathy which would not all the birds shivering in midsummer,—he added, "He is a truly good man, and I am really sorry for his misfortune; but 'the race is not always to the swift;' 'whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth.'"

"So am I sorry," said his friend; "and to tell you the truth, I think it would have been just as well to let it go at their offer."

"Couldn't have done it; it would have been a bad precedent; and, besides, the creditors would never have consented."

"Now, look here, friend; I am one of the larger sufferers, you will acknowledge, and I don't make any professions of being governed by religious principle, but I do think it never hurt any body to make a sacrifice for an honest man. Such men are too scarce. Fact is, Deacon, to speak plainly, I never thought you did right with B. Brothers, when they failed"

The deacon looked disturbed. He tilted his chair, felt in his pockets, nervously, for his penknife, but asked, "Didn't I do the best I could?"

"Yes, for the creditors, and better, than you ought. You know B. better than I do, for he is a member of your church, but I know him to be a gentleman and an honest man too,—isn't he?"

"A better Christian don't walk this earth. I've known him in the church for more than a dozen years. He is generous and benevolent to the last degree,—even to his own discomfort."

"And he would have been glad to pay every cent he owed?"

"Yes; I do not doubt he would: and I believe he did pay to the very last day he had anything to pay with."

"And yet you recommended they should pay so high a percentage that they could not possibly go on in business?"

"It was my duty to get as much as I could."

"Well, Deacon, I confess I should not want to fall into your hands if I should be unfortunate. You acknowledge that B. might have gone on in business if you had only favored him; and you also own that he would have paid dollar for dollar as soon as able; and yet instead of helping, you give him a kick, which so prostrates him that he can neither save himself nor be in a way to help others again."

"The Lord helps those who help themselves."

"But B's. failure was not his fault. No human foresight could have foretold it. I would have trusted him for twenty thousand dollars the day he failed. It was all brought upon him by others in consequence of the panic, and therefore the greater the need of leniency."

"But it was time to make an example of some one. You know how many fail and make money."

"It is a pity you could not have chosen such a one for an 'example,' instead of taking such a straight-forward, honest, noble specimen of a man and a Christian as B."

"Well, it is better to go to the grave a poor man, than live in wealth that does not belong to one or is a disgrace to him."

"I don't see that you have anything to do with that. The Lord knows his own, whether in a hovel or a palace. If you had been generous, B. might still have been doing a good business, and you would have gained quite as much in the end. For my part I thought it was cruel, and sent back all over a reasonable percentage as a present to his wife, and I don't believe I shall ever be a cent the poorer for it."

Such was a conversation between two business men; the one a professed Christian, the other a theatre-going, pleasure-loving, but generous and—we had almost said—conscientious man of the world.

Of what good will all the exhortations of Deacon Worldly-wise be to his friend, given, though they may be, with great show of earnestness and fervency of spirit? Will he respect him for his charities, chronicled though they may be in public prints?—and think you he will strive for that religion in his own heart which does not restrain the deacon from oppressing his neighbor for love of gain?

Alas! So is the Saviour "wounded in the house of his friends!"

PERSECUTION FOR TRUTH'S SAKE.

"It is folly," said Addison, "for an eminent man to think of escaping censure, and a weakness to be affected by it All the illustrious persons of antiquity, and, indeed of every age in the world, have passed through this fiery persecution. There is no defence against reproach, but obscurity. It is a kind of concomitant to greatness, as satire and invective were an essential part of a Roman triumph."

Remember the saying: "It is easy in the world to live after the world's opinion; it is easy in solitude to live after our own; but the great man is he who, in the midst of the crowd, keeps with perfect sweetness the independence of solitude"

BIBLES AND PRIESTS.—The Rev. Mr. Blackford, a missionary of the Presbyterian Foreign Board, in making a report of an exploring visit to the interior of Brazil, says the priests positively prohibit the people from reading the Bible, and the copies of which have been distributed they collect and burn

GOD estimates us not by the position we are in, but the way in which we fill it

The Christian Recorder.

Philadelphia, August 2, 1862.

DEDICATION

There will be a dedication of the A. M. E Church, at Marietta, Pa., on the 17th inst. Rev Thomas W. Henry is the pastor or elder in charge An invitation is extended to the brethren and friends

ATLANTIC CITY.

Mrs. S. Wailes has opened the Union Cottage for the accommodation of all who may desire to go to Atlantic City and spend a few days in recreation. We are informed that she has made quite extensive preparations. She will be pleased to have the pleasure of waiting on all who will favor her with their presence.

POSTPONEMENT.

The A. M. E. Mission School Walk, which was postponed, will take place on the 7th inst. As this is a mission school, it is to be hoped that they will be encouraged.

A BUSH MEETING.

The Rev. H. Young, Elder in charge of the Hordentown circuit, will have a bush meeting for that circuit, to commence on the 10th of August, Cookstown, N. J., and to continue to the 17th, at which time the public are invited to attend.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

Of Rev. R. H. Cain, of Brooklyn, on act. for papers sold,	5 00
Of Rev. A. T. Hall, of Keokuk, Iowa,	3 00
Mr. Henry Depugh,	1 00
Rev. H. M. Turner of Washington, D. C.	7 00

GRAND HARVEST HOME.

The Ladies' C. McMullen Sewing Circle of the A. M. E. Mount Zion Church, Trenton, under the pastoral charge of Rev. William Moore, will hold a Harvest Home for the benefit of their organization, in Mosm' Woods, on Thursday, Aug. the 7th.

They propose to give a grand dinner on the ground, and also refreshments. They also expect to have several addresses delivered on the occasion by eminent speakers They also intend to hold a festival in the church at night As this is a laudable cause in which those ladies are engaged, we hope that they will have the presence of thousands upon the occasion. Now, what say you, my readers?

CORRECTION.

Again are we called upon to chronicle another of those errors which will creep into print despite all carefulness in guarding against them. In giving credit to Mr. John for the Recorder, it should have been two instead of one dollar.

PRAISEWORTHY.

Rev. H. M. Turner and Rev. R. H. Cain are trying the talents of our young men and our old men in the ministry, and especially those who profess to possess some degree of scholarship. That is right, brothers Cain and Turner—hit them again.

FROM THE CHURCHES.

Rev. A. T. Hall, of Keokuk, Iowa, who was appointed in charge of that mission, and whose services for the year are about up, is making preparations to meet his brethren at the Conference which sits in Indianapolis, Indiana, on the 15th of August. We are glad to hear that the mission is still prosperous. The Lord be with the dear people. We refer our readers to brother Hall's letter.

FROM SALEM, N. J.

Rev. James Holton seems quite encouraged with his circuit, so far, and is getting along very well. The blessed Lord was with them according to the report in his letter.

TRENTON, N. J.

Rev. Elder Moore, pastor of the Trenton Church, was in our book-room on Tuesday, and also at the preachers' meeting. He is getting along finely with his charge. The Lord bless him in his labors.

BETHEL CHURCH, PHILA.,

Under the pastoral charge of Rev. J. P. Campbell. The Quarterly Meeting of this church commenced on the 25th ultimo, with a general class, which was visited with the outpouring of the Spirit of the Lord. There was also preaching on Saturday night, and on Sabbath, at ten o'clock, we had the pleasure of sitting under the preaching of Rev. Henry Davis. It was good to be there—for we felt that the Lord was there. At three o'clock we preached for Elder Campbell, and at night Rev. J. E. V. Morgan. Love Feast on Monday night.

We were extremely sorry that we could not be present on this most interesting occasion. A severe attack of indisposition compelled us to remain at home.

OUR CINCINNATI CORRESPONDENCE.

Our readers will see, by reading a letter from Cincinnati, from our correspondence, that our loyal and civil citizens are annoyed with a certain kind of plague. The colored people and the Germans seem to suffer the most from the effects The Irish, in Cincinnati, seem to be the plague Do they rule the city of Cincinnati? and if not, cannot the authorities of the city suppress such disgraceful conduct? Send over to Philadelphia, and the Mayor of this city can soon settle the hash with them. We believe that they are urged on by a certain clique, but they all will get their reward.

For the Christian Recorder.

FROM SALEM.

Mr. Editor—Dear Brother: Permit me to tender to you a few lines in reference to our circuit. Brother Jay and myself are getting along quite as well as we can expect at the present. We have had good meetings all around the circuit. Our Quarterly term closed at Salem on the 13th and 14th inst. We had a glorious meeting—the good Lord was with us. We had visitors from Philadelphia, Old Chester and Wilmington, together with a considerable number from brother Woodlin's charge. The congregation was estimated at over five hundred. Our Sabbath Schools are getting along very well. We are making a strong effort to raise money to pay for our parsonage. The sum of $250 is to be paid on the 1st of September next. Oh, that the Lord would create an enterprising spirit in us all

Your humble servant and brother in Christ,

JAMES HOLTON,
Pastor of Salem Circuit

For the Christian Recorder.

THE NECESSITY FOR AN EDUCATED MINISTRY IN THE A. M E CHURCH.

Circumstances, experience, study, and examination are the most efficient means for instructing in every department of human relations. They qualify us to form correct opinions and judgment of all matters of interest to society, whether politically, morally, socially, or religiously. The attentive observer will not be at a loss to discern the causes which hasten the decline of power and strength in any association of men, while he traces all the measures employed to sustain them in their composts. Among all combinations of men, there is necessarily a weakness inseparable from mortality. To be perfect is godlike; which is more than can be claimed for mankind. Yet the great and numerous facilities which God in his providence has provided for our instruction deprives us of the many excuses which might be made for our continual neglect in qualifying ourselves to be wise in the things of vital interest to us and ours If it be true that the more light a people possess, the better they are qualified to make progress in the work of elevation, it must be equally true, the more thorough their education, the better. Then there is manifestly a great need of competent teachers, who are fully qualified to lead the masses to the fount of living truth, that they may there satiate their thirst with the pure waters of life

If there is any department of instruction that needs educated teachers and leaders, it is in the A. M. E. Church. Situated as she is, holding a central ruling position among the masses, she is capable of gathering in more to the temple of divine truth than any other organization in this country. Aggressive in her movements, republican in her polity and government, comprehending the wants of the people, and ever ready to fly at the cry of every new community who call to her; yea, more, before they call she is hastening to proclaim the glad news of redemption; gathering them into the sacred fold of Christ, The spirit of Him who went about doing good resting upon her, what may she not do, if properly supplied with men and means adequate to the work to be performed. It has, no doubt, been a source of humiliation and shame to the better informed to listen to the tirades entered into by certain ignorants, claiming to be the instructors of the church, against education, and with an air of triumph, asked, "Who are the greatest rascals, robbers, and counterfeiters among us but your educated men." as if the wickedness and crime committed by these was the result of education rather than an evil and unregenerate soul. Such men are not competent to guide and instruct the people for their good. They may move their passions and excite their prejudices against learning, but not render them intelligent, and instruct them for their improvement. What the church needs is a class of teachers who are willing to suffer, and learn to suffer. We want, and must have, a ministry who will look to the interest of the rising generation, instructing them in the high and holy duties which pertain to this world as well as the future. One great mistake made by the old school preachers is, that they have always preached the people to heaven before they have qualified them by proper instruction for the duties of true Christians on the earth as God would have them perform them. Men should begin to live in heaven on earth. There is as much need that a people be instructed in their duties here, as well as a man should clear, plough, and harrow the ground before planting the seed and reaping the luxuriant harvest. The people are to be instructed in the duties of this life as well as of a future. The realization of the future joys are contingent on our conduct and life in this present state, "for every man shall receive according as his work shall be." The minister should be fully qualified for his high responsibilities. He should give himself wholly to this work of saving his fellow man. This duty is inculcated by the great Apostle of the Gentiles in his memorable charge to Timothy, where he commands study and research; nay, more, he impresses this as a duty which must be performed, in order to a correct understanding of the Word of God, "for it is sanctified by the Word of God and prayer; but if thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things, thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, nourished up in the words of faith and of good doctrine, whereunto thou hast attained" (1 Tim. v. 6.) These things command and teach. Let no man despise thy youth, but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity. Till I come, give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine. Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the Presbytery. Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them, that thy profiting may appear to all. Take heed to thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them, for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself and them that hear thee."

Who can read this passage, and then condemn an educated ministry? If there is to be a continual advance in religious sentiment, in moral, social, and intellectual culture, then we must have a class of teachers qualified for the great work. We do not despise the work of our fathers; nay, we love to recount their deeds of honor, of love, of Christian perseverance, and godly courage. They sowed the seed; we are reaping the fruits of their labors In all fields there are some tares, but there is much good substantial wheat, which proves the staff of life to the family and to hundreds of our neighbors. They eat and are thankful. So we, the happy recipients of the blessing flowing from the labors of Richard Allen, Daniel Coker, and a host of others who have labored and suffered in the cause of Christ. But they have died to a higher sphere of activity, and are achieving greater victories in knowledge in the heavenly region May their sons and successors be as faithful to the trust committed to their care, and prove worthy of their high calling in Christ Jesus. That our closing years may be as his who, when ready to be offered up, exclaimed "I have fought a good fight; I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness." Brethren, respond. So mote it be henceforth and forever. Amen.

R. H. C

Come One and All.—Senator Lane, of Kansas, has to day received authority from the President and Secretary of War to recruit troops under the late laws passed by Congress, and with this authority he will leave on Saturday for the West, where he will issue a public order, calling on all loyal men, irrespective of party or color, to join his army. He expects to have one white and two black regiments in the field in three weeks from the time of reaching his destination. He has full authority to draw on all quartermasters and commissaries for arms, clothing, and subsistence.

For the Christian Recorder.

Mr. Editor:—Our city is full of excitement. The recruiting officers are going round beating up for volunteers Last night there was a large meeting held in Monument Square in favor of the war. Many eminent speakers addressed the meeting; among them was the Governor of the State.

While this excitement is going on, death upon the pale horse is moving rapidly up one street, and down the other Many of your readers will regret to learn that Rev. Chas. Dunn, one of the oldest local preachers in Baltimore is no more He closed his earthly career on Monday night, [illegible] Brother Dunn had been complaining for several months, yet he was not considered dangerously ill by his friends; yet when the hour came for him to go, he was ready and willing. During a recent visit to him, in company with one or two other brethren, he said, after prayer, to one of them, "I want you to read two chapters for me—the 35th and 55th of Isaiah;" and while the reading was going on, the aged veteran raised up his hands and said that it—the last verse in the 35th chapter—was always a favorite passage of his when he was able to preach.

No man was better known and more universally loved than father Dunn. He was always looked for at church, and many a time before the hour for service arrived, he was there singing

"Come, brothers and sisters,
That love one another."

It may be said "he was a good man." Very few were ever heard to say anything about father Dunn. He was so exemplary in his life, that everybody regarded him as "an Israelite indeed." But his race is run, and his warfare is ended. He died at his post, with harness on. "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." A. W. W.

Baltimore, July 28th, 1862.

For the Christian Recorder.

Bro. Weaver:—Another year almost closed; and whilst war has and still is opening large fields for missionary operations, it depopulates some of our missions: hence the work in Iowa is dull, whilst in Kansas, flourishing,—there they flock; it is not Canada now. There old river towns are not settling much, but everything is unsettled, and getting more so. We have a few things that I shall now notice. So many of the people of color are away in the summer season, that it is a very hard matter to say anything satisfactory; so as we are winding up, please notice:

Married by the Rev. A. T. Hall, July 22d, 1862, Mr. Henry Tebo to Miss Cornelia Kay, all of this city. I here pay up my paper bill, $2 00. Also, I send you a six months' subscriber,—Mr. Henry Depugh, $1.00,—for the Recorder. Living on the Rise, as we are, and the city asleep, whilst the guerillas are playing "Hide and go seek" about ten miles from us, you see that we are not settled down, but all the time fixed for running; so you see that there is a good deal of watching, and, sorry to say, not much prayer. But the good Lord is still with us. The dear sisters of the Sewing Circle, established by Sister Jackson, (Brother Jackson giving the Constitution,—as say the sisters here,) have held festivals and fairs. But most all of the men are out of town,—some following the soldiers for gain, others running on the rivers to make an honest living. But the good Lord will bring all things right. The dear sisters of the Circle held their fair for three nights, and realized the handsome sum of $40, which they have paid over to their Missionary for the support of his family. I also, by request, a few weeks ago, made a visit to Quincy, Ill., where once we had a flourishing little society; but the head winds of adversity had blown away the beautiful little church; the edifice had been sold and re-sold. The Lord put it into the heart of Bro. Simeon Clark to make the second purchase, and through the zeal of Bro. Matthew T. Newsome, he re-organized the society and elected new trustees, among which is Bro. Clark. The church is made over to the A. M. E. Church. A society of the friends of the church organized to raise the money and meet the instalments. The President of the society is my old friend, Mr. Martin, formerly a member of the Baptist persuasion. Well, I took the new organization under the Bethel flag, and the Lord blessed us, and a song was once more heard in Zion; so I left Bro. M. T. in charge, and returned to my mission, after renewing, in Quarterly Meeting, the license of Bro. H. H. Willson, who, I believe, was first licensed by yourself when in charge of the church at Chicago. The friends think that there are about two hundred persons of color in Quincy. Well, they now want a school teacher. They or the city pay out of the school fund $90 per quarter, and we want one here at the sum of $75 per quarter. Each school commences on the first of September. These schools are paid out of the school funds of the several States or each State. I must close. Pray for us. Amen. A. T. Hall.

Keokuk, Iowa, July 25th, 1862.

For the Christian Recorder.

BALTIMORE CITY CORRESPONDENCE

Baltimore City Correspondence—Churches—Bethel—Ebenezer—Union Bethel—Watter's Chapel and Lemmier Street—The Elder from Wilmington—Hard Times—Schools—Anglo-African Exhibition of Industry and Art—The Carlisle Shot—Repository—Recorder.

Mr. Editor:—Close and unremitting attention to my charge has caused me to be silent, and deprived me of the pleasant chit-chat I have been wont to hold with your readers

The condition of our churches here, in the main, is encouraging The mother church is still exhibiting her accustomed life and pouring her vigor into weaker points. Her power to nourish and build up her weaker sister churches under an energetic and skilful leadership must be unbounded.

Ebenezer church is fast shaking off the dust of twenty-five years, arousing to a sense of her responsibility, and, with unequalled courage, zeal and hope, dares to commence the erection of a new and commodious church edifice, with all the modern improvements. Marked improvement in every department of this church has been noticeable for a year past, showing the happy effect of close attention to duties, official and spiritual, as well as an adherence to the characteristics of true Methodism, order and system.

Union Bethel is improving. Harmony begins to reign, and the signs are propitious, promising a prosperous Conference year.

Watter's Chapel wags under a debt of a little over four thousand dollars. This church was obtained by our connexion from the A. M. E. Zion Wesleyan connexion, through their inability to pay the debt.

The present congregation, backed up by the A. M Church, agreed to pay five thousand for it. During the last four years about one thousand dollars have been paid. The last session of the Conference found the people despondent as they looked upon the hopeless aspect of their condition. The congregation dwindled almost to a Corporal's guard, the Sabbath-school scattered; but thank God there are unmistakable signs of returning life. Sail after sail is being unfurled, and we hope soon to see the little bark, with canvass "full to the breeze," unbosomed.

Moving on through penons and gale.

During four years this church has been favored with able pastors. The first, young and burning with zeal, caring more for the church than for himself. The late pastor was one of the most successful preachers in the District Conference, who for the last eighteen years has been everywhere successful; yet thus favored she has languished, and perhaps she is now about tired of trying to die, and for the sake of a change will try to live.

What is true of the last named church is true of Lessier St. The aspect is sufficiently hopeful to quicken the beat of the pastor's pulse.

The elder from Wilmington is visiting our city He reports a dark cloud resting over his field of labor. Since Conference it has not broken; therefore he seeks the sunshine of our city. We are glad to state that our people gave him both silver and paper pledges of sympathy. God grant

"The clouds be so much dreads,
Are big with mercies
And shall break—"

The day schools, with the exception of Bethel Church school, are somewhat thin, owing, no doubt, to the hardness of the times and the warmth of the weather. A highly enthusiastic meeting was held recently to prepare for the great Anglo-African Exhibition of Industry and Art, to be held in Brooklyn. Though the time is short, Baltimore will be up and doing, for her great heart beats in unison with every heart that throbs with ardent desire for the improvement of our race.

The shot from Chambersburgh by the Episcopal battery, falling so far short of the mark, fails to provoke an attack. The battery we trust will get in a more eligible position, load, ram and fire again. Boom! The circulation of, and interest in the Repository here, is great. The Recorder, too, has a good prospect, despite the little encouragement it has received, owing to a want of exertion. Your correspondent will leave this city for Indianapolis, en route to Galena, Ill., about the 15th proximo.

Hampshire.

President Benson, of Liberia.—The American Colonization Society, of this city, learns that President Benson left London, on the 5th inst., for Hamburg and the Continent, expecting to be absent some five or six weeks. It is therefore unlikely that he will visit the United States. Everywhere in England he has been treated with the greatest possible kindness, courtesy, and respect. The three last invitations he had before his departure from London were to breakfast with the Duchess of Argyle, to dine at the Lord Mayor's Banquet, where the Viceroy of Egypt was, and to a magnificent evening party at Miss Burdett Coutts'. "He had innumerable invitations," writes Gerard Ralston, Esq., "more than he physically could accept."

From the Lutheran and Missionary.

FALSEHOOD REFUTED.

One of the saddest things which have been brought out by the war, is the spirit of falsehood which seems to have been let loose over the land. The telegraph lies and the newspaper publishes its untruths, until no one knows what to believe concerning the army or its movements, or even the government itself. In the way of slander and downright lying, some leading Eastern and Western papers have a dreadful pre-eminence. The very fact of intelligence first appearing in their columns, is evidence of its falsehood. Prominent and prince among these, is the New York Herald, literally "the Satanic," for over its capacious columns "the father of lies" presides, and in its virulent and countless falsehoods holds high carnival. In that vile sheet, we expect nothing noble and look for nothing but untruth, sympathy with oppression, and the most bitter and unrelenting persecution of the poor and enslaved. From papers, however, which profess decency and appeal to the Church for patronage, we have a right to look for something very different. It is, therefore, with deep sorrow, that we call the attention of our pastors to the fact, that the "Weltbote" of Allentown, Pa., a German paper, for whose circulation many of them have done much, has of late lent itself to this miserable work of detraction, and by contrasts and appeals, based upon falsehoods, is using its influence to awaken the prejudices of its readers against those who have well been called "God's poor," and who cannot defend themselves.

The following extract is translated from a leader in the issue of July 9th, and is a sample of similar articles of the Vallandigham stamp, which have lately appeared in the columns of that paper.

"It is known that in those sections, of which our troops in the South have obtained possession, a large number of slaves have been found, who are augmented by almost daily arrivals. These so called 'contrabands' now live partly in the camps of our soldiers and partly in their immediate vicinity, and are fed and clothed by our government.

"In the neighborhood of Port Royal, S. C., their number has increased to some 10,000, about the half of whom are women, children and superannuated persons With these negroes, our Minister of Finance, Mr. Chase, desired to make a civilization experiment, and divided among them 13,795 acres of land, the former property of the rebels, giving them at the same time wages, in addition to clothing food, etc. The well known Abolitionist (?) Pierce, of Lowell, Mass., was appointed Superintendent, and 93 (??) male and female missionaries, supported by the government, and under the direction of Mr. Pierce, began their operations in Port Royal. But the undertaking would not succeed! The grown-up negroes would not work, and proved stubborn. The customary hangings about since their transfer into freedom, pleased them much better. General Hunter, likewise, got the idea into his head to organize a black brigade from among those who were capable of bearing arms, but this stupidity knocked the barrel from its bottom, and the powder and bullet fearing contrabands ran away! Thus this civilizations project came to nothing, but the expenses occasioned thereby, the taxable people of the North have to pay."

In answer to this collection of low falsehoods, which are published in the Weltbote for the purpose of giving color to the charge of injustice by the government toward the widows of our soldiery, we have but little to say, for others, who speak by authority, will sufficiently refute the assertions that the negro will not work, that the project is a failure, and that the taxable population of the North must pay the cost, &c It is known that the government recently sent Brigadier General Saxton to Port Royal with instructions, also, to examine and report upon the result of the contraband labor. Our readers have seen what the Allentown editor wrote on the 9th of July on this subject, and what a plausible plea he makes for the continuance of slavery! The following was written by Gen. Saxton at Beaufort, S. C., on the 10th of July, on the same subject, only a day later, and is addressed to the Secretary of War.

"The negroes are working industriously. We have some 15,000 acres of corn and cotton under cultivation. It looks well. The system of voluntary labor works admirably. The people are contented and happy. When the crop is harvested they will cease to be a burden upon the Government. By adopting a judicious system of reward for labor, almost any amount can be obtained. Its proceeds will pay the expense."

Two leading facts are here brought out: the negro will work faithfully for wages, and secondly, their labor is sufficiently remunerative to free the government of all expense on their account. Besides this, "they are contented and happy," whereas, when in slavery, they were discontented and miserable, and on their arrival into our lines, were, in most instances covered with rags. We can speak from frequent and personal observation on the same subject. The present condition of the contrabands at Fortress Monroe is just the same. Their industry, good behaviour, and rapid improvement during the past twelve months, is so striking, that we could scarcely believe them to be the same ragged, dispirited and woe begone beings whom we had seen coming in from the swamps and hiding places in the vicinity.

But what about the Black Brigade which the editor of the Weltbote so graphically describes as running away at the very idea of powder and lead? It is quite immaterial, except to show that his prejudices so far get the better of his judgment, as to make him invent facts and publish things which have no foundation in truth A well known correspondent of the New York Independent, at Hilton Head, under date of July 2d, thus describes this broken up colored regiment

"I took a horseback ride Saturday afternoon for the purpose of seeing the negro regiment drill. The proficiency of these men in the manual of arms and in marching, after so short a practice, astonished me. No white recruits in service for the same length of time could do better. And here let me say, that whatever I write about negroes is written with a sincere desire to write nothing but truth

"Their improvement has been wonderful, and exceeds the expectations of their most sanguine friends. Yet I am convinced that had they been given liberty, and been left to their own guidance, no such encouraging elevation of their natures would have resulted. They must have teachers and governors to bring them out of the depths of degradation to which slavery has reduced them, before they can understand that freedom has duties and responsibilities as well as privileges.

"This experiment with them, then, has developed their aptitude for learning, and taught us that the time required for implanting within them the seeds of good citizenship will be shorter than most of us had hoped."

On the first page of the "Weltbote," we are told that the paper is "EDITED ON CHRISTIAN PRINCIPLES." Let then the editor cease this unmanly work of detraction, and henceforth speak the truth. Instead of ridiculing the humble efforts of a long oppressed and degraded race towards self-elevation, let him "lift up his voice for the dumb" and lend the influence of his paper to the efforts of good men to qualify them for freedom. If this be not done, such an editorship "on Christian principles" is a humbug, and no Christian pastor should longer countenance such a publication.

TO MAKE A HAPPY HOME.

I heard a father the other day—a hale, happy man—praising his boys, four sturdy fellows, who had escaped the dissipation and excitement of a city life, and were now as fresh in heart and as ruddy in face as when they prattled about their mother's knee. I had seen so much of parental sorrow over sons gone astray, corrupted physically and morally, that I ventured to ask my friend, the happy father, how it was that he had been able to save his boys from the contamination of evil associations and bad habits.

"The way is simple enough," he said, "neither original nor in any way remarkable. I keep my boys at home evenings by making their home a pleasanter place than they can find elsewhere. I save them from the temptation of frequenting doubtful places of amusement by supplying them with better pleasure at home. Many things which I considered improper, or at least as frivolous, I encourage now, because I find my sons desire them, and I prefer that they may gratify their desire at home, and in their mother's presence where nothing that is wrong will come, and where amusements which under some circumstances may be objectionable lose all their venom, and become innocent, and even elevating. I have found that the danger is more in the concomitants of many amusements than in the amusements themselves; that many things which will injure a young man in a club, or among evil associates, are harmless when engaged in with the surroundings of a home. As long as children are children, they will crave amusement, and no reasoning can convince them that it is wrong to gratify their desire. When they hear certain things denounced as sinful by those whose opinion they hold in reverence, and are tempted, by the example of others who defend them, to disobey their parent's wish and participate in them, a long downward step is taken; parental authority and parental opinions are held in less reverence; the home that ostracises these amusements becomes a dull and tiresome place; and, in secret places, among companions, they seek for them until at length conscience is seared, filial feeling overcome, and parents are compelled to sigh over the lost affections and confidence of their children.

"I have endeavored," said his father, "to join with my boys, and be a boy with them in their pleasures. And I do believe there is no companion they are merrier with, and delight in, more than the old boy. If I think a place of amusement is innocent, and will please them, out we go some evening, mother, boys, girls, and father, and enjoy the world all the more because we are together, and do not go too often

"But we don't care to be out from home much We have a way among ourselves of keeping up a kind of reading society, and we are apt to get so engaged in the book we are reading, that we feel little like leaving it We take great care to find a readable book—useful books, works of travel, essays, good biographies of good men, and the like; then we read them aloud in the evening, when we are all at home from school, or store, each taking a turn at the reading. It always looks to me a pretty picture—mother and the girls sewing at the table, Tom reading aloud from 'Tom Brown's School Days,' a great book with us, and myself in dressing-gown and slippers at the fire, and Fred and Willie near at hand. We are all listening eagerly to the history of the sturdy Tom. Fred is feeling the muscles of his arm, wondering how it would compare with that of the young Rubian. And we are all, to my thinking, a happy, comfortable family.

"At half-past nine o'clock, I suggest that the time is up; but Tom begs to be allowed to finish his chapter, and, nothing loath myself, I assent. In a few minutes I have my big Bible on my knee, and my spectacles out, and am reading the fifteenth chapter of John: "I am the true vine, and my father is the husbandman." We sing our evening hymn; to-night I start the good old evening hymn, commencing—

"Glory to thee, my God, this night,
For all the blessings of the light"

"We kneel together in prayer to the Father of all; and then the children are off to bed, and two happy people, my wife and myself, are left to thank God for the many blessings he has granted us."

I left this man, with many thoughts and self-condemnation, determined that day to see what I could do to make another delighted family circle. I have begun, and so great has been my success, and so abundant my reward, in a joyous heart and a cheerful, trusting family, that I would some others might try the same.

ORATORY.

Oratory, like the Drama, abhors lengthiness; like the Drama, it must be kept doing. It avoids, as frigid, prolonged metaphysical soliloquy Beauties themselves, if they delay or distract the effort which should be produced on the audience, become blemishes.

BURKE'S DEFECTS.

Burke, from the very depth of his understanding, demands too great a tension of faculties little exercised by men of the world in general, not to create fatigue in an assembly which men of the world compose. And his ornaments, which do not seem redundant when read, would appear in speech too artificial for that spontaneous utterance which oratory, even when prepared, must condescend to simulate. Again, Burke wants that easy knowledge of every day life which is more or less essential to a popular public speaker. For each day upon each question there is a something which the party he represents wishes to have said —a something which it would have been rashness to say yesterday, will be a platitude said to-morrow—but said to day, has a pertinent wisdom that may turn the scales of debate. Now, the true orator, however aiming at immortality, must not neglect the moment; for he who speaks what the moment needs, is eloquent without effort. But Burke knew little of what was said at the clubs, and what it was all-important should be said in Parliament at the right time. And what he might know of such popular common-sense matters, and deign to repeat in his own way, he would so transform in the re-creating process of his glowing intellect, that not one man in a hundred would have muttered, "That's my thought —how clearly he puts it!"

BURKE'S POWER

Mr. Fox, in the last motion he ever made in the House of Commons, thus in words which have escaped the notice of those who have discussed the question of Burke's merits as an orator, refers to a speech of Burke's upon the abolition of negro slavery: "It was perhaps the most brilliant and convincing speech ever delivered in this or any other place by a consummate master of eloquence; and of which, I believe, there remains in some publications a report that will convey an adequate idea of the substance, though it would be impossible to represent the manner, the voice, the gesture, the manner, was not to be described—O, si illum audisse, si illum videisse!"

FOX AN ORATOR.

Fox studies far more diligently than is generally supposed—in the quiet of his bed-room, which he does not leave till noon. But he, then, has his levee of gossiping partisans; he hears all that this town says—all that his party thinks it would be useful to say; and the facts or reflections his mind has already stored are at prompt service for the immediate want. It is the triumph of an impassioned and earnest speaker to overcome all hostile impressions on eye and ear which at first interpose between his mind and his audience. Fox's gesticulation was extravagant and graceless; his articulation, in spite of lengthened practice, was so indistinct from rapidity, that he himself, in one of his latest speeches, observes, that no reporter could catch his words with sufficient accuracy for faithful report. Yet I doubt not that, though indistinct in the gallery, he contrived to make himself very intelligible to the House.

STYLE FOR SPEAKING AND READING.

Many famous works in didactic or moralising poetry, which a person of ordinary refinement will peruse, when alone, with pleasure, become wearisome when read aloud; where as other works akin to the drama, and therefore to oratory, may please and impress more when spoken than they do when perused in the closet. The Death of Marmion or Lord Ullin's Daughter, almost required to be recited in order to be fully appreciated. But who would wish to hear recited the Excursion, or the Essay on Man?

THE MOURNER A-LA-MODE

We insert the following lines by John G. Saxe to show the ladies how ignorant and illogical male human creatures are, when they plunge into subjects too deep for them. Saxe must have received some time or other, from a beautiful young widow, something with a name not unlike his owe, to prompt him to make such cruel insinuations.

I saw her last night at a party,
(The elegant party at Mead's)
And looking remarkably hearty
For a widow so young in her weeds;
Yet I knew she was suffering sorrow
Too deep for the tongue to express,
Or why had she chosen to borrow
So much from the language of dress?

Her shawl was as sable as night;
And her gloves were as dark as her shawl;
And her jewels that flashed in the light
Were as black as a funeral pall;
Her robe had the hue of the rest,
(How nicely it fitted her shape!)
And the grief that was heaving her breast
Boiled over in billows of crape!

What tears of vicarious woe,
That else might have sullied her face,
Were kindly permitted to flow
In ripples of ebony lace!
White even her fan, in its play,
Had quite a lugubrious swape,
And seemed to be waving away
The ghost of the angel of Hope!

Yet rich as the robes of a queen,
Was the sombre apparel she wore;
I'm certain I never had seen
Such a sumptuous sorrow before;
And I couldn't help thinking the beauty,
In mourning the loved and the lost,
Was long her conjugal duty
Altogether regardless of cost.

One surely would say a devotion
Performed at so vast an expense,
Betrayed an excess of emotion
That was really something immense
And yet as I viewed, at my leisure,
Those tokens of tender regard,
I thought:—It is scarce without measure—
The sorrow that goes by the yard!

Ah! grief is a curious passion;
And your's—I am sorely afraid
The very next phase of the fashion
Will find it beginning to fade
Though dark are the shadows of grief,
The morning will follow the night,
Half-tints will betoken relief,
Till joy shall be symboled in white!

Ah well!—It were idle to quarrel
With Fashion, or aught she may do;
And so I conclude with a moral
As I metaphor warranted new—
When Measles came handsomely out,
The patient is safest, they say;
And the Sorrow is mildest, no doubt,
That works in a similar way!

NOTICE.

TO THE DISTRICTS OF PHILADELPHIA, NEW ENGLAND, OHIO, INDIANA, AND MISSOURI, OF THE A. M. E. CHURCH MINISTERS.

Dear Brethren:—As we have a number of superannuated ministers on the list in said Districts, therefore it will be expected that the ministers and preachers on their circuits and stations, will do all they can to collect the two cent money; and we also recommend that the Class leaders be instructed to collect and set the amount on the Class book opposite each member's name, as also all the collections called, per Discipline, for the Annual Conference, and publish the same once every quarter, that it may be seen who they are that work for God and his cause. We think it is time to give credit to those of our people who do work, so that God's name may be glorified.

Half our dangers are unsuspected—and we are troubled and cast down with imaginary ones

Godly humiliation, in true penitents, proceeds from the love of God.

THE FLY

To be recited to a little child.

The letters to Scripps, if you'll artfully twist,
You will find the encouraging answer, 'Persist.'

BY THE POOR LITTLE

Baby By,
Here's a fly;
Let us watch him, you and I.
How he crawls
Up the wa[illegible]
Yet he never falls!
I declare, with [illegible]
You and I could walk on eggs!
[illegible]
On the [illegible]
Tickling baby's nose!

Spots on back
Dot his head,
Rainbows on his back are spread!
Five on each
Is his neck!
See him rest and look!
I can show you if you [illegible]
Where to look to find his elbow!
Three on each pair
Made of hair;—
These he always wears!

Black and brown
Is his gown;
He can wear it upside down.
It is laced
Round his waist;
I admire his taste.
Yet, though tight his clothes are made,
He will lose them, I'm afraid,
If to night
He gets right
On the window-light.

In the sun
Webs are spun;
What is he got into now!
When it rains,
He complains
On the window-panes
Tongues to talk have you and I;
God has given the little fly
No such things,
Save his wings
With his buzzing wings.

Catch him! No!
Let him go,
Never hurt an insect so,
For, no doubt,
He flies out
Just to gad about.
Now you see his wings of silk
Drabbled in the baby's milk!
Fie! oh fie!
Foolish fly,
How will he get dry!

Flies can see
More than we—
So how bright their eyes must be!
Little fly
Open your eye—
Spiders are near by!
For a change I can see,
Spiders never treat flies well!
Then away!
Do not stay—
Little fly, good day!

LOVE TO OUR NEIGHBOR.

But the precept of Christ not only prescribes comprehensively the degree of love we should bear to our fellow-men, it specifies with equal scope,—"Therefore, all things whatsoever men should do unto you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets." (Matt vii. 12) It is not love only, nor merely kindly feelings which religion exacts toward our brethren of the human family. That love, if it exists, is not to be buried in the bosom, it is to be exhibited in our lives, conversation, and conduct. We are not only to entertain and cultivate the tenderest affection for others, and thereby refine our own souls, but we are to make our own wishes and wants the measure of our kindness and promptness of action for their benefit. We are to practise those heavenly graces, which are the ornaments of the true disciples of Christ upon our neighbors and brethren whom we see, that we may by this cultivation be able to lift them up in full exercise towards Him that is invisible, whom we have not seen. The higher our attainment in that Christian obedience which constitutes manward piety, the greater will be our progress in that holiness and purity of heart, which is acceptable to God. By the side of our besetting sin, the love of self, Christ has planted the love of our neighbor, that our most powerful stimulant to action may have a purifying accompaniment; that whilst we study and labor to promote our own interests, our brother man may have a share in all our thoughts and efforts, and we in his to the same extent. So, also, our desires for advantage from others are to be moderated by the recollection, that we owe to them exactly what we might, just by the circumstances being reversed require of them.

When, therefore, men listen to the gospel in their own church, they must hasten to impart to others the same advantages they are enjoying. When they take their food, they must not forget others who may not have their daily bread. In the full enjoyment of raiment, of house and land, let them not forget that others may be without these blessings. When a Christian man goes to his labor, his daily business or calling, let him remember that many are idle all the day, or have neither labor, nor business, nor calling. In all his intercourse with men, he is not only to do them no harm, but to do them all the good in his power. The man who refuses place to these considerations, or refuses obedience to the precepts which apply to his demeanor toward other men, is as truly irreligious as he who neglects the worship of God profanes His name, and abstains from the services of the church. "For he who loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?"

We are to carry with us, then, into all the relations and positions of life the idea that our religious obligations follow us every moment, and in all our concerns with man; not only follow us, but with greater solemnity than the services of the church, for even there before we dare lift up our hearts to God, or place our gift upon the altar, we are enjoined to examine ourselves, and recall to mind if our brother hath aught against us, and if so, to leave our gift there before the altar and go and be first reconciled to our brother, and afterwards lay our gift upon the altar. Taking this injunction in connection with other commands we give it a wider signification than the duty of reconciliation in cases of quarrel or misunderstanding. It may cover the whole ground of our duty to our fellow men. Let him who takes his seat in the house of God recall to mind whether he has neglected any special duty to any of his fellow men, and if so let him first not merely repent of that, but, if possible, repair it before he can hope that his worship will be acceptable. What can be more clear, from the whole teachings of our Saviour, than that our obedience to these commands which enjoin love and kind services to our fellow men, are like the prescription of the prophet Elijah to Naaman ("Go wash seven times in the river Jordan,") if not an addition, an indispensable accompaniment, of our being made clean of our leprosy. God has given us something to do, as evidence of our devotion to Him,—something which we can do, and He exacts obedience to this, not as a work of merit by which we can deserve His favor and purchase salvation, but as an act of obedience, as an exercise of Christian grace, and as a means of carrying out His great design of blessing and exalting our fallen race. He not only makes the wrath of man to praise Him, but in working His great designs of benefit for the human family, He makes brotherly kindness one of the chief improvements for the accomplishment of his purposes. Man is thus chosen as the minister of God's goodness to man. It is made a part of his religion to do good to his fellow men, because the exercise of the faculties of the mind's soul in doing good is the best mode of exercising and developing those powers and affections, which are preparing him for the higher and purer enjoyments of that love which pervades the heavenly world. Whilst we are to worship God as a spirit in spirit and in truth, we are placed under equal religious obligations to love our neighbors as ourselves,—to do that to others which we would have them do to us,—to be kindly affectioned to one another—to regard no one toward another and toward all men,—to follow ever that which is good among yourselves and to all men. Obedience to these and many like commands of the highest religious service, we can render to God, for "All the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren:" "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."

In the doctrine involved in these Christian precepts, we shall find an inexhaustible mine of purifying and exalting motives and influences. Consider what must be his watchfulness over himself, what his faith and dependence upon Christ, who would love his neighbor as himself, and consult his happiness as he consults his own. Consider how self-denying, patient, and beneficent must he be, who would ask of others nothing but that which he would, for Christ's sake, be ready to give. Can anything be conceived better adapted to purify the mind and the heart, than an earnest effort to fulfil these religious duties to our fellow men? The mind and the affections are not lost nor bewildered in the immensity of the conceptions involved, as in the case of the contemplation of the love we owe to God Himself; the task before us is precisely that which we can grasp and understand; it is difficult enough to task all the powers of our intellects and all the strength of our affections, but it is plain enough to be understood, and not so difficult but that obedience is within our power. It is in view of this that the apostle exclaims: "For he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" And with what special emphasis these duties are enforced: "For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this—Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." (Gal. v. 14.) "Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets" Matt. vii. 12.

The Social, Civil, and Statistical Association of The Colored People of Pennsylvania open a subscription list to aid the freed men at Port Royal and other points where they may be located, and respectfully ask the cooperation of the colored citizens and others in this city, or elsewhere, in money or clothing.

Any amount of value received will be acknowledged, with the name of the donor, in the Recorder, where a constant record will be kept.

Subscriptions may be sent to Jacob C. White, at the office of the Lebanon Cemetery, 711 Lombard Street, and also to William Still, 107 North Fifth Street, and to Rev. E. Weaver, 619 Pine Street.

	paid.
Statistical Society,	$50 00
Clayton Miller,	2 00
William Still,	5 00
Robert Adger,	2 00
Henry Minturn,	2 00
Catherine Johnson,	2 00
Vasti Locke,	2 00
Wm Warricks,	2 00
Harriet Shorter,	1 00
Sarah S. Hawkins,	1 00
Rev. Jonathan C. Gibbs,	1 00
James P. Clay,	1 00
Benjamin F. Hill,	2 00
S M. S.,	2 00
Elizabeth Gordon,	1 00
F. J. Dreer,	5 00

It affords us pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of ten dollars, the proceeds of Miss Anna E. Dickinson's lecture at Concert Hall for the contrabands, contributed to the S. C. and Statistical Association, to be applied as intended. Wm Still.

Cor. Sec. of S., C. and Statistical Association of the Colored People of Penna.

Domestic Items.

General Taylor's Sword Discovered.—The other day a detective was sent to search a stable where it was understood that arms belonging to a regiment on of ex-President Taylor, were concealed. Among a variety of weapons found under the floor of the stable was the elegant sword presented to "Old Rough and Ready" by the State of Kentucky. It will be sent to General Taylor, Commmary General of the United States Army, and brother of the gallant hero of the Mexican war. Commmary General Taylor is, I think, the only direct representative of "Old Zack," whose loyalty is unturnished.

Death of Ex President Van Buren.—Martin Van Buren, the eighth President of the United States, died at Kinderhook, New York, Thursday morning. The chief cause of the ex-President's death was the mildest form of asthma, which developed itself in a dangerous catarrhal affection of the lungs and throat. During the month of February, and until the month of May, Mr. Van Buren was in New York under the treatment of some eminent physicians, but he returned home without receiving any apparent benefit or relief. A correspondent of the Boston Journal wrote a few days since:

"For nearly a week his mind has been almost constantly wandering, although with one or two exceptions, until yesterday, he has been able to recognize and converse with his physician."

"Previous to the wandering of his mind, and once or twice since, when reason returned, Mr. Van Buren evinced the most lively and patriotic interest in the affairs of the country. No longer since than Tuesday, when the day before he was hardly expected to survive, he inquired of Dr. Pruyn how the good work of crushing the rebellion was going on, and was very particular to learn if the public confidence in the President and General McClellan was firm and yet unshaken, as he thought it should be. He appeared much gratified when answered in the affirmative. He has continually denounced the course of Buchanan's Administration, but has expressed the utmost confidence in that of Mr. Lincoln. The war, he thinks, is justly and as vigorously as possible carried on—the rebels brought it upon themselves, and they should be severely punished."

"He has all faith in the ultimate triumph of our arms and cause, but not without great expenditures of blood and treasure, as events have thus far demonstrated. He has the utmost confidence in the military ability of General McClellan, of whom he was an old and warm personal friend, and if he is sustained and aided by all loyal people, the flag of our country, the Constitution, and the great principles of American liberty will be thoroughly and permanently re-established throughout all the rebellious States

Life and Character of Mr. Van Buren.—In the history of the Republic, Mr. Van Buren has occupied more than an ordinary place. Few men have been so long before the people—few statesmen have been distinguished with so many high honors. He came into politics during the Burr and Hamilton times, and was an active participator in their political feuds. He ardently supported Mr. Jefferson, holding office as a Republican, and losing it by the Federalists. He was the rival of George Clinton, and the head of a schism in the early Democratic party. In 1821 he entered the Senate, and became the ardent advocate of General Jackson. Subsequently he was Governor of New York, Secretary of State under Jackson, Minister to England, Vice President of the United States and President. In 1840 he was for the second time a Presidential candidate, and defeated. In 1844 he was sacrificed by the pro-slavery men of the Democratic party, because of his opinions on the Texas question. In 1848 he ran as a Free-Soil candidate, and accomplished the defeat of Mr. Cass.

There is something in the career of Mr. Van Buren to excite our admiration, and, it may be our surprise. He was not a great man. He rose from position to position by the exercise of a wonderful sagacity and caution. He made but one mistake, and that was fatal, for it closed his career. He had the happy quality of doing everything well—he was never bold, nor original. He had a wonderful power of managing men and was so successful in his political manœuvres that he obtained the title of the "Little Magicians." He was a strict party man, and took with him into politics, that rigid system of almost military discipline which Aaron Burr was the first to introduce. He attached himself to General Jackson in the early part of that soldier's Presidential career, and followed his fortunes until he became President. His relations to General Jackson were those of an accomplished politician, who has fascinated a blunt and stern old soldier. He had the remarkable tact to keep out of General Jackson's most serious quarrels, and to make capital out of his most popular measures. The singular devotion of the American people to the old hero will be remembered. New Orleans, was skilfully managed by Mr. Van Buren, and on the swelling tide of the Tennessean's popularity he rode into power. He was a quiet Senator, an urbane Vice President, an ingenious Secretary of State, a polished Ambassador at a polished Court, and an unfortunate President. The influence of his name has long since passed away—and in the history of the country he made an other impression than that of a shrewd and affable politician. He made many friends and few enemies, those who opposed him [illegible] as the enemies of General Jackson.

The name of Mr. Van Buren will very soon be forgotten. He will be remembered as a man who possessed [illegible] abilities, which in troublous times might have never taken him beyond the county court of the State Legislature. He never originated a great measure, nor performed a bold act; and those who followed his fortunes can give him no other reputation than that of a kind quiet and pleasant old gentleman, who never neglected the last novel for a Presidential duty; who never uttered a harsh word or expressed a bitter thought; who never forgot that smiling, exquisite and genial bearing, which charmed his friends and disarmed his foes. He leaves no party to worship his name—no history which men can read with instruction—no example to excite the emulation of the young and ambitious. Thus, we think, will be the judgment of impartial history. That he was a good father, a [illegible] and a true friend, [illegible] courtesy, and skilled in everything pertaining to the management of men, all will admit—and for such qualities all will honor him.

We are living in other times than those marked by Mr. Van Buren's career. This revolution has called new actors upon the stage—and at the head of this Republic, we have earnest, bold, original and massive men. In our devotion to the practical, the stern and the true, let us not forget the old man, who quietly passed away on Thursday morning. Let us honor him for the possession of the best virtues of the citizen, the scholar and the gentleman.—Press.

Admission of Patients into the Insane Asylum.—To avoid trouble and difficulty which may arise from ignorance or misapprehension relative to the admission of patients into the Pennsylvania State Lunatic Hospital at Harrisburg, it has been deemed advisable to give the following extracts from the by-laws of the hospital

These provisions will be strictly enforced, and it is hoped that all who may have occasion to bring patients to the hospital will be prepared to comply fully with the spirit and letter of the regulations:

"Preparatory to the admission of a patient, (unless when committed by order of a court,) the Superintendent shall be furnished with the certificate of a physician that he has seen and examined the individual, and believes him or her to be insane, with a request from a near relative or friend that the patient may be received into the hospital, and a bond, with satisfactory security for the payment of board and other expenses while in the institution. All private patients thus received shall make a payment of thirteen weeks' board in advance when brought to the hospital, and if taken away uncured and against the advice and consent of the Superintendent within that period, no part of said payment shall be refunded.

"Whenever a patient is sent to the hospital by the order of any court, justice, judge, Directors of the Poor of a county, or the overseers of the poor of a township or poor district, the order or warrant or a copy thereof, by which such person is sent, shall be lodged with the Superintendent.

"Those who may bring a patient with any such order or warrant will be required to pay at the time of the admission of the patient, sixty-five dollars.

"A written history of the case should be sent with the patient, and, if possible, some one acquainted with the individual should accompany him to the hospital, from whom minute but often essential particulars may be learned."

Cases of recent occurrence will be received at any time on compliance with the regulations.

Mr. Singer, the manufacturer of sewing machines, has left this country with the intention of spending the rest of his life in the Holy Land.

A Council of Generals, it is decided, shall be called in Washington at the earliest practicable moment. What is now most wanted is reinforcements.

Vicksburg intelligence reports no change in operations there. Our mortars keep up a bombardment from above, the effect of which is a daily diminution in the number of dwellings in the city. The batteries have no chance to reply. It is not yet known whether the fleet has succeeded in re-opening the broken communication with New Orleans. The mails were entirely cut off for a week previous to last advices.

The fortifications about Memphis are being rapidly constructed. Several hundred negroes are at work on them, and a large force of soldiers are employed in the same manner. The earthworks are of the most stable character, and are intended to be of great strength. They will encircle the town from south to south.

Dr. Dignowitty, of San Antonio, Texas, has been in Washington for some time endeavoring to interest the Government in behalf of the Union population of Texas.

There is a prospect that his efforts may soon be crowned with success, and that a force will be sent to that State under the command of some general who will be satisfactory to the Germans. Dr. Dignowitty states that there are thirty thousand Germans who are now wandering in Mexico, having escaped the tyranny of the Southern Confederacy in Texas. Dr. D. is a very intelligent and reliable German, and was one of the leading men in San Antonio. He says that the Germans in Texas are, almost to a man, in favor of the Union, which they are willing to fight for if they can have an opportunity.

It is at last definitely settled that recruits are to be received in the State of Pennsylvania for nine months or a year.

General McClellan has issued another order about the newspaper correspondents—they are to be expelled from the army.

General Pope is doing the work in Eastern Virginia. His little campaign has been a cavalry campaign thus far, and we have accounts of skirmishes and forays, and dashes upon railroads and lines of communication. In the meantime his army is subsisting upon the people among whom they are encamped

John Morgan has gained an unenviable notoriety by a bold raid in Kentucky recently. Through cowardice and mismanagement, this outlaw captured, with a handful of daring men, an entire Federal brigade, miserably posted at the town of Murfreesboro', in Central Kentucky, together with their guns, small arms, ammunition, stores, as many generals, and nearly as many field, staff and line officers as were taken during the great Seven-Days Battle on the Peninsula, with a small loss on the side of the rebels.

United States Property Surrendered.—Brigadier General Nelson, on reaching Murfreesboro', on July 18th, issued an order, directing the disloyal citizens to surrender at once all the United States property which the rebel troops had distributed among them. The order brought the uniforms and equipments to the court-house by cart-loads.

A General Order of General Pope (July 25th, 1862,) states that, "Hereafter no guards will be placed over private houses or private property of any description whatever. Commanding officers are responsible for the conduct of the troops under their command, and the articles of war and regulations of the army provide ample means for restraining them to the full extent required for discipline and efficiency."

Executive Order.—War Department, July 22.—First. Ordered. That the military commanders within the States of Virginia, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, in an orderly manner, seize and use any property real or personal, which may be necessary or convenient for their several commands, as supplies, or for other military purposes, and that while property may be destroyed for proper military objects, none shall be destroyed in wantonness and malice.

Second. That military and naval commanders shall employ as labourers, within and from the said States, so many persons of African descent, as can be advantageously used for military or naval purposes, giving them reasonable wages for their labor.

Third. That as to both property and persons of African descent, accounts shall be kept, sufficiently accurate and in detail, to show the quantities and amounts, and from whom both property and such persons shall have come, as a basis upon which compensation can be made in proper cases. The several Departments of the Government shall attend to and perform their appropriate parts towards the execution of these orders.

By order of the President,
(Signed) Edwin M. Stanton,
Secretary of War.

Federal Surgeons and Chaplains—The rebel authorities (the War Department learns through Gen. Dix) have ordered the unconditional discharge of all such taken prisoners in the discharge of their legitimate duties. This is in accordance with the example set them by the Government.

The Loss before Richmond—From accounts recently received from the headquarters of the army of the Potomac, the official report of the battles before Richmond states that the killed, wounded and missing approximate to 16 000

The Secession Councilmen Resigned—Baltimore, July 25. All the Secession members of the common branch of Councils have resigned, in consequence, with one exception, of General Wool having refused to recognize as members those elected to the vacancies occasioned by the resignations. A special election will soon take place to fill the vacancies with loyal men.

Halleck Notwithstanding the retirement of our new Commander-in-chief, General Halleck, there is every evidence among the people that faith in his abilities is increasing rapidly. Although quiet himself in words, he is moving about everywhere, and his columns are advancing slowly, but surely, in every direction. In this new and grand advance we want to see the most consummate strategy displayed by one man, of whom no sub-ordinate officer can be jealous or envious.

Sigel.—All eyes are now turned towards General Sigel, who commands the advance corps d'armee of the Army of Virginia, and upon whom devolved the task of driving "Stonewall" Jackson to [illegible] by the rebel Government, and, in consequence of which alone, some nervousness is evident among the people. It is, however, the earnest desire of a majority in the north to see how these so well known strategists will operate as antagonists commanding considerable armies. Franz Sigel was born a general; he has improved and cultivated his natural military mental faculties by scientific education; made practical use of his genius and talent in the wars waged by the Revolutionists of Prussia; and has all his life been a close and thorough student of the science of the art of war, occupying a professorship in a military academy in the West for more than eight years previous to the breaking out of the rebellion.

At Richmond the rebels are building three iron-clad gunboats. One, the "New Merrimac," is nearly completed, and ready for the guns to be put on board. Another, called the Lady Davis, is now being iron-clad, and the third one on the the stocks, not as far advanced.

Small Change.—The decline in the price of gold has been more rapid than was anticipated. Change is already easier, and small coin is again making its appearance. The banks generally have increased their deposits of specie.

The English Press on American Affairs.—The accounts of the fighting before Richmond were most eagerly canvassed by the English press and public, and various constructions were put upon them.

The Morning Star says: "It is now demonstrated that McClellan has sustained no serious disaster—has been forced into no ignominious retreat. He is virtually nearer to Richmond than when his outposts were within three or four miles of the city. McClellan may now congratulate his soldiers and his countrymen upon having accomplished the greatest and the most successful operations of the war."

Married.

In the A. M. E. Church, New Bedford, Mass., July 9th, by Rev. William W. Grimes, Mr. John Oliver, of Philadelphia, Pa., to Miss Elizabeth King, formerly of Washington, D. C.

The church was crowded to its utmost capacity. A breathless stillness prevailed. The ceremony being over, the happy couple retired to their beautiful mansion, where a great many friends followed them, and partook of the good things of life, which flowed in abundance.

May the Lord bless them with long life, health, wealth and prosperity

Died.

GALE—Mr. Anne Gale, the son of Mr. James and Mrs. Elizabeth Gale, formerly of Philadelphia, departed this life in the city of Boston on the 7th instant, in the bosome of his affectionate parents, aged 22 years and 2 months.

That slow but fatal disease, consumption, caused him to linger about five months, prostrating him after five weeks. The happy spirit took its flight to dwell amidst the sanctified in the kingdom of glory. We can but admire in this dear young brother the victory gained over death, hell and the grave, through the blood of the Lamb.

He satisfied his parents and friends around him that there is a divine reality in the religion of Jesus Christ, and that that only can give tranquility in the dying hour.

On Sabbath, prior to his death on the following morning, he said to his sister, "What shall I tell little Sis when I get home to heaven? I shall seen brothers. By the help of God, I'll be there soon." On Monday, while his mother was weeping, Anna said, "Weep not, mother, but pray. My Saviour will comfort you. I want you to help me sing." He sang by himself the hymn—

"Jesus can make a dying bed Feel soft as downy pillows are," after which he said, "I want you all to meet me in heaven. I shall soon be there—glory be to God!" He then said, "Help me to sing"—

"There is rest for the weary," &c.

He then reclined in the arms of Mrs. Keim, and said, "Sweet Jesus, take me—sweet Jesus, take me." Jesus did.

He was buried on Wednesday, the 9th. Rev. Mr. Grimes and Rev. J. Mitchell, both of Boston, performed the services, and laid him in the cold grave.

Oh! my son! while we deplore our loss, we know that it is your infinite gain. We hope to meet you where no farewell tear is shed. Yes, my dear brother, I shall meet you in that glorified state.

"When shall we meet again,
Meet ne'er to sever?
When shall love wreath her chain
Round us forever?

There joy will fill each heart,
And we shall never part
In that bright world of joy;
Never—no, never."

Boston, Mass., July 14, 1862.

Little Eddy Jackson, son of the late Rev. William Jackson, departed this life on the 20th ultimo, in Bensalem, Pa.

We received a note from his mother apprising us of the fact.—Ed

ADVERTISEMENTS.

"UNION COTTAGE,"

ATLANTIC CITY, NEAR THE INLET.

The subscriber will always be happy to welcome her numerous friends, and the public in general.

TERMS.

Board per week,	$6 00
" " day,	1 25
Single meals,	50

S. H. Wailes, Proprietress

NOTICE.

To the friends of Religious Literature and human progress of the City and County of Philadelphia:

This certifies that Miss Mary Still is a legally authorized agent for the City and County of Philadelphia, Penna., to solicit subscribers and donations for the Christian Recorder of the African Methodist Episcopal Church of America.

We, therefore, take great pleasure in recommending Miss Still to the citizens and friends as a lady every way worthy of such a position, as well as trustworthy, and we do hope, as the enterprise is commendable that those to whom she may present this writing will not turn her away without either subscribing or contributing to this great cause

(Signed) Elisha Weaver,
Editor & General Book Steward.
No. 619 Pine St., Phila.

BOARDING
IN BROOKLYN.

MRS. S. PLANT (formerly Richardson) respectfully announces that she has opened a first-class BOARDING & LODGING HOUSE at No. 97 HIGH STREET, Brooklyn—where she is prepared to accommodate the public on the most reasonable terms.

Her house being located in a very pleasant part of the city, and within five minutes' walk of Fulton Ferry, is made thus a very desirable and convenient place.

BOARDING.

Mrs. AMIA WILLIAM, of Cape May, will open the Bonaker House for the season, for the accommodation of all who wish to spend the season there, and she will spare no pains to make all comfortable. Those wishing to spend one, two, or three days, will find the Bonaker House the right spot. Prices very reasonable. Cape

COAL, STOVES, &c., &c.

The subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has taken the store,

NO. 107 NORTH FIFTH STREET,

formerly occupied as the Anti-Slavery Office, (where he has been engaged for the last fourteen years,) to occupy it henceforth as a place of business for the sale of

COAL, STOVES, &c

Having made arrangements with one of the first Coal Dealers in the city, to furnish the best qualities of Lehigh, respectfully, &c., at the lowest cash prices, he hopes to give [illegible] satisfaction in the branch of his business

He will also keep constantly on hand a general assortment of good NEW and SECOND-HAND STOVES, FURNACES, &c.

Persons wishing Stoves taken down, stored away, put up, repaired, can be promptly accommodated by applying as above.

He hopes by energy and strict attention to business to obtain a fair share of patronage.

WM STILL,
107 North Fifth Street, Philadelphia

REFERENCES.

J M M'Kim,	Dr Caspar Wistar,
Benjamin Coates,	James Mott,
Lucretia Pennell,	Thomas Wistar,
Prof C D Cleveland,	W H Furness.

PERRY & FITZGERALD'S

PROCESS FOR MAKING LIGHT, NUTRITIOUS, AND UNADULTERATED BREAD, WITHOUT FERMENTATION

The new process of breadmaking, patented by Perry & Fitzgerald, removes all the objections which have hitherto rendered it impossible to manufacture perfectly pure sweet and nutritious bread. The entire process is performed by mechanical means, and is eminently cleanly.

The persons employed in mixing the flour in a closed vessel, and the application of pure carbonic gas, under pressure, by which the dough is made thoroughly light, and ready to be discharged into pans, for baking, in the brief space of fifteen or twenty minutes. The "change" is merely the words, and easy machine requires the operation, in all its details, from the putting in of the flour to the discharging of the dough, in from twenty five to forty minutes.

The Invention of Perry & Fitzgerald effects a revolution in the preparation of bread, by establishing a system of bread-making that is not subject to the tribulations and evils of fermentation, but is sure and certain in its results. It is now, by the substitution of mechanical for manual labor, and by the superior quality of the article produced, in possession large profits upon the capital employed. It requires much less capital and much less employment of capital as well as the profits afforded by the patent, gives adequate security against competition. But whilst preventing undue competition in the business of the sale of a monopoly, because it leaves the consumer at all times in possession of his former means of supply, to be resorted to, should the monopoly become prejudicial.

The application of pure carbonic acid gas, under pressure, to a mechanically kneaded dough-mass, as in the invention of Perry & Fitzgerald, did not occur to Dr. Ure; though he seems to have had a clear foreshadowing of the importance of the artificial use of the gas, since he stated, hypothetically, that "if water highly impregnated with carbonic acid gas, be used in kneading the dough the resulting bread will be somewhat spongy. Could a light article be manufactured, it would be very fine, as the sugar would remain undecomposed, the bread would be so much the sweeter and more nourishing."

What, in Dr. Ure, was evidently a clearly comprehended chemical truth, has been practically developed by the brilliant invention of Perry & Fitzgerald. Posterity will hold their names in grateful remembrance, as among the most eminent benefactors of mankind

ITS SUPERIORITY.—The superiority of unfermented bread is by no means new. Dr Cullen, who wrote more than seventy years ago, says:—

"In Scotland, nine tenths of the lower class of people, and that is the greater part of the whole, live upon unfermented bread; and in unfermented farinaceous in other forms; and there are not a more healthy people anywhere to be found. In the course of fifty years, that I have practised among them, I have had occasion to [illegible] this, and have hardly met with a disease of any consequence, that I could impute to the use of unfermented bread."

At a later period, Professor Thompson, of Glasgow, in his work on the "Food of Animals," after alluding to the facts referred to above by Dr. Cullen, and other kindred facts, observes:

"Such, then, being sufficient evidence in favor of the wholesome nature of unfermented bread, it becomes important to inquire in what respects it differs from fermented bread. The result produced by the latter period, Professor Thompson states, is to increase the expansion (fermentation) may be considered, to be merely the expansion of the particles of which the loaf is composed, so as to render the mass more readily divisible by the preparatory organs of digestion. But, as this object is gained in a certain degree by the introduction of the gas, it becomes a matter of interest to ascertain the amount of the loss sustained in the process."

The result of Professor Thompson's experiments showed a difference in favor of unfermented bread of nearly seven per cent over that made by the ordinary process. In other words, there was a loss of over one fifteenth of the nutritive properties of the flour, which by the process of fermentation, was driven into the air and lost.

We come now to a more particular consideration of the superiority of the bread made without fermentation, or the use of chemical agents, over the bread made by those processes. Although, as it appears, even the bread made by these processes, although, as it appears, even the bread made by these processes, although what has already been said, this superiority appears in most vivid contrast, yet the public will by better satisfied to have the points stated specifically, for it only needs that the advantages secured by this method be clearly understood in order to its universal introduction in the manufacture of Bread.

I. Its Cleanliness.—Instead of the dough being mixed by the naked hands or feet of the bread from the moment of the flour to the completion of the baking is not and scarcely can be touched by any one. "One desirable attribute in its manufacture," says Dr Willard Parker, "is its extreme cleanliness. Save De Worsbury, the process is not only purely scientific, but preeminently cleanly."

II. Its Preservative of all the Different Principles of the Flour.—As the raising of the dough is by the mechanical introduction of pure carbonic acid gas, under pressure, in a closed vessel, it takes a perfect vehicle or sponge nature. All the constituents of the flour remain wholly unchanged while the process of raising bread by fermentation loss highly exercises some of them, as has been already shown.

III. Its Certain Character.—Bread made by the New Process is uniformly light, sweet, and nutritious. The conditions being simple, and not liable to variation, no failure can occur in always producing bread of the same quality. It retains its moisture proceeding bread of the same quality. It retains its moisture proceeding bread of the same quality. It retains its moisture much longer than fermented bread, and may be eaten warm with impunity. The process also insures a perfect freedom from all acidity, even in the hottest weather. Says the London Times:—

"The objectionable consequences of fermentation being avoided, the constituents of the flour are left both unchanged and unconcentrated, the resulting loaf being absolutely pure."

IV. Its Wholesomeness.—Being free from the deleterious substance which are the product of fermentation, or chemical operations, by the old method, the bread made by the New Process is easy of digestion, and agrees with the most delicate stomach. "To dyspeptics," says Dr Dick, late of the N. Y. Medical College, "it will be invaluable, as they will be able to eat it when the fermented manufactured bread has been found to have equally failed as an article of diet. Save the Loaf—Medical Times and Gazette.

"Since the introduction of the new unfermented bread, there have already been received from members of the medical profession, who have recommended it in their practice, as well as from those who have experienced its beneficial influences, accounts of the really astonishing results that have followed its use in cases of deranged digestion and constipation. Many cases have also been reported by medical men of phthisis, in which certain distressing forms of dyspepsia, which had remained intractable under every kind of treatment, have yielded as if by magic, almost immediately after adopting the use of the unfermented bread.

"The beneficial effects of the new bread are attributable to two causes. The one to the absence of the projectile matters imparted in ordinary bread by the presence of fermentation; and the other to the presence in the bread unchanged, of those elements which are the essential agents of digestion and assimilation."

The most eminent members of the medical profession, both in Great Britain and in the United States, not only speak in the highest terms of the use with which it is digested, and of its rich, nourishing qualities, but especially of its peculiar palatableness, and wonderful keeping properties. The absence of acidity and other strong flavors, which, in a greater or less degree, are characteristic of fermented bread, renders the new bread peculiarly delicate to the taste

V. Its Rapidity and Economy.—By the use of mechanical means, instead of manual labor, a barrel of flour is converted into baked loaves in forty five minutes; whereas, by the ordinary process, four or five hours are occupied in the formation of the "sponge," and a further time in kneading, rolling, and baking the dough.

"The steadiness of the consumption of bread," says a correspondent of the Journal of the Society of Arts, "renders it an article particularly suitable to be prepared and supplied by a public company; and since the new process reduces all the circumstances of manufacture, and the expense of the machinery given a comparative monopoly, the supply of bread in general as soon in the same category with gas, water, or other articles of prime necessity."

VAN RIPER & CAMP,
EXCLUSIVE MANUFACTURERS,
Corner of Broad and Buttonwood Streets,
PHILADELPHIA.

THE FOLLOWING ENDORSEMENTS OF

SPALDING'S

CEPHALIC PILLS,

WILL CONVINCE ALL WHO SUFFER FROM

HEADACHE,

THAT A

SPEEDY AND SURE CURE IS

WITHIN THEIR REACH.

As these Testimonials were unsolicited by Mr Spalding, they afford unquestionable proof of the efficacy of this truly scientific discovery.

Madisville, Conn., Feb. 3, 1861.

Mr. Spalding
Sir:
I have tried your Cephalic Pills, and I like them so well that I want you to send me two dollars' worth more.
Part of these are for the neighbors, to whom I gave a few out of the first box I got from you.
Send the Pills by mail, and oblige
Your obt Servant,
JAMES KENNEDY.

Haverford, Pa., Feb. 6, 1861.

Mr. Spalding.
Sir:
I wish you to send me one more box of your Cephalic Pills. I have received a great deal of benefit from them.
Yours, respectfully,
MARY ANN STOKHOUSE.

Spruce Creek, Huntingdon Co., Pa., January 18, 1861.

H. C. Spalding
Sir:
You will please send me two boxes of your Cephalic Pills. Send them immediately.
Respectfully yours,
JNO. B. SIMONS.

P. S. I have used one box of your Pills, and find them excellent.

Belle Vernon, Ohio, Jan. 15, 1861.

Henry C. Spalding, Esq
Please find enclosed twenty-five cents, for which send me another box of your Cephalic Pills. They are truly the best Pills I have ever tried.
Direct A. STOVER, P. M.
Belle Vernon, Wyandot Co., O.

Beverly, Mass., Dec. 11, 1860.

H. C. Spalding, Esq
I wish for some circulars or large show bills, to bring your Cephalic Pills more particularly before my customers. If you have anything of the kind, please send to me.
One of my customers, who is subject to severe Sick Headache, (usually lasting two days,) was cured of an attack in one hour by your Pills, which I sent her.
Respectfully yours,
W. D. WILKES

For the Christian Recorder

ALGER'S PRONOUNCING BIBLE.

922 Pages, Octavo. Price—$1 25. With Metrical Psalms, One dollar and Thirty-nine cents.

Published by WILLIAM S. YOUNG,
1021 Race Street, Phila

Or, Wm. S Rentoul, 20 St. Clair Street, Pittsburgh.

THE TRUE PSALMODY,
OR
The Bible Psalms the Church's only Manual of Praise

Prepared under the inspection of the Ministers and Elders of the United and Reformed Presbyterian Churches in Philadelphia. 18mo. pp. 240. Price—40 cents.

☞ Any individual sending forty cents, in postage stamps or otherwise, will receive a copy by mail post paid. Address WILLIAM S. YOUNG, Publisher, 1021 Race Street, Phila.

Advertisements.

THE DAUGHTERS OF HOPE GRAND UNION Temperance Society met, it being the thirteenth convention, April 10th, 1861. Representatives from Lodges are as follows:

From Garnet Union No 4, D. of T.; from Phœnix Union, No. 5, D. of T.; from Northern Union, No. 16, D. of T.; Webb's Union, of Chambersburgh, Pa.; from Dr Bias' Union, of Carlisle, Pa.; from Mount Olive Union, No. 19 D. of T.; from Vanbrunt Union, No. 15, D. of T., of Norristown, Pa

Officers installed to their several positions are as follows

Grand P., Sister Bennet; Grand Associate, Sister Berrus; Grand Treasurer, Sister Faucett; Grand Conductress, C. Thompson; Grand Sentinel, A. E. Dukhart; Grand Chaplain Sister Hall

G. P. P.,	Sister K. Rogers,	G. P. P.	Sister Anderson,
"	" E. Bowen,	"	" J. F. Black,
"	" M. H. Burney,	"	" E. A. Clark,
"	" S. Newman,	"	" White,
"	" S. Davis,	"	" B. Hall.

THE DAUGHTERS OF CORNISH SOCIETY.

The Stated Quarterly Meetings of the Society are held on the first Wednesdays of February, May, August, and November.

The meetings of the Board are held on the Wednesday previous to the regular stated meetings of the society.

Mrs. Sarah Carter,
President.
Mr. L. R. Seymour, Sec'y.

THE BOOK DEPOSITORY
OF THE
AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH,
No. 619 Pine Street,
PHILADELPHIA.

We keep on hand, in connection with our other books Sabbath School books of various kinds. Question Books Catechisms, Nos. 1, 2, and 3. We have a good assortment of such books as are generally used in the Public Schools. Also, Stationery, Inks, Pens, Paper, Envelopes and Blank Books.

THE DEATH-BED OF THE REV. JOHN WESLEY

Wanted Canvassing Agents for this splendid work—certainly will sell to every family—a history of that great and good man. The most liberal inducements offered to those selling this period. Send for Catalogue and Instructions

W. M. SMITH, Publisher,
No 8 South Third Street Philadelphia

WANTED.—The charge of a Public School. Reference as to ability can be given. Apply to
J. W. A., 1041 Belmuth St.

ONE-PRICE CLOTHING,
OF THE LATEST STYLES,

Made in the Best Manner, expressly for RETAIL SALES Lowest Selling Prices marked in Plain Figures All [illegible] to cheer warranted satisfactory. Our One-Price System is strictly adhered to. All are thereby treated alike. JONES & CO.,
Dec23-1y 604 Market Street

GOOD NEWS

To Tailors, Dress makers, and to those wishing to be such. Also, to owners of sewing machines, stores—new, and large families—for in one day's printed directions which any Machine hawker can learn in and used 84 perfectly. Ladies' Dresses, Boys' and Men's Pants, Vests, Jackets, Sack and other coats.

Local and Travelling Agents Wanted.

Address Rev. W. M. Bradley,
Carversville, Bucks Co., Pa
(or, apply to Mrs Mary C. Weaver, wife of the Editor of this paper, 610 Pine St., Lancaster, Pa. June 1y

MRS. E. A. PALMER'S

DRY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS STORE.

NO. 105 NORTH FIFTH STREET.
PHILADELPHIA

A General Assortment of Hosiery, Trimmings, Dry Goods, &c

Dress, Shirt making, and Plain Sewing, promptly attended to. Jan12 1y

COAL! COAL!! COAL!!!

The subscriber is selling the best qualities of Lehigh and Schuylkill Coal at the following very low prices

Lehigh Pluto Coal, per ton,	$4 25
" Egg " "	4 25
" Broken and Screened, per ton,	4 25
" Nut " "	4 00
Schuylkill, Pluto, and Egg, and Broken, and Screened,	4 25
Nut,	3 50

Orders left at the Store, No. 107 North Fifth St., will be promptly attended to. WM STILL.
Jan15—1y 107 N. Fifth St., Philada.

MEELY'S PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY
N. W. corner Fifth and Coates.

Picture Gallery and Frames on the First Floor.

Strangers should not fail to call and examine.

Admission Free.

JAMES DOWNS,
DEALER IN
NEW AND SECOND HAND
CLOTHING,
No 226 South Second Street,
No. 17—3mo. PHILADELPHIA.

WILLIAM STILL'S
STOVE STORE,
107 NORTH FIFTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

The subscriber would respectfully inform his friends and all in want of good stoves, that he has now on hand a general variety of excellent PARLOR, COOK and CHAMBER STOVES, including Gas burning, as well as other patterns, which he is selling at very low rates. He buys entirely for cash, of the best wholesale founders, and of course can sell much cheaper than those buying on the usual credit system. At any rate his friends are invited to give him a call and examine for themselves before purchasing elsewhere, as he feels that they would be convinced that it would be to their interest to give him their patronage. Coal orders constantly on hand. WM STILL

JOSEPH H. COLE,
CONTINENTAL RESTAURANT,
NO. 717 LOMBARD STREET, PHILA,
(Above Seventh St., under Philadelphia Institute,)

Where he continues to keep always on hand the very best assortment of OYSTERS and other refreshments—hoping that all his friends and the public in general will favor him with their patronage.

☞ Meals served at all hours. Families supplied with Oysters of the best quality and flavor at the shortest notice

☞ Also, public and private waiting done on the most reasonable terms. 1y

Mrs. S. Shorter Hawkins
HAS NOW OPENED
NEW SPRING GOODS,

consisting of Delaines, Brilliants, Calicoes, &c Hoop Skirts of all sizes, from 15 cents to $1 25. A large lot of linen Hdkfs., from 8 to 25 cents. Also, cheap Hosiery and Gloves.

N. B.—Mantuamakers are invited to examine my assortment of Dress trimmings of the latest styles; all will be sold cheap for cash at the Old Establishment,
615 Lombard Street

THOMAS CHARNOCK,
GENERAL FURNISHING UNDERTAKER,
No. 427 SOUTH 6TH ST.,
Second Door Below Bethel Church

Hearse and carriages, with every requisite for the business, furnished at the shortest notice and on the most reasonable terms

T. C. having purchased the right to Hood's patent coffin screw, is also prepared to furnish it in connection with the business. March 1

For the Christian Recorder

BUCKS COUNTY, SS. TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS MAY COME.

I, the subscriber, a Justice of the Peace, in and for the county of Bucks, do hereby certify that I am acquainted and know Emily Johnson, formerly Rodney, who was married to Samuel Johnson, who was married before William Hawk, Esq., of Bristol, Bucks County, as appears by record on his docket; and after careful examination and mature reflection, I feel myself fully safe in saying that the said Johnson had a wife living at the time he married the said Emily Rodney; and I further say that I have the evidence of Daniel Simmons, (local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church) Charles Emmons, (Class leader) and Benjamin Cummings, (who is exhorter) that he had one or more wives living at the time he married the said Emily Johnson; and the evidence, on affirmation of the said Emily Johnson, that he had a wife

HOW ANCIENT BALLADS ARE MANUFACTURED

Of the way in which ancient ballads have come into existence, there is one sad example within my own knowledge. Some small young wags wishing to test the critical powers of an experienced collector, sent him a new made ballad which they had been enabled to secure only in a fragmentary form. To the surprise of its fabricator, it was duly printed; but what naturally raised his surprise to astonishment, and revealed to him a secret, was that it was no longer a fragment, but a complete ballad—the collector, in the course of his industrious inquiries among the peasantry, having been so fortunate as to recover the missing fragments. It was a case where neither could say anything to the other. The ballad has been printed in more than one collection, and admired as an instance of the inimitable simplicity of the genuine old versions.

The Book Hunter by John Hill Burton

LEARNING BY TRANSLATING.

Cicero acquired his wonderful command of the Latin language, his copia verborum, by translating Greek into Latin. William Pitt, with the same object in view, devoted ten years to the translation of Latin in English. He regarded words as his tools, the weapons with which he was to arm himself. Rufus Choate pursued his plan of translation through his whole life. For every Latin, Greek, French, or German word, he endeavored to find five or six corresponding English words. "This exercise," says his biographer, "he persevered in daily, even in the midst of the most arduous business. Five minutes a day, if no more, he would seize, in the morning, for his task. Tacitus was his favorite author for this purpose, and Plautus. 'Cicero,' he said, 'though noble, could be too easily rendered into cheap and common English; and it is a rich and rare English which one ought to command who is aiming to control a jury's ear.'"

ANIMAL REMAINS HARMLESS.

Most readers of Charlotte Bronte's works have probably felt that the Haworth churchyard, while it added to the melancholy tendencies of the family, had also a pernicious influence on their health. The conviction is a common one, that a residence in the vicinity of a graveyard is likely to be an unhealthy. But a writer in the Louisville Journal, who seems to have given large observation to the matter, says that putrescent animal matter never occasions sickness. We extract a few paragraphs:

All human experience teaches that accumulations of vegetable filth, if moist, under the domination of a daily mean temperature of 60 degrees Fahrenheit, will produce sickness. If the filth remains, and is moist, and the daily mean temperature increases, the pestilence widens and deepens its ravages. There never has been, and never will be a departure from these truths. Every spot on the earth, where the conditions which we have named existed, has produced severe sickness, and the conditions will always produce it.

There is no instance in human history where a pestilence has been produced by the decay of animal matter. Medical records are full of impressive and instructive facts on this point. Take, for example, the butchers of Louisville. They live in such close proximity to one another, that the locality is called Butchertown. Their slaughter-houses are near their dwellings; glue manufactories, and other disagreeable establishments abound in the locality, and the summer's breath is loaded with the offensive odours of putrid animal matter. The butchers live among those odours through the day, and sleep among them at night; yet there is not a more healthy class of people in this city.

An old graveyard in the heart of the city of Paris emitted such odours, that it was determined by the authorities to remove the dead bodies. This was done in hot weather, but, although twenty thousand bodies in all stages of putrefaction were thus removed, no fever or pestilence was produced. Some of the workmen were knocked down by the overpowering odour, but the effect was momentary.

During an epidemic fever in Spain, in 1800, there were buried in Seville ten thousand bodies in one burying ground, and twelve thousand in three others. In Cadiz, also, equally extensive burials occurred, and in the spring the earth cracked open, and emitted the most noisome odours. The churches were filled with these odours, but there was no epidemic in either city, nor any sickness traceable to this putrefaction.

GEOLOGICAL WONDER.

About thirty years ago, somebody made the discovery that the ice fields of Siberia contained immense numbers of fossils of elephants and mastodons. Where they came from, or how they got there, is a problem which perhaps may never be solved; their existence, however, was no chimera, and as ivory is one of the most valuable commodities of trade in all nations, some utilitarian Englishmen conceived the idea of turning these vestiges of a former epoch to a profitable account. Accordingly, about the year 1836, Thompson, Bonner & Co., a rich London firm, fitted out an expedition to seek for ivory in the Siberian ice Novel and incredible as it seemed, the expedition was crowned with complete success. The ships returned to England richly laden with the choicest ivory; and even to the present time, although the world knows little about it, the ivory market is mainly supplied from the ice fields of Siberia.

ANECDOTE OF THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.

He had become partially deaf in one ear, and felt impatient under the infliction. All the legitimate skill and science in London were called on to remove the infirmity, but without effect. At last, Mr. Stephenson, the celebrated aurist, was recommended to the Duke as one who had been eminently successful in similar cases. The Duke sent for him. After trying, to no purpose, a less energetic method of treatment, Mr. Stephenson had recourse to his great remedy, namely, the injection by a syringe into the ear of a strong solution of caustic. "I don't think," the Duke used to say, "that I ever suffered so much in my life. It was not pain; it is something far worse. The sense of hearing became so acute that I wished myself stone-deaf. The noise of a carriage passing along the street was like the loudest thunder, and everybody that spoke seemed to be shrieking at the very top of his voice." We are not prepared to assign a reason for this unlooked for result of an experiment which had succeeded in many other instances; we only know the fact, and that the Duke, as was his wont, bore it all without manifesting any token that he was uncomfortable. He went out and came in as usual, and when he retired to bed none of his household suspected that there was anything wrong with him.

By great good fortune, Dr. Hume, his friend and family physician, who happened to be in attendance for other reasons, called next morning about eleven o'clock. He was shown into the Duke's room, and found him sitting at the table, unshaved and unwashed, with blood-shot eyes and a flushed cheek, and observed that when he rose he staggered like a drunken man. His whole appearance, indeed, to use Dr. Hume's expression, "was that of one who had not yet recovered from a terrible debauch." Now as Hume knew perfectly well that his illustrious patient never committed such debauches, he became greatly alarmed, and expressed himself so. "I fancy there is something wrong with my ear," was the Duke's reply; "I wish you would look at it." Hume did look at it. A furious inflammation was going on, which, had it been permitted to run its course for another hour, must have reached the brain. Hume ordered his patient immediately to bed, and sent off for Sir Henry Halford and Sir Astley Cooper. Vigorous remedies were at once applied, and the inflammation was arrested. But the sense of hearing on that side of the head was destroyed for ever.

We must not omit the sequel of this little tale. The grief and mortification of Mr. Stephenson when he heard of the results of his practice, knew no bounds. He hastened to Apsley House, and being admitted to the Duke's presence, expressed himself as any right-minded person, under the circumstances, would have done. But he was instantly stopped, though in the kindest manner. "Don't say a word about it; you acted for the best; it has been unfortunate, no doubt, for both of us, but you are not at all to blame." Grateful for this reception, Mr. Stephenson went on to say: "But it will be the ruin of me. Nobody will employ me any more when they hear that I have been the cause of such suffering and danger to your Grace." "Why should they hear any thing about it?" replied the Duke; "keep your own counsel, and depend upon it I won't say a word to any one." "Then your Grace will allow me to attend you as usual, which will show them that you have not withdrawn your confidence from me?" "No," replied the Duke, still kindly but firmly; "I can't do that, for that would be a lie." So strong, even in a case which made so common appeal to his generosity, was the Duke's love of truth. He would not act a falsehood any more than he would speak one.

ANECDOTE OF DR. JOHN BROWN.

When John Brown, D. D, first settled in Haddington, Scotland, the people of the parish gave him a warm and enthusiastic reception; only one of the members of that large church and congregation stood out in opposition to him. The reverend Doctor tried all the means in his power to convert the solitary dissenter to the unity of feeling which pervaded the whole body, but all his efforts to obtain an interview proved abortive. As Providence directed, however, they happened one day to meet in the street, when the Doctor held out his hand, saying—

"My brother, I understand you are opposed to my settling at Haddington?"

"Yes, sir," replied the parishioner.

"Well, and if it be a fair question, on what grounds do you object to me?"

"Because, sir," quoth he, "I don't think you are qualified to fill so eminent a post."

"That is opinion," replied the Doctor; "but what, sir, is the use of you and me setting up our opinions in opposition to a whole parish?"

The brother smiled, and their friendship was sealed forever. How very true is it that "A soft answer turns away wrath."

PITT'S LAST SPEECH.

On the 9th of November, 1805, about three months before his death, (January 23d, 1806,) Pitt went to the Lord Mayor's banquet at Guildhall. On that day the Prime Minister's popularity shone forth with even more than its former splendor. As his carriage proceeded down Cheapside, the multitude took off the horses, and, amidst thunders of acclamation, drew him in triumph to the hall. At the banquet the Lord Mayor proposed his health, designating him "the Saviour of Europe." Rising with emotion, the gratified Minister said:—"I return you many thanks for the honor you have done me; but Europe is not to be saved by any single man. England has saved herself by her exertions, and will, as I trust, save Europe by her example." This was his entire reply; and it was the last speech he ever made in public. The Duke of Wellington, in relating this to Lord Stanhope, called it "one of the best and neatest speeches he ever heard; he was scarcely up two minutes, yet nothing could be more perfect."

SCHEELE, the chemist, discoverer of chlorine and manganese, was a native of Sweden; and when Gustavus III. was in Paris, a deputation of the learned waited upon him to congratulate him on having so illustrious a subject. The king had never heard of him: but, ashamed of his ignorance, he immediately sent off a courier to say that Scheele was to be made a noble! "All very fine," said his prime minister, on receiving the despatch, "but who is Scheele?" A clerk in the Foreign Office volunteered information: "Very good fellow—captain in the artillery—great friend of mine—plays billiards divinely." The puzzled minister turned the captain into a count, and the mistake was not discovered till the king's return.

A SCOTTISH XANTIPPE.—James Ferguson and his wife led a cat-and-dog-life, and she is not once alluded to in the philosopher's autobiography. About the year 1750, one evening while he was delivering to a London audience a lecture on astronomy, his wife entered the room in a passion, and maliciously overturned several pieces of the apparatus, when all the notice Ferguson took of the matter was the observation to the audience:—"Ladies and gentlemen, I have the misfortune to be married to this woman."

THE most wonderful stories are related of the bravery of Kearney, who literally bears the character of a salamander. In the late battle he was to be seen with his one arm, and holding his bridle in his teeth, everywhere during the hottest of the fight. At one time he came very near to being taken at White Oaks Swamp. He was surrounded by no fewer than thirty of the rebels, but fairly cut his way through them, and asking them if they thought "he looked the kind of man to fall into their hands?" The men all love him for his undaunted bravery, but complain a little of his forgetting that everybody is not made of cast-iron like himself.

MR. JEFFREY, of the Edinburgh Review, was a little disgusted on his visit to the United States, soon after the peace, with the national vanity of the Americans; and he took no small pleasure in mortifying it. To a question put to him by Mr. Madison, "What did you think of the war, Mr. Jeffrey?" he coolly replied, "Upon my word, sir, I did not hear of it!"

A VIRGINIA paper says that among the excuses offered for exemptions from service in the rebel army, some are extremely ludicrous. In Smyth county, one man, in enrolling himself, wrote opposite his name, "One leg too short." The next man that came in, noticing the excuse, and deeming it pretty good, thought he would make his better, and wrote opposite his name, "both legs too short."

A LAWYER in one of the Western courts lately threw a book at another's head. The court required him to apologize. He did so, and added:—"While I am about it, I may as well apologize beforehand for throwing another book at him the first chance I get."

A LADY, very fond of her husband, notwithstanding the ugliness of person, once said to Rogers, the poet, "What do you think—my husband has laid out fifty guineas for a labour on purpose to please me." "The dear little man," replied Rogers, "it's just like him."

A BUSINESS MAN'S MOTTO

The excavations at the buried cities of Pompeii, Herculaneum, Pozzeul and Capua, are going on with renewed vigor, under the stimulus of an appropriation of money for the purpose from the Italian Government. Heretofore Naples had the work under its exclusive care and control. At Pompeii new frescoes have been discovered, and there is an inscription on the wall of what was probably a work-shop of some kind, as follows: 'Otiosis hic locus non est. Discede, Morator.' This may be translated, "This place is not for the lazy. Loafer depart." This inscription is as good for industrial establishments of modern times, as it was for those of ancient Pompeii. Its discovery is interesting from the fact that it shows that human nature was the same eighteen centuries ago in Italy as it is now in America; that there were lazy folks and loafers who would intrude into work-shops, and waste the time of divert the attention of the workmen; and that it became necessary to put up inscriptions, giving a general warning to all such to depart.

TALKS ABOUT HEALTH.

By Dio Lewis, M. D.

WHOLES NEAT THE SKIN, AND TOTAL ABSTINENCE IN HOT CLIMATES.

The other day I met an intelligent medical man, just returned from Port Royal. He had lived much in hot climates. The health of our army deeply interested him. Several persons on their way to the South had asked him, "How can we preserve our health during the summer?" I listened with the deepest interest to his reply, and believing it full of sound practical wisdom, and applicable to this latitude during the present heated term, I give it publicity.

The doctor said, I will give you a few rules, which, faithfully observed, will protect you against the fevers, dysentery, and other diseases of hot climates.

1st. Don't touch a drop of alcoholic stimulus, and avoid the excessive use of ice water.

2d. Eat very little or no meat, but use freely coarse bread and the fruits of the country. Tea and coffee may be drunk in small quantities, if made quite weak.

3d. Bathe all over, at least once a day; sleep in well-ventilated apartments; retire early, and sleep long. Straw makes the best bed. It is not well to sleep in the same garment, next the skin, which has been worn during the day

4th. And most important of all, wear woolen next the skin! It may be hard to learn; you may, at first, be obliged to provide yourself with very thin, soft flannel, but you must persevere. If symptoms of bowel disease appear, wrap an extra piece of flannel around the bowels.

5th. You must keep up your exercise. Although it may increase your discomfort for the moment, it will greatly enhance your power to resist the heat. The farmer in the harvest-field suffers much less than the fine lady in her parlor, although his temperature may be thirty degrees higher. Brisk exercise of the right kind and amount is a wonderful protector against the influence of heat. No one so surely falls a victim to a hot climate as he who lives high, drinks brandy, and sits constantly in the shade, fanning himself.

ADVANTAGES OF TEMPERANCE.

Solomon tells us that the glutton shall come to poverty; warns us not to be among riotous eaters of flesh, and even bids us to put a knife to our throats if we be men given to appetite. Is there no less desperate remedy?

Lord Byron once told a companion that if some demi-god would dictate to us how much we ought to eat it would put an end to half the miseries of the race

Jonathan Edwards we see noting in his diary: "I find that I cannot be convinced in the time of eating, that to eat more would be to exceed the bounds of temperance, though I have had two years' experience of the like, and yet, three minutes after I have done, I am convinced of it. But yet again I overeat, thinking I shall be somewhat faint if I leave off then; but when I have finished, I am convinced of excess, and so it is from time to time. I have observed the more it seems to be the truth, when it is according to my inclination, than when otherwise."

Jefferson says that "no man ever repents eating too little."

Sir Isaac Newton often dined on a penny's worth of bread

Abernethy cured his indigestion and regained his flesh by "going into the country, where he could get good milk and eggs, and living upon three ounces of baked custard taken three times a day, with no drink but ginger-water. On this quantity of food he regained his flesh, and uniformly got better.

Marion and his men waxed strong and valiant with no food but sweet potatoes, no drink but water, and no shelter but the sky

"Besides brown bread, the Greek boatmen subsist almost solely on their native fruits, figs, grapes, and raisins. They are the most nimble, active, graceful, cheerful even merry people in the world."

Grant Thornburn attributes his cheerful old age to the fact that he "never eats enough," and thousands of his countrymen are wearing out their bodies not so much by the excess of business or multiplicity of cares, as by the overwork they crowd upon themselves in digesting surplus and unnecessary food.

Family Circle.

THE SPIDER AND THE FLY.

"Will you walk into my parlor?"
Said a spider to a fly;
"'Tis the prettiest little parlor
That ever you did spy.
The way into my parlor
Is up a winding stair,
And I have many pretty things
To show when you are there."
"Oh, no, no!" said the little fly,
"To ask me is in vain;
For who goes up your winding stairs
Can ne'er come down again."

"I'm sure you must be weary
With soaring up so high;
Will you rest upon my little bed?"
Said the spider to the fly.
"There are pretty curtains drawn around,
The sheets are fine and thin;
And if you like to rest awhile,
I'll snugly tuck you in."
"Oh, no, no!" said the little fly,
"For I've often heard it said,
They never, never wake again,
Who sleep upon your bed."

Said the cunning spider to the fly,
"Dear friend, what shall I do,
To prove the warm affection
I've always felt for you?
I have, within my pantry,
Good store of all that's nice;
I'm sure you're very welcome—
Will you please to take a slice?"
"Oh, no, no!" said the little fly,
"Kind sir, that cannot be;
I've heard what's in your pantry,
And I do not wish to see."

"Sweet creature," said the spider,
"You're witty and you're wise;
How handsome are your gauzy wings,
How brilliant are your eyes.
I have a little looking-glass
Upon my parlor shelf;
If you'll step in one moment, dear,
You shall behold yourself."
"I thank you, gentle sir," she said,
"For what you're pleased to say,
And bidding you good morning now,
I'll call another day."

The spider turned him round about,
And went into his den,
For well he knew the silly fly
Would soon be back again.
So he wove a subtle web,
In a little corner sly,
And set his table ready
To dine upon the fly.
He went out to his door again,
And merrily did sing,
"Come hither, hither, pretty fly,
With pearl and silver wing;
Your robes are green and purple,
There's a crest upon your head;
Your eyes are like the diamond bright,
But mine are dull as lead."

Alas! alas! how very soon
This silly little fly,
Hearing his wily flattering words,
Came slowly flitting by!
With buzzing wings she hung aloft,
Then near and nearer drew—
Thought only of her brilliant eyes,
And green and purple hue;
Thought only of her crested head—
Poor foolish thing! At last
Up jumped the cunning spider,
And fiercely held her fast.

He dragged her up his winding stair,
Into his dismal den,
Within his little parlor—but
She ne'er came out again!
And now, dear little children
Who may this story read,
To idle, silly, flattering words,
I pray you, ne'er give heed:
Unto an evil counsellor
Close heart and ear and eye,
And take a lesson from this tale,
Of the spider and the fly.

Mary Howitt.

MY GRANDMOTHER'S CAPS.

A TRUE STORY

In a beautiful home in dear New England dwells the beloved Grandmother of whom I write. More than threescore years have passed over her head, and still her steps are followed by the blessings of those whose lives are made happier by her acts of charity and kindness. A model of thrift and tidiness, it is woe indeed to the insane fly that ventures to intrude upon her premises, and she takes, even now, a worthy pride in the whiteness of her household linen.

It was on a beautiful afternoon of June, many years ago, that my Grandmother said to me, "My child, take these bits of lace, and run out under the trees where the grass is clean and nice, and spread them out carefully, that they may be bleached by the heavy dew."

How like yesterday it seems to me—the soft air as it came in through the open window, the sweet voices of the birds that sang in the tall trees, and the beauty of the varied landscape, as it lay bathed in the warm sunset glow, on the threshold of summer!

"Don't drop any of the pieces," said my Grandmother, for I was a heedless child. I promised care, and took the lace. I remember each bit—the round pieces for the crowns, the straight pieces for the top of the caps, and the yards of soft delicate border, which shaded the dear face everybody loved so well.

Selecting a little out-of-the-way place, where no cat or dog would wantonly step upon it, I stretched each piece carefully on the soft grass, and went to my play.

Several days had passed when my Grandmother said to me one morning, "Now you may go out and bring in my caps—by this time they must be quite white."

I hastened to do her bidding, but on reaching the spot where I had laid them, what was my surprise to find them gone—not a trace of them left! I ran back to the house and told the fact, which to all the family seemed quite unaccountable. We had none but honest neighbors, and knew of no mischievous cat or dog about which was known to have a taste for such delicate finery. On the whole, it was a mystery; and, as the time passed, when anything was lost about the house, and could not be accounted for, a common expression with the family would be, "It has gone with mother's caps."

One afternoon, late in the autumn, I stood by the window with my brother, watching the trees as they swayed to and fro in the chilly wind The sweet birds had all sung their good-by songs, and taken themselves to a warmer climate, for the winter was fast coming. We children were talking of the nice fun we would have when the beautiful snow came again, and we could coast and skate. Suddenly my brother exclaimed, "What do I see upon that tree, no white, like a feather?" Following his eye, I saw what appeared like a white ribbon or strip of cloth, as it fluttered in the wind seeming to grow larger as we watched it.

At last we called the aunts and Grandmother to look, but no one could decide what it could be "Well," said Ned, "I'll climb the tree, and then we shall know." So out he ran, and slowly but surely he drew himself up the tall slender trunk, and reaching the branches, he carefully dislodged a white bunch to which the streamer seemed to be attached, and placing it inside his jacket he began his descent. It was but the work of a moment to slide to the ground, and in another moment he was surrounded by an eager group, all wondering what he had found—Grandmother with spectacles and knitting-work as interested as any one

One look explained a long mystery; and with united voices we exclaimed, "Tis Grandma's caps at last!"—and sure enough, there in the shape of the nicest of all robins' nests, was the lace so long missing. The crown pieces were just the things for the bottom, the top pieces were laid around the sides, while the bit of white which had attracted our notice was but an end of the border, which with great care and dexterity was woven in for a kind of finishing touch to the whole. Bleeder twigs and bits of straw were glued together with the lace—making a really elegant and fanciful home for some ambitious robin, who had spent the summer in happy possession, with no idea that his property would be seized and appropriated so soon after his departure.

With great care the lace border was detached from the nest, and though unfitted for use, it was distributed for relics, a piece to each, and it was the sight of the bit in my mother's possession which brought back the incident to my mind

TWO FLIES.

Professors of religion, who are called to be saints, and who seem to be pillars in the house of the Lord, often compel us to think of what Solomon says of the dead flies in the ointment of the apothecary. One of these members lives not a thousand miles from where I am now writing. This brother is highly esteemed in the church, and "has a good report of them which are without." He has the reputation of being a Christian gentleman, and he is a gentleman in appearance. He patronizes a good tailor, and dresses with excellent taste. His hat and coat are kept well brushed, and he allows his boots to lack no blacking. He is "graced with polished manners," and in all his intercourse with the world is a model of affability and politeness. He meets his clerks in the morning with a pleasant smile, and is courteous and gentlemanly to every caller during the day. None of the vexations of business disturb his equanimity, and he even listens with saintlike patience to the angular and hard-visaged females who infest his office to solicit subscriptions to objects of charity of which he knows nothing, and into the merits of which he has no time to inquire. He refuses a favor with such blandness that the disappointed applicants go away blessing him in their hearts. This accomplished gentle-man is such a pink of politeness when from home that it seems a pity that he cannot live in the streets, eat at a restaurant, and sleep in his office. There are few comparatively who know it, but he is a churl and a tyrant in his own house. He generally comes home (unless accompanied by a friend) with a cloud upon his face that casts a gloom over the whole family circle. If to his wife and children there is ever any "music in his step," it is when that step carries him to the front door and into the street. The essential meanness of his nature asserts itself as soon as he is seated under his own vine and fig-tree. He is a chronic grumbler, and frets and scolds incessantly about the "house expenses." And he is apt to speak with special unction on this subject after having paid as much for his dinner at Crook & Doff's, Delmonico's, as his wife expends in providing a dinner for the family at home, consisting of herself, five children and two servants. He asks a blessing over his meals, and is careful to tell the Lord how thankful he is for the "good creatures provided by his bounty;" but the concluding "Amen" is hardly uttered before he is growling at his wife because there is nothing on the table that is fit to eat. He is sure that half the comfort of a man's life consists in having things cooked to suit him; but he, dear long-suffering soul, has ceased to hope for any such gratification. His poor dear mother was a housekeeper in her day—he can never forget her habits of industry and economy, but such things are not now to be looked for among women. He upbraids, sneers at, and snubs his wife, till she feels that it were better to be a kitchen drudge than the wife of such a "Roman." The man may be ignorant of the fact, but certainly in his alabaster box of ointment there is a dead fly of the largest size, whose odor is most unsavory.

The parfumery of another brother is spoiled by a fly of a different kind. No one can accuse him of being unkind or boorish in his family. He is a most devoted husband, and a more affectionate and indulgent father does not live. His wife and children fare sumptuously every day, and have all that heart could wish. The house in which they live is built with all modern improvements, and is richly furnished. It abounds in articles of virtu, costly books, and choice works of art. The children are provided with the best teachers, and educated without regard to expense. To this princely home friends are made welcome, and within its walls an elegant hospitality is dispensed. The proprietor of this establishment is a generous supporter of the church, and of the benevolent and philanthropic operations of the day. He gives cheerfully, liberally, and frequently. There are many admirable traits in his character, and but for a single defect he would be an excellent citizen and a good Christian. The misfortune in his case is that he is not strictly honest. His ideas of meum et tuum are all in confusion. He never steals a dollar in his life, yet many a thief who "steals to satisfy his soul when he is hungry," can make a better excuse for his offences than this eminent Christian can offer for certain of his practices. He seems to have determined once for all that he and his family must have the enjoyments and luxuries of life, whoever pays for them. If he can make or honestly obtain the means of securing these luxuries, well and good; if not, they must come from somewhere. In following out this plan, he evinces great ability. He has a real genius for running in debt. Falstaff's alacrity at sinking was nothing in comparison to it. He is ready to buy anything from a mouse-trap to a picture by one of the old masters, if he can obtain it on credit. I think it is Ben Franklin who says, "He that goes a-borrowing goes a-sorrowing," but the proverb does not apply to the present case It is the creditors of this brother who do the sorrowing; he evidently enjoys borrowing, and never troubles himself because his debts are not paid The cool assurance with which he will ask for credit, or solicit a loan of money, is so perfect as to be almost sublime. A story is told of a fellow who put up at a hotel and remained there for a whole year, without paying any board. At the expiration of that time the landlord said, "You must now pay or leave. I cannot afford to keep you any longer for nothing" With the air of an injured innocent, the guest replied, "You cannot afford to keep me any longer! and what kind of a man are you to be the proprietor of a hotel? I advise you to retire, and leave the business to some one who knows how to conduct it." I fancy this sponge must have been a near relative of the conspicuous brother whose case we are now considering. However this may be, it is evident that the dead flies have spoiled his vase of ointment.—Rev. R. M. Hatfield in the Independent.

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN SCHOOL GIRLS.

Anthony Trollope, in his new book on America, thus speaks of our school-girls: "I do not know any contrast that would be more surprising to an Englishman, up to that moment ignorant of the matter, than that which he would find by visiting, first of all a free school in London and then a free school in New York. The female pupil at a free school in London is, as a rule, either a ragged pauper or a charity girl; if not degraded, at least stigmatized by the badges and dress of the charity. We Englishmen know well the type of each, and have a faintly correct idea of the amount of education which is imparted to them. We see the result afterwards, when the same girls become our servants, and the wives of our grooms and porters. The female pupil of a free school in New York is neither a pauper nor a charity girl. She is dressed with the utmost decency. She is perfectly cleanly. In speaking to her, you cannot, in any degree, guess whether her father has a dollar a day or three thousand dollars a year. Nor will you be enabled to guess by the manner in which her associates treat her. As regards her own manner to you, it is always the same as though her father were, in all respects, your equal."

WHAT IS YOUR AIM?

A STORY FOR BOYS.

What is the aim of the little boys and girls who read this paper? Is it to store your minds with useful knowledge, and make wise and good men and women; or, is it to be drones in this great bee-hive of life, where so many paths of usefulness are daily opened up? Set your mark high, and aim at reaching it, and you will accomplish more than if you set a low mark and reached the highest point of it. To illustrate what I mean, I will relate the history of two boys, one of whom set his mark very high

Harry B., for that was the name of the ambitious boy, aimed at reaching a high mark, even if it were at the expense of much time and labor. Charles N., the careless boy, never aimed at any thing higher than beating a playmate at playing ball or marbles. Both of these boys attended the same Sabbath School, and also the same day school, so both enjoyed the same advantages in that respect. They were, however, very differently situated in regard to worldly circumstances. Charles was the son of very wealthy parents, and had all the advantages of wealth and position, (if such we may call them.) Harry was the only child of a poor, but pious and worthy widow, who earned her living by toiling with her needle. She spent nearly all she made in educating her boy; but she indulged the hope, that at some future period she would be amply repaid for the many sacrifices she made for him. He was an ambitious and diligent boy; and by strict attention to his studies, and correct deportment, he won the approbation of his teachers, and gained many warm and steadfast friends. After leaving school, Harry, by getting a recommendation from his teacher, and by the influence of some friends who were deeply interested in his welfare, obtained a situation as book-keeper in one of our large wholesale establishments. He received a very good salary, for the situation he held was one of trust and responsibility. By living savingly, and denying himself some of the luxuries in which most of the youth at the present day indulge, he managed to save as much as would put him through College.

After entering College, his instructors soon found that he was a youth of unusual talent, and destined to make a high mark in the world—

"Lives of all great men remind us,
We can make our lives sublime,
And, departing, leave behind us
Foot-prints on the sands of time."

He always stood number one in his class, and was far in advance of many who enjoyed superior advantages. When he graduated he took the highest honors of the Institution, and was the object of envy and jealousy among some of his classmates, but "diligence and perseverance will have their reward."

Harry always had a preference for the study of theology, and after going through his theological course, he was licensed to preach the gospel. He seemed peculiarly adapted for the mission work, and had all the qualifications for that important field

He was in due time appointed as a missionary to a far-distant land, where he is now engaged in preaching the everlasting gospel to the benighted heathen, and many who, a short time ago, were bowing down to stocks and stones are now, through his instrumentality, worshipping the one only living and true God.

O, that all the little boys and girls who read the EVANGELIST would set their mark high, and aim at reaching it! How amply that Christian mother was repaid for the many sacrifices she made on account of her worthy son! How many heathen will trace their conversion to the time when this young ambassador of Christ first proclaimed to them the "good news and glad tidings of salvation!"

But let us take a glance at the history of Charles N. A short time after he left school, he lost his parents. When he arrived at the proper age, he received into his own hands the large fortune left him by his parents. He indulged in many injurious vices, spent all his money, and in a short time was reduced to poverty.

He made many efforts to make a living, but his character was such that he lost the confidence of all his friends. After many unsuccessful attempts to get a situation, he broke the eighth Commandment, was tried and found guilty of theft, and sentenced to spend a term of years in a prison. The confinement added to the disgrace and remorse incident to a life in prison brought on a consumption which ended his life before he reached the prime of manhood. But most of all, he died without giving evidence of a change of heart, and was ushered into the presence of God, there to be judged according to the deeds done in the body.

O, that all the youthful readers of this history would take warning from the end and of this young man! Set your mark high, and place your trust in God, and never rest satisfied until you have reached the goal and won the prize

MENNIE.

Advertisements.

DR. J. GOODWILLIE,
DENTIST.
316 South Eleventh Street, below Spruce,
PHILADELPHIA.

SUPERIOR FRENCH CONFECTIONS,
MANUFACTURED BY
AUGUSTUS TILLMES, No. 1026 CHESTNUT ST.,
Put up neatly in 1 lb. and 5 pound boxes, without extra charge.
Also, A LARGE VARIETY OF RICH BONBONS, suitable for Holiday presents. A fine selection of Fruits and Guavas constantly on hand. A. TILLMES, 1026 Chestnut St.
Dec18-3m

PIANOS & MELODEONS.
The largest, most elegant, and cheapest stock in America, and on the most reasonable terms
All instruments sold subject to approval, guaranteed for two years
J. E. GOULD,
7th and Chestnut Sts., Philadelphia.

CATECHISMS PUBLISHED BY THE U. P. BOARD OF PUBLICATION.
Kept constantly on sale by Wm S. Rentzel, bookseller, 23 North Sixth Street, Philadelphia, at the following low rates for cash:
Brown's Catechism for young children, 75 cents per 100. (If mailed 25 cents more.)
Brown's two Catechisms mutually connected, (consisting of the Young Child's, and the brief exposition of the Shorter Catechism, pp. 36,) per dozen, 75 cents (If mailed, 12 cents more.)
The Assembly's Shorter Catechism, per 100, eighty cents. (If mailed, 25 cents more.)
Ditto, with short and easy Questions for children, large type; per 100, $1.25 (If mailed, 37 cents more.)
Ditto, with proofs to words of length, per 100, $2.50. (If mailed, 37 cents more.) per dozen, 35 cents (If mailed, 11 cents more.)
The New Proof Catechism, being the Assembly's Shorter Catechism, with Scripture Proofs, Explanatory Notes and Analysis, pp. 72, 75 cents per dozen (If mailed, 16 cents more;) single copy by mail post paid 8 cents. (If this Catechism, the editors of the Evangelical Repository say:—"We are very highly pleased with this publication of our friend. We are satisfied that it is the best publication of the kind with which we are acquainted. It should be used by parents with every children's family.
Patterson on the Shorter Catechism, per dozen, $2.50. (If mailed, 50 cents more.) Single copy, 25 cents. (If mailed, 7 cents more.)
Also, the following Catechisms, published by others
Brown's Exposition of the Shorter Catechism, with the Scripture Proofs in words at length, $1.50 per dozen (If mailed, 24 cents more.) single copy, mailed free, 10 cents
Mackenzie's Catechism, per dozen, 50 cents. If mailed, 10 cents more.) Single copy mailed free, 5 cents
Willson's Young Communicant's Catechism, per dozen, 75 cents, mailed free. Single copy by mail free, 8 cents
Thompson's Young Communicant's Catechism, 50 cents per doz., mailed free Single copy by mail free 5 cents
Also, Alexander's Words to Young Communicants, 25 cents. Single copy, (if mailed, 5 cents more.) Henry's Communicant's Companion, 50 cents. Single copy, (if mailed, 11 cents more.)
Orders for these works for the reformation Orders are respectfully solicited from congregations for all of the above
WM. S. RENTZEL, Bookseller and Importer,
my7 23 North Sixth St., Philada., Pa

TO THE READERS OF THE CHRISTIAN INSTRUCTOR

A CARD.

Having been sent to an Intermediate, hereafter, to obtain CLOTHING MADE CLOTHING AT REDUCED PRICES, and finding that many gentlemen could prefer their clothing MADE TO ORDER if they could secure at the same time REALLY FIRST CLASS STYLES, and at REALLY REASONABLE PRICES, we have, at the earnest solicitation of our patrons, organized, in connection with our stores to Ready Made Sales Rooms a complete CUSTOMER DEPARTMENT, in which the prominent features are,
1st. Fine and Medium Materials made up in First-Class Styles:
2d Unexceptional in Fitting Garments
3d PRICES FAR LOWER THAN HAS BEEN CUSTOMARY
4th A corps of the most celebrated cutters in this country
An extensive assortment of the choicest imported and domestic fabrics from the New York and Philadelphia markets, suitable for Coats, Pants, and Vests, always on hand
In our Ready Made Sales Rooms can always be found every variety and style of well made fashionable clothing Spring stock now ready PRICES MODERATE.
A visit is solicited
WANAMAKER & BROWN,
MERCHANT TAILORS AND CLOTHIERS,
"OAK HALL,"
S. E. Corner SIXTH AND MARKET STREETS.
ap 22-6t JAMES FERGUSON, Salesman

ESTABLISHED IN 1796.
McALLISTER AND BROTHER,
OPTICIANS,
No. 728 Chestnut Street,
PHILADELPHIA,
Nearly Opposite Masonic Hall,
(Lately removed from the old Stand, Chestnut St. above Second.)
Spectacles, Mathematical Instruments, Spy Glasses, Philosophical Apparatus of every kind, Thermometers Microscopes and Opera Glasses, Magic Lanterns, Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Pictures By Wholesale or Retail.
Catalogues furnished on application, and sent by Mail, Free of Charge. ly7

JOHN COCHRAN & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
Hosiery, Gloves and Fancy Dry Goods,
No. 12 NORTH FOURTH ST., ABOVE MARKET,
PHILADELPHIA.
Ribbons and White Goods, Undershirts and Drawers, Embroideries and Handkerchiefs, Watches and Jewelry, Combs, Brushes, &c.

KOLLOCK'S IMPROVED
DANDELION COFFEE.
Made from the best JAVA COFFEE, is recommended by physicians as a superior, nutritious beverage for General Debility, Dyspepsia, and all Bilious Disorders
Thousands who have been reluctantly compelled to abandon the use of Coffee will use this without injurious effects. One CAN contains the strength of two pounds of ordinary coffee. For sale at the N. E. corner of Broad and Chestnut, and all Druggists and Grocers, and by Dyott & Co., No. 232 North Second Street. Price, 25 cents.

$150 PER YEAR.
BELVIDERE SEMINARY.
WARREN COUNTY, NEW JERSEY.
One Hundred and Fifty Dollars will pay the Board and Tuition of a Young Lady for one year in this Institution
Its location, as regards beauty and health, cannot be surpassed. The Institution is equal to any of the highest order
A native French Teacher resides in the family.
Pupils received at any time, and charged accordingly.
Rev. J. ADDISON WHITAKER, A. M., Principal.
Miss DELIA A. SLOCUM, Vice-Principal
Nov 20-1y.

COOPERSTOWN SEMINARY.
M. C. FLACK, A. M., PRINCIPAL
Full Term opens August 28, 1862.
Pupils from a distance are expected to board in the institution, unless special arrangement is made with the Principal by the Parents or guardian Terms—for Board, Washing, Fuel, Furnished Room, and Tuition in Reading, Spelling, Composition, Declamation, Arithmetic, Grammar, and Geography $30, for term of fourteen weeks The above with higher English $35 with Latin and Greek, $40. Music, French, German, Ornamentals, Penmanship and Book Keeping, at low rates Payable invariably in advance. Pupils received at any time and charged from the time of entrance through the term. No deduction made when entering a week or two after term opens, or leaving before it closes, nor for absence during the term, except in cases of protracted sickness. For particulars, address the Principal —Jan 17 Cooperstown, Otsego Co., N. Y.

PURE WHOLESOME BREAD.
THE UNFERMENTED BREAD
Is the most pure, wholesome and nutritious BREAD that can be used
Its superior quality is certified by several hundred of our most prominent physicians, who use it exclusively.
Families supplied in all parts of the city, and the Bread is kept by all prominent grocers
W. R. CANE, Exclusive Manufacturer,
6t2—1y. Corner of Broad and Buttonwood Sts.

1862. 1862.
THE PENNSYLVANIA CENTRAL RAILROAD.
THE GREAT DOUBL

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Published by the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, for the Dissemination of Religion, Morality, Literature and Science.

Rev. Elisha Weaver, Editor. PHILADELPHIA, AUGUST 9, 1862. Vol. II.—No. 32.—New Series.—Whole No. 83.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

is published every Saturday on behalf of the

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,

BY

REV. ELISHA WEAVER,

General Book Steward,

No 819 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

Notice.—All letters and matters pertaining to the Book Concern or subscribers, sale of papers, and all moneys belonging to Book Concern or for paper, must be directed to Rev Elisha Weaver, Box No 4:38, Philadelphia, and all matters sent by express, and in our city, must be directed to E. Weaver, No 819 Pine st.

All articles or matter for the Christian Recorder, must be directed to E Weaver, Box No 4:38, Philadelphia.

TERMS.

Two Dollars a year, payable in advance. Single copies, five cents

ADVERTISEMENTS.

We solicit Advertisements of all descriptions, suitable for a re ligious newspaper, which will be published as follows:—

Cards or Advertisements, inserted for one year, provided they do not exceed eight lines, one dollars, paper included. or, eight dollars without the paper.—six months, for six dollars, paper included three months, four dollars,—one month, $1.50, paper in each case included

CORRESPONDING EDITORS OF CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Rev. J. P. CAMPBELL, Rev. A. W. WAYMAN,
" J. M. WILLIAMS, " E. T. WILLIAMS,
" G. H. GRAHAM, " C. BURCH,
Rev. L. RIDD.

Poetry.

OLD FOLKS

Ah, don't be sorrowful, darling,
And don't be sorrowful, pray;
Taking the year together, my dear,
There isn't more night than day.

'Tis rainy weather, my darling,
Time's waves they heavily run;
But taking the year together, my dear,
There isn't more cloud than sun!

We are old folks now, my darling,
Our heads they are growing gray;
But taking the year all round, my dear,
You will always find the May!

We have had our May, my darling,
And our roses long ago;
And the time of the year is coming, my dear,
For the silent night and the snow.

And God is God, my darling,
Of night as well as of day,
And we feel and know that we can go
Wherever he leads the way.

Ay, God of the night, my darling—
Of the night of death so grim,
The gate that leads out of life, good wife,
Is the gate that leads to Him

A LITTLE WHILE.

BY CH. ROMAN.

Beyond the smiling and the weeping,
I shall be soon,
Beyond the waking and the sleeping,
Beyond the sowing and the reaping,
I shall be soon
Love, rest and home!
Sweet home!
Lord, tarry not, but come.

Beyond the blooming and the fading,
I shall be soon;
Beyond the shining and the shading,
Beyond the hoping and the dreading,
I shall be soon.
Love, rest and home!
Sweet home!
Lord, tarry not, but come.

Beyond the rising and the setting,
I shall be soon;
Beyond the calming and the fretting,
Beyond remembering and forgetting,
I shall be soon
Love, rest and home!
Sweet home!
Lord, tarry not, but come.

Beyond the parting and the meeting,
I shall be soon;
Beyond the farewell and the greeting,
Beyond the pulse's fever beating,
I shall be soon
Love, rest and home!
Sweet home!
Lord, tarry not, but come.

Beyond the frost-chain and the fever,
I shall be soon;
Beyond the rock-waste and the river,
Beyond the ever and the never,
I shall be soon.
Love, rest and home!
Sweet home!
Lord, tarry not, but come.

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. Editor:—Through the goodness and mercy of a gracious Benefactor, it is my privilege to address you again, though I have nothing of such great importance to which I can call your attention. But I find since the Bishop question has been smothered up, there is quite a falling off among your contributors. I had not thought of the decrease in that respect, until my attention was called to it the other day by a distinguished gentleman of this city, who takes our paper. He remarked to me as follows:—"Mr. ———, I discover, since the Episcopal controversy has stopped in the Recorder, the literati of your people are lost for a subject; I wonder if controversy is not a peculiar forte among you?" I won't tell you how I felt, for I can't; but I faced it over as good as I could, and bid good evening.

I had the pleasure of attending the first Quarterly meeting of Rev. H. J. Rhoden, on last Sabbath, in Georgetown. Rev. James A. Handy delivered the 11 o'clock discourse, which was unquestionably one of the finest specimens of pulpit eloquence that we have had the honor of hearing for a long time.

It was announced on the previous Sabbath, that on Monday night last, 27th ult., the Rev. Amos G. Beman would lecture in Israel Church. The time appointed having arrived, Mr. Beman was on the spot; but there were not more than forty persons present. We were, of course, thrown into a great surprise as to where the people had gone, for Mr. Beman declared he could not lecture to so few. While waiting, with anxious hearts, for more to come in, a messenger arrived and spread the news like wild-fire, that at the Asbury M. E. Colored Church there was a great war meeting of the colored people. The house then adjourned, as no more were expected, and several of us went up to Asbury to see and hear. So on nearing up to the church, we found groups of colored people returning to their homes, and yet about a thousand appeared to be standing before the door. We soon learned that they had convened for the purpose of organizing a regiment of colored soldiers, and tendering them to the President, but that the Trustees had refused to open the church; and so determined were they to carry through their project, that they attempted to hold a mass-meeting on the steps, but the Trustees here seemed to rout them again, and finally the crowd dispersed. A great many of our people in the District think that the nation is forcing them and giving them their word is low equal to any person, white or colored, is a sufficient favor for them to return a corresponding compliment in aiding the Government in putting down its rebels. But who was the getter-up of this war meeting, is the great question. Our people certainly did it, but who they were, is the secret. Before leaving this subject, I would say that the stern refusal of the Asbury Trustees to open the church, came near resulting in the death of one of them. I was informed that he saved his life by the logic of fleetness.

The Hon. J. D Johnson, Commissioner of Liberia, who has been here some time urging the claims of that young republic, was most inhumanly mobbed on last Tuesday night, by the colored people of this city, or, I should have said, by a colored mob. Report says that Mr. Johnson endeavored to get Congress to transport, regardless of consent, all the contrabands who might possibly obtain their freedom, to Liberia within sixty days after the date of their freedom, and hence a committee of colored gentlemen waited upon him to ascertain if the rumor were true, and that he treated the committee contemptuously, which so angered them that they transformed themselves into a mob and let slip vengeance at him. I am informed that nothing saved his life but the intervention of some young ladies. I am sorry that our people acted so rudely in the matter, as I do not think it tends to their honor; and yet if Mr. Johnson thus acted, I am equally sorry that he wished to deprive us of that God-given right of choosing or refusing. I hope our people everywhere will soon begin to look upon mobs as the most contemptible, lowest, rottenest plan to all God's universe of carrying power. Let us come out and expose men's mean principles, but not injure their bodies, remembering that God made the latter, but never made the former; and it indicates an animal predominancy in its perpetrators.

Rev. David Smith has returned from Ohio, and is carrying on an extensive medical practice in Washington and Alexandria.

Rev. M. F. Sluby is in the city. He preached in Israel church on Thursday night, to a very respectable audience, and a higher state of Christian feeling is seldom seen than attended his discourse; he is peculiarly adapted to the practical ministry.

It is whispered about in Washington that Gen. McClellan sacrificed 100,000 men in the Peninsula, and that his removal is contemplated. Another sensation report says that the Rebels will attack Washington before another week.

The Republican paper of this city, notices a sermon preached by "the Rev. Mr. Turner, colored minister of the African Methodist Episcopal Church," in which it (the Republican,) while speaking very complimentary of Rev. Mr. Turner, sets him in a very singular aspect before the people. It says that Mr. Turner "urged the policy of the colored people taking up arms and sustaining the Government by crimsoning every battle-field with their blood." I was present and heard Mr. Turner's remarks, but did not hear all the Republican says, in a certain direction, though Mr. Turner did say that we should pray for this nation, which is groaning beneath the scathing judgments of a God who never falters his promises nor swerves his threats,—for him to hold indivisibly, unsullied, the integrity and honor of this country; for if she failed in this her hour of trial, farewell, oh, farewell, thou goddess of liberty; hope for the poor, prospect for the oppressed, adieu, adieu, adieu!

Rev. George A. Rue passed through the city on his way to Newbern, N. C. He preached in Israel church, and stated his mission, and the people voluntarily, without being asked, came up and put $18 in his hands. H. M. T.

For the Christian Recorder.

NEWS FROM WILMINGTON.

Wilmington, July 30th, 1862.

Mr. Editor:—Permit me, for the first time since I have been a subscriber to the Christian Recorder, to inform you of the condition of affairs in our midst in our city. According to the last census, taken in 1860, our city contains a colored population numbering over 2,200. They are, in general, an industrious, moral, religious and intelligent community. Many of them are the owners of from one to four houses, worth in the aggregate several thousand dollars. There are three day-schools, two of which are under the African School Association, situated in Orange St., near 10th, in one building—boys' department, 1st story, room to seat 58 scholars; average attendance, 50; teacher, Mr. Frisby J. Cooper. Girls' department, 2d story, room to seat 58 scholars; average attendance, 45; teacher, Mrs. Susanna Bostick. The other school is exclusively a pay school, situated in French St., near 9th—room to seat 40 scholars; teacher, Mr. Edmund H. Anderson. These schools are very much appreciated, and, according to the several examinations that have been recently, show a great mark of general improvement, which I assure you is very commendable. There are also several gentlemen who are in business for themselves, viz.: Michael Sterling, a blacksmith, who has done business for many years, and by his assiduity and gentlemanly deportment, has secured himself a handsome and comfortable home, with an addition of several houses beside. His residence is in 4th St., near Walnut; his shop is adjoining his residence. Caleb Milborn, a cabinet-maker and undertaker, does a very fair business, and has the entire patronage of our people, with a few rare exceptions. He has also a comfortable home, &c. His residence is in Orange St., near 10th. John W. Layton keeps a grocery store in Orange St., near 11th, and does a fair business, and has accumulated a handsome home, and several houses, &c. John Parnell keeps a grocery store in Tatnall St., near 8th, and has secured a very liberal patronage in that vicinity, and has also a very comfortable home, &c. Robert Graves keeps a very large clothing store in Market St., near 2d, and does a very fine business. He has also a very comfortable home and several houses besides. His residence is in French St., near 9th. Daniel P. Hamilton, a trucker, has several acres of land under culture, and does a very fair business. His fresh and nice vegetables find a ready market and quick sales for cash. He has also a very comfortable home, &c.

There are several Masonic, Odd Fellows and Samaritan Lodges, together with ten or twelve beneficial societies, which societies are constantly engaged in alleviating the affliction and distress of their poor brethren and sisters in their midst. They are worth in the aggregate several thousand dollars. There are five churches, viz.: "East Zion" M. E. Church, (under the whites) founded A. D. 1805, situated corner of Ninth and French Sts., membership over 300, minister in charge Rev. Wilmore S. Elsey, Sabbath school attached numbering more than 100 scholars, with a sufficient corps of teachers and a good library. Second African "Union Church, founded A. D 1813, situated in French St., between 8th and 9th, membership over two hundred, minister in charge Rev. Isaac Parker, Sabbath-school attached numbering over 100 scholars, with a corps of teachers and a very good library. 3d. "First Methodist Union," founded A. D. 1840, situated in Poplar St., between 5th and 6th, membership incognito, minister in charge Rev. Garrett Wilson.

4th. Bethel A. M. E. Church, founded A. D. 1846, removed to and rebuilt in Penn St., between Walnut and Poplar, and between 6th and 7th A D 1853, in the fall of the same year, it was dedicated to the worship of the Triune God, under the administration and general supervision of Rev. W. D. W. Schureman, who for his talents, piety, zeal and equitable administration of the gospel, and discipline of the church, is held in very high estimation in the community, and more particularly in the church. Since that time, our church has been in a very feeble state, the cause of which, I believe, is generally known; but, at present, things begin to loom up before us, and we now hope for a better state of things. Our membership is small, not over 50. Minister in charge, Rev. Michael F. Sluby, who, at present, is absent from the city. Our Sabbath-school numbers over 50 scholars, with an energetic and faithful corps of teachers and a small library

We also want the brethren to come over to "Macedonia" and help us. We will cordially receive you, and such as we have we will give unto you. We feel to do all that we can for the support of the gospel and spread of the Redeemer's kingdom. On Sunday, the 20th, Rev. William J. Fuller labored with us, and the Spirit of the Lord was in our midst. His text was, "There shall come a Star out of Jacob." Num. xxiv. 17.

On Sabbath, the 27th, our venerable father, Rev. Jeremiah G. Bulaugh, was with us, and delivered a discourse in his usual energetic style in the morning; text Rev. vii. 9, and we had a joyful time of the outpouring of the Spirit of the Lord, and were caused to say, "Surely the Lord is in this place." In the evening he gave a short exhortation. 5th. The Union Church of Wilmington, founded A. D. 1856, situated in French St., near 12th, membership over 100, minister in charge Rev. Edward Williams, sabbath-school attached numbering 60 scholars, with a corps of teachers and a small library.

I must now close my communication, which is longer than anticipated. If it be agreeable, you shall hear from me occasionally, if the Lord permit.

Friday J. Cooper.

For the Christian Recorder.

THE DUTIES OF THE HOUR.

When God created man in the world, he gave him a duty to perform, a work to accomplish, a mission to fulfil in life. He did not give him time to waste in idleness or a talent to bury. He created him a being of intelligence for future usefulness; nor does the flight of years take away that responsibility which rests upon us, and duty which we all owe to the Supreme Being and our fellow-men. Let our station in life be what it may, we can all do something that will add to the respectability and social improvement of our people; but the greatest duty, at the present hour, is to instill into the minds and hearts of the youth a moral principle, which is one of the greatest and surest foundations upon which we can build a character of purity. What is man without character? It is a pure character and principle that guides us safely over the stormy sea of life; then, if we wish to succeed and become useful in life, we should endeavor to preserve our character pure and above reproach, and to imitate the virtues rather than the vices of those who claim to be our superiors. Where is the young man or woman among us whose leisure moments could not be profitably employed? Many of the eminent men and women of this and other lands have arisen from the humble walks in life and been self-taught—what others have done and are doing, why cannot we? Then let our young men that now spend their leisure moments in drinking-saloons, or the theatre or ball-room, or other places that tend to destroy the mind and taint the character with those immoral principles and vices that corrupt the heart, turn their attention to higher objects, and store their minds with useful knowledge. Let them devote their leisure moments to proper study, on attending instructive lectures, literary associations and Sabbath-schools. Let us cultivate the mind and become intelligent and worthy of respect, and the world will be bound to respect us. Let our young women endeavor to preserve society in its purity, and exert their influence for good over a brother or a friend. Then, as our life draws to a close, we can look back over the wide field of the world, filled with teeming population, with churches, school-houses and colleges of learning, and see our people striving onward and upward to a higher state of Christian civilization, we can rest assured that we have done something to benefit our fellow-beings. D. J.

Newark, N. J.

For the Christian Recorder.

Trenton, July 31st, 1862

To the Editor of the Christian Recorder.—

Dear Sir:—I had the pleasure of hearing Prof. P. Houston Murray, last evening, deliver one of his lectures on Phrenology and Physiognomy, at the Mount Zion A. M. E. Church in this city.

Though not a believer in the science, (if it may be called so) yet I was struck with the ability and earnestness used by him in striving to prove its utility, especially in such arguments as the following: "Know thyself is a dictum of the Almighty. Though we ascend to the heavens, and count the myriads of stars and planets, though we exhaust the field of nature and beget a knowledge of beast, bird, insect and plant, though we descend to the bottom of the ocean and acquaint ourselves with the infinite multitudes which inhabit the briny deep, yet all such acquirements are but vain; but subservient, secondary in importance to the knowledge of man's own condition, temperaments, capabilities and aspirations. This grand, dignified and transcendent knowledge is what we claim for the science of Phrenology It is the teacher of man's natural condition; how it may, from a state of nature, use the best means to develop its latent or innate forces; how it may so modify or improve its temperaments that they may form the more perfect blending of the whole; how man may know to what end or aim to direct his capacities, that he may be most useful to himself and to the world."

This is a mere sample or outline of a lecture one hour long, including a delineation of the sciences of both Phrenology and Physiognomy; and all present, I believe, were constrained to acknowledge him to be an earnest promoter of the profession

The audience was neither large nor intellectual—a very common feature at scientific lectures among us.—Is it because we are not educated up to the point of appreciation yet?

Yours, &c., S. G. Gould

For the Christian Recorder

Mr. Editor,—I avail myself of this opportunity to transmit to you a few lines in reference to the present condition of Israel church. When Rev. H. M. Turner assumed the charge of this church, every thing was in disorder and confusion. The members were, to a very great extent, scattered, and the congregation thin or sparse. But since the church has been under his charge and direction, the state of affairs has changed, for out of confusion he has wrought order and concern, and has been successful in bringing both the members and congregation together again to their original and long accustomed places in the sanctuary of the Lord. Our church is progressing and improving with unprecedented rapidity, both spiritually and temporally.

Bro. Turner is a man of unsurpassed energy, and gifted with peculiar endowments. And this energetic and active spirit he has succeeded in disseminating and propagating throughout our whole church and people, and that to such an extent that they have come to the conclusion to repair their church edifice, remodel and renovate the basement, erect a new and commodious gallery, and decorate or fresco the main audience room, and such other improvements as may be necessary.

For this and many other things which he has introduced in and among our church and people, he merits and receives the thanks and commendations of a grateful people. And as a proof of this, he is winning golden opinions and gaining hosts of friends and admirers hereabouts. There is no reason why these things should not be, for he is a gentleman and a scholar, possessing rare intellectual and literary attainments. Several sabbaths ago, we had the pleasure of listening to him discourse on the great image which Nebuchadnezzar saw in his dream, and we must confess that we have never heard before any thing equal to it. He explained and expounded this great subject with his usual ease and affability; and he illustrated it with such clearness and precision, that the most simple and illiterate could understand it with incomparable ease and facility.

He has shown by this and every thing else that he is a thorough master of all he undertakes. It is no strange or uncommon thing to behold in his congregation honorable senators and representatives, and officers of every grade in the army, from the "stars" down to the "bars," listening carefully and attentively to the graphic illustrations, pathetic expostulations, and heart-stirring appeals of this distinguished pulpit orator; and very often causes the tear to steal down the cheek, and the heart of the most apathetic and obdurate to melt.

The choir of this church is jubilant over the idea that they are soon to have a new gallery, for they have suffered everything that mortals could suffer from the want of room and proper ventilation, which has endangered and jeopardised their health, and operated materially against their usefulness and utility in the church. This excellent choir has no superior hereabouts, as regards musical perfection and its attendants, and is under the skilful and efficient leadership of two of the most distinguished choristers of our city, viz., Professors Andrew B. Tinney, and John F. N. Wilkinson.

Rev. David Smith, late pastor of Israel church, who left this city several weeks ago for his home in Ohio, in consequence of the serious indisposition of his wife, has returned in fine health and spirits. This venerable and aged minister of God is now nearly four-score, and he continues to preach and teach the people the words of truth, and in this capacity he exhibits surprising zeal and avidity.

Mr. Editor, we are sorry that we are so lengthy in our remarks, for we know that we are taking up invaluable space in your columns. We have been considerably longer than we had the least anticipation of being. But we could not think of closing these remarks without having something to say for and about the Recorder. Although the Recorder has been a constant and frequent visitor to this city for some time, yet, prior to last May, its visits had been very seldom and irregular to us in this part of the town. But since the present administration has taken the charge of affairs, the Recorder has become a regular weekly visitor. And, Mr. Editor, how gladly it is welcomed here both in the church and in the home circle, and every one appears to be so eager to be the first to receive it, in order to feed on its precious contents, and peruse the choice specimens of poetry, and the rare selections culled from science and literature, which are dealt out in such rich abundance and profusion. And we do not think that we should be considered as committing a breach of veracity, or overstepping the bounds of truth, when we say that as a religious paper, it exceeds all that we have ever had in our church, and without doubt it is the very paragon of excellence and perfection. Bro. Charles D. Moore, the indefatigable agent of the Recorder, is doing a great work for it; and we must say that no better selection could have been made in this direction. Bro. Moore is a gentleman of fine abilities, and of indomitable energy, and all he undertakes is certain of proving successful. He is now using every effort, and bending and putting forth every exertion to promote its best interests, by increasing and extending its circulation. And in this respect and particular, he merits undoubtedly the hearty co-operation and support of the people. And we earnestly, prayerfully, and sincerely hope that the Recorder, the organ of our church, may continue to increase more and more, and its circulation extend to every point of the compass, even from the borders of Maine down to the extreme frontiers of Texas.

We have a great deal more to say on different topics which we have in view, or under consideration, but to do so might be at the risk of being deemed tedious, therefore we forbear; but we hope that ere long the columns of the Recorder may be again visited by a few fragmentary thoughts gathered from passing incidental events from the pen of Cerebus

For the Christian Recorder.

LETTER FROM LOUISVILLE, KY.

Mr. Editor:—Dear Brother:—Perhaps a few lines from me may be of interest. We are still alive in the church, thank God, and the times are still growing better here. Business is looking up. Things are moving along a little after the old style. The city is quiet at this time. Troops are passing through nearly every day, bearing the deadly weapons of warriors. This presents a solemn aspect, followed by the thought that many of these immortal souls no doubt will soon be hurried into the presence of their Judge yet unprepared. I am satisfied that the Judge of all the earth will do right. I have had a little tour out in the interior of the State. I went to Mumfordsville, by special invitation of some of our white friends, to preach the funeral sermons of two of their servants with whom I was acquainted. I went out on the 12th. I was met at the depot by a young man with a buggy, who took me to the place of destination, which was about a mile and a half; and there I met a faithful old member of Asbury Chapel in Louisville, Sister Eliza Barrett, after I rested and refreshed. I was escorted by Sister Eliza into the parlor to see the lady of the house, the widow Barrett. She received me very kindly. I had a long conversation with her on the subject of religion after dinner. I took a walk over to the battle-ground where the first battle was fought in Kentucky. It is a beautiful place on the south side of Green River. It is a beautiful gradual ascent. The north side is high and bluffy. Upon this bluff Gen. Rousseau had his battery. On the south side he now has a battery to guard the bridge, which is a most magnificent superstructure. It is said to be 60 feet in height, and I should suppose it to be a mile and a half from the top of the hill on the south to that on the north, and yet the parties on either side can hear each other talking distinctly. Near the river, on the south, there is some thick timber, but small and shrubby. In this the scouts were ambushed when they fell upon our men, but Gen. Rousseau's battery, from the summit on the north, soon put them to flight. On Saturday night I preached in the Presbyterian Church to our people, but the congregation was small in consequence of the excitement then existing, for Morgan's band of Guerillas had just passed up, a few miles east, the day previous, and at that time others were reported to be in the neighborhood, but I had no trouble. All was quiet. The town is well guarded. I tried to preach on Sabbath morning to a white congregation from the text: "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up." The Lord was with us. At 3 o'clock I preached the funeral sermons of Sister Nancy Graddie, who departed this life in January, 1862, and her husband, who died in March, 1862. The subject was, "The Resurrection:" John xi. 25. I had a glorious time; and oh! how it relieves my soul to have the privilege of giving the bread of life to my people who have it not. I was a little surprised to find such a nice class of our people in the interior of the State. They are very kind in their manners. Their dress is plain and very neat. God grant that the standard of the A. M. E. Church may be planted there. Our people have had some more trouble by mobs in New Albany, Ind., and a great portion have left their comfortable homes and gone to the rocks and hills for protection. Brother Burch, the pastor, is now out in the subs

I learn that the cause of the mob was that some colored man shot into a crowd of white young men who had insulted the colored men as they passed along. They shot twice, killing one instantly, and wounding another. They then broke out. This happened on the 22d, and I learned yesterday that they had caught the guilty young man at Cairo on Sunday night. It seems to be a trait in the character of the people of New Albany, for every offence, to mob the colored people. It is not so here. Oh! thou God of mercy, when shall those things cease? I enclose $5 for papers sold.

N. B. We have permission to hold our Annual Conference here in Louisville, Ky.

B. L. Brooks.

Louisville, Ky, July 31st, 1862.

For the Christian Recorder

HARRISON'S LANDING.

July 27th, 1862.

Mr. Editor:—Brethren and Friends:—This Lord's day, the 27th inst., by the grace of God, I stand amid eight or nine hundred of the so-called contrabands, but my people in old Virginia come and preach to them Jesus. I had no fear in preaching the whole gospel. Though surrounded by many foes, I fear no danger. The captain who has charge of my people at this place gave me a written privilege, with the protection of soldiers, to preach the gospel as I understand it to my people; and, by the help of Jeshurun's God, I'll preach it if I should die in the attempt While I write to inform you of my whereabouts, this afternoon, while I was preaching, about two or three hundred slaves came on the ground from somewhere. Each man had a large tent on his head. We are about 17 miles from Richmond. Our people hailed me with streaming eyes and joyful hearts. Though a native of the South, I never saw such people in all my life. I will not describe them now. I have been at this place five days up to the above date. This last Sabbath, at 10½, A. M., I preached, for the first time, on the soil of Virginia. At 4, P. M., the same, only to double the number. My audience numbered about nine hundred white and colored. No disturbance whatever. The God of the Christian was with his unworthy servant, and gave me the sign of good success. I find among our people at this place some very religious, but many very ignorant; for which slavery is the sole cause. They are to be pitied. After the services in the afternoon, I, with the assistance of the clerk in our regiment, took the names of 2003, and we formed them into a Sabbath School. Out of this number we found only 3 who could spell the word soldier. I shall have help from the clerk and some of the soldiers. I find many who can and do pray, shout, and sing I stopped at Fortress Monroe on the boat. I had not time to go ashore. I could say much, but the mail is about to close. My health is good, thank God. My love to all. Pray for the poor missionary, and let not the connexion forget my dear family while I am working for the general good. If any of my friends wish to write to me, they will address me in the following manner:—

Elder George A. Rue,
Care of Captain C. Bowers,
Company G, 32d Regiment Mass. Vol.,
Washington, D. C.

Yours, for the spread of the Redeemer's kingdom on earth, George A. Rue.

For the Christian Recorder.

AMBITION, PERSEVERANCE, AND PATIENCE.

BY MARY MANLEY.

The person whose character is founded upon these three grand principles, and is crowned by the blessing of God, who or what can hinder their progress in life? Ambition is an earnest desire of performance; a feeling within us that prompts us to carry out our intention, and is often stronger than our thought, and larger developed in the disposition than our power of intellect. Ambition acts differently upon persons. It leads some to an ardent desire for fame. They wish to be very conspicuous; to stand second to none in society or in the world. They wish to be spoken of as superior to any one else. They are willing to study, to exercise their strength, and deny themselves of much that others think are necessary for health and comfort, and expend their ideas to the utmost to aim at their designed point in life. Ambition is good. It is an excellent trait of character. It is the greatest leading principle to prosperity, to riches, or any other noble station in the world. But few of us would stand where we are, or what we are, if it were not for the spirit within that urges us on to be equal with our fellow progressor, that says, "I will be a man; I will rise to a distinguished place in the world."

Perseverance is a disposition that presses us to continue in our earnest desires; to press on if we meet with discouragements and disappointments. The ambitious man meets with hinderances and difficulties as well as those that are not. Ambition often leads persons to engage in undertakings that they are not able to perform. Sometimes when they think they have but one more step to take before they will be at their desired point, something will happen, and their future prospects are dashed in pieces as it were a potter's vessel; but their perturbation does not last long; they think that it will only prove a more heroic spirit to make their way through a cloud of difficulties. In a short time you will see them in as prosperous circumstances as before; but patience is needed to complete an ambitious and persevering disposition. As we have already said, there are discouragements to encounter, so we need patience to pass through them.

Patience is a trait that enables us to bear and forbear; and if our present prospect is gloomy and unfavorable, we feel willing to wait without getting weary. It is a principle that is profitable in every circumstance in life, and where it is a ruling passion within, it will do as much in controlling the person as any other trait of character.

Woodbury, August 1st, 1862.

For the Christian Recorder.

LETTER FROM WASHINGTON.

Mr. Editor:—Permit me to say, that notwithstanding the distracted condition of our country, the good work of the Lord is still going on. We had quite a revival in our church (Connecticut Avenue) for the last week past. Last night we had our Quarterly Love Feast, and 18 accessions to our church; and more than that number inquiring for the blessing, and the work still going on, which is indeed encouraging to me and many others, in which my time and mind are particularly engaged.

A few very brief remarks in reference to my Brother H. M. T.'s apology for the insertion of July 5th. The misrepresentations that are so cordially conceded by him are also humbly and Christianly acknowledged by me. The Brother thinks I was a little excited, and used epithets, and the probable misapplication of some of the terms. As I was not at the church to hear what I remarked, and as he positively attests what he remarked, I will not contend I feel bound, upon the principle of equity, to concede whatever epithet or misapplication there may be, for it is not my intention undeservedly to discredit the veracity of a brother in the bonds of the gospel. One thing seems to be obvious to me, that a simple reply to a misrepresentation is not nonsensical humbuggery. It was a supposition from remarks that seem to be obvious. However, I will not doubt the veracity of my Brother, as we should all labour to effect the good of all. As for being puzzled to know what to call our connexion, the name is plain in the title of our discipline. Individual churches of the different connexions go by different appellations, (African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church) Our churches East, (many of them,) as well as West and South, have the name Zion attached to them, and some have not. Other connexions act similarly, or go by number. The word Episcopal, which the Brother says is so loudly and thunderingly assumed, is on the title page of the canons of our church. It is not loudly nor thunderingly assumed by me, for I as one am opposed to its being in our title, whether it be just or unjust. It is not carried out by us as other connexions. We are human, however, and liable to err as others, and I am perfectly satisfied that every one should serve God according to the dictates of his own conscience. The Brother says, mark the word Episcopal, (now mark the words as they call themselves.) Now it was not the name of the church that I took exception to, but I thought the words marked should have been excepted.

The controversy respecting Episcopacy commenced soon after the reformation. The contest has been warm between Episcopalians, Presbyterians, and others. It has been considered to be of great importance in England. It has been strenuously maintained by one party that the Episcopal order is essential to the constitution of the church; and, by the other, that it is a pernicious encroachment on the rights of men, for which there is no authority in Scripture It would be of no material benefit to us to discuss it.

J. P. W.

Washington City, July 30th, 1862.

CONSOLATION.

Ye cannot, ye must not, have a more pleasant or more easy condition here, than He had, who, through afflictions, was made perfect. We may indeed think, cannot God bring us to heaven with ease and prosperity? Who doubteth that he can? But his infinite wisdom thinketh and decreeth the contrary; and we cannot see a reason for it, yet he hath a most just reason. We never with our eyes saw our own soul, yet we have a soul, we see many rivers, but we know not their first spring and original fountain, yet they have a beginning. When ye are come to the other side the water, and have set down your foot on the shore of glorious eternity, and look back again to the waters, and to your wearisome journey, and shall see, in that clear glass of endless glory, nearer to the bottom of God's wisdom, ye shall, then, be forced to say: "If God had done otherwise with me than he hath done, I had never come to the enjoying of this crown of glory." It is your part now to believe, and suffer, and hope, and wait on; for I protest, in the presence of that all-discerning Eye, who knoweth what I write, and what I think, that I would not want the sweet experience of the consolations of God, for all the bitterness of afflictions; nay, whether God come to his children with a rod or a crown; if he come himself with it, it is well. Welcome, welcome Jesus, what way soever thou comest, if we can get a sight of thee. And sure I am that it is better to be sick, providing Christ come to the bedside, and draw by the curtains, and say: "Courage! I am thy salvation!" than to enjoy health, being lusty and strong, and never to be visited of God.

Ye have lost a child; nay, she is not lost to you, who is found to Christ, she is not cast away, but only sent before; like unto a star, which, going out of one sight, doth not die and vanish, but shineth in another hemisphere; ye see her not, yet she doth shine in another country. If her glass ran but a short hour, what she wanteth of time, that she hath gotten of eternity; and ye have to rejoice that ye have now some furniture up in heaven. Build your nest upon no tree here; for ye see God hath sold the forest to death; and every tree, whereupon we would rest, is ready to be cut down, to the end that we might flee and mount up, and build upon the Rock, and dwell in the holes of the Rock. What ye love besides Jesus, your husband, is an adulterous lover; now it is God's special blessing to Judah, that he will not let her find her paths in following her strange lovers. "Therefore, behold, I will hedge up thy way with thorns, and make a wall, that she shall not find her path." Oh! thrice happy Judah, when God buildeth a double stone wall betwixt her and the fire of hell! The world, and the things of the world, is the lover that ye naturally affect, beside your own husband, Christ. The hedge of thorns, and the wall which God buildeth in your way, to hinder you from this lover, is the thorny hedge of daily grief, loss of children, weakness of body, iniquity of the time, uncertainty of estate, lack of worldly comfort, fear of God's anger for old unrepented of sins. What lose ye, if God twist and plait the hedge daily thicker? God be blessed!

Oh what owe I to the file, to the hammer, to the furnace of my Lord Jesus? who hath now let me see how good the wheat of Christ is, that goeth through his mill, and his oven, to be made bread for his own table. Grace tried is better than grace, and it is more than grace, it is glory in its infancy. Who knoweth the truth of grace without a trial? Oh how little getteth Christ of us, but that which he winneth (to speak so) with much toil and pains! And how soon would faith freeze without a cross! When Christ breatheth his own crosses with a tongue, they breathe out Christ's love, wisdom, kindness, and care of us. Why should I start at the plough of my Lord, that maketh deep furrows on my soul? I know that he is no idle husbandman, he purposeth a crop. Oh, that this white withered log-ground were made fertile to bear a crop for Him, by whom it is so painfully dressed, and that this fallow ground were broken up! Why was I (a fool) grieved that he put his garland, and his rose upon my head—the glory and honor of his faithful witnesses? I desire now to make no more quarrels with Christ. Verily he hath not put me to a loss by what I suffer; he oweth me nothing; for in my hands how sweet and comfortable have the thoughts of him been to me, wherein I find a sufficient recompense of reward!

I know that his comforts are no dreams; he would not put his seal on blank paper, nor deceive his afflicted ones that trust in him.

Rutherford's Letters.

HOW TO BREAK A CHURCH DOWN.

A skeleton text, Micah ii. 13: "The breaker is come."

To do this effectually, you must

I. Discourage the pastor.

II. Discourage your fellow-members.

III. Destroy the confidence of the community

I. To discourage the pastor.

1. Absent yourself from one service every Sabbath, or miss at least one in three—if he is not very strong, once in four times may answer.

2. Neglect the prayer and class meetings.

3 Criticise your ministers freely—find fault plentifully—pray for him little or none.

4. If he proposes to hold extra meetings withhold your co-operation.

5. Give yourself no concern whether his salary is paid or not.

6. Never call on him socially, nor allow him to think that his comfort or that of his family is a matter of any importance in your eyes.

II. To discourage your fellow-members.

1. Observe the directions given above.

2. Complain about everything they do and don't do.

3. Contrive to make yourself the head of a clique, and by their assistance and your own industry keep the church in hot water generally

4. While doing this, lose no opportunity to complain of the bad treatment you are receiving

5. Be as much like Diotrephes and as little like Paul as you can.

6 Discard charity and candor, take distrust to your bosom, and make scheming your specialty.

III. To destroy the confidence of the community.

1. Observe the foregoing directions.

2. Tell the people that you are in the church by force of circumstances, but have no respect for the way in which business is conducted.

3. Publish the faults of your brethren, taking care to magnify them.

4 Make no effort to induce people to attend the church.

5 Take no part in the labors of the Sabbath school.

6. Publish it on all occasions that you have no confidence in the concern—predict that it must fail—go down—blow up—never can succeed—and then——"skedaddle."

By observing these directions faithfully, you may have the satisfaction, if the church is not unusually vigorous, of witnessing the fulfilment of your predictions.

Size of Dioceses.—The Episcopal papers, especially the Church Journal, are extensively discussing the question, whether large or small dioceses are most beneficial to the Church. At present each diocese embraces an entire state (whether it be large or small) except that in 1838 New York was divided into two—the New York and Western New York. There is now an urgent demand in some quarters for a still further division of the New York diocese, but the majority so far seem not to favor the movement

The Christian Recorder.

Philadelphia, August 9, 1862.

NOTICE.

There will be a dinner given in the Fountain Woods, one mile from Burlington, on the 14th of August, 1862, for the benefit of the A. M. E. Church in Burlington. Tickets will be sold for 25 cents. We hope our friends will patronize us in this cause of trying to raise means for the benefit of our church. There will be carriages at the church in Pearl Street to take our friends to the ground.

J. H. SMITH, Elder,
J. H. LONG, Minister.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Rev. W. Winder, of Freehold, N. J., on account for books, ... $10 00
Rev. M. W. Solsbury, per Rev. D. Cooper, of Richmond, Ohio, ... $1 00
Benjamin Reid, of Hayesville, Pa., . $1 00
Rev. J. P. Shreeve, per Rev. A. L. Stanford, of Philadelphia, Pa., ... $2 00
Rev. B. L. Brook, Louisville, Ky., on acct., $5 00
Rev. H. M. Turner, of Washington, D. C., 60 00
Mrs. Susan Shaw, of Media, Pa., per Rev. J. W. Stephenson, ... $1 00

HEAT.

Our thermometer—blood heat—stood 100 in the shade on Tuesday, the 5th inst., and till 8 o'clock at night, which we think is the warmest day we have had so far.

INDIANA CONFERENCE.

This Conference sits, on the 15th inst., in Indianapolis, Ind. The brethren may look for their papers to be sent there during Conference, and look for us to be with them by the 21st, if not prevented by Providence.

NOTICE.

There will be a church consecrated on the 17th of August, 1862, at the Lower Valley. The friends and the public are respectfully invited to attend.

J. BULAUGH, Minister in Charge.

SACRAMENT OF THE LORD.

At 11 o'clock, A. M., to-morrow, 10th inst., the pastor of Brick Wesley Church will preach. At 3 o'clock, P. M., the Rev. Elisha Weaver will preach a Sacramental discourse, after which the Sacrament of the Lord will be administered.

JOHN A. WILLIAMS, Minister in Charge.

NOTICE.

The A. M. E. Church of Marietta will be consecrated on the 17th of this month, under the pastoral care of Rev. Thomas Henry. Revs. Jos. Smith, Schureman, and S. Smith are expected to be present on the occasion.

A CHANGE.

The boarding house of Mrs. S. Plant is now known as the T. S. Wright House. Mrs. Plant is very accommodating, and ladies and gentlemen visiting New York and Brooklyn will find her house a comfortable home.

A WORD.

To Rev. Joseph Smith, of Burlington:—We have not as yet received the letter you referred to, nor the money. There is something very strange about this affair.

FROM NORRISTOWN.

Mr. Editor and Brother Readers: Permit me to tell you in a few lines, in reference to my own charge, how I am getting along. We have had good meetings, as also an increase of membership during the last quarter.

ISAIAH S. TAYLOR,
Pastor of the First F. M. P. Church.

NOTICE.

MR. EDITOR—Dear Sir: This is to inform you that the camp-meeting I spoke to you about will go on about the 27th. Please notice it through the columns of your paper. A general invitation is extended to the brethren and friends, and especially to yourself, if you can make it suit your convenience.

My health is still bad, and also that of my wife. The Right Rev. Bishop Payne paid us the long looked for visit on the Lewistown circuit. He preached us one of his genuine sermons in Lewistown. He also stopped in Huntingdon, but did not preach but on the Sabbath over in Hollidaysburg, which I suppose you will hear, as I was not with him myself.

Please notice that there will be excursion tickets issued on the camp-meeting occasion as far as Harrisburg. My kind respects to yourself and family. Yours respectfully,

A. JOHNSON.

Johnstown, July 29th, 1862.

NOTICE.

August 1st, 1862.

Mr. Editor and Brother: I sent by letter three dollars to you, on account for hymn-books, which I have no receipt for in the Recorder—it has been some two or three weeks ago, and yet no mention of it is made.

The grand celebration of the Sabbath Schools of Burlington circuit will take place on the 25th of August, at Snow Hill.

J. H. SMITH, Elder.
H. J. LONG, Pastor.

NOTICE

At a meeting of the teachers and scholars of Bethel Sunday School, the death of Henry Downing, our Librarian, was announced. It was, on motion, resolved, that Messrs. Joseph Brister, Daniel T. Masten, and Mrs. Armstrong should be a committee of three to draft resolutions of condolence to the family of the deceased.

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God, in his all-wise providence, to remove from our midst our much beloved Librarian, Henry Downing, who was endeared to us by his many ties of friendship

Resolved, That in the death of Henry Downing, the Association has lost an efficient member, and the School an excellent Librarian.

Resolved, That the Association and School mourn the loss of our deceased brother, yet rejoice to know that our loss is his infinite gain.

Resolved, That the foregoing resolutions be forwarded to the family of deceased, and that we attend the funeral in a body.

Resolved, That the foregoing resolutions be published in the Christian Recorder.

DANIEL T. MASTEN, Secretary Com.

Philadelphia, August 2d, 1862.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER AND BOOK CONCERN OF THE A. M. E. CHURCH

Brethren, as your agent and general officer, we don't wish to have to ask you so often to support your own obligations. We have intimated, time and again, our wants, and it does seem really that some must be knocked down before they can take the hint. The brethren ought to have forethought enough to know that this war tends greatly towards impeding the operations of our Book Concern. The mere pittance of the Two cent money amounts to little or nothing, unless it was carried out according to Discipline, and the small amount that we have got from the Conferences annually, so far, would not pay the expenses which necessarily must accrue in three months' operations. Then how are we to live and carry on the Book Concern? Brethren, the truth is, that three-fourths of our brethren have given the Book Concern little or no support. Those of our readers of the Recorder can readily judge from our weekly reports, who it is that works for the operations of the Book Concern. Brethren may say, "It is hard times;" and if it is hard for you to live in your circuits and large stations, how do brethren expect us to live and carry on the operations of the Book Concern for this great and spreading Connexion, when we have to depend upon the brethren of those circuits and stations for our support? And if we had not resorted to some other source long since, we would have succumbed. We are satisfied, however, that much more could be done by our brethren than what they have done. Some of our stations have twelve or fifteen hundred of a membership, and we have good information from some of the most substantial and leading members of some of those stations, and they tell me that the pastor in charge has never laid before the members the duty of rallying to the Editor and General Book Steward—to give aid in support of the operations of the Book Concern. We have not said much about these matters, and the seeming negligence, on the part of some our brethren, do anything for this great and good cause; and if there is not more done in some directions, we shall have to talk out plainly, and call upon our Bishops to sustain us per Discipline. We hope this will be a sufficient warning to all of our brethren. If all of our cities would work, and come up like Washington, with a Turner at its head, and New York and Brooklyn, with a Cain and Hall at the head, we would not have to resort to this course.

WAR MOBS.

Much is said, and being said, about the war and the manner of suppressing the Rebellion. For a starting point, we will quote the language of one of the most talented and influential Senators of his school that ever graced the floor of the White House—Hon. Henry Clay: "I would rather be right than be President." This sentiment has immortalized his name. Now we want to be right, and we believe that we are. War is upon us, and of course there can be but two parties; and who are they? The Union and the Disunion—the Loyalists and Rebels. The Rebels are united and true to all in their lines under their Confederacy, whether they are black or white men. They use all the means in their power to conquer whom they consider their foes. The Union seems to be much divided in their views regarding the war. One of the seeming causes is supposed to be the negro, as they call it. Some are in favor of using all able bodied men among them, because they are born and reared on American soil, and have ever proved themselves loyal to the same, and also because they have a better right to this country than any foreigner. Their forefathers have helped to gain the Independence of America, and the first blood ever spilt for that cause was that of a colored man. Let our readers remember our quotation of Henry Clay, and we are free to say that there is no class of people in this country who have been treated half so meanly, and yet we have borne it all; not that we were not sensitive of the wrong, but were willing to endure it, for Christ's sake, until the good Lord should say it should be no longer. Remember the children of Israel in the land of Egypt. They suffered, but when God, the eternal, said it must cease, it did. Now we will say that the negroes have no inclination to want to lose their lives; to want to be shot down like bullocks. Not a bit of it. They would rather serve God, and provide for their families, than to shoulder the musket and go before the Confederate army, who have been making preparations for this struggle for years, and are now well fortified. But if the Union wants our aid, as citizens of the United States, and gives us the rights of men, there is not a colored man but what will readily shoulder his musket, and this Rebellion will soon cease—universal liberty proclaimed to all men, and the Union restored. Now, like our quotation, "I would rather be right than be President." If the Word of God is right, we are.

We hear of mobs mobbing the colored people in different places. What means all this? What have they done? We will venture to say, with all the Rebellion, that no such disgraceful conduct can be found under the Confederate flag. No, sir; no such low, cowardly, and disgraceful conduct is allowed under the Confederate flag. Why does the Governor, Mayor, and those in authority suffer it to be done? Why is it almost dangerous for a colored person, in some places, to walk the streets without being insulted; and for no cause under heaven? If the colored people have not conducted themselves consistently since the breaking out of this Rebellion, there is no other class that have done so. Can any one with common sense inform us why it is, that, in this country, if there is a dispute or misunderstanding between a colored and a white person, ninety nine times out of a hundred, and from two to twelve, and from that to fifty or a hundred, will all try to jump on the colored person? We can assign no other reason but cowardice. Not so with a colored person. We do sincerely hope the press, which is with the Union, will cry out against such conduct. We don't look for those who are opposed to the Union here in the North to do so.

For the Christian Recorder

CONTRABAND

This word, when used, is applied to things prohibited by proclamation or authority of Government. It is most frequently applied to things prohibited by Government in time of war—properly, to arms and munitions of war, but not to persons.

After the breaking out of the present rebellion, a number of slaves escaped to our army stationed at Fortress Monroe, and at the time commanded by General Butler. Some of the masters applied to the General for the return of their slaves, but he refused to return them, declaring them to be "contraband" of war. The conduct of General Butler in this behalf, was highly satisfactory to the public; and the new name which he gave the slaves, became popular, and at once, as by general consent, was adopted, and, by the writers of the day, generally used.

But notwithstanding its popularity and general use, this word is objectionable, because it is properly applicable to things, and not to persons. When used in reference to persons, it is disparaging to them, if not degrading. Such use ought, therefore, to be discontinued, especially by colored speakers and writers.

The [illegible] in this behalf, is "Refugee." This word [illegible] persons seeking shelter or protection from oppression or wrong, and not a thing prohibited from injurious use in time of war. REFUGEE is, moreover, an honorable word, sufficiently comprehensive, and strictly appropriate; let it, therefore, be adopted.

SENEX.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 4th, 1862.

For the Christian Recorder

FROM CARLISLE PA

July 30th 1862

MR. EDITOR:—Allow me through the columns of your worthy paper to say that we are alive, and that the good Lord seems to be blessing us wonderfully. We are getting along in our charge as well as we could expect. Our first quarterly meeting came off on the 29th and 30th of June, in Harrisburg. We had quite a good time. We were assisted on the Sabbath afternoon by the Rev. John A. Williams, pastor of Wesley Zion Church, of Philadelphia. He preached at three o'clock, P. M. It was a sermon very much admired by all that heard it. Brother Williams is a perfect Christian gentleman. Since we returned from Conference we have taken into the church nineteen persons—ten into the church in Harrisburg, and nine into the church in Carlisle, Penna. Since the Lord seems to be blessing our labors, we are able to exclaim, like one of old, "The winter is past, the rain is over and gone, the flowers appear on the earth, the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land."

Also, permit me to say that we have had one of the most favorable visits by the Right Rev. Bishop Payne. He came to our city (Harrisburg) on July 19th, and he spent the following Sabbath with us at that point. The services of the Sabbath were as follows: at eleven o'clock, A. M., the writer tried to say something; at three o'clock, P. M., the Rev. Dr. Smith, of Hayti, preached a sermon, which was pronounced by Bishop Payne as hard to beat, and at half-past seven o'clock the Bishop, D. A. Payne, preached a sermon to men and children. It was a sermon that will long be remembered by the majority of those that were present. The church was crowded down stairs and up-stairs, and it was thought that there were enough in the yard to have filled one-third of the house.

The Bishop left on Monday, the 21st, for Chambersburg, but he returned to Carlisle on Wednesday, the 23d, and addressed our Sabbath School at that point, on the above-named date, at eight o'clock, P. M. The Bishop left on Thursday, the 24th, for the West.

Yours respectfully, R. P. G.

For the Christian Recorder.

LINES

ON THE DEATH OF JOHN L. HERLEY.

JOHN L. HERLEY, son of Lewis and Matilda Herley, was born May the 16th, 1802, in Nicolas county, Kentucky, and was brought up by Christian parents—but, like the prodigal son, he departed from their instruction. But, in the 21st year of his age, the hand of affliction fell upon him, which caused him to return and repent, and he found peace by believing in the Saviour. When he recovered, he united with the Wesleyan Church, in which he lived seven or eight years—during which time he married an estimable lady, and lived in peace and happiness in the Lord until she died.

After the loss of his companion, he departed from the faith, and went into a backsliding state, in which he lived during health. At length the hand of affliction was once more laid upon him, and after enduring very much suffering for many months, the monster Death came and summoned him away from time.

During his illness he desired and received the prayers of the people of God—and though the sufferings of his body were great, he said that they were nothing to that of the mind. But he said, "I will put my trust in the Lord; in him I have found pardon, and I will pray while I live, though it were far better for me had I never known the Lord."

He expired on the 17th of April, 1862. His funeral sermon was preached July 20th, from the text, Job, 14th chapter and 14th verse.

☞ I send this to encourage our people here to write, so you will publish what you may think proper.

D. COOPER.

Death has been here and stole away
My only brother, John,
And I'm still mourning here below,
As one that's left alone.

He was my father's only son—
His [illegible] and gone;
His suffering time on earth is o'er;
He's had adieu to time.

We all remember what he said—
"I'm not a holy man;
But G-d can wash the crimson stain,
If we in faith do pray."

One thing I know—that he did pray;
I witnessed with my ears;
'Tis God alone can answer prayer—
And he can answer ours.

Once he professed to know the Lord—
But [illegible]
Like Adam, he partook of sin—
Like Peter, he [illegible]

"I've prayed like Lazarus," were his words;
"In prayer my life shall end."
The cheering hope consoles me now,
That Jesus Christ his prayer did hear.

The Lord says, "Let the sinner's [illegible]
For him I shed my blood
Backsliders, will you turn to me,
And [illegible]

Remember, friends, as we pass by
The grave of brother John,
As we [illegible]
But time with him is o'er.

My joy he was, I do confess;
He rests upon my mind—
The time has come that I do miss
My [illegible]

My sisters, don't you feel his loss?
Oh! father feels it more
My mother—she can count the cost,
Upon whose breast he leans.

She often offered him to God
In prayer, both night and day,
[illegible]
And [illegible]

Her prayer is answered by the Lord,
In mercy, I do trust;
And his poor soul, I hope, is saved,
[illegible]

Oh! guiding Father, of the sea
[illegible]
[illegible]
Remember the dear one.

Father not mother, he has none—
[illegible]
May he be saved in [illegible]
[illegible]

EMMA V. IARRA

Sardinia, Brown County, Ohio.

For the Christian Recorder.

COMMENCEMENT AT YALE COLLEGE.

New Haven, Conn., Aug. 1, 1862.

The importance which is ascribed by New Englanders to a commencement at Yale or at Harvard is hardly comprehensible to you of the Middle and Southern States. Here they are looked upon with a just and honest pride by nearly all classes; and universally by men of culture and members of the learned professions are the commencements hailed with eminent delight. These Universities (Yale and Harvard) have decidedly a higher stand than any other institutions of learning in America. In those respects which particularly distinguish a college, such as classical learning, theoretical learning, &c., Yale is confessedly ahead. The highest type of a college to be found this side the Atlantic is at Yale. Whatever, therefore, occurs at Yale in its peculiar sphere cannot but be regarded with a deep concern by all who are in any way interested in the cause of learning. It is sometimes profitable even for those who have no direct personal interest to contemplate that which is acknowledged as the highest type of excellence; and it is with this view that we ask for space to lay before your readers the doings of commencement week at Yale. The New York Tribune, in its issue of July 31st, took two columns, and on the following day another column of fine print with this record. We certainly cannot presume to give anything like a full report in half as much space.

Yale College has its buildings situated in the heart of this beautiful city. They occupy a full square, running one-fourth of a mile each way, beside the Medical College buildings and the Scientific Department—these two last-named departments having large, elegant and tasty buildings, one to the north, the other to the west of the College square. The Faculty or Board of Instruction consists of a President, twenty-eight professors, seven tutors, four instructors in optional studies, a librarian, a secretary and a treasurer—in all, forty-eight individuals. The number of students varies from six to seven hundred—young men from all parts of the world. During the past year the number has been six hundred—one hundred and thirty-seven in the different professional departments, and four hundred and sixty-three in the Academical or College departments proper. This gives a brief outline of the caput et corpus of this College.

The College was first established in 1700. The commencement just closed was, therefore, the one hundred and sixty-second. The first exercise of commencement 162d was the sermon addressed to the graduating class by the President, Rev. Theodore Dwight Woolsey, D. D., LL. D. This sermon is addressed to those who are about to receive the College Diploma, which confers the degree of B. A., and hence is called the Baccalaureate. The text of the learned gentleman was Proverbs xix 21, "There are many devices in a man's heart; nevertheless the counsel of the Lord, that shall stand." We shall not undertake to give you anything of a report of this discourse. There is nothing, ordinarily, in President Woolsey's sermons which particularly attracts the casual listener. His vast learning and immense activity of mind do not dote upon show. Sincerity, simplicity, goodness, deep Christianity and love of God mark all his discourses. But when the occasion and circumstances demand it, he can plough very deep. As we have listened to his modest words and looked upon his unassuming manner, we have been impressed with the idea that learning, true culture and worth only tend to make one modest and humble. Here, thought we, is a man born to wealth, who has enjoyed every desirable means and advantage of culture in refined society, travel and study, who has the learning of almost all—or, at least, of very many—languages at his command, and who stands at the head of the first college in the country, as humble, unpretending and unostentatious as a child! What a lesson to empty-headed, bombastic pretenders everywhere!

On Monday evening, the concio ad clerum was given by Rev. Mr. Atkinson, pastor of the Congregational church in Westport, Conn. This was a fine, vigorous anti-slavery discourse. The concio ad clerum is ostensibly an expounding of some doctrine of religious faith, which is assigned the speaker by the State Association of Congregational ministers. The theme assigned Mr. Atkinson was, "The Interpretation of God's providence is the world's calamities." He treated the subject in a very broad and general way, speaking of (1.) the cause, and (2.) the purpose of the calamities which come upon man. In such a discourse it were not easy to avoid allusions to our present national troubles. He said that slavery is the cause of all our present gigantic troubles, and that the nation cannot be delivered from them until it wipes out this terrible wrong.

Tuesday is usually set apart for the oration before the (Φ B K) Phi Beta Kappa—an extensive society confined to college disciples. But there were no public exercises to-day. It is known, however, that Francis Lieber, of New York, was appointed the orator for next year, with Rev. Edward Beecher, D. D., as substitute.

At "Alumni Hall," a large, airy, artistic building in the north corner of the college square, is a busy scene through every day of commencement week. Through the long hours of Monday and Tuesday one hundred and six young men were examined for admission to the college classes. We pitied the poor fellows as we occasionally took a peep into the room. Those applying for admission to the Freshmen or lowest class in college, were put to sweltering in a written examination over Cicero, (seven orations) the Bucolics, Georgics and first six books of the Æneid of Virgil, Sallust's Jugurtha and Catiline, Latin Grammar, Latin Prosody, Arnold's Latin Prose Composition to the Passive Voice, Greek Reader, Xenophon's Anabasis, Greek Grammar, Higher Arithmetic, (Thomson's,) Day's Algebra two Quadratics, two books of Euclid, English Grammar and Geography. You will see that this is quite a fine field to go over in a July day. Some of the poor fellows looked sorer than a hospital pie over the dish before them. One sorry-looking Puritan, as he was cracking his brain over a savage Greek root, seemed to be the impassioned words of the hero of the Ahdiel,

"Mortamur, in media arma ruamus."

On Wednesday morning occurs the most interesting meeting of commencement week—that of the Alumni. Men, eminent in every department of life, and from all parts of the country, usually attend. At 9 o'clock the body of the large hall was filled. Right directly back of and over the speakers' platform we noticed a little gallery full of ladies. The gallery was designed merely to hold a band of music, and will not accommodate over a dozen or fifteen females, as the fashion now runs among them. So you see we are not women's rights people hereaway. Ex-Governor Hoppin, of R. I., was voted President, Rev. S. W. S. Dutton, D. D., and F. A. Coe, Esq., Secretaries. Prayer was then offered by Rev. Edward Beecher, D. D., a brother of Henry Ward Beecher. As the prayer closed, a great clapping and cheering sprung up. Astonished, we looked for the cause, and saw approaching a man in full military uniform, on crutches, looking pale and careworn; his eyes and hair were jet black, his body full and well-proportioned; his face open and pleasing. Indeed, he must really have been a handsome man. That was Rear-Admiral Foote, the hero of Fort Donelson. The rather tall and slender gentleman sitting there by the desk, with heavy gold spectacles covering large, fiery, dark eyes, very stoop-shouldered, his head, which seems too large for his slender though vigorous body, extremely bent forward, is evidently a man of mark; it is Rev. Theodore D. Woolsey, D. D., LL. D. The old, very old, man to whom everybody seems to pay such profound reverence, looking the impersonation of piety and goodness, with dark eyes of the dull lustre peculiar to age, wearing a wig which is in exact keeping with his temperament; his garments evidently a quarter of a century behind the fashion, and seem to have grown one way while his body and limbs have grown the other; his tall form as slender as can be, his face pleasing; but to his under jaw a peculiar projection, which gives a sort of twist to his face—that man is Rev. Jeremiah Day, D. D., LL. D., formerly President of Yale College. On the right of the President sits as noble a looking man, physically, as we ever saw. He is evidently past his four score. His tall full frame, and round, large head, are admirably set off with a face of faultless symmetry. He is now on the shady side of eighty-five, yet he carries his noble form erect, his head aloft, as if in the consciousness of conceded superiority: his step is firm, and unsupported by a cane; his clear, sweeping, black eyes are not aided by "specs;" full six feet in height, and in weight not less than fourteen stone, (196 lbs.) he stands the impersonation of nobility and manliness; his heart and mind generous, powerful and manly in every impulse and throb, do no injustice to his physique. That is the venerable Prof. Benjamin Silliman, M. D., LL. D.

Did you ever see any of the "Beecher family?" If so, you will at once perceive that the close-knit, fine-muscled frame yonder, the large head and eye, open countenance, point out a Beecher—the Rev. Edward. The young man over there, with a large head and face, a small hazel eye, which constantly rolls as if in search of some lost friend, is surely not a reverend. He is about forty-five. He is a little inclined to corpulency, is very slightly stoop-shouldered, and moves about in a very decided and muscular manner, as if he cared very little about pleasing or being pleased. Judging from his physique entirely, he would be set down as one who can crack a joke or an oyster-shell, enjoy a glass of old Madeira, and keep our friends Winton and Dorsey posted on the delicacies of the season, or, if the occasion require, could put into play a fine intellect or a good heart. That is Prof. Benjamin Silliman, Jr. There goes a slim, thoughtful man with "specs" on, who reminds you very much of the Hon. Senator Trumbull, yet it is hard to tell in what respect he resembles the senator. He is Prof. Elias Loomis, LL. D. The man giving out college catalogues, looks like an improved and enlarged edition of our mutual friend, Benjamin Cooke. It is Rev. N. Porter, D. D.,—a heavy man at Yale.

But we must now stop this pastime, and attend to the speaking. Prof. Thos. A. Thatcher has the floor. He gives a very tasky analysis of character in a eulogy on Mr. E. C. Herrick, late treasurer. Thatcher is professor of the Latin language and literature; and it is a treat to listen to his finished periods and classical sentences. As we can do no sort of justice to his remarks, we will attempt no report. He is followed by Prof. N. Porter in some remarks commemorative of the late Prof. Wm. A. Larned. He talks right off, without note or script, as if he really has something to say, and affords considerable pleasure by quoting to his learned auditors from the Second Georgic the lines:

"Illum non populi fasces, non purpura regum
Flexit, et infidos agitans discordia fratres;
Aut conjurato descendens Dacus ab Ista"

The Hon. Ex-Gov. and Ex-Chief Justice Ellsworth now arose, and offered a resolution, urging upon Mr. Lincoln and his Cabinet, "to use every means consistent with civilized warfare" to put down the rebellion. The honorable gentleman made a powerful and eloquent speech in favor of his resolution, giving utterance to very strong anti-slavery sentiments, and argued in favor of doing justice to the negro. Admiral (better known as Commodore) Foote was now called on, amid great cheering. The gallant soldier leaning upon his crutch, made a very smooth, easy, and graceful speech, in the course of which he called up Hon. J. J. Roberts, ex-President of Liberia. President Roberts came forward amid cheers and applause from all parts of the Hall. His original bearing, correctness of speech, and evident good sense could not fail to claim respect. In fact every body seemed to look at these, rather than at his tawny skin and almost woolly hair. We felt a glow of pride, as we saw a representative of our race holding forth on the platform of a Yale commencement. We heard none muttering "nigger;" no grumbling, nor any expression of disapprobation at having a "nigger" here. President Roberts showed himself quite equal to those around him; and every one seemed pleased. Rev. Dr. Bacon, Ex-Gov. Dutton, Rev. Dr. Gulliver, and other distinguished men made remarks of a strongly anti-slavery character. Dr. Bacon's was particularly fine. Everything in all these speeches seemed to squint towards [illegible] the negro his rights and arming him. It don't seem to occur to our friends or our enemies, who have been debating so long whether to let the negro have a chance to fight, dig trenches, and black officers' boots, that the negro himself may have something to say on all these points by and by. A few other remarks were made, when the Alumni of Yale adjourned their meeting to another year.

Numerous class meetings and re-unions were held throughout the afternoon. In the evening came the oration and the poem before the Phi Beta Kappa (Φ B K) the former by Chas. Tracey, Esq., of New York; the latter by Rev. C. D. Helmer, of Wisconsin. Both these productions struck me as very dull, dry, and insipid. The chief fault was, however, in the delivery. Both seemed to act as capital soporifics on an audience quite moderate in size.

But the day of commencement week is Thursday, which is devoted to the orations of the graduating class, conferring of degrees, &c. At seven o'clock the college and church bells rang, and the procession of students, professors, Alumni, and distinguished strangers, formed in the College yard and marched, led by a fine band to the Central Church (Rev. Dr. Bacon's) the largest in the city, in the open square in front of which the long line opened, and the president, professors, and other distinguished men filed into the church by twos, the band playing sweet national airs. Soon all were seated and quiet, when President Woolsey, robed in a long black gown, offered a fervent prayer, in such simple, impressive words and humble tones, as touched the hearts of the multitude. Here, as at Alumni Hall, silk flounces, crinoline, rosy cheeks and pretty bonnets, were set off by themselves, being admitted only by ticket to the galleries, and the few seats on either side of the pulpit. Take note again, that we have no Women's Rights humbuggery here. The prayer being over, President Woolsey calls out in his peculiar, shrill, piercing, crackling, though pleasant and agreeable voice: "Vane accendat oratio, dic salutem scholarci Alling." Whereupon John W. Alling came forward and gave the Latin salutatory oration. The Latin of this oration was very pretty and simple. We, with ease, understood every word of it, so simple and straightforward were the sentences. This over, the President always sitting, said: "Orationem proximam audiamus a Alexander." and Mr. Alexander gave rather a dull oration on the Virginia Convention of '88. "Sua quisque fortuna faber," by a young man from Kailua, was a good, though not brilliant production. Everything went along smoothly now, until the oration on "American Statesmen," by Franklin McVeagh, of Westchester, Penna., was announced, when everybody bent forward to listen. And really we must say, it was the most stirring and thoroughly eloquent address we ever heard from a college platform. It was eloquent itself, and withal eminently anti-slavery. Ah! how we would like to hear him again! The exercises now went on, enlivened occasionally by the sweet music of the band. There were twenty-three exercises in the forenoon, sixteen of which were by the students. At 1 o'clock, the Alumni, professors, president, and distinguished strangers, (among whom was President Roberts,) marched to Alumni Hall, where to the number of six hundred they sat down to a fine dinner, which seemed to them all that could be desired. White and colored waiters served together in perfect harmony, and everything passed off much to the delight of Mr. Park, who was the ἀρχιτρικλινος of the day.

At two o'clock the procession re-formed and marched to the church, where twenty-two more exercises were gone through with, some of them very superior in merit; at the close of which President Woolsey conferred the degrees in Latin. And thus passed commencement week in Yale.

E. D. B.

THE FAITH OF ABRAHAM.

"He believed in the Lord, and he counted it to him for righteousness." It is very important for us to understand rightly what was the nature of that faith in Abraham which God "counted to him for righteousness." That faith does not belong to things that have passed away. Abraham exercised it, and it was counted to him for righteousness, before he was under the covenant of circumcision. Although there be different degrees of faith, they are but different measures of the same thing. The faith that justifies (which is what is meant by its being counted for righteousness) is that faith which saves; and saving faith has ever been of one nature, and has always had one object. This is placed beyond a doubt by the fact that Saint Paul more than once sets before Christians the faith of Abraham as the model for their own. In the patriarch, therefore, we have an example of that faith which is needful to ourselves, and it thus the more behooves us that this example should not be misapprehended.

The history of no man that has lived is known which shows stronger faith than that of Abraham. He is called to abandon his friends and country, and he obeys; he goes forth, "not knowing whither he went." God promises to him a son; and he believes, although he is already old, and the accomplishment is many long years delayed. God promises that his posterity shall be as the sand that is by the sea shore innumerable; and he believes, although he is childless. God tells him that the land in which he is a stranger shall be the heritage of his children; and he believes, although he sees not how so great an event can be brought to pass. The promised son is born, and grows up, when he is commanded to slay him in sacrifice; and he forthwith proceeds to obey that commandment, although he regarded that son as the medium of all the blessings promised to him and his. What more do we require than this? Is not this sufficient to constitute the faith which justified and saved his soul? Alas, no. Abraham himself knew this very well. All this does not constitute the faith which the Gospel requires of us, and which we are assured is the same faith that Abraham held. From all that appears in the stated facts, the faith of Abraham consisted in his belief that it was God who spoke to him, and that whatever that God had promised he was able to perform. His strong acts of obedience were proportioned to the strength of his belief. But is this saving faith? We find many who exhibit strong trust in God's providence and care, and who exhibit much energy in acts of obedience to his commandments, but who do not and cannot claim to have received the anointing from the Holy One. There are many such, not even nominally Christians. They are good men and true in their order, but their order is not in Christ, and they are none of his. Even the faith that can remove mountains is not in itself the faith that saves and justifies, and it is to be feared that many who have had that faith alone will utterly perish. We write these words with awe; for they form a sentence of condemnation against many from whom the heart cannot withhold its love.

Since, therefore, that Abraham had saving faith, and seeing that such faith is not inevitably connected with such acts as those which his history sets before us, why is not its real nature [illegible] more clearly pointed out to us? It is clearly pointed out, although not in the history. The sacred volume comes to us as a whole, and the information not given in one part of it is generally to be found in another. The gospels and the epistles clearly tell us wherein [illegible] Abraham's faith was counted to him for righteousness. If it be asked, why has it not set forth in the history itself? It may as well be asked, why the doctrine of redemption is not as clearly set forth in the Pentateuch as in the prophecies of Isaiah? It is indeed as fully set forth, now that we can read with anointed eyes the types and symbols under which it was at once veiled and expressed. It was not the purpose of God that the mysteries of his kingdom should be [illegible] until the fulness of time was come. He gave more and more, stronger and stronger light, dispersing gradually the morning shades, until we reached the noontide splendors of that day in which Christ rose from the dead. All was then known.

What, then, is this essential faith which, according to the testimony of Christ and his apostles, Abraham possessed, and through which alone he could be justified—justified, not as being righteous, but as being "counted righteous before God:" We will give the answer from the able but neglected book of a clear-minded writer. "Faith is a grace wrought in the soul of a sinner by the Holy Spirit, whereby being emptied of all opinionative thoughts of his own righteousness, strength and fulness he is enabled to look to Christ, to betake himself to him as his only Saviour, to receive him, to rest and rely upon him for the remission of his sins, for a righteousness to justify him in the sight of God, for strength to enable him to perform duty, to follow after holiness, and to encounter spiritual enemies; and for eternal life, when his work of faith and labor of love is ended, and when he comes to finish with joy his course. This is the Scripture notion of saving faith: and it has God for its fundamental and principal object, as he is a God of truth reconciled to sinners; but it has Christ for its immediate object, for it is only by his mediation that a sinner can come to God."

Had Abraham this faith? There can be no question of it. There can be no question that he was enabled to find in the Divine promises made to him, far more than met his ear. He had a spiritual perception of their purport, and apprehended through them a hope of heaven, and an interest in its blessedness. As this can be only realized through Christ, this alone would be evidence that his faith had reference to the promised Messiah. But we are not left to any conjecture in this matter. Our Lord himself says: "Abraham longed to see my day: and he saw it, and was glad." John viii. 56.

This means that Abraham earnestly desired to have a distinct conception, a clear representation, of the work of the Messiah—his promised seed in whom all the families of the earth were to be blessed; and that this privilege was in a special manner adorded to him, and filled his heart with gladness. In Christ, therefore, and in his great redeeming work, his faith centred. This was in his view the ultimate object of all the promises he received; and while he did look forward to a numerous posterity through Isaac, he was also permitted to behold in faith the far larger heritage which should accrue to him through that great Son—the heirs of his faith, the inheritors of the blessings belonging to his spiritual seed—numerous as the stars, and not less glorious.

These are not fancies. As the words of our Lord disclose to us the nature of Abraham's faith, so the words of the apostle indicate the sense we have given, as that in which our Lord's words are to be understood. Saint Paul, in the fourth chapter of Romans, treats largely of the nature of Abraham's faith, showing that the promises made to the patriarch had, besides their natural meaning, a spiritual one which he fully understood. He shows that Israel had no exclusive inheritance in the promises made to Abraham that he should be "the father of many nations," and the "heir of the world," and whether the large views which we are thus led to take of these promises and facts were opened to him or not, there is every reason, from the declaration of our Saviour, to conclude, that his faith did embrace these spiritual views, and that in the degree of light imparted to him, his faith was the same in its essence as our own.

In his epistle to the church in Galatia, the same apostle returns to a subject obviously full of interest to him. He declares plainly that the Gospel—nothing less than the Gospel—was preached to Abraham when it was declared to him that to him all nations should be blessed. "So, then," he adds, "they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham."

It must be admitted that on the surface of the narrative, the expectation and the hopes of Abraham are temporal, and the promises also. It is refreshing to be enabled thus, by the aid of the later Scriptures, to penetrate to their inner meaning, and find that they were not such. Through faith, his views, like our own, extended beyond the grave, and rested not short of heaven. His portion was not in this world. He was thus well content to dwell in a strange country, without any abiding place, because, as the same apostle assures us, he looked not in this world, but in the world to come, "for a city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." Heb xi. 10. Truly and beautifully applicable to him, are, as intended to be, the lines of the poet:—

"No land of Israel do I possess;
No city call these wild moors mine;
A pastoral roving man,
I lodge awhile on brute below,
Or gladly wander to and fro,
Till I my Canaan gain.
Nothing on earth I call my own,
A stranger to the world, unknown,
[illegible]
I trample on their whole delight,
And seek a city out of sight,
A city in the skies."

DR. KITTO.

BAYARD TAYLOR AND THE COCKNEYS.

After the completion of his Eastern tour, Taylor went to London. He entered a shop to procure an article to cover his head. The purchase having been made, the shopman remarked:—

"Beg pard'n, sir; an Hamerican gent, I hobserve; been in Hingland long?"

"Why do you take me for an American?" asked Taylor, who rather prided himself upon being a cosmopolitan.

"Yes, sir, beg pard'n, sir. I hobserved that you said a hat; beg pard'n, sir, but in Lunnon we commonly say han at."

His speech betrayed the American; but he thought to be more careful when, the next day, he visited a famous clothing mart. At the entrance of the immense room, crowded with customers, he intimated to a "floor-walker" of the establishment, attired most gorgeously to behold, that he wished to purchase a vest.

"Ere, 'Ennery!" shouted the walker, at the top of his voice, to a shopman at the extremity of the room, "show this Hamerican geet the flowery reskits!"

One word had betrayed him as an American; and the shopmen, believing that all Americans were savages, and knowing that savages were fond of gay garments, jumped to the conclusion that "flowery reskits" must be adapted to the taste of his presumably savage customer.

WIFE VERSUS LADY.

It is certainly not in good taste for a gentleman to speak of his wife as his "lady," or to register their names upon the books of a hotel as "John Smith and lady," or to ask a friend "How is your lady?" This is all fashionable vulgarity, and unquestionably betrays a lack of cultivation. The term wife is far more beautiful, and appropriate, and refined, whatever may be said to the contrary. Suppose a lady were to say, instead of "my husband," "my [illegible]," or suppose we were to speak of Mrs. Fitz Maurice and her gentlemen." The thing would be absolutely ludicrous, and its absurdity is none the less, if faithfully considered. A man's wife is his wife, and not his lady; and we marvel this latter term is not absolutely tabooed in such a connexion, at least by intelligent and refined people. It ought to be left for the exclusive use of the public street-cry.

Providence Post.

God, who hath done singular things for our good, may indeed justly expect that we should do singular things for his glory.

Churches in New York.—From Trow's "New York Directory," lately published, we gather the following list of churches:—

[illegible] Congregational, 1; Dutch Reformed, 7; Friends', 3; Jewish Synagogues, 5; Lutheran, 7; Methodist Episcopal, 21; Methodist Episcopal, Methodist Episcopal, 4; Methodist Protestants, 1; Presbyterian (including two Mission chapels), 18; United Presbyterian, 6; Associate Reformed Presbyterian, 1; Reformed Presbyterian, 5; Protestant Episcopal (including seven Mission chapels,) 62; Roman Catholic, 31; Unitarian, 2; Universalist, 4; miscellaneous, 20; making a total of [illegible] Some half dozen Mission chapels are not enumerated; but as several of the foregoing churches will probably ere long be sold out and closed up, the number may stand as it is—305.

The following table shows how we compare with other cities:—

cities	pop	CHURCHES	to [illegible]
New York	805,651	305	1 to 2,641
Phila	565,529	274	1 to 2,063
Baltimore	212,418	171	1 to 1,242
Boston	177,718	112	1 to 1,586

Brooklyn, which has a population of 266,661, Newark, which has 71,941, and Elizabeth, which has 11,567, have each been represented as having a church for every thousand inhabitants; we have not the exact figures at hand, and therefore have not included them in our table.—N. Y. World.

Churches in Mass.—The Congregationalists, who are the first and leading people, have 485 churches, 580 ministers, and 77,000 members. Our impression is, though we have not the figures to verify the fact, that the Baptists, who are next in point of time, (1664,) are also the next in point of numbers and influence. The Episcopalians, who date from 1686, number 4,266. The Unitarians, though possessing wealth, learning, and social position, are numerically few, and are strong only in Boston and its vicinity. The Universalists are weaker than the Unitarians, and seem to have made no progress of late years.

"Religious Denominations" of Prisoners in Scotland.—A Parliamentary return has been issued, showing among other things, "the religious denominations to which the various prisoners in Scotland, on the 1st of January, 1862, belonged, as entered on their captions." It appears that the number of prisoners in all the Scotch prisons belonging to the Established Church was 870, Free Church, 114; Roman Catholic, 511; Episcopalians, 230; United Presbyterians, 39; Congregational, 2; Protestant Dissenters, 294; no religious denominations, 196

NOTICE.

TO THE DISTRICTS OF PHILADELPHIA, NEW ENGLAND, OHIO, INDIANA, AND MISSOURI, OF THE A. M. E. CHURCH MINISTERS.

Dear Brethren:—As we have a number of superannuated ministers on the list in said Districts, therefore it will be expected that the ministers and preachers, on their circuits and stations, will do all they can to collect the two cent money; and we also recommend that the Class leaders be instructed to collect and set the amount on the Class book opposite each member's name, as also all the collections called, per Discipline, for the Annual Conference, and publish the same once every quarter, that it may be seen who they are that work for God and his cause. We think it is time to give credit to those of our people who do work, so that God's name may be glorified.

The Social, Civil, and Statistical Association of The Colored People of Pennsylvania open a subscription list to aid the freed men at Port Royal and other points where they may be located, and respectfully ask the co-operation of the colored citizens and others in this city, or elsewhere, in money or clothing.

Any amount of value received will be acknowledged, with the name of the donor, in the Recorder, where a constant record will be kept.

Subscriptions may be sent to Jacob C. White, at the office of the Lebanon Cemetery, 711 Lombard Street, and also to William Still, 107 North Fifth Street, and to Rev. E. Weaver, 619 Pine Street.

	PAID.
Statistical Society,	$50 00
Clayton Miller,	2 00
William Still,	5 00
Robert Adger,	2 00
Henry Minturn,	2 00
Catherine Johnson,	2 00
Aunt Locke,	2 00
Wm. Warwicke,	2 00
Harriet Shorter,	1 00
Sarah S. Hawkins,	1 00
Rev. Jonathan C. Gibbs,	1 00
James P. Clay,	1 00
Benjamin F. Hill,	2 00
S. M. S.,	2 00
Elizabeth Gordon,	1 00
F. J. Dreer,	5 00

It affords us pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of ten dollars, the proceeds of Miss Anna E. Dickinson's lecture at Concert Hall for the contrabands, contributed to the S., C. and Statistical Association, to be applied as intended. Wm. Still.

Cor. Sec. of S., C. and Statistical Association of the Colored People of Penna.

Domestic Items.

The Burial of Deceased Soldiers.—From the Richmond Examiner, July 28th.—The manner in which the interment of deceased soldiers is carried on in this vicinity is a disgrace not only to those concerned, but those having authority in such matters. We have it on the authority of a gentleman, an officer of the army, who has visited Oakwood Cemetery, that the coffins are often piled in two or three deep in one excavation, and thus covered up, of course rendering it out of the question for an inquiring relative to recognise and reclaim a corpse.

Recently the gentleman above referred to passed the cemetery, and seeing the cruel work going on, asked: "Is that the way Virginia disposes of the soldiers of the Confederacy? Has she not got soil enough to furnish them each with separate, distinct burial?" The man in charge replied: "Is it any of your business?" You attend to your own business, and I will attend to mine." Surely the man who dies in defence of his country is entitled to an honorable grave beneath its soil. If the authorities will not look to the matter, the personal friends of the deceased should. We understand that the burial of deceased soldiers is in the hands of a parcel of German undertakers, instead of being vouchsafed to the respectable undertakers of the city, who from a regard for the cause, would discharge the duty at least with decency and humanity.

English Thanks to Gen Halleck.—Washington, July 31.—The following note has been received by Major General Halleck:

"St. Louis, (Mo) July 22, 1862.

"Sir:—I have been directed by the Hon. William Stuart, her Majesty's Charge d'Affaires at Washington, to express to you the expression of his best thanks for the very great courtesy and generosity which you manifested in ordering, in May last, the release of certain prisoners, British subjects, who represented that they had been impressed into the Confederate service.

"I have the honor to be, sir, your most obedient servant,

"Francis Williams,
"H. B. M. Acting Consul at Chicago, Ill."

Pacific Attitude of Foreign Powers.—Washington, July 31.—The despatches received at the State Department, by the last arrival, from our Ministers abroad, show that the tone of the foreign governments is uniformly of a pacific tone.

The attention of the Government has been called to the fitting out of two armed steamers in a port in New York, on the ground that they interfere with enlistments.

The New Postage stamps for Currency.—The Postmaster-General and the Commissioners of Internal Revenue have approved of the specimens for the postage stamp currency, which will be for five, ten, twenty-five and fifty cents. The designs embrace the present five and ten cent postage stamps, and the [illegible] in such a way that they cannot be separated and used for postage. They will bear on their face the following inscription: "Postage stamps, furnished by the assistant treasurers and designated depositories of the United States: receivable for postage stamps at any post office." Upon the back will be a large figure, denoting the denomination, with these words: "Exchangeable for United States notes by any assistant treasurer or designated United States depositary, in sums not less than five dollars; receivable in payment of all dues to the United States less than five dollars. Act approved July 17, 1862."

They will be printed on bank-note paper of different sizes, averaging about one-fifth the size of the United States notes, and will be made [illegible]

"Burleigh" writes to the Boston Journal. I saw a [illegible] Scott was in private life. He had all the humor and [illegible] unbiassed and impartial answer. He could give [illegible] all the information he needed, and he got what he wanted.

Who is She.—Miss Philip Phillips, the lady who [illegible] Jewess. She is [illegible] to Washington, and on the occasion [illegible] Hall Ron Bhunnister [illegible] concluded to take notice of her conduct. Mrs [illegible]

Baltimore.—Now that Baltimore is held against the [illegible] people themselves than by the presence of the Federal troops, great confidence is entertained in our strength in that quarter. Within three weeks a wonderful and healthy change has come over Baltimore. The secessionists are restrained, and their intrigues exposed in the sternest manner by the Unionists, and the latter, to full possession of the city, must upon the most [illegible] against the former. If we would [illegible] the authority of a [illegible] you should go to Baltimore, and mingle with the masses—[illegible] city, and [illegible] best might be profitably followed in Philadelphia.—The Press.

Drafting.—The President has [illegible] a draft of [illegible] for three years or during the war, for service of the United States, to serve for nine months, unless sooner discharged.

Morgan the Guerilla. Gen Morgan's force embraces men from Texas, Mississippi, Georgia and Kentucky, of desperate character, but obedient to his will, as the lion is to its master. A few of them are gentlemanly, but a majority of them would as soon cut a man's throat as take a chew of tobacco.

Gen. Morgan [illegible] He stands about six feet in height, is slightly round shouldered, and his dress is distinguished by nothing except a silver cross-sword, which holds commandant of the wide-brimmed, low-crowned, black felt hat.

He has a rather dark complexion, with features sharp. He wears a moustache, with whiskers on his chin, and never allows himself to be overcome by anger. He is adored by his men, who think he is Kentucky's Messiah.

He married a most amiable lady some years since, but she died eighteen months ago, of grief over the crimes of her husband. For two or three years she was an utterly broken-hearted woman, and finally sank into the grave, about six weeks before Morgan took the last step in the direction of infamy, by joining the Southern Confederacy.

The guerilla chief formerly had an interest in a faro bank in Cincinnati. He was engaged in picking up "aces," as verdent people who accompanied him to the gambling houses were familiarly called.

Rich Clergymen in Boston. The Clergymen of Boston are not all of them rigid observers of the Catholic vow of poverty, judging by the tax roll. Rev. N. Frothingham, D. D., is taxed on $218,000; Rev. Thomas Worcester, D. D., on $67,000; Right Rev. John D. Fitzpatrick, D. D., Bishop of Boston, on $121,700; Rt Rev. Manton Eastburn, D. D., $52,400, Rev. Cyrus A. Bartol, D. D., $30,000; Rev. George C. Beckwith, $32,000; Rev Thomas B. Thayer, $22,200. Several clergymen pay taxes on $10,000; and half a dozen on from $10,000 to $15,000 each. And it is believed that these persons are worth more than they are taxed for.

The Old South Church pays taxes on a valuation of $200,500. The Brattle Street Church (Dr. Lothrop's,) is taxed on real estate worth $25,000. There are several other churches that are taxed for from $10,000 to $12,000 each, such as the Central and Park Street Congregational, the Second Methodist church, &c.

There are but few millionaires left, and none are put down at two millions. The persons now taxed for about $1,000,000 and upward are Messrs. David Sears, John E. Thayer, Moses Williams, &c. There are scores of persons worth from $500,000 to $750,000 each.—Exchange.

Rev. Lewis Kellogg, late of Tremenesburg, has, after an absence of eight years, accepted a call to return to Whitehall, Washington county, N. Y., where he commenced his ministry, and continued to preach for seventeen years.

Hon. Addison C. Gibbs, the recently elected Governor of Oregon, is a worthy member of the Methodist Church. He has hitherto been a Douglas Democrat, but was chosen on the [illegible] ticket composed of Republicans and Douglas Democrats.

King Otho's reign of twenty years over Greece has been a stormy one. There were revolts in his kingdom in 1843 1844, 1845, 1841, 1843, 1847, 1848, 1852 and the French occupation of the Piræus in 1854; and now the insurrection of Nauplia, in 1862, has broken out.

What Congress Has Done—It is proper to enumerate briefly the chief items of the unprecedented mass of important action perfected by the First Session of the 37th Congress.

I. War.—This part of the work of the session embraces the laws raising and empowering the President to raise the several numbers of 75,000, 500,000 and 300,000 men for the army, and providing for the organization, arming and support, for the increase of our navy to its present vast force; and the laws defining and punishing treason, requiring stricter oaths of allegiance, confiscating the property and freeing the slaves of rebels, empowering the President to call out the militia and suspend the habeas corpus act.

2. Finance.—Includes the [illegible] the District of Columbia, prescribing freedom in all the territories, abolishing [illegible] slavery in them, adopting and putting in operation an honest efficient treaty to prevent the slave trade, recognising the commonwealths of Hayti and Liberia, forbidding army officers to return fugitive slaves, freeing such slaves of rebels as shall labor in the service of the United States, modifying the Fugitive Slave bill so as to confine its services to loyal claimants, and securing a trial by jury to those seized under it, and regulating the Supreme Court districts so as to provide against present very costly circuit system.

3. Financial.—Includes the Tax bill, the Treasury Note bills, the revised tariff, and the postage stamp small change regulation.

4. Internal Administration.—Includes the Free Homestead law, the Pacific Railroad law, the establishment of an Agricultural Department at Washington, and the endowment of agricultural colleges.

Among measures of importance defeated or delayed, should be named the national bankrupt law, the admission [illegible] State of West Virginia, the [illegible] the Land and Money [illegible] appropriating money to make the State Emancipation Act [illegible] and the bills to reform the prevailing practices as to franking and mileage.

The [illegible] army, and nearly $100,000,000 for the navy.

Such are the principal doings of this memorable session. We must, of course, omit a vast number of [illegible]

Judicial Reorganization. [illegible] enacted and passed a most important bill, creating the [illegible] Justices of the Supreme Court. These Districts will hereafter stand as follows:—

1. New England States.—Nathan Clifford.
2. New York and Vermont—Samuel Nelson.
3. Pennsylvania and New Jersey.—Robert C. Grier.
4. Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and North Carolina—Ch. J. Roger B. Taney.
5. South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Mississippi—James M. Wayne.
6. Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Kentucky and Tennessee—John Catron.
7. Ohio and Indiana—Noah H. [illegible]
8. Michigan, Wisconsin, and Illinois—[illegible]
9. [illegible] Iowa, Kansas and Minnesota—David F. Miller.

It is understood that Senator Browning and Judge Daniel Davis, both of Illinois, are candidates for the Justiceship of the 8th District.

Property owners in Nashville have not gained by [illegible] rule. The valuation of property in the city subject to taxation in 1861 was $14,280,765. In 1862 [illegible] three million four hundred and twenty-six thousand one [illegible]

The valuation of property in New York, upon which taxes are to be collected this year is, in dollars; last year, five hundred and eighty one million [illegible] last year, $10,027,650

The exportation of butter is now immense. On [illegible] eight thousand three hundred firkins of butter, and in the Ariel, for California, there were two thousand one hundred and fifty firkins—making ten thousand four [illegible]

The Total Loss at the Richmond Battles.—[illegible] killed upon the [illegible] during the seven days' battle before Richmond:

				TOTAL.
Infantry,	[illegible]	1,916	[illegible]	[illegible]
Sumner,	120	1,000	800	2,000
Keyes,	[illegible]	[illegible]	200	[illegible]
Heintzelman,	180	1,000	[illegible]	[illegible]
Porter,	850	[illegible]	2,750	7,350
Cavalry,	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	125
Long-pont,	[illegible]	[illegible]	50	75
Totals,	[illegible]	[illegible]	5,000	10,214

The Valley.—The rebel cavalry, under General [illegible] the Shenandoah valley, leaving that part of the country to the defenceless of the guerrillas above.

The South bank of the James River is again [illegible] The roads from Cabin Point to Petersburg are excellent—the land so high and somewhat undulating, very healthy, and well watered with pure, clear brooks and springs. Between [illegible] and Petersburg [illegible] and these are strong positions, and could easily be occupied. Newmarket Hill, Friends' Hill, and the Banked Heights overlook and command the city of Petersburg, the terminus of five important railroads leading South, West, East and North. At last accounts all this country was open and we could [illegible] without meeting a rebel, and it could be invaded with but small loss. Petersburg, once in our possession, could never be taken from us, and the fall of Richmond would be a foregone conclusion.

According to this letter a distinguished naval officer writes to a friend in this city: "The campaign on the Peninsula has only failed from unfortunate unforeseen and unbooked for circumstances, over which none of us could have control, but for this the consummation of the plan would have produced results as grand as the conception and design of the original scheme. History will do it justice hereafter."

On Friday last, a Norwegian vessel, having on board a large number of emigrants, passed through the Welland canal, en route for the upper lakes. The [illegible] was exceedingly handsome. She is probably the first vessel from any of the continental ports of Northern Europe that has navigated our inland waters.

Commodore Wilkes' James River [illegible] was about to engage the rebel iron-clads from Richmond—the New Merrimac, the Rebel, and the Curtis Peck—at last advices.

Dr. Breckenridge made an almost miraculous escape from a band of guerillas encamped upon his country-seat in Kentucky. The Doctor has another practical proof of the [illegible] of Divine Providence in caring for the body and estate as well as the soul.

The news from General Pope's Army of Virginia continues to be of the most gratifying character. All goes well in that army.

General Rousseau has declared that two of his cardinal principles of action shall be to make the supporters of the rebellion feel heavily the consequences of forfeiting the protection of the Government, and to suffer no man, with his consent, to lay the weight of his finger upon an escaping slave, without first taking the oath of allegiance.

Colonel Claseret, of the army of the Shenandoah, has sent to Paris a long letter, which appears in the Siecle, and eulogizes the American soldiers in the highest terms. He says that they possess every quality of the French soldier, and two other qualities besides—a patience and a resignation beyond all belief. He speaks of their long marches without food, and almost barefoot, as something unparalleled in military history.

Died.

On the morning of the 21, after a severe illness, Marine Chandler, infant son of Alexander and Catherine Derry, departed this life, aged 21 months and 3 days

Better to die in youth,
When age is green and bright,
Than when the heart has lost its truth
In age and sorrow's night.

Oh! had I died when young,
How many burning tears,
Am I wasted hopes, and severed ties,
Had spared my after years!

J. C. D.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

JOHN H. GLENN, Monmouth Illinois. CHAS. M. HARLOW, Galesburg, Illinois.

HARRIS & GLENN,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW,
Monmouth, Warren County, Illinois.

Special attention given to the collecting business, to paying taxes and Real Estate [illegible]

References.—D. A. Wallace, D. D., President of Knox College; Col. Hugh J. Clark, Atlas, Chicago; Hon. W. J. Morrison, Lawrence of Indiana.

"UNION COTTAGE,"
ATLANTIC CITY, NEAR THE INLET.

The subscriber will always be happy to welcome her numerous friends, and the public in general.

TERMS.

Board per week,	$6 00
" " day,	1 25
Single meals,	50

S. H. Wattes, Proprietress.

NOTICE

To the friends of Religious Literature and human progress of the City and County of Philadelphia

This certifies that Miss Mary Still is a legally authorized agent under the Cuba and Canada of Philadelphia Female [illegible] and obtain aid for the Christian Recorder of the African Methodist Episcopal Church of America.

We, therefore, take great pleasure in recommending Miss Still to the citizens and friends as a lady every way worthy of such a position, as well as trustworthy, and we do hope, as the enterprise is commendable, that those to whom she may present this writing will not turn her away without either subscribing or contributing to this great cause

Signed, ELISHA WEAVER
Editor & General Book Steward.
No. 619 Pine St., Phila.

BOARDING
IN BROOKLYN.

MRS. S. PLANT (formerly Richardson) respectfully announces that she has opened a first class BOARDING & LODGING HOUSE at No. 97 HIGH STREET, Brooklyn where she is prepared to accommodate the public on the most reasonable terms

Her house being located in a very pleasant part of the city, and within five minutes' walk of Fulton Ferry, is made thus a very desirable and convenient place.

BOARDING

Mrs. AMIA WILLIAM, of Cape May, will open the Banker House for the season for the accommodation of all who wish to spend the season there, and she will spare no pains to make all comfortable. Those wishing to spend one, two, or three days, will find the Banker House the right spot. Prices very reasonable. 1-mpd

COAL, STOVES, &c., &c.

The subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has taken the store,

NO. 107 NORTH FIFTH STREET, formerly occupied as the Anti-Slavery Office, (where he [illegible] henceforth as a place of business for the sale of

COAL, STOVES, &c

Having made arrangements with one of the first Coal Dealers in the city, to furnish the best qualities of Lehigh, Schuylkill, &c., at the lowest Cash prices, he hopes to give full satisfaction in this branch of his business.

He will also keep constantly on hand a general assortment of good NEW and SECOND HAND STOVES, RANGES, &c

Special attention given to the [illegible] promptly attended to, and [illegible] up, or cleaned, can be promptly accommodated by applying [illegible]

He hopes by energy and strict attention to business to obtain a fair share of patronage.

WM STILL,
107 North Fifth Street, Philadelphia

REFERENCES.

J. M. M. Blaine, Dr. Cooper Wister,
Samuel Rhoads, James Mott,
Dillwyn Parrish, Thomas Williamson,
[illegible] [illegible] Wm. Evans.

PERRY & FITZGERALD'S

PROCESS FOR MAKING LIGHT NUTRITIOUS, AND UNADULTERATED BREAD, WITHOUT FERMENTATION

The [illegible] I have] making patented to Perry & Fitzgerald removes all the obstacles which have hitherto rendered it [illegible] The entire process is performed by mechanical means, and [illegible]

The process consists in mixing the flour in a closed vessel, and the [illegible] with the dough [illegible] and ready to be [illegible] the right degree of [illegible] in the brief space of fifteen or twenty minutes. The [illegible] is then [illegible] the operation, in all its details, from the putting in of the flour to the discharge of the dough, [illegible] from twenty five to forty minutes.

The Invention of Perry & Fitzgerald effects a revolution in the preparation of bread, by establishing a system of wholesale manufacture not subject to the vicissitudes and evils of fermentation, but exact and certain in its results.—1. Because, by the substitution of mechanical for manual labor, and in the superior value of the article produced, it promises large profits upon the capital employed. 2. Because such employment of capital as well as the protection offered by the patent, [illegible] adequate security against such profits. 3. Because the process permits a private purchase of the right of a [illegible] district, [illegible] the manufacturer, [illegible] to be carried on, should the demand [illegible] material

The application of pure carbonic acid gas, under pressure, to a mechanically kneaded dough or mass, as in the invention of Perry & Fitzgerald, did not occur to Dr. Dyer, though he seems to have had a clear apprehending of the importance of the artificial use of the gas, since he states, hypothetically, that "if water, highly impregnated with carbonic acid gas, be used for kneading the dough, the [illegible] will be produced in the [illegible] and the [illegible] rendered [illegible] to be produced in this way, then, as the sugar would remain undecomposed, the bread would be no much the sweeter and more nourishing."

What, to Dr. Dyer, was evidently a merely apprehended chemical result, has been practically developed by the Chief Invention of Perry & Fitzgerald. Posterity will bind their names in grateful remembrance [illegible] benefactors of humankind.

IMPERFECTION. The [illegible] of bread [illegible] by no means new. Dr. Cullen, who wrote more than seventy years ago, says:

"In Scotland also [illegible] the lower class of people and that in the greater part of the whole, [illegible] unfermented bread, called [illegible] Unfermented [illegible] in other [illegible], and there are not a few healthy people anywhere to be found. In the course of fifty years, that I have practised among them, I have had occasion to know this, and have hardly met with a disease, of any consequence, that I could impute to the use of unfermented [illegible]

At a later period Professor Thompson, of Glasgow, in his work on the "Food of Animals," after alluding to the facts referred to above by Dr. Cullen, and other kindred facts, [illegible]

"Such, then, being well-ascertained facts, the use of the wholesome [illegible] unfermented bread, it becomes important to discover in what respects it differs from fermented bread. The result gained by this process, [illegible] to be merely the [illegible] of the particles of which the flour is composed, so as to render the [illegible] more digestible by the [illegible] organs of digestion. But, as this object is gained at a sacrifice of the [illegible] of the flour, it becomes a matter of interest to ascertain the amount of the loss sustained in the process."

The result of Professor Thompson's experiments she ved a difference in favor of unfermented bread of nearly seven per cent. over that made by the ordinary process. In other words, there was a loss of [illegible] of the nutritive proportion of the flour, which, by the process of fermentation, was driven into the air and lost.

We come now to a more particular consideration of the property of the Perry & Fitzgerald mode without fermentation, or the use of chemical agents, over the bread made by these processes. Although, from what has already been said, this superiority appears in most vivid contrast, yet the public will be better satisfied to have the points stated specifically; for it only needs that the advantages secured by this method be clearly understood in order to its universal introduction in the manufactory of bread.

I. Its Cleanliness.—Instead of the dough being mixed by the naked hands or feet of the bread, from the setting of the flour to the completion of the baking, is not, and scarcely can be, touched by any one. "One fastidious relished to its manufacture," says Dr Willard Parker, "is its entire cleanliness." Says Dr Wetherby: "The process is not only purely scientific, but preeminently cleanly."

II. Its Purifying of all the Nutrient Properties of the Flour.—As the raising of the dough is by the mechanical introduction of pure carbonic acid gas, under pressure, in a closed vessel, no [illegible] is taken from the [illegible] of the flour, in all its details, from the putting in of the flour to the discharge of the dough, [illegible] from twenty five to forty minutes.

III. Its Uniform Character.—Bread made by the New Process is uniformly light, sweet, and nutritious. The condition being always the same, and not liable to variation, no failure can occur in always producing bread of the same quality. It retains its moisture much longer than fermented bread, and may be eaten warm with impunity. The process also insures a perfect freedom from all acidity, even in the hottest weather. Says the London Times:—

"The objectionable consequences of fermentation being avoided, the result seems of the first importance, both unchanged and unadulterated, the resulting loaf being absolutely pure."

IV. Its Wholesomeness.—Being free from the debris of the substances which are the product of fermentation, or chemical operation, by the old modes, the bread made by the New Process is easy of digestion in [illegible] and is, consequently, [illegible] To dyspeptics [illegible] it is [illegible] Medical College, it will be invaluable, as they will be able to use it when the fermented manufactured bread has been found to have signally failed or an article of diet." Says the London Morning Times and Gazette:—

"Since the introduction of the new [illegible] bread there have already been received from members of the medical profession, who have recommended it in their practice, as well as from non-professional sources, accounts of the really astonishing results that have followed its use in cases of deranged digestion and constipation. Many persons have regained their recovery to health, after years of suffering and misery, by the simple use of the bread as a diet. Many cases have also been reported by medical men of patients, in which certain alarming forms of dyspepsia, which had remained intractable under every kind of treatment, have yielded as if by magic, almost immediately after adopting the use of the unfermented bread.

"The beneficial effects of the new bread are attributable to two causes. The one to the absence of the prejudicial matters imparted to ordinary bread by the process of fermentation; and the other to the presence in the bread, unchanged, of the [illegible] elements which are the essential agents of digestion and assimilation."

The most eminent members of the medical profession, both in Great Britain and in the United States, not only speak in the highest terms of the ease with which it is digested, and of its rich, nourishing qualities, but especially of its peculiar laxative virtues, and wonderful keeping properties. The absence of acidity and other strong flavors, which, in a greater or less degree, are characteristic of fermented bread, renders the new bread peculiarly delicate to the taste.

V. Its Economy and Economy.—By the use of mechanical means, instead of manual labor, a barrel of flour is converted into baked loaves in forty-five minutes; whereas, by the ordinary process, [illegible] of five hours are occupied in the formation of the "sponge," and a further time in kneading, raising, and baking the dough.

The cleanliness [illegible] process [illegible] as a correspondent of the Journal of the Society of Arts [illegible] it particularly suitable to be prepared and supplied by a public company. And since the new process dispenses with the [illegible] manufacture and the other parts of the ordinary process, [illegible] monopoly, the supply of bread is placed to some extent on the same [illegible] with gas, water, or other articles of prime necessity."

VAN RIPER & CAMP,
EXCLUSIVE MANUFACTURERS,
Corner of Broad and Buttonwood Streets,
PHILADELPHIA.

THE FOLLOWING ENDORSEMENTS OF

SPALDING'S

CEPHALIC PILLS,

WILL CONVINCE ALL WHO SUFFER FROM

HEADACHE,

THAT A

SPEEDY AND SURE CURE IS

WITHIN THEIR REACH.

As these Testimonials were [illegible] Mr. Spalding, they afford [illegible] the efficacy of this truly scientific discovery.

Masonville, Conn., Feb. 8, 1861.

Mr. Spalding.
Sir
I have tried your Cephalic Pills, and I like them so well that I want you to send me two dollars' worth more.
Part of those are for the neighbours, to whom I gave a few out of the first box I got from you.
Send the Pills by mail, and oblige
Yours [illegible]
JAMES KENNEDY.

Haverhill, Pa., Feb. 6, 1861.

Mr. Spalding.
Sir
I wish you to send me [illegible] Cephalic Pills. I have derived a great [illegible]
Yours respectfully,
MARY ANN STOKHOUSE.

Spruce Creek, Huntingdon Co., Pa., January 15, 1861.

H. C. Spalding
Dear
You will please send me two boxes of your Cephalic Pills. Send them immediately.
Respectfully yours,
JNO. H. SIMONS.

P. S. I have used one box of your Pills, and find them excellent.

Belle Vernon, Ohio, Jan. 15, 1861.

Henry C. Spalding, Esq.
Please find enclosed twenty-five cents, for which send me another box of your Cephalic Pills. They are truly the best Pills I have ever tried.
Direct
A. STOVER P. M.
Belle Vernon, Westmor. Co., O.

Bayerly, Mass., Dec. 11, 1860

H. C. Spalding, Esq.
I wish for some circulars or large show bills to bring your Cephalic Pills more particularly before my customers. If you have [illegible]
One of my customers, who is not yet to weave [illegible] ache, (usually lasting two days,) was cured of an attack in one hour by your Pills, which I sent her.
Respectfully,
W. B. WILKES

ALGER'S PRONOUNCING BIBLE.

922 Pages, Octavo. Price—$1 25 With Metrical Psalms, One dollar and Thirty-one cents.

Published by WILLIAM S. YOUNG,
1023 Race Street, Phila
Or WM. S. HANDY, 40 St. Clair Street, Pittsburgh

THE TRUE PSALMODY,
OR
The Bible Psalms the Church's only Manual of Praise.

Prepared under the [illegible] Ministers and Elders of the Presbyterian Church in [illegible] Price $1 25. Post [illegible]

[illegible] Special terms [illegible] to postage paid. Address WILLIAM S. YOUNG, Publisher, 1023 Race Street, Phila.

Advertisements.

THE DAUGHTERS OF HOPE GRAND UNION Temperance [illegible] in session at the [illegible] April 10th, 1861. Representatives from Lodges are as follows:—

From Garnet Union No 4, D. of T., from Phœnix Union, No [illegible], D. of T., from Southern Union, No [illegible], D. of P. W. S., Union of Chapters [illegible] Pa. from Dr. Bias' Union, of Carlisle, Pa.; from Mount Olive Union No [illegible] D. of T., from Commander Union No 15, D. of T., of Norristown, Pa.

Officers installed to their several positions are as follows:—

Sister E. Bonnel, Grand Associate Sister Matron, Grand Treasurer, Sister Lucretia Grand Conductress, [illegible] Sentinel A. L. Dukeson Grand Chaplain Sister Hall

G. P. P.,	Sister E. Roberts,	G. P. P.	Sister Anderson,
"	" R. Bowen,	"	" J. F. Rush,
"	" M. H. Evans,	"	" E. A. Crane,
"	" S. Newman,	"	" White,
"	" S. Davis,	"	" S. Hall.

THE DAUGHTERS OF CORNISH SOCIETY.

The Stated Quarterly Meetings of the Society are held [illegible] Tuesday, May August and November.

The meetings of the Board are held on the Wednesday previous to the regular stated meetings of the society.

Mrs. Susan Carter,
President
Mr. L. R. Seymour, Sec'y.

THE BOOK DEPOSITORY
OF THE
AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH,
No. 619 Pine Street,
PHILADELPHIA.

We keep on hand in connection with our other books Sabbath School [illegible] Question Books, Catechisms, Nos. 1, 2, and 3. We have a good assortment of such books as are generally used in the Public Schools. Also, Stationery, Inks, Pens, Paper, Envelopes and Blank Books.

THE DEATH-BED OF THE REV. JOHN WESLEY.

Wanted Canvassing Agents for this splendid large engraving which should be in every house of all admirers of that great and good man. The most liberal inducements offered to those selling this point. Send for Catalogue and Instructions

S. W. SMITH, Publisher,
No. 139 South Third Street, Philadelphia

WANTED.—The charge of a Public School. Reference as to ability can be given. Address
J. W. A., 1041 Helmuth St

ONE-PRICE CLOTHING,
OF THE LATEST STYLES,

Made in the Best Manner, expressly for RETAIL SALES. Lowest Selling Prices marked in Plain Figures. All Goods made to order warranted satisfactory. Our One-Price System is strictly adhered to. All are thereby treated alike. JONES & ST[illegible],
Dec25-1y 604 Market Street

GOOD NEWS

To Tailors, Dress makers, and to those wishing to be such. Also to owners of sewing machines, shoe keepers, and large families. [illegible] can learn [illegible] in [illegible] days, and be perfect masters in [illegible] weeks, to cut and fit perfectly. Ladies' Dresses, Boys' and Men's Pants, Vests, Jackets, Sack and Over-coats

Local and Traveling Agents Wanted.

Address REV. WM. H. GIBBS
Carversville, Bucks Co., Pa.

Or, apply to Mrs. Mary C. Weaver, wife of the Editor of this paper, [illegible] Pa. [illegible]

MRS. E. A. PALMER'S

DRY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS STORE,

NO. 105 NORTH FIFTH STREET.
PHILADELPHIA

A General Assortment of Hosiery, Trimmings, Dry Goods, &c.

Dress, Shirt making, and Plain Sewing, promptly attended to. Jan18—1y

COAL! COAL!! COAL!!!

The subscriber is selling the best qualities of Lehigh and Schuylkill Coal at the following very low prices

Lehigh Store Coal, per ton,	$4 25
" Egg "	4 25
" Broken and Screened, per ton,	4 25
" Nut "	4 00
Schuylkill, Stove, and Egg and Broken, and S reened,	4 25
Nut,	4 00

Orders left at the Store Room, No 107 North Fifth St., will be promptly attended to. WM STILL.
107 N. Fifth St., Philada.

KEELA'S PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY
N. W. corner Fifth and Cantes.

Pictures Galleries and Frames on the First Floor.

Strangers should not fail to call and examine. Admission free.

JAMES DOWNS,
DEALER IN
NEW AND SECOND HAND
CLOTHING,
No 225 South Second Street,
No 17—3mo. PHILADELPHIA

WILLIAM STILL'S
STOVE STORE,
107 NORTH FIFTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

The subscriber would respectfully inform his friends and all in want of [illegible] stoves, that he has now on hand a general variety of excellent PARLOR, COOK and CHAMBER STOVES, including Gas burning, as well as other patterns, which he is selling at very low rates. He have reduced for cash on the [illegible] Credit, and of course can sell much cheaper than those buying on the usual credit system. At any rate his friends are invited to give him a call and examine for themselves before purchasing elsewhere, as he feels that they would be convinced that it would be to their interest to give him their patronage. Coal orders constantly on hand. WM STILL

JOSEPH H. COLE,
CONTINENTAL RESTAURANT,
NO. 717 LOMBARD STREET, PHILA.,
(Above Seventh St., under Philadelphia Institute,)

Where he continues to keep always on hand the very best assortment of OYSTERS and other refreshments—hoping that all his friends and the public in general will favor him with their patronage.

Ice Cream served at all hours. Families supplied with oysters of the best quality and flavor at the shortest notice.

Also, public and private waiting done on the [illegible]

Mrs. S. Shorter Hawkins
HAS JUST OPENED
NEW SPRING GOODS,

Consisting of Bonnet Ornaments, Caps, &c. Hoop Skirts of all sizes, from 75 cents to $1 25. A large lot of linen Collars, from 9 to 25 cents. Also, cheap Hosiery and Gloves.

N. B.—Mantuamakers are invited to examine my assortment of Dress trimmings of the latest styles: all will be sold cheap for cash at the [illegible] Establishment.

615 Lombard Street

THOMAS CHARNOCK,
GENERAL FURNISHING UNDERTAKER,
NO 427 SOUTH 6TH ST.,
Second Door Below Bethel Church.

Hearse and carriages with easy regulation for the business for [illegible] at the shortest notice, and on the most reasonable terms

T. C. having purchased the right to [illegible] corner, is always prepared to furnish it in connection with his usual [illegible] May 16-1y

[illegible]
BUCKS COUNTY [illegible] TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS MAY COME.

I, the subscriber, a Justice of the Peace in and for the county of Bucks, do hereby certify that I am acquainted and knew Emily Johnson—formerly Rodney, who was married to [illegible] Johnson—formerly Rodney, before William Hawk, Esq., of Bristol, Bucks County, as appears by record on his docket; and after careful examination and mature reflection, I feel myself fully safe in saying that the said Johnson had a wife living at the time he married the said Emily Rodney; and I further certify that I have the utmost confidence in [illegible] Conference preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church), Charles Summers, (Class leader) and Benjamin Cummings, (who is subscriber) that he had one or more wives living at the time he married the said Emily Johnson; and the evidence, on affirmation, of the said Emily Johnson, that he had a wife living at the time she married him, which, at the time she married him, she had no knowledge of.

Given under my hand and seal at [illegible] this [illegible] day of May, A. D. 1862.

Witness present, } her
Wm. Tabor, J. P. } Emily X Johnson,
mark.

REV. LEWIS S. LEWIS'
FAMILY LINIMENT
IS PREPARED WITH GREAT CARE,
EXPRESSLY FOR FAMILY USE

Its composition is very simple, containing nothing that is injurious in any form

LETTER FROM WALES.

BY MRS. PHOEBE PALMER.

Having spent about ten weeks in Wales, and witnessed the ... and the quickening of hundreds of believers into new spiritual life, we are now about taking our departure for Abergavenny, a town situated a little beyond the line separating Wales from England.

Dr. Johnson, when asked to write an account of his visit to Wales, excused himself by saying that it was so much like England that he had nothing particular to state. Had we finished our visit to Wales on leaving Carnarvon, the conclusion might not have been much at variance with Dr. Johnson; but it is only to look out at my window for a few moments and observe some of the ancient customs still in vogue among the old settlers, or to walk the streets of Merthyr, or go into more than half the chapels and hear a dialect so strongly diverse from the Anglo-Saxon, for one to feel as though they were in some far-off land. What would some of our American fashionables think to see a grave looking dame, a little over middle age and of the middle class of society, walking Broadway wearing a circular blue cloth cloak, with a neat little mantle, such as so gracefully enveloped the dignified form of our excellent Dr. B., surmounted by a beaver hat with a broad brim, and the crown tapering up about one foot and a half high?

Just such a figure I observed only a short time since as I came in from a little walk. Yet though I have seen many ancient dames coming in from the surrounding mountainous country with hats differing only from the men by the dimensions of the brim and the height of the sugar-loaf crown, I must not intimate that the appearance described furnishes a fair specimen of a modern Welsh lady, which does not differ from an English lady of the same class.

The English language is gradually, though slowly gaining the ascendancy over the Welsh, though the old Welsh population are, with their wonted tenacity, chiding the march of English encroachments. A recent writer says: "As far as I am able to form a calculation, the relative strength of the Welsh and English language is as follows: Allowing the present population of Wales to be about 900,000, about 400,000 of these speak Welsh only. There are about 500,000 who speak both Welsh and English, and about 100,000 who speak the English language only, and have no acquaintance with the Welsh."

With very few exceptions, all signs on shops and public houses are in English. But in far the greatest number of chapels the services are conducted in Welsh. Yet, though the Welsh language is so much spoken, and the sermons are far oftener preached in Welsh than in English, and the Welsh Bible is more in use than the English, there are few, if any, literary institutions where the Welsh language is taught.

The common classes, whether old or young, attend Sabbath-school; and if we may judge, these, above any other institution, are the nurseries for the religious perpetuation of the Welsh language. We are informed that legal documents must be written in English, and it is very seldom that bills or receipts are made in the Welsh language; but in religious services there seem to be a pious aptitude for the native dialect, which repels the English as new-fangled and less devotional.

The extempore method of preaching is peculiarly suited to the Welsh, and is generally adopted. Even ministers of the Established Church in many cases seem to have been constrained to yield to the wants of the people, and deliver extempore discourses, by the way of retaining their congregations. They are very fond of hearing sermons, and will sometimes sit and hear two or three discourses of nearly an hour long at one service.

The Calvinistic Methodists form far the most numerous body in Wales. They still have in full operation their School of the Prophets at Trevecca, which was founded in the days of Lady Huntingdon, and of which the devoted Fletcher was one of the first instructors. When we read in our childhood days the interesting details of the formation of the Trevecca College, and the trials of the excellent Fletcher in connexion with the Calvinistic question, which resulted in the dissolution of the parties, how little did we conceive whereunto this would grow.

From a tabular view of the state of the religious communities in Wales, I observe that the Calvinistic Methodists number 75,000, while the Wesleyan Methodists number 14,400. The Wesleyans are not recognized by the name Methodists, the Calvinists having monopolized the name. The Association of Calvinistic Methodist Ministers has just been held in this place. It was but slightly similar to one of our annual conferences.

The table before me gives the Methodist Calvinists 72,000 communicants, and the number of ministers as 410. The Calvinistic Methodists pay their ministers poorly, the salary of each seldom amounting to over £80 or £100.

Many of their ministers are engaged in secular callings during the week as a necessity for the support of their families. Their chapels, though often in size commodious, are generally exceedingly unexpensive and plain, and, as far as we have observed, are wanting in that studious neatness which bespeaks that earnest and self-sacrificing love so congenial to the wishes of the enlightened, pure-minded worshippers, and which David surely must have felt when he cried out, "Holiness becometh thy house, O Lord!"

While it does not accord with the genius of Methodism of the true Wesleyan order to vie with the Romanists in building costly churches, it certainly is unseemly and unscriptural to see people who dwell in their ceiled houses attend a place of worship whose uncarpeted and oft unswept floor is at a variance with the cleanliness and comfort of their own homes, and makes one feel that the reprovings of the prophet Malachi are quite in place in the nineteenth century of Christianity.

We are informed that the tenantry of Wales are generally poor, as nearly all the produce of their labor is absorbed in rent, taxes and the expenses of cultivation. In some parts of Wales the field laborer gets but one shilling, English currency, per day, out of which he supplies food for himself and family.

Many families in Wales (and the same may be said of England) seldom, if ever, have animal food, and these are not all of what are regarded as the poorest. I have known of more than one minister's family who were unable to have meat more than once a week. This may be oftener said of the families of poor Church of England curates than of ministers of other sects.

We have reason to be thankful that the extremes of poverty and wealth are as little known in America as in this country. Many an abode is made of turf, cemented with mud and thatched with straw; but these are, I presume, the homes of what is called the pauper population, consisting of worn-out laborers, widows, orphans, and persons unable to work.

The nobility and the great landed proprietors form the highest class. Their ancient halls are entered by a tasteful portico ... and are surrounded by beautiful and highly cultivated grounds and woodlands. The education and language, as well as the society in which the higher circles move, is generally English.

The different classes of artisans in Wales obtain from ten shillings to three and sixpence per day. The mechanics in Wales are not thought to be quite equal to those of England.

We spent a few hours at Newport, the place where the late Christmas Evans, of the Baptist persuasion, exercised his ministry. It is said that his printed sermons, though somewhat characteristic, are but poor specimens of what he delivered from the pulpit. Some of his discourses were so overpowering that the people were often unable to suppress their feelings, while he poured forth his animated and astonishing eloquence upon them in high-wrought metaphors and similes. He died several years since, but his memory is much honored.

But I am writing quite too long a story about our Welsh friends. The fact is that memory has daguerreotyped so many scenes on our hearts of the beautiful in nature and grace that we can see but little else in the reviewings of the past few weeks. Beautiful, indeed, have been the exemplifications of self-sacrificing Christian zeal in saving the perishing, and most refreshing to the soul when far away will be the recollections of the hallowing friendships and above all the scenes of God's wonder-working power here witnessed.

... April 1, 1865.

Christian Advocate and Journal.

I AM NOT OLD.

BY ANNA LETITIA BARBAULD.

I am not old, though years have cast
Their shadows on my way;
... spread
... sown
For in my heart a fountain flows;
And around it perennial freshness reposes;
And sympathies and feelings high
Spring like the stars on evening's sky.

I am not old—Time may have set
"His signet on my brow,"
And some faint furrows there have met,
Which care may do pen now;
Yet o'er, and o'er, a chaplet weaves
Of fresh young buds and verdant leaves,
And still in fancy I can twine
Thoughts sweet as flowers that once were mine.

BACK SOON.

We went to the office door of a friend, and found on it a card, with this inscription: "Gone to ——— Back soon."

So, we thought, men just step out of virtue's path to view temptation, intending to come back soon. Alas! they know not the charms and power of sin. Many a person tells his conscience: I will just look at a certain matter, but will be back soon. The world of despair contains many lost sinners, who intended to come back soon from a season of indulgence in sin. But soon hardly ever applies to the man yielding to temptation. Generally, it is a long way and a long time back to true repentance and peace.

How many brave and true-hearted soldiers have gone to the army, who told their friends that they would be back soon! God grant they may; but what chances are against them. "Back soon" from any place is what God only knows will be true in every case. Death regards no man's appointments.

Dis.

ABOUT POCKETS.

Pockets are a marked feature of civilized life. Their history is the history of humanity, and a catalogue of their successive contents would furnish a ... There were no pockets in the fig leaf aprons of Eden; our first parents had no need to hoard or appropriate, for the trees and herbage of the garden offered them freely all their simple wealth. There were no pockets in Adam's first blouse of skins, for as yet he had no knife wherewith to cut tobacco, and was innocently ignorant of the potency of the marvellous weed. But when life grew hard, and human interests conflicting, then the pocket became a developed institution, a receptacle for the means of daily solace, amenity, and convenience. It is a social, not selfish institution. It contains supplies, not hoards. The treasures of the miser are buried in a vault; while the subsidies of the pocket are appropriately known as change. From its warmest corner comes the penny for the street-sweeper, the toys for the pet of the fireside, and the weekly gratuity for charities of every kindly name.

But the most characteristic deposits are not in money. Children prefer the concrete to the abstract, the end to the means. While the little man wears the dress of his sisters, his pocket, like hers, is filled with cakes and candies. But very soon he sucks a wider range of activities, and the sweetmeats, not yet ignored, dispute possession inch by inch with jews-harps, fish-hooks, tops, kite-strings and knives. If he is mechanical, the knife gains a companion in an ivory rule; if studious, in pencils and paper. Then comes the belligerent period, when the country boy makes investments in powder and shot, and the young citizen in an amateur in pistols and percussion caps. And as war alternates with peace, the tomahawk with the calumet, so about this period, if at all, is developed a preference for cigars and "fine cut;" but these are noxious weeds that are liable to choke out all healthful growth. Just as rats leave a sinking ship, when these fragrant treasures find their way to the pocket, indignant moths leave the young man's wardrobe in disgust. It will be well if the odor does not serve to expel more desirable visitants than these. Then follows the youth's latest pocket companion, the watch, pointing with its golden finger the silent moral of the time.

For the girl, her early sugar plums give place to the closely locked purse, doll-full well by that familiar implement, the thimble. Hard upon this comes the scribbling stage, when the pocket finds room for pencil and paper, for notes of many pages duly crossed, and filled with the fancies and follies, the friendships and fashions of sixteen. It is but a slight change from these romantic missives to those of a warmer hue, the billet-doux of bookish admirers to be followed, we trust, by the firm lines that bear the frank avowal of a manly love. Yet these last will not long remain in the pocket; they are too precious guests for such familiar treatment, and shall retire to some inner sanctuary, set apart for the holiest of all. With love comes sorrow, with sorrow religion; so when our crowned woman has hidden away her heart's treasures, hallowed by kisses if not by tears, amid a shower of fallen rose-leaves, perhaps prophetic of their fate, she receives a new friend, a pocket-Bible, in their place. Consecrated to labor, love and duty, the pocket thus meets the whole round of human needs.—Springfield Republican.

NINE FOLLIES.

To think that the more a man eats the fatter and stronger he will become.

To believe that the more hours children study at school, the faster they learn.

To imagine that every hour taken from sleep is an hour gained.

To act on the presumption that the smallest room in the house is large enough to sleep in.

To argue that whatever remedy causes one to feel immediately better, is "good for" the system, without regard to more ulterior effects.

To commit an act which is felt in itself to be prejudicial, hoping that somehow or other it may be done in your case with impunity.

To advise another to take a remedy which you have not tried yourself, or without making special inquiry whether all the conditions are alike.

To eat without an appetite, or continue to eat after it has been satisfied, merely to gratify the taste.

To eat a hearty supper for the pleasure experienced during the brief time it is passing down the throat, at the expense of a whole night of disturbed sleep and a weary waking in the morning.

CONSANGUINEOUS MARRIAGES.

The following statistics in regard to the effect, upon offspring, of marriages between blood relations, have been prepared with the hope of calling attention to and discouraging such marriages. There is a law of nature which forbids such a union of kindred, although the penalty falls more severely upon the children than upon the parents.

Dr. Mengeon, of Dublin, examined the condition of 154 families, the heads of which were related in the degrees of first, second and third cousins, and by which there were 100 children who were deaf and dumb. In 34 families there were two in each; in 14 families, three in each; in 3 families, four in each; in one family, six, and in one family of 13 children, 7 of them were deaf and dumb. He says nothing of other defects.

Dr. Buxton, of Liverpool, states that he found 170 cases where the parents were related as above. In 100 of them, there were in each family one child deaf and dumb; in 38, two children; in 17, three children; in 3, four children; in 1, six; in 1, seven; and in another, eight. He omits to state the whole number of children in these 100 families, or whether any other defects existed, but here are 200 who are deaf and dumb.

The first number of the Social Science Review contains a paper on the statistics of the birth of deaf and dumb children. According to M. Boudin, the result is a very considerable percentage of deaf mutes. M. Boudin finds that consanguineous marriages take place in France in the ... the issue of such marriages the proportion of deaf and dumb children is 2½ per cent. in Paris, 2½ at ... and 3 per cent. in ... In ... and dumb children is 2 per cent. in ... 2½ per cent. in ... and 3 per cent. in ... In ... 2½ per cent. in ... 3 per cent. in ... and 3½ per cent. in ... In ... 3 per cent. in ... 3½ per cent. in ... and 4 per cent. in ... In ... 3½ per cent. in ... 4 per cent. in ... and 4½ per cent. in ... In ... 4 per cent. in ... 4½ per cent. in ... and 5 per cent. in ... In ... 4½ per cent. in ... 5 per cent. in ... and 5½ per cent. in ... In ... 5 per cent. in ... 5½ per cent. in ... and 6 per cent. in ... In ... 5½ per cent. in ... 6 per cent. in ... and 6½ per cent. in ... In ... 6 per cent. in ... 6½ per cent. in ... and 7 per cent. in ... In ... 6½ per cent. in ... 7 per cent. in ... and 7½ per cent. in ... In ... 7 per cent. in ... 7½ per cent. in ... and 8 per cent. in ... In ... 7½ per cent. in ... 8 per cent. in ... and 8½ per cent. in ... In ... 8 per cent. in ... 8½ per cent. in ... and 9 per cent. in ... In ... 8½ per cent. in ... 9 per cent. in ... and 9½ per cent. in ... In ... 9 per cent. in ... 9½ per cent. in ... and 10 per cent. in ... In ... 9½ per cent. in ... 10 per cent. in ... and 10½ per cent. in ... In ... 10 per cent. in ... 10½ per cent. in ... and 11 per cent. in ... In ... 10½ per cent. in ... 11 per cent. in ... and 11½ per cent. in ... In ... 11 per cent. in ... 11½ per cent. in ... and 12 per cent. in ... In ... 11½ per cent. in ... 12 per cent. in ... and 12½ per cent. in ... In ... 12 per cent. in ... 12½ per cent. in ... and 13 per cent. in ... In ... 12½ per cent. in ... 13 per cent. in ... and 13½ per cent. in ... In ... 13 per cent. in ... 13½ per cent. in ... and 14 per cent. in ... In ... 13½ per cent. in ... 14 per cent. in ... and 14½ per cent. in ... In ... 14 per cent. in ... 14½ per cent. in ... and 15 per cent. in ... In ... 14½ per cent. in ... 15 per cent. in ... and 15½ per cent. in ... In ... 15 per cent. in ... 15½ per cent. in ... and 16 per cent. in ... In ... 15½ per cent. in ... 16 per cent. in ... and 16½ per cent. in ... In ... 16 per cent. in ... 16½ per cent. in ... and 17 per cent. in ... In ... 16½ per cent. in ... 17 per cent. in ... and 17½ per cent. in ... In ... 17 per cent. in ... 17½ per cent. in ... and 18 per cent. in ... In ... 17½ per cent. in ... 18 per cent. in ... and 18½ per cent. in ... In ... 18 per cent. in ... 18½ per cent. in ... and 19 per cent. in ... In ... 18½ per cent. in ... 19 per cent. in ... and 19½ per cent. in ... In ... 19 per cent. in ... 19½ per cent. in ... and 20 per cent. in ... In ... 19½ per cent. in ... 20 per cent. in ... and 20½ per cent. in ... In ... 20 per cent. in ... 20½ per cent. in ... and 21 per cent. in ... In ... 20½ per cent. in ... 21 per cent. in ... and 21½ per cent. in ... In ... 21 per cent. in ... 21½ per cent. in ... and 22 per cent. in ... In ... 21½ per cent. in ... 22 per cent. in ... and 22½ per cent. in ... In ... 22 per cent. in ... 22½ per cent. in ... and 23 per cent. in ... In ... 22½ per cent. in ... 23 per cent. in ... and 23½ per cent. in ... In ... 23 per cent. in ... 23½ per cent. in ... and 24 per cent. in ... In ... 23½ per cent. in ... 24 per cent. in ... and 24½ per cent. in ... In ... 24 per cent. in ... 24½ per cent. in ... and 25 per cent. in ... In ... 24½ per cent. in ... 25 per cent. in ... and 25½ per cent. in ... In ... 25 per cent. in ... 25½ per cent. in ... and 26 per cent. in ... In ... 25½ per cent. in ... 26 per cent. in ... and 26½ per cent. in ... In ... 26 per cent. in ... 26½ per cent. in ... and 27 per cent. in ... In ... 26½ per cent. in ... 27 per cent. in ... and 27½ per cent. in ... In ... 27 per cent. in ... 27½ per cent. in ... and 28 per cent. in ... In ... 27½ per cent. in ... 28 per cent. in ... and 28½ per cent. in ... In ... 28 per cent. in ... 28½ per cent. in ... and 29 per cent. in ... In ... 28½ per cent. in ... 29 per cent. in ... and 29½ per cent. in ... In ... 29 per cent. in ... 29½ per cent. in ... and 30 per cent. in ... In ... 29½ per cent. in ... 30 per cent. in ... and 30½ per cent. in ... In ... 30 per cent. in ... 30½ per cent. in ... and 31 per cent. in ... In ... 30½ per cent. in ... 31 per cent. in ... and 31½ per cent. in ... In ... 31 per cent. in ... 31½ per cent. in ... and 32 per cent. in ... In ... 31½ per cent. in ... 32 per cent. in ... and 32½ per cent. in ... In ... 32 per cent. in ... 32½ per cent. in ... and 33 per cent. in ... In ... 32½ per cent. in ... 33 per cent. in ... and 33½ per cent. in ... In ... 33 per cent. in ... 33½ per cent. in ... and 34 per cent. in ... In ... 33½ per cent. in ... 34 per cent. in ... and 34½ per cent. in ... In ... 34 per cent. in ... 34½ per cent. in ... and 35 per cent. in ... In ... 34½ per cent. in ... 35 per cent. in ... and 35½ per cent. in ... In ... 35 per cent. in ... 35½ per cent. in ... and 36 per cent. in ... In ... 35½ per cent. in ... 36 per cent. in ... and 36½ per cent. in ... In ... 36 per cent. in ... 36½ per cent. in ... and 37 per cent. in ... In ... 36½ per cent. in ... 37 per cent. in ... and 37½ per cent. in ... In ... 37 per cent. in ... 37½ per cent. in ... and 38 per cent. in ... In ... 37½ per cent. in ... 38 per cent. in ... and 38½ per cent. in ... In ... 38 per cent. in ... 38½ per cent. in ... and 39 per cent. in ... In ... 38½ per cent. in ... 39 per cent. in ... and 39½ per cent. in ... In ... 39 per cent. in ... 39½ per cent. in ... and 40 per cent. in ... In ... 39½ per cent. in ... 40 per cent. in ... and 40½ per cent. in ... In ... 40 per cent. in ... 40½ per cent. in ... and 41 per cent. in ... In ... 40½ per cent. in ... 41 per cent. in ... and 41½ per cent. in ... In ... 41 per cent. in ... 41½ per cent. in ... and 42 per cent. in ... In ... 41½ per cent. in ... 42 per cent. in ... and 42½ per cent. in ... In ... 42 per cent. in ... 42½ per cent. in ... and 43 per cent. in ... In ... 42½ per cent. in ... 43 per cent. in ... and 43½ per cent. in ... In ... 43 per cent. in ... 43½ per cent. in ... and 44 per cent. in ... In ... 43½ per cent. in ... 44 per cent. in ... and 44½ per cent. in ... In ... 44 per cent. in ... 44½ per cent. in ... and 45 per cent. in ... In ... 44½ per cent. in ... 45 per cent. in ... and 45½ per cent. in ... In ... 45 per cent. in ... 45½ per cent. in ... and 46 per cent. in ... In ... 45½ per cent. in ... 46 per cent. in ... and 46½ per cent. in ... In ... 46 per cent. in ... 46½ per cent. in ... and 47 per cent. in ... In ... 46½ per cent. in ... 47 per cent. in ... and 47½ per cent. in ... In ... 47 per cent. in ... 47½ per cent. in ... and 48 per cent. in ... In ... 47½ per cent. in ... 48 per cent. in ... and 48½ per cent. in ... In ... 48 per cent. in ... 48½ per cent. in ... and 49 per cent. in ... In ... 48½ per cent. in ... 49 per cent. in ... and 49½ per cent. in ... In ... 49 per cent. in ... 49½ per cent. in ... and 50 per cent. in ... In ... 49½ per cent. in ... 50 per cent. in ... and 50½ per cent. in ... In ... 50 per cent. in ... 50½ per cent. in ... and 51 per cent. in ... In ... 50½ per cent. in ... 51 per cent. in ... and 51½ per cent. in ... In ... 51 per cent. in ... 51½ per cent. in ... and 52 per cent. in ... In ... 51½ per cent. in ... 52 per cent. in ... and 52½ per cent. in ... In ... 52 per cent. in ... 52½ per cent. in ... and 53 per cent. in ... In ... 52½ per cent. in ... 53 per cent. in ... and 53½ per cent. in ... In ... 53 per cent. in ... 53½ per cent. in ... and 54 per cent. in ... In ... 53½ per cent. in ... 54 per cent. in ... and 54½ per cent. in ... In ... 54 per cent. in ... 54½ per cent. in ... and 55 per cent. in ... In ... 54½ per cent. in ... 55 per cent. in ... and 55½ per cent. in ... In ... 55 per cent. in ... 55½ per cent. in ... and 56 per cent. in ... In ... 55½ per cent. in ... 56 per cent. in ... and 56½ per cent. in ... In ... 56 per cent. in ... 56½ per cent. in ... and 57 per cent. in ... In ... 56½ per cent. in ... 57 per cent. in ... and 57½ per cent. in ... In ... 57 per cent. in ... 57½ per cent. in ... and 58 per cent. in ... In ... 57½ per cent. in ... 58 per cent. in ... and 58½ per cent. in ... In ... 58 per cent. in ... 58½ per cent. in ... and 59 per cent. in ... In ... 58½ per cent. in ... 59 per cent. in ... and 59½ per cent. in ... In ... 59 per cent. in ... 59½ per cent. in ... and 60 per cent. in ... In ... 59½ per cent. in ... 60 per cent. in ... and 60½ per cent. in ... In ... 60 per cent. in ... 60½ per cent. in ... and 61 per cent. in ... In ... 60½ per cent. in ... 61 per cent. in ... and 61½ per cent. in ... In ... 61 per cent. in ... 61½ per cent. in ... and 62 per cent. in ... In ... 61½ per cent. in ... 62 per cent. in ... and 62½ per cent. in ... In ... 62 per cent. in ... 62½ per cent. in ... and 63 per cent. in ... In ... 62½ per cent. in ... 63 per cent. in ... and 63½ per cent. in ... In ... 63 per cent. in ... 63½ per cent. in ... and 64 per cent. in ... In ... 63½ per cent. in ... 64 per cent. in ... and 64½ per cent. in ... In ... 64 per cent. in ... 64½ per cent. in ... and 65 per cent. in ... In ... 64½ per cent. in ... 65 per cent. in ... and 65½ per cent. in ... In ... 65 per cent. in ... 65½ per cent. in ... and 66 per cent. in ... In ... 65½ per cent. in ... 66 per cent. in ... and 66½ per cent. in ... In ... 66 per cent. in ... 66½ per cent. in ... and 67 per cent. in ... In ... 66½ per cent. in ... 67 per cent. in ... and 67½ per cent. in ... In ... 67 per cent. in ... 67½ per cent. in ... and 68 per cent. in ... In ... 67½ per cent. in ... 68 per cent. in ... and 68½ per cent. in ... In ... 68 per cent. in ... 68½ per cent. in ... and 69 per cent. in ... In ... 68½ per cent. in ... 69 per cent. in ... and 69½ per cent. in ... In ... 69 per cent. in ... 69½ per cent. in ... and 70 per cent. in ... In ... 69½ per cent. in ... 70 per cent. in ... and 70½ per cent. in ... In ... 70 per cent. in ... 70½ per cent. in ... and 71 per cent. in ... In ... 70½ per cent. in ... 71 per cent. in ... and 71½ per cent. in ... In ... 71 per cent. in ... 71½ per cent. in ... and 72 per cent. in ... In ... 71½ per cent. in ... 72 per cent. in ... and 72½ per cent. in ... In ... 72 per cent. in ... 72½ per cent. in ... and 73 per cent. in ... In ... 72½ per cent. in ... 73 per cent. in ... and 73½ per cent. in ... In ... 73 per cent. in ... 73½ per cent. in ... and 74 per cent. in ... In ... 73½ per cent. in ... 74 per cent. in ... and 74½ per cent. in ... In ... 74 per cent. in ... 74½ per cent. in ... and 75 per cent. in ... In ... 74½ per cent. in ... 75 per cent. in ... and 75½ per cent. in ... In ... 75 per cent. in ... 75½ per cent. in ... and 76 per cent. in ... In ... 75½ per cent. in ... 76 per cent. in ... and 76½ per cent. in ... In ... 76 per cent. in ... 76½ per cent. in ... and 77 per cent. in ... In ... 76½ per cent. in ... 77 per cent. in ... and 77½ per cent. in ... In ... 77 per cent. in ... 77½ per cent. in ... and 78 per cent. in ... In ... 77½ per cent. in ... 78 per cent. in ... and 78½ per cent. in ... In ... 78 per cent. in ... 78½ per cent. in ... and 79 per cent. in ... In ... 78½ per cent. in ... 79 per cent. in ... and 79½ per cent. in ... In ... 79 per cent. in ... 79½ per cent. in ... and 80 per cent. in ... In ... 79½ per cent. in ... 80 per cent. in ... and 80½ per cent. in ... In ... 80 per cent. in ... 80½ per cent. in ... and 81 per cent. in ... In ... 80½ per cent. in ... 81 per cent. in ... and 81½ per cent. in ... In ... 81 per cent. in ... 81½ per cent. in ... and 82 per cent. in ... In ... 81½ per cent. in ... 82 per cent. in ... and 82½ per cent. in ... In ... 82 per cent. in ... 82½ per cent. in ... and 83 per cent. in ... In ... 82½ per cent. in ... 83 per cent. in ... and 83½ per cent. in ... In ... 83 per cent. in ... 83½ per cent. in ... and 84 per cent. in ... In ... 83½ per cent. in ... 84 per cent. in ... and 84½ per cent. in ... In ... 84 per cent. in ... 84½ per cent. in ... and 85 per cent. in ... In ... 84½ per cent. in ... 85 per cent. in ... and 85½ per cent. in ... In ... 85 per cent. in ... 85½ per cent. in ... and 86 per cent. in ... In ... 85½ per cent. in ... 86 per cent. in ... and 86½ per cent. in ... In ... 86 per cent. in ... 86½ per cent. in ... and 87 per cent. in ... In ... 86½ per cent. in ... 87 per cent. in ... and 87½ per cent. in ... In ... 87 per cent. in ... 87½ per cent. in ... and 88 per cent. in ... In ... 87½ per cent. in ... 88 per cent. in ... and 88½ per cent. in ... In ... 88 per cent. in ... 88½ per cent. in ... and 89 per cent. in ... In ... 88½ per cent. in ... 89 per cent. in ... and 89½ per cent. in ... In ... 89 per cent. in ... 89½ per cent. in ... and 90 per cent. in ... In ... 89½ per cent. in ... 90 per cent. in ... and 90½ per cent. in ... In ... 90 per cent. in ... 90½ per cent. in ... and 91 per cent. in ... In ... 90½ per cent. in ... 91 per cent. in ... and 91½ per cent. in ... In ... 91 per cent. in ... 91½ per cent. in ... and 92 per cent. in ... In ... 91½ per cent. in ... 92 per cent. in ... and 92½ per cent. in ... In ... 92 per cent. in ... 92½ per cent. in ... and 93 per cent. in ... In ... 92½ per cent. in ... 93 per cent. in ... and 93½ per cent. in ... In ... 93 per cent. in ... 93½ per cent. in ... and 94 per cent. in ... In ... 93½ per cent. in ... 94 per cent. in ... and 94½ per cent. in ... In ... 94 per cent. in ... 94½ per cent. in ... and 95 per cent. in ... In ... 94½ per cent. in ... 95 per cent. in ... and 95½ per cent. in ... In ... 95 per cent. in ... 95½ per cent. in ... and 96 per cent. in ... In ... 95½ per cent. in ... 96 per cent. in ... and 96½ per cent. in ... In ... 96 per cent. in ... 96½ per cent. in ... and 97 per cent. in ... In ... 96½ per cent. in ... 97 per cent. in ... and 97½ per cent. in ... In ... 97 per cent. in ... 97½ per cent. in ... and 98 per cent. in ... In ... 97½ per cent. in ... 98 per cent. in ... and 98½ per cent. in ... In ... 98 per cent. in ... 98½ per cent. in ... and 99 per cent. in ... In ... 98½ per cent. in ... 99 per cent. in ... and 99½ per cent. in ... In ... 99 per cent. in ... 99½ per cent. in ... and 100 per cent. in ... In ... 99½ per cent. in ... 100 per cent. in ... and 100½ per cent. in ... In ... 100 per cent. in ... 100½ per cent. in ... and 101 per cent. in ... In ... 100½ per cent. in ... 101 per cent. in ... and 101½ per cent. in ... In ... 101 per cent. in ... 101½ per cent. in ... and 102 per cent. in ... In ... 101½ per cent. in ... 102 per cent. in ... and 102½ per cent. in ... In ... 102 per cent. in ... 102½ per cent. in ... and 103 per cent. in ... In ... 102½ per cent. in ... 103 per cent. in ... and 103½ per cent. in ... In ... 103 per cent. in ... 103½ per cent. in ... and 104 per cent. in ... In ... 103½ per cent. in ... 104 per cent. in ... and 104½ per cent. in ... In ... 104 per cent. in ... 104½ per cent. in ... and 105 per cent. in ... In ... 104½ per cent. in ... 105 per cent. in ... and 105½ per cent. in ... In ... 105 per cent. in ... 105½ per cent. in ... and 106 per cent. in ... In ... 105½ per cent. in ... 106 per cent. in ... and 106½ per cent. in ... In ... 106 per cent. in ... 106½ per cent. in ... and 107 per cent. in ... In ... 106½ per cent. in ... 107 per cent. in ... and 107½ per cent. in ... In ... 107 per cent. in ... 107½ per cent. in ... and 108 per cent. in ... In ... 107½ per cent. in ... 108 per cent. in ... and 108½ per cent. in ... In ... 108 per cent. in ... 108½ per cent. in ... and 109 per cent. in ... In ... 108½ per cent. in ... 109 per cent. in ... and 109½ per cent. in ... In ... 109 per cent. in ... 109½ per cent. in ... and 110 per cent. in ... In ... 109½ per cent. in ... 110 per cent. in ... and 110½ per cent. in ... In ... 110 per cent. in ... 110½ per cent. in ... and 111 per cent. in ... In ... 110½ per cent. in ... 111 per cent. in ... and 111½ per cent. in ... In ... 111 per cent. in ... 111½ per cent. in ... and 112 per cent. in ... In ... 111½ per cent. in ... 112 per cent. in ... and 112½ per cent. in ... In ... 112 per cent. in ... 112½ per cent. in ... and 113 per cent. in ... In ... 112½ per cent. in ... 113 per cent. in ... and 113½ per cent. in ... In ... 113 per cent. in ... 113½ per cent. in ... and 114 per cent. in ... In ... 113½ per cent. in ... 114 per cent. in ... and 114½ per cent. in ... In ... 114 per cent. in ... 114½ per cent. in ... and 115 per cent. in ... In ... 114½ per cent. in ... 115 per cent. in ... and 115½ per cent. in ... In ... 115 per cent. in ... 115½ per cent. in ... and 116 per cent. in ... In ... 115½ per cent. in ... 116 per cent. in ... and 116½ per cent. in ... In ... 116 per cent. in ... 116½ per cent. in ... and 117 per cent. in ... In ... 116½ per cent. in ... 117 per cent. in ... and 117½ per cent. in ... In ... 117 per cent. in ... 117½ per cent. in ... and 118 per cent. in ... In ... 117½ per cent. in ... 118 per cent. in ... and 118½ per cent. in ... In ... 118 per cent. in ... 118½ per cent. in ... and 119 per cent. in ... In ... 118½ per cent. in ... 119 per cent. in ... and 119½ per cent. in ... In ... 119 per cent. in ... 119½ per cent. in ... and 120 per cent. in ... In ... 119½ per cent. in ... 120 per cent. in ... and 120½ per cent. in ... In ... 120 per cent. in ... 120½ per cent. in ... and 121 per cent. in ... In ... 120½ per cent. in ... 121 per cent. in ... and 121½ per cent. in ... In ... 121 per cent. in ... 121½ per cent. in ... and 122 per cent. in ... In ... 121½ per cent. in ... 122 per cent. in ... and 122½ per cent. in ... In ... 122 per cent. in ... 122½ per cent. in ... and 123 per cent. in ... In ... 122½ per cent. in ... 123 per cent. in ... and 123½ per cent. in ... In ... 123 per cent. in ... 123½ per cent. in ... and 124 per cent. in ... In ... 123½ per cent. in ... 124 per cent. in ... and 124½ per cent. in ... In ... 124 per cent. in ... 124½ per cent. in ... and 125 per cent. in ... In ... 124½ per cent. in ... 125 per cent. in ... and 125½ per cent. in ... In ... 125 per cent. in ... 125½ per cent. in ... and 126 per cent. in ... In ... 125½ per cent. in ... 126 per cent. in ... and 126½ per cent. in ... In ... 126 per cent. in ... 126½ per cent. in ... and 127 per cent. in ... In ... 126½ per cent. in ... 127 per cent. in ... and 127½ per cent. in ... In ... 127 per cent. in ... 127½ per cent. in ... and 128 per cent. in ... In ... 127½ per cent. in ... 128 per cent. in ... and 128½ per cent. in ... In ... 128 per cent. in ... 128½ per cent. in ... and 129 per cent. in ... In ... 128½ per cent. in ... 129 per cent. in ... and 129½ per cent. in ... In ... 129 per cent. in ... 129½ per cent. in ... and 130 per cent. in ... In ... 129½ per cent. in ... 130 per cent. in ... and 130½ per cent. in ... In ... 130 per cent. in ... 130½ per cent. in ... and 131 per cent. in ... In ... 130½ per cent. in ... 131 per cent. in ... and 131½ per cent. in ... In ... 131 per cent. in ... 131½ per cent. in ... and 132 per cent. in ... In ... 131½ per cent. in ... 132 per cent. in ... and 132½ per cent. in ... In ... 132 per cent. in ... 132½ per cent. in ... and 133 per cent. in ... In ... 132½ per cent. in ... 133 per cent. in ... and 133½ per cent. in ... In ... 133 per cent. in ... 133½ per cent. in ... and 134 per cent. in ... In ... 133½ per cent. in ... 134 per cent. in ... and 134½ per cent. in ... In ... 134 per cent. in ... 134½ per cent. in ... and 135 per cent. in ... In ... 134½ per cent. in ... 135 per cent. in ... and 135½ per cent. in ... In ... 135 per cent. in ... 135½ per cent. in ... and 136 per cent. in ... In ... 135½ per cent. in ... 136 per cent. in ... and 136½ per cent. in ... In ... 136 per cent. in ... 136½ per cent. in ... and 137 per cent. in ... In ... 136½ per cent. in ... 137 per cent. in ... and 137½ per cent. in ... In ... 137 per cent. in ... 137½ per cent. in ... and 138 per cent. in ... In ... 137½ per cent. in ... 138 per cent. in ... and 138½ per cent. in ... In ... 138 per cent. in ... 138½ per cent. in ... and 139 per cent. in ... In ... 138½ per cent. in ... 139 per cent. in ... and 139½ per cent. in ... In ... 139 per cent. in ... 139½ per cent. in ... and 140 per cent. in ... In ... 139½ per cent. in ... 140 per cent. in ... and 140½ per cent. in ... In ... 140 per cent. in ... 140½ per cent. in ... and 141 per cent. in ... In ... 140½ per cent. in ... 141 per cent. in ... and 141½ per cent. in ... In ... 141 per cent. in ... 141½ per cent. in ... and 142 per cent. in ... In ... 141½ per cent. in ... 142 per cent. in ... and 142½ per cent. in ... In ... 142 per cent. in ... 142½ per cent. in ... and 143 per cent. in ... In ... 142½ per cent. in ... 143 per cent. in ... and 143½ per cent. in ... In ... 143 per cent. in ... 143½ per cent. in ... and 144 per cent. in ... In ... 143½ per cent. in ... 144 per cent. in ... and 144½ per cent. in ... In ... 144 per cent. in ... 144½ per cent. in ... and 145 per cent. in ... In ... 144½ per cent. in ... 145 per cent. in ... and 145½ per cent. in ... In ... 145 per cent. in ... 145½ per cent. in ... and 146 per cent. in ... In ... 145½ per cent. in ... 146 per cent. in ... and 146½ per cent. in ... In ... 146 per cent. in ... 146½ per cent. in ... and 147 per cent. in ... In ... 146½ per cent. in ... 147 per cent. in ... and 147½ per cent. in ... In ... 147 per cent. in ... 147½ per cent. in ... and 148 per cent. in ... In ... 147½ per cent. in ... 148 per cent. in ... and 148½ per cent. in ... In ... 148 per cent. in ... 148½ per cent. in ... and 149 per cent. in ... In ... 148½ per cent. in ... 149 per cent. in ... and 149½ per cent. in ... In ... 149 per cent. in ... 149½ per cent. in ... and 150 per cent. in ... In ... 149½ per cent. in ... 150 per cent. in ... and 150½ per cent. in ... In ... 150 per cent. in ... 150½ per cent. in ... and 151 per cent. in ... In ... 150½ per cent. in ... 151 per cent. in ... and 151½ per cent. in ... In ... 151 per cent. in ... 151½ per cent. in ... and 152 per cent. in ... In ... 151½ per cent. in ... 152 per cent. in ... and 152½ per cent. in ... In ... 152 per cent. in ... 152½ per cent. in ... and 153 per cent. in ... In ... 152½ per cent. in ... 153 per cent. in ... and 153½ per cent. in ... In ... 153 per cent. in ... 153½ per cent. in ...

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Published by the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, for the Dissemination of Religion, Morality, Literature and Science.

Rev. Elisha Weaver, Editor. PHILADELPHIA, AUGUST 16, 1862. Vol. II.—No. 33.—New Series.—Whole No. 84.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

is published every Saturday on behalf of the

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,

BY

REV. ELISHA WEAVER,

General Book Steward,

No 619 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

Notice.—All letters and matters pertaining to the Book Concern publishing sale of papers, and all moneys intended to be a return for paper, must be directed to Rev Elisha Weaver Box No. 620, Philadelphia, and all matters sent by express, and to our city, must be directed to E. Weaver, No 619 Pine St.

All articles or matter of the Christian Recorder, must be directed to E. Weaver, Box No 620, Philadelphia.

TERMS.

Two Dollars a year, payable in advance. Single copies, five cents

ADVERTISEMENTS

We call it Advertisements of all descriptions, suitable for a religious newspaper, will be will be published as follows:—

Twelve Advertisements, inserted for one year, provided they do not exceed eight lines, ten dollars, paper included; or, eight dollars without the paper;—six months, for six dollars paper included,—three months, four dollars, one month $1 50, paper in each case included

CORRESPONDING EDITORS OF CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Rev. J. P. CAMPBELL, Rev. A. W. WAYMAN,
" J. M. WILLIAMS, " E. T. WILLIAMS,
" G. H. GRAHAM, " C. BURCH,
Rev. L. ROSS.

Poetry.

For the Christian Recorder.

LINES ON THE ABOLITION OF SLAVERY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

BY WM. H. BYRNE.

To God be the glory, for freedom's blessed story,
To Him be thanksgiving, rejoicing and praise—
Whose good-will and pleasure grants us this great treasure
Of freedom, sweet freedom! in these—our days.

Our fathers and mothers, our sisters and brothers
Have prayed for and long wished to see this glad day,
When freed from oppression,—from wrong and aggression,
Might hail with delight Liberty's first ray.

In God we confided, who long since decided
That liberty should be proclaimed through all lands,
And while men oppressed us, with freedom He blessed us,
And severed asunder vile Slavery's bands.

O may the wronged millions throughout these dominions
Soon seek and find shelter 'neath Liberty's tree!
And this land and nation, now with civil war raging,
May, in truth and in deed, be the land of the free!

Then, in the spirit of kindness, we'll dispel the gross blindness
Which envelope the heads and the hearts of our foes,
And show, by our actions, to all parties and factions,
We're worthy the confidence in us reposed.

O awake, ye sweet timbrels! O sound, ye loud cymbals!
In ecstasy sweet let the chorus now swell;
Over mountains go sounding, through valleys resounding
That freedom, sweet freedom! with us comes to dwell.

Now to God be all glory, for freedom's blest story;
To him ascribe honor, all power and might,
Who suffers to perish, and never will cherish
The "sum of all villanies" so just, good and right.

For the Christian Recorder.

BISHOP QUINN'S TOUR WEST. ON A VISIT TO THE CHURCHES. &c.

I left Richmond, Ind., on the 11th of July, stopped at Indianapolis, and arrived at Terre Haute on the 12th. I attended Quarterly Meeting and preached twice on Sabbath. We had quite an interesting meeting. I think the church at this point is in a good condition. Elder Strother seems to be doing well. I left Terre Haute on the 15th, and arrived in St. Louis on the 16th, and preached three times on Sabbath, the 20th, to a crowded house Though exceedingly warm, we had good meetings. I found the church in this city in a prosperous condition, having had the rise of fifty accessions during the past year. The Sabbath-school connected with the church here, is one of the most flourishing schools in the connexion, numbering some one hundred and thirty scholars. I left St. Louis on the 24th, in company with Elder Turner and lady, for Leavenworth city, Kansas,—a travel of some five hundred miles. I arrived at this point on the 25th, and found Brother Wilkerson and his flock doing well. During the two years of his labors with this people, they have built a neat frame church edifice, which I had the pleasure of dedicating I left Leavenworth on the 29th, in company with Elder Turner and Brother Wilkerson, for Lawrence, a flourishing town, situated on the Cain river, a beautiful stream, thirty-five miles from Leavenworth city. We held two meetings with the people. We have a membership of seventy at this point, and large day and Sabbath-schools, &c.

It is quite gratifying to know that our people in this place have the character of being sober, upright, industrious and enterprising. Persons of high standing told me that the population of our people in Lawrence was between four and six hundred, and of the entire population not one can be said to bear the character of a drunkard. This is something worthy of note.

On our return from Kansas, via the Hannibal, St. Joseph and H. M. R. R., we found the country in great excitement. Guerilla bands are formed in large numbers and are robbing, killing and plundering the Union men. We passed hundreds of them along the road, near Hudson—a station on the road. They hung three rebels the day before we arrived there, and buried them with the ropes around their necks. They had two more on hand, to be hung.

As we came on, at another station, the rebels were drawn up in line of battle and marching on the town, some five or six hundred strong. Had we been five or ten minutes later, they would have had us all; but thanks be to God, we were delivered, and arrived safe in St. Louis. Since writing, we have received information that the Union men met them promptly at the place alluded to above, and killed one hundred and seventy-three of them; but finally had to surrender, being inferior in numbers.

I shall leave this city for the camp-meeting near Alton, Ill., Thursday, the 7th.

W P Q

For the Christian Recorder.

SOCIETY AND MORALS.

"By their fruits ye shall know them" Such is the key handed down to us from the Master Builder, by which we can open all the doors in the great labyrinth of human character. Nations, communities, societies, churches and individuals are all known by the exhibitions they give of their true character. It requires circumstances to develop what is hidden in man's nature. We cannot form correct and just opinions of men by external appearance A man may appear to be a gentleman to all intents and purposes in demeanor, conversation, address, manners and dress; he may have a clear, vivacious mind, quick perception, wit and humor, and be withal a professor of religion, and yet, at heart, a deep scheming villain, as Richard the Third, who "laid inductions deep and dangerous," that he might destroy all who opposed his ambition in ascending the English throne

Or, like John A. Merrill, who frequently wore the garb of a clergyman and preached in certain places, taking collections for his support, while his real design was to find out the locality that he might rob the inhabitants the next week. A man may "smile and smile and be a devil still." But when proper opportunities present, then will they show who and what they are. It is impossible to hide a man's true character. It will show itself at some time in the affairs of life. Just give time, place and opportunity, and you will see what he is; if he be naturally good and noble, you will readily discover it. His actions and bearing will indicate greatness of character in his relations with his fellows. This great truth is as applicable to a community as to an individual. Men judge of a community's moral status by observing the habits and customs that prevail among them; because it is through these mediums we see the internal workings of the inner man; it is an index to all its contents A residence of one year, attending nearly all the gatherings of the people of various classes, the stranger will not be favorably impressed with the moral tone of society in this region. There is a want of high moral standing, of self esteem, which a community of refinement and pure morality should possess.

There is, as a general rule, a conglomeration of all characters in the social circle—but little selection. The lovely, pure, young daughter of the refined family is often, too often, ushered into the association of the rude, uncouth, vulgar, ill-mannered, unprincipled young man; or in the baleful influences of the foul-mouthed ruffians at a picnic, and are brought in contact with all their corrupting associations.

That lovely, virtuous girl, in her innocence and purity, whose young mind has not been poisoned by the serpentine infusions of this wicked world's allurements, is led for the first time to the "promenade," and initiated in the circle of the dance; her young imagination is excited to the highest point, her taste and habits vitiated, her morals corrupted, and the foundation of her future ruin laid deep and irremediable. Then there is a dancing mania in this section, especially in New York and Brooklyn; it is almost impossible to have a gathering of the people of any kind, without a "fandango" before they close or leave the groves where they resort. It is a source of pain and regret to witness the conduct of persons on such occasions, such utter disregard of due propriety in females—aye, lewdness and wantonness in the presence of all who disgrace their kind, shocking the sensibilities of every refined person, and meriting the condemnation of all the respectable of every class. Such sensual conduct of the would-be-gentlemen, married and single, indiscriminately. Young women beastly intoxicated! married women in the same state; members of church, in many respects, giving little better examples. These things are detrimental to the elevation of the young minds, which are thus brought into contact with them, and the old are not made better by these impressions. There is, it is true, a class who claim to be of a higher order, and form their little conclaves, and band together, having their select assemblages, such as "calico balls," for benevolent and charitable purposes, yet probably never thinking of the enormity of making a great duty subsidiary to the gratification of an unholy and demoralizing passion, thereby disqualifying themselves to be the guides of a lower class, if their fellows, by exalting charity, by a nobleness of soul, steadiness of purpose, and dignity of character, which is her true glory. The truly charitable never stoop to measures of wrong-doing. They never sacrifice principle and morality, and refuse the poison and seduction of the midnight bacchanals, to save the erring and glorify God—nay, they work for the good of the poor, and give cheerfully to a good cause, not wishing to gratify their evil desires thereby.

Then there is a disposition to make every public demonstration a source of personal profit to the parties engaged in originating them. Under the garb of patriotism, they seek to enrich themselves. Claiming to be public-spirited, they are personally interested for the general welfare, so that, in all departments of society, there is much room for improvement. Society must be revolutionized by a higher conception of the right, and the good of the masses. These things continued cannot forward the great cause of virtue, honesty and moral reform; they rather retard the onward march of truth and right actions; and, so long as these things remain, there is little hope of our accomplishing the high destiny which is attainable by a right direction of our energies. There must be reforms in the social, moral, civil and religious systems, or we will never arise to that equality with other people who are rapidly marching to honor, fame, greatness and power. We must keep pace with the advancing host. As intelligence advances, we should be moving with its rapid flight; be not sluggish, but be ready to bear our part in the great struggle for free thought, free speech, free men, free schools, and a free country. And when oppression shall cease its work of blood among our race, we shall be fully qualified with every means adequate to our new responsibility, entering on the high road to manifest DESTINY. R. H. C.

Brooklyn.

STATISTICS.—The Minutes of the New School General Assembly have been published, and exhibit the following facts: The number of synods is 22; presbyteries, 104: Churches, 1,466; ministers, 1,055; licentiates, 151; candidates for the ministry, 243; Church members, 135,454. The contributions for religious purposes were, for domestic missions, $91 911; foreign missions, $69, 408; education cause, $17,463; Board of Publication, $39,161; and for the General Assembly's fund, $5,138,06 The aggregate receipts this year, so far as reported, $252,148 17, which is a falling off of over forty thousand dollars from last year, and more than fifty thousand dollars from the year 1860

For the Christian Recorder.

HILLSBOROUGH, O.

August 1st, 1862.

DEAR BROTHER EDITOR:—I have had an intention for a long time to write something for the RECORDER, which might prove beneficial as an encouragement to your readers, and likewise to the mass of our people in this country. At the same time I am not using an intrusion of liberty I hope. But, however, I have started out with pen in hand. I hardly know what subject to pitch upon as a most interesting topic; for there are so many important subjects upon which we might write, that it is almost impossible for one unaccustomed to writing to decide. But as this is the first of August, I will pen a few thoughts for the meditation of our people. To-day, brother editor, is a great day of jollification and amusement with numbers of our people in the North, and I had like to have said mirth and fashion; and, indeed, the statement would not have been much amiss, from the fact the celebrating of the first of August with our people, is a great deal like the conduct of the Israelites. They sat down to eat, and rose up to play. They were thoughtless of the hand that provided the blessings, and may I not say, even to-day this is the case with the great majority of our people. While they are pretending to celebrate the first of August, in commemoration of the emancipation of our brethren in the West India islands, some have not yet thought of the great object of their celebration. Others never started from their homes for that special purpose; but their object is merely to show off in pomp and grandeur—while some of the speakers went only to display some of their oratorical eloquence—while others went for a speculation. But I must confess, while this is the case, dear brother editor, I remain at home in sadness; yet I am equally thankful to God for the liberty of my brethren in the West Indies.

But how can I go out and celebrate this day, when my brethren of the Ohio Conference have treated me with such apathy—with such an unbecoming spirit? Ah! have I not enough to stay home and ask God to remove the hinderances?—but while I remain at home, I remain in prayer and supplication. Not yet to-day brings to my remembrance the glorious year of eighteen thirty-three, when, through the wonderful providence of God, the shackles were loosed from eight thousand of our brethren in the West Indies—yea, when the triumphant shout of fathers, sons, brothers, and daughters went up to God in jubilant melodies. "Ah! ah!" I ask, "what father's heart did not leap for joy, when the white dove of liberty returned, pluming her wings and bearing in her mouth the olive branch of freedom; yea, universal freedom in the West Indies?" This is that liberty we attempt to celebrate, or commemorate in this country, even under these stirring times in America. Brother Editor, I know you will quite agree with me, when I say it would have been the duty of our people, under the circumstances of the present crisis, to have changed the manner of celebrating the 1st of August into an anniversary prayer meeting; and thus instead of cheers going up for oratorical displays of eloquence, the thousands of prayers in ejaculatory request would have been heard in heaven by the eternal God, for the removal of slavery from this country, which has cursed it, and filled it with the blackness of destruction and death

And again let us look to our condition in this country, and what can we count on for future peace and safety? Nothing but the strong arm of Jehovah. Therefore, let us return wholly in supplications and prayers, until he rends the heavens, and comes down and breaks the yoke of prejudice, as well as that of slavery Would not such a universal request as this, ascending up to God from pure hearts, bring him speedily to our relief? But the skeptical ask, "If I want God to work speedier than He is working for us?" No. But I want my people and myself to come nearer to God in prayer, that the blessings of liberty may be the sooner obtained.

Then while we celebrate the 1st of August in commemoration of the freedom of the West Indies let us ask the question, "When will the first day of our liberty come"—when our songs of gratitude and thanksgivings shall go up as theirs did?—when our triumphant shouts shall go up perfuming the air with the breath of freedom as theirs did?—when the golden bird of America shall soar to heaven with wings, bearing laurels of patriotic achievements, carrying forth in her mighty talons in telling letters, that freedom has triumphantly gained the day in America: yea, that the dark chain or spell of despotism is broken?" This is what we ought to do in celebrating the 1st of August, and that's not all. But such an act would be praiseworthy in the sight of God.

Notwithstanding the war, which has brought this great distress on the country, yet the Union party is standing discussing the subject, as to what we shall do with the negroes Shall we set them free, let them remain here with us—among us? "Oh no," says another, "we must send him away." As though there was not as much in the South for the slave after he is freed, as there was during his enslavement. Such is the inquiry now in reference to the colored race in this country, and the prejudice of the Anglo-Saxon is daily rising against us in this country. Therefore, for this I say, let us be the more faithful in prayer, that God will interpose for us in due time to overthrow the evil designs of wicked men

We have not time to celebrate other people's liberty, but it is our own we want to celebrate now. And prayer and faith are just the things that will enable us to celebrate it. That this is an indisputable fact, we need only look in the word of God for evidence of this truth. Then I hope we will in the future celebrate the 1st of August more to the honor and glory of God

Dear Editor—now, in conclusion, let me give you a brief statement as to the condition of our charge. The Rev Epps is still among us, striving, as I believe, to build up and enhance the cause of God; yet I must say, that the Hillsborough Circuit about holds its own, in a religious point of view—there are no great accessions to the church.

I still remain here where I fell, still bent and bound by the grace of God here to rise. Again, I might say a great deal, but time does not admit now. However I expect soon, as a subscriber, to send for your paper. Soon as I get a little more out of debt. May God grant you success. I am your friend in the cause of Christ.

JAMES. PAYNE.

For the Christian Recorder.

FROM GEORGETOWN, D C.

MR EDITOR:—There was a very sad accident occurred in Georgetown, D. C., on the 25th of July. There were several little boys playing at the Creek, and there being a small boat moored near the shore, two of the lads thoughtlessly got into it. After a short time one of the two boys got out of the boat, but before his companion could do so, one of the boys on shore gave the boat a sudden push, and, the rope breaking, the boat floated away from the shore out into the deeper parts of the stream, and the little boy that was in the boat became very much alarmed, and jumped out of the boat into the water, and was drowned before any assistance could be rendered to him. Several persons saw him at a distance, but could not prevent the sad calamity. This was about 12 o'clock, and they grappled for the body until 8 o'clock, A M. Several persons went in and dived for the body, but they did not get it until the next day at about noon.

The child went to the water without permission from his mother, and was not out of her sight more than half an hour, when the news came to her that her son was drowned. It was almost heart-rending to see the distress of the poor mother.

In the evening we called to see her, to try and give her a word of consolation and prayer. But she was almost inconsolable. Being a Christian, after prayer she seemed more composed—this was the evening of the day on which the child was drowned. Her greatest grief was that the body could not be found—but, thank God, the next day it was recovered about one hundred yards from the spot where it sank. The father of the child also takes it very hard. The child's name was Edward Norris, and was about seven years old at the time. H. C. R

Georgetown, D. C

For the Christian Recorder

FROM LEAVENWORTH, KANSAS

August 7th 1862.

MR EDITOR:—Permit me through the columns of the Recorder to inform your numerous readers of the state of things in Kansas, as it may be of some interest to them.

The Church is in a prosperous condition at this time, spiritually and temporally. Bishop Quinn and Rev. John Turner arrived safe and sound on the 27th of July. Their presence cheered the hearts of the people very much indeed. Our Quarterly Meeting commenced on the night of the 27th. Bishop Quinn preached a very awakening sermon from Revelation—third chapter and twentieth verse. We had a good time. Elder Turner preached on Saturday morning at eleven o'clock, from Mark—thirteenth chapter and thirty-seventh verse. It was a very able and profitable discourse, addressed as it was to the whole Church.

Our Quarterly Conference met at three o'clock, P. M., Bishop Quinn in the chair. It really reminded me of an annual Conference. We had a pleasant time of it—one that will not soon be forgotten by the brethren. Brother Pitts, a local preacher, preached at 8 o'clock, P. M. Subject, The Power of the Gospel. The effort was quite an able one indeed.

On Sabbath morning, at 11 o'clock, Bp Quinn preached from 1 Corinthians—1st chapter and 22d, 23d and 24th verses. At three o'clock, P. M., a large congregation assembled to witness the dedication of the church-edifice to God The ceremony was performed by Bishop Quinn, assisted by Elder Turner, brothers Pitts and Johnson, and myself.

Having gone through with the ceremony, Elder Turner preached a very appropriate discourse from the 20th Psalm, and a portion of the 5th verse. The words were as follows. "In the name of our God we will set up our banners." The house was densely crowded, and a great many persons had to remain outside of the doors—but notwithstanding the warmth of the day and uncomfortable situation of the people, the most breathless silence prevailed throughout the discourse.

We lifted a collection of $25 90. The collection was small, on account of its being on the day of Quarterly Meeting, and the Quarterly Meeting collection being lifted in the morning. On Sabbath evening, at 8 o'clock, the Sacrament was administered, and love feast on Monday evening, at 8 o'clock. It was truly a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The brethren and sisters spoke with power and earnestness of intention. There were eighteen souls joined to the Church during the meeting, many of whom, I think, will prove a blessing to the Church. Our young station now numbers over one hundred members and probationers. May God continue to add to her numbers such as shall be eternally saved.

Bishop Quinn, Elder Turner and myself started on Tuesday morning by private conveyance to visit the city of Lawrence, a distance of thirty-five miles. Bishop Quinn was taken quite ill on the road, but we arrived safe by half-past 12 o'clock, and met with a warm reception among the people, and found the society there in good condition. Elder Turner and myself preached to the people on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings to a densely crowded house.

I regret very much that the Bishop was not able to preach or get out to the place of worship while there, but I think that the appearance of our worthy old chieftain in the West will be attended with signal good among the people of Kansas. May God bless the Church and the people.

P. S.—Brother Weaver, please direct my paper to Upper Alton, Ill., until further notice.

J. M. WILKERSON.

THE most wonderful stories are related of the bravery of Kearney, who literally bears the character of a salamander. In the late battle he was to be seen with his one arm, and holding his bridle in his teeth, everywhere during the hottest of the fight. At one time he came very near to being taken at White Oaks Swamp. He was surrounded by no fewer than thirty of the rebels, but fairly cut his way through them, and asking them if they thought "he looked the kind I were to fall into their hands!"

BRUTAL BARBARISM.

We copy the following from the Union Herald, It will be read with interest by our people. We also state that the daily Press of Philadelphia, of the 7th inst, has a strong article in it upon the same subject. It speaks fearlessly, and is one of the best papers as a daily in this city—if not the best:—

We learn with pain, that many of the Irish laboring classes in Cincinnati, Chicago, Peoria, and other places, have yielded to the snares of the tempter, and have believed, or pretended to believe his misrepresentations concerning the interference of negro labor with the rights and interests of the white men, which, it is affirmed, the competition of the negro is likely to disturb in a serious manner These misrepresentations have already produced serious collisions between the races, and it is impossible to tell where this insane strife may end if it is not checked in time

It is plain, that the more ignorant of the Irish laboring classes have been made the dupes of the secession enemy, while their more intelligent and heroic brothers are reaping immortal glory for themselves, their adopted country, as well as the country of their birth, in fighting in the Union army for the rights of man, the stars and stripes, and the union of the whole country.

The only apology we can offer for the cruelty and brutality of these Irish rioters is, their ignorance of the real facts of the case, and of the true principles of that government under which they themselves have found a refuge from British tyranny and persecution, as well as a home and an asylum for themselves and their families, long oppressed by their hereditary enemy

Had they known the true state of the case, we feel that they would have been too generous to add insult to injury, by oppressing the down trodden still more, and by inflicting injurious on a race of beings, who, like themselves, have ever been the butt, the sport, and the prey of cruel tyrants and oppressors.

Let us assure them, that while the war lasts, the negroes will find abundant employment in our armies and navies, so as to prevent them being competitors with the white laborer of the North; and when the rebellion is over, the enemy South will offer inducements to the dark race to settle there, which no inducements that the frozen North can offer could entice them to relinquish. These are facts which any one with half an eye may see at a glance.

But if it were not so, what right have men who themselves have been recently rescued from a slavery and a degradation worse than any which the South has yet inflicted on its servile race; what right, we ask, have such men, the moment they are put in possession of liberty, to turn around and abuse it, and violate the laws of their adopted country, by attempting to tyrannize over a race who have as good a right to the protection of the laws, to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," as they have?—Do they know that this government was made for the protection of the weak and helpless against the strong arm of oppression? Yes, they know it, and have felt it, and still experience it in their own case. Well, then, with what face dare they who have experienced this blessing in their own case, turn round and abuse it for the oppression of those whom they deem weaker and more helpless than themselves? Let them be assured that such abominable ingratitude and injustice will not be tolerated; nay, let us further assure them, that enlightened public opinion will condemn them, and may, perhaps, go so far as to say, that no man ought to exercise the right of a freeman, till he has learnt practically what that means, and concede that others as good as he, perhaps better, may be made partakers of it, as well as himself, without diminishing the rights, duties, and obligations of either

THE LOVE OF THE SPIRIT.

1. The Holy Spirit is the author of all saving conviction and sound conversion. "He shall convince the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment." Men may get a speculative knowledge of religion by reading and hearing the word, but without the special influences of the Spirit carrying the truth home with his own demonstration and power to the conscience and heart, they will obtain no realising sense of the teachings of either law or gospel The most persuasive eloquence will fall upon the ear powerless as infancy, till the Spirit gives it efficacy You may be startled and horrified, or pleased and captivated, you may be held spell-bound, you may be aroused to make and entertain resolutions to amend; you may break off bad habits, and begin duties;—but you can never be truly converted, and made to feel your guilt and woful condition as a sinner; you can have no true sense of your sin and misery, nor of your need of a Saviour, nor of the suitableness, grace, and sufficiency of Christ; much less can you put forth one act, or cast one look, of faith on the Lord Jesus Christ, or feel one pang of generous sorrow for sin, or one emotion of true love to God, or take one step in the way of loyal and affectionate obedience to Him as your God and Father, till you are renewed by the Holy Ghost. You are by nature dead in sin; and if there is spiritual life in you, or the power of spiritual action, it is because you have been quickened by the Holy Spirit as the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus. Your understanding is darkened, and you are alienated from the life of God, through the ignorance that is in you, because of the blindness of your heart; and if light has broken in, it is owing to this Spirit as the Spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of God. You are proud and self-righteous until you obtain that faith, which is of the operation of God and the fruit of the Spirit. Your carnal mind is enmity against God and not subject to His law, and never will submit in love, till the love of God is shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost given unto you

Behold, then, here the love of the Spirit! He not only sends you the Gospel and the means of grace, but He comes along with them to you, even to you. He finds you blind, alienated from God, dead in sin, and wholly corrupt. Loathing your pollution, as He does, He still does not abandon you in disgust, but enters into you as the Spirit of life, and that, often, after long and bitter resistance on your part, and violent efforts to quench His benevolence and grieve Him away; He enters to, quickens your dead soul, fills your understanding with light and your heart with love, makes you a willing subject of grace, leads you to Christ and quickens you with His merits, so that you obtain forgiveness and peace with God, are brought into His family, and made an heir according to the hope of eternal life.

2. But the love of the Spirit is farther displayed in what He continues to do for us after our conversion. Having begun in us a good work, He carries it on till it is perfected He takes up his abode in us, and makes our bodies his temples; and condescends to sustain to us various relations of grace. He continues to be our Illuminator;—still taking the things which are Christ's and showing them to us; removing our ignorance, correcting our errors, overcoming our prejudices, and turning our speculative views into living realizations of truth. He bears with our dulness and waywardness, and leaves us not till we come, in the faith and knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.

He dwells in us also as our Sanctifier. By his influence accompanying the truth, we grow not only in knowledge, but in grace and holiness; we increase in faith, love, and obedience; our principles are confirmed; holy habits are formed; the power of sin is weakened, the force of temptation and the influence of the world more easily and successfully resisted; our inner man is renewed day by day, we become adorned with the graces and enriched with the fruits of the Spirit; and amidst the trials and afflictions which beset us, are cheered and sustained by the brightening prospects and the assured hope of heaven. The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus makes us free from the law of sin and death. The Spirit lusteth against the flesh, and through the Spirit we do mortify the deeds of the body Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities; and we are strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man. We live in the Spirit, and we walk in the Spirit; and love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, —all that assimilates us to God, and fits us for heaven,—is the fruit of the Spirit. It is He, who dwelling in us as the God of peace, purity, and love, searches out the hidden depths of our depravity, and sanctifies us wholly, and preserves our whole soul, body and spirit, till they are at last presented blameless in the day of Jesus Christ. How precious is this work of the Spirit! how important our sanctification! It is the very end for which the Saviour died;—He gave Himself for us that He might redeem us from all iniquity and purify unto Himself a peculiar people zealous of good works. This is the will of God, even our sanctification. Sin debases and renders us wretched; its end—its wages—is death Holiness exalts and renders blessed. Without holiness no man shall see the Lord. We can never attain the blessedness of heaven without its purity. And then, with what long-suffering does the Spirit ply this work! What corruptions, what infirmities, what backslidings, what perverseness and obstinacy, what waywardness and negligence is He called to bear with? How often when we rebel and vex Him, might He turn against us and become our enemy, and give us over to our own ways; when, notwithstanding, He perseveres and carries on His good work in us till the day of Jesus Christ

He is also the Spirit of adoption; making in us a temper and disposition of mind, such as becomes the children of God, producing in us a [illegible] and familiarity in our access to God as our Father, assuring us of His care and pity, leading us to delight and rejoice in His presence, and enabling us in some measure, to anticipate that blessed state, when "the tabernacle of God shall be with men, and He will dwell with them, and they shall be His people, and God Himself shall be with them, and be their God" Yes, "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." What an idea! The Holy Spirit, then, serves as a kind conductor to lead the children of God to glory Again, "The Spirit beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God," and doing this, He gives us "Pisgah views" of our celestial inheritance; for, "if children, then heirs, heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ" While we suffer with Christ, this blessed Comforter assures us, that we shall also reign with Him; and enables us to realize, that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us, and under his inspiring power, the martyr spirit hears a voice as if proceeding from the Throne, "He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son" Thus the Holy Spirit is the "first fruits" of our eternal harvest, and the "earnest" and "seal" of our heavenly inheritance, and becomes the author of peace, and hope and joy in the hearts of the children of God—of a peace that passeth all understanding, a hope that maketh not ashamed, and a joy unspeakable and full of glory.

Once more, the Spirit displays His love by His agency in leading us to the throne of grace. While our access to the Father is only through the merit and intercession of Christ, it is also only by the influence of the Spirit "Through Him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father." The Holy Spirit is at once the Spirit of supplication and of grace He inspires the filial cry, "Abba, Father" He causes us to feel our wants, temptations, and woes, excites in us spiritual desires, enables us to plead the promises, to use importunity, and to watch unto prayer "Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered. And he that searcheth the heart knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because He maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God." By his gracious aid, when temptations beset and troubles surround, and dangers press—when floods draw near and threaten to overflow—when the heart is overwhelmed and in perplexity,—we are enabled to look unto the Rock that is higher than we, to trust to the Lord and not be afraid, to cast our cares and our burdens upon Him, to make our requests known to Him; and doing so, to find that perfect peace, which passeth all understanding, and which keeps the heart and mind through Christ Jesus. Afflictions lose their bitterness, even death its sting, and the grave its gloom; the judgment comes to be anticipated with confidence, and eternity with hope and joy.

The Holy Spirit continues His kind agency till death; and in that solemn and trying hour, when all earthly supports fail, when even Christian friends can no longer render service, but we must tread the dark valley solitary and alone; even then, He proves Himself the Great Comforter By Him the Saviour vouchsafes His presence, and the believer is perfected in holiness, made meet for the inheritance of the saints in light, conducted to the New Jerusalem, and presented faultless before the throne of the heavenly glory with exceeding joy.

The same gracious Comforter will also raise us from the dead. While the body lies under the power of death and the grave, our salvation is incomplete. This corruption and dishonor must end; this vile body must be fashioned like unto that glorious body, which the spirits of the just made perfect continually behold with affection and hope, as it is seated on the throne at God's right hand—the pattern and pledge of what theirs shall be. This purchased possession must be redeemed. The Lord Jesus will accomplish this by the energy of His mighty power, but yet, that energy goes forth in the agency of this blessed Comforter. "If the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by His Spirit that dwelleth in you."

Finally; This Spirit shall forever reign in the hearts of the saved, the efficient cause of all that light, and purity and glory and blessedness which they shall eternally enjoy in the presence of God and the Lamb: "The kingdom of God is righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." His influences, proceeding as they do, from the fountain of the Divine perfections, through the atonement of Christ, are the waters of that "pure river of life which proceedeth out of the throne of God and the Lamb."

PROGRESS AN ESSENTIAL CHARACTERISTIC OF TRUE PIETY

Two things, then, with reference to Christian progress may be regarded as admitted; its possibility, and its duty Believers MAY advance in holiness: they have the capacity of spiritual progress. Believers OUGHT to advance in holiness: God solemnly commands it.

But can we stop here? Is this an exhaustive statement of our theme? Is Christian progress a possibility and a duty? Do we speak the whole truth when we say that a child of God MAY and OUGHT to grow in grace? We are bold to affirm the necessity of this statement. There is a necessity in Christian progress, as well as a possibility and a duty, and a must in the believer's advancement in holiness, as well as a may and an ought.

Progress is an essential characteristic of true piety. It belongs to its very essence. It is one of its inherent qualities. It is as inseparable from it as the capacity to burn is inseparable from fire, or as the tendency to throw out light is inseparable from a luminous object.

This is measurably true of all religions, even the false, which are truly believed. Towards the character of the object worshipped, that of the worshipper must constantly progress. Looking at his God as the standard of perfection, and, consequently, endeavoring and seeking to eradicate from his own character whatever is unlike that, every man is necessarily changed into his image: he becomes like his God. And as this process must go on in the soul just as long as the Deity remains the object of the man's supreme homage, so must he ever grow into conformity to Him.

Moreover, as every worshipper desires the favor of the object worshipped, and as reason dictates that this can be obtained only by conformity to the will and character of that object, it is obvious that self-interest, as well as the last just mentioned, is continually promoting in man an assimilation of character to his God

How full of sad evidence to this truth is the whole history of the idolatrous world! The ancient Egyptians were brute-worshippers, and bestiality —the lowest vice to which human nature can descend—was common among them. In bowing down to "birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things," they sank themselves to the lowest depths of vice. Odin and Thor—the divinities of the Scandinavians, were hero-kings, blood-thirsty and cruel; and hence in the bosoms of that fierce race of Northmen the milk of human kindness seemed to be turned into gall. Venus—the personification of lust—was the goddess of Corinth; and, as a necessary consequence, her inhabitants were proverbial for dissoluteness.

How exact these parallels! whole nations in moral character precisely like the divinities they worship! It is said that the Chinese have this truth as a kind of proverb: "Think of Buddha, and you will be transformed into Buddha. If men pray to Buddha and do not become Buddha, it is because the mouth prays and not the mind."

And what is thus true of all false religions, is it not equally true of Christianity? Poor, benighted pagans becoming assimilated in their moral character to the various objects which they worship, becoming like Odin and Thor and Venus and Buddha,—can it be otherwise with the Christian? Must not he become like the august object of his worship,—like Jehovah? "And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as He is pure."

But, again, that progress is an essential and inherent characteristic of true piety, is evident from the fact already frequently referred to—that Christianity is a life. When you take a living seed and cast it into the ground, you do not say that it may grow, or that it ought to grow, but that it must grow. It is its very nature not to remain as it is, but to unfold continually new forms of life and beauty; and nothing but the entire destruction of the living principle within it can prevent this result Even though some superincumbent mass may for awhile retard and hinder it in its growth, yet will it struggle for the light, and, sending out in every direction its roots, finally lifts itself above the earth

Precisely thus is it with religion. If the beginning of piety in the soul were like a stone cast into a well it might indeed be otherwise. We might then speak of the believer's progress in holiness as a possibility only As, however, that beginning finds its true type in the living seed, we cannot speak of the Christian's progress as any thing but an inherent necessity. And hence, in that beautiful parable of our Lord in which the commencement of true religion, either in the world or in the heart of the individual believer, is said to be likened to a grain of mustard seed, which a man took and sowed in his field," Christ immediately adds "which indeed is the least of all seeds: but when it is grown, it is the greatest among herbs, and becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof."

But we have not yet concluded our argument on this point Between the various stages of progress that may be said to intervene from the commencement of the believer in the divine life, to his final and complete sanctification, there is a most interesting and vital connexion. None are isolated. None stand alone, but all are so intimately allied that they perpetually call each other into being. Their mutual relation are not unlike the various links of a chain, so that, taking hold of one, the others by a kind of natural sequence, follow. Just as we sometimes say in regard to an unregenerate man who has taken the first step in sin, that this leads on by a sort of moral necessity, to a long series of transgressions, so it with every advance made by the believer in the way to holiness. It draws him on towards, and almost certainly secures, other advances.

To illustrate this thought. A child of God increases in knowledge. He has obtained a fuller perception of the divine character than he has ever enjoyed; and, as a necessary consequence, his emotion of holy love is at once greatly inflamed. The better vision of his God perfects within him the grace of Christian love. But then, in return, this awakened and increased love brings God nearer to his soul; and thus does the process continually repeat itself. Knowledge and love perpetually call each other into new and brighter existence

And thus is it with all the graces of the new life. No one will walk alone and unattended in the soul. They are a sisterly choir, and delight too much in the fellowship of each other to be separated. If a man increase in his confidence towards God,—if his faith in him be strengthened, his affection for him will be correspondingly enlarged. If he love him more, his hope will be confirmed If he have a firmer conviction that there remains for him a crown hereafter, he will be more patient to bear present trial. If he truly love God, he will love his brother also Should any planet in our solar system suddenly lose its centrifugal force and be wholly given up to the influence of the centripetal, it would commence a direct movement towards the sun; but this movement, every advance however small, would accelerate, both by the increased momentum that the body has thus required, and by the increased attraction to which it would be subjected. Not unlike this is the movement towards God of a soul in which that power of sin which would lead it to fly away from Him, has been effectually destroyed. It carries over from every stage in its progress an acquired momentum that prepares it for the next; while at the same time, advancing by every progression nearer and nearer to God, the attraction of His love is augmented.

In thus speaking of progress as an essential characteristic of true piety, we do not, of course, mean to say that it is spontaneous, something that comes of itself and hence does not need attention and culture. This is seldom true of any life, and never of the divine. "Giving all diligence, add to your faith," is the Scriptural injunction. Because this tolerate exists needs, in order to its growth, the most careful cultivation,—must be shielded from the rough wind and cold, and supplied with abundant sunshine and moisture,—men do not conclude that it is any less a living plant, nor suppose that growth is not one of its inherent qualities. Yet precisely this would we do in religion, if from the acknowledged fact that Christian progress requires the part of every believer, in order to secure it, the most diligent labor, we should infer that growth was not of all true piety an essential feature.

We repeat, then, our

The Christian Recorder.

Philadelphia, August 16, 1862.

NOTICE.

Our letter from Bishop Quinn, of his Western tour, will be found interesting.

NOTICE.

The Indiana Conference met yesterday at 9 o'clock, A. M., per arrangement, in the city of Indianapolis. At the rise of this Conference, the Missouri Conference meets in Louisville, Ky., on the 28th inst. Bishop Quinn presided over them both, assisted by Bishop Nazrey and Payne.

NOTICE.

The weather has been very oppressive during the last week.

NOTICE.

At Bordentown, July 15th, 1862, notice was given of a Bush Meeting at Cookstown, N. J., to commence on 14th of August and continue till the 17th. Rev. JEREMIAH YOUNG,
Elder in Charge.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

There will be a Missionary Camp Meeting, commencing on Saturday, August 16th, and continuing until Thursday, August 21st, at Little Pond Grove, Plymouth, to be conducted by the Revs. Wm. Johnson, Jacob Mitchell, W. W. Grimes, Wm. Demond, Elisha Chase, Joseph P. Shreeves, and others. The public are respectfully invited to attend. All persons intending to have tents are requested to have them on the ground by Friday or Saturday. No intoxicating liquors will be sold within the encampment.

Boston, July 9th, 1862.

NOTICE.

If no preventing cause, we intend to hold a Bush Meeting for a few days at Haineville, Camden, N. J., commencing on Thursday next, 21st inst., at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. It is expected that Revs. J. F. Campbell, A. L. Stanford, H. Davis, E. Weaver, and other able ministers will assist. The religious public and the friends of the Gospel are invited.

PETER GARDINER,
Preacher in charge of Camden Circuit.

N. B. No stands or tents will be allowed on the ground to sell anything except two boarding tents. Messrs. J. F. Derrickson, H. Mackey, J. Wright, H. H. Harrison, and Elihu Jefferson, Committee.

August 14th, 1862.

NOTICE.

Our much esteemed brother, Rev. W. D. W Schureman, met with the sad misfortune of rupturing one of the blood vessels in his abdomen This was probably the result of excessive labor on Thursday night, the 7th inst., at Horntown, but the first effects he observed on Friday, the 8th inst. On Tuesday, the 11th inst., he endured the painful process of a surgical operation. On Wednesday, the 12th inst., he was supposed to be better. His recovery is prayerfully desired by us and his many friends.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

Received of Rev. H. J. Rhodes on account,	$2 00
Mr. Isaac Evans, of Darby, Pa.,	1 00
Of Rev. H. M. Turner, on account,	2 00
Mr. Jeremiah Merry, of Reading,	4 00
Mr. Samuel Golden, of Pittsburg,	2 00
Mrs. Lydia S. Billows,	1 00

PERSONAL.

Ex-President Roberts, the distinguished personage of Liberia, who is on a short visit to this country, and his good lady, put up at the Continental. On Saturday, the 9th inst., we paid him a call, and found him to be very agreeable. We were much disappointed in relation to his stature. His appearance would strike one at once as that of a scholar and gentleman of refinement. He has sharp keen eyes, with a broad full forehead, denoting intelligence. His face is round, resembling that of a Frenchman. He carries with him a smile upon his face. He is of medium size, and looks to be every way capable of filling the position of a President. Our interview with him made us feel proud to have the honor of calling on the first President that Liberia ever acknowledged.

THE WAR.

Another severe battle has been fought between Stonewall Jackson and General Banks, aided by General Pope, all under the command of General Halleck, commander-in-chief of the Union forces. The contest was very warm between them. Stonewall Jackson, by his deeds, proves himself to be a thorough tactician and adequate for the times. Just think of the number of poor souls who were severely wounded, what pain they must suffer! Then, again, think of the many hundreds of souls who must necessarily go, prepared or unprepared, into eternity! Awful thought!

My friends, taking these things into consideration, ought it not to be the true policy of this Government to wipe away the unjustifiable prejudice which has been shown to exist against what God has seen fit to make for his own glory—the black and white races? He has made a variety of species, kind, and color, which is due alone to his infinite power and wisdom. The War Department of the Government, and about one-third of the Union men, stop to talk about the colored people, and that they will not do this or that, if the colored people—native born citizens—are to be formed into regiments, brigades, &c.; that they will throw down their arms; and others say they will not enlist if the colored people do. Now, while the Union men, as they call themselves, are standing still, harping on nothing, the Rebel Confederacy—officers, privates and subjects—seem to be a unit, irrespective of color or grade, and use every means in their power to destroy the Union men at all points, asking or giving no quarter. They work by day and night, and use every stratagem to conquer.

We understand that there are movements on foot to have the colored people enlist to form regiments, and send them out of this State to Rhode Island, under Governor Sprague, also to Kansas, under General Lane. We do not favor the policy at all. As it is with Governor Curtin to say whether he will take colored men to help to make up his quota, we know not whether they will be accepted here or not. If we had anything to say about the matter, we would advise all colored men to stay in their own State, and let the whites battle away at their pleasure. The good Lord will make all things right.

For the Christian Recorder.

MY EASTERN TOUR.

MR. EDITOR:—Having promised to give, through your valuable paper, an account of my visit among those whom, I may say, are favored with the sublime appearance of a bright morning's sun at least 180 seconds earlier than we who reside in the city of Brotherly Love. Ever since my return, I have felt this a duty which I owe both to you and other friends—many; but a multiplicity of duties, arising from my pastoral relation to the Wesley A. M. E. Church in this city, has caused my delay to this late period.

On Friday, the 11th ultimo, in company with Miss Morris, of Providence, R. I., I took exit from Philadelphia by way of the Camden and Amboy R. R., en route for N. Y. The conductors on this road are somewhat destitute of good manners and honesty; hence, have long observed the cruel practice of demanding from colored persons the full price of a first class ticket, and then ordering them to what is called a second class car, along with those who have paid a little more than half price, and who pass for white persons. Permit me here to remark, that should a colored man happen, in England, to indulge ill-manners or dishonesty in a single instance, and should some persons in America hear it, they, through newspapers, will tauntingly ask, "What does England think of the nigger?" I wish some one would ask America what she thinks of this class of conductors in her midst.

We, after a tedious ride of four to five hours, arrived in New York. From thence, at 5 o'clock in the afternoon of the same day, we took the large and commodious steamer Plymouth Rock, en route for Providence, R. I., arriving at 5 o'clock, A. M., on Saturday, the 12th. After delivering Miss Morris to the care and protection of her parents, I made my way to the residence of brother and sister Henson's, where I was received and entertained with all that kindness and hospitality which can only be possessed by Christian characters. Soon after my arrival, I learned that the Rev J. P. Shreeves, minister in charge, had gone to Newport, for the purpose of assisting the Rev. Wm. Demond in a quarterly meeting. I immediately resolved to go thither and participate with them; but the multiplied persuasions of many friends crowded on me so as to hinder this resolve from being carried into effect. I remained on the Sabbath, and talked, both in the afternoon and evening, to a large and apparently interested audience. Truly, the greetings of my friends brought to my mind vivid recollections of the past, and compelled me to feel as though I had once more arrived at home.

I also had the pleasure of once more seeing my faithful friend, Rev. L. S. Lewis. He is looking as well as can be expected. Brother Lewis, because of bodily infirmity, has become a superannuated minister, yet he continues now and then to blow the gospel trump successfully in Zion. He is also making himself useful in healing certain diseases. (See notice in another column of this paper, Rev "Lewis S. Lewis' Family Liniment.")

On Friday, the 18th, I left Providence, R. I., for Lynn, Mass., where I found my highly esteemed brother, Rev. Wm. H. Chase, the minister in charge, preparing to hold a quarterly meeting on the ensuing Sabbath. There I enjoyed a gracious season of the outpouring of Divine influence. Revs Mitchell, of Boston, and Grimes, of New Bedford, were present. There are about three hundred colored persons in Lynn, of which the greater part of the church members are connected with white churches, only seventeen belong to the A. M. E. Church The church is a splendid building, the dimensions of which are about 42 feet in length, and 28 in breadth. It is well attended; and, from present prospects, I would judge that brother Chase will be instrumental in bringing about a rapid increase to the membership of this particular society. He is highly appreciated by many persons, both white and colored, who gather to his church, and I know of no one who has made greater improvement in pulpit delivery within the space of one year than he. I found that during his hours for study, he was diligently employed in perusing his Bible, Grammar, Geography, Arithmetic, &c., which increased in me a greater resolve that should I live to return home, my studies shall continue to demand much of my presence.

If we notice colored persons in Lynn from a pecuniary stand-point, they really seem to be doing well, generally owning their houses Brothers Quinton, Ringall, Beckett, Allen and Young, are estimated to be worth from twelve hundred to twenty-five hundred dollars in real estate. I never was entertained better than in the houses of brothers Beckett, Young and others. Among the aged I visited mother Mary Jane Hood, who has experienced 98 full years, a greater part of which she claims to have spent in the service of God, and I found her stronger in faith and more active in body than many who have not yet seen fifty. The Rev. Chase, though unsolicited, bore my expenses from and to Providence.

Sunday, the 27th, by the Revs. Grimes, Chase and myself, was spent in Boston with Elder Mitchell, at his quarterly meeting, which, I think, will, by each of us, long be remembered The King of Saints was in our midst, making the place of his feet glorious. On Tuesday, the 29th, we took a parting hand. On leaving Boston, I returned to Providence, where, by the assistance of Rev. J. P. Shreeves, at 8 o'clock in the evening, I joined Mr. William Hopp and Miss Maria Williams in holy matrimony, at the residence of Mr. Jared Morris, No. 9 Angle St. On Wednesday, the 30th, at 8 o'clock in the evening, by the arrangement of Brother Shreeves, I endeavored to talk with his people about the Heavenly Merchant, after which the congregation bade me farewell.

During these solemn, parting moments, the continued love and friendship of that dear people was, by the request of their pastor, expressed to me in actual deeds, by the presentation of $11.25, to defray my expenses from and to my field of labor. Their philanthropic kindness demands so much gratitude and remembrance that language fails in enabling me to express. Oh! let the poet assist:

"Jesus, the Corner Stone,
Did first our hearts unite;
And still he keeps our spirits one,
Who walk with him in white."

It may be said of the church in Providence, that the Rev Shreeves found it in very adverse circumstances The Bible class for adults and the Sabbath-school organization had perished And the membership of the church, being under the painful necessity of seeking another place for Divine worship, scarcely knowing what plans to adopt, they were much divided in sentiment and feeling. But, in this season of trial, brother Shreeves seems to be just the proper minister. He has succeeded in reorganizing the Sabbath-school, and, by Divine assistance, has been successful in bringing about a unity, both of feeling and sentiment, in the church, and is making rapid progress for the erection of a new edifice in which to worship. The clouds of adversity are dispersing, and the sunlight of prosperity has beamed again upon the A. M. E. Church in Providence. I took departure on Thursday, the 31st, for Philadelphia, and, after 19 hours' riding over land and water, I arrived safely at home. And now, feeling refreshed and strengthened for the duties of my charge, I am your humble servant, for Christ,

A. L. STANFORD.

For the Christian Recorder

LETTER FROM BALTIMORE

Baltimore, Aug. 9, 1862.

REV. E. WEAVER.—Dear Brother.—Being a stranger to you, but a sincere friend of the A. M. E. Church, I thought that a letter from me might not be unacceptable; I therefore write you a few lines, promising, if agreeable to you, to write frequently for your ably-conducted and widely circulated RECORDER.

And first I would say, that I consider your paper the ne plus ultra edited by a colored man in this country, and equal, in every respect, to any of which I have any knowledge emanating from our down-trodden race, here or anywhere else; and well worthy to be styled, "The Organ of the A. M. E. Church of the United States of America."

The same remarks are also applicable to the "Repository" of your church, published in this city. Its editorials are excellent, its selections admirable, and its Editor, J. M. Brown, a gentleman of much ability.

Matters here, generally, are dull, nothing scarcely doing, save by those engaged by the Government. Small change being a very scarce article, (the new currency not being in circulation as yet) people are thereby subjected to much inconvenience War matters are all the go. The most intense excitement has prevailed in this city, this week, in consequence of the President's call for 300,000 more troops, and the probability of a draft for a large number of the same. An order, emanating from the War Department yesterday, materially enhanced the excitement forbidding all persons leaving the United States for foreign countries, (in order to evade being drafted) great numbers having left, and much greater preparations for the same, consequently the order. The gigantic rebellion now raging over the country is certainly one of the most causeless, the most iniquitous, of which history gives us any information, the dire effects of which will be seen long after this generation shall have passed away.

As with individuals, so with nations; as the former incline wherever their interest lies, so also of nations. There seems to be a persistent determination on the part of certain foreign governments to interfere with the affairs of this government. These remarks are applicable particularly to England. She long since would have done so, had she any show of consistency for such a course; but public sentiment being against her, she dare not. England is jealous, not only jealous, she hates—not only hates, she fears the United States. Nothing would gratify the mother country more than the overthrow of our Republican form of government, and she would indirectly give every encouragement to such an object; but she is doomed to disappointment This unholy rebellion will be crushed, cost what it may. The people have ever been ahead of the government in the vigorous prosecution of this rebellion. While the latter have been playing, the people have been acting war concillatory measures. Having failed, the government seems suddenly to have awakened from her lethargy, and determined to prosecute the war to the bitter end.

The colored schools here are almost wholly suspended. I notice, however, "Bethel Church Academy" still in operation, under the management of those well-known instructors of youth, Rev. George T. and John L. Watkins, the former an able divine of the "A. M. E." Church—the latter the most distinguished artist of color in this country, and a poet of the first order. Their Academy stands No. 1, and the marked proficiency of their pupils is a subject of general remark. These gentlemen teach all the branches of our vernacular tongue, also several of the foreign languages, and, as it should be, they are liberally patronized.

The churches generally are prosperous. Ebenezer Church, under the pastorate of Rev. J. M Brown, is about to erect a most splendid edifice, one that will be a credit to himself and the congregation over which he presides, as also an ornament to the connexion.

Bethel Church, as ever, progresses finely This must be the case wherever its loved pastor is stationed. Rev. A. W. Wayman is confessedly the oldest minister of whom the Conference of this district can boast, and is highly esteemed not only by the members of his own church, but by the community generally

Walter's Chapel, under Rev. James Lynch, and Union Bethel, under Rev. R. F. Wayman, are both in a flourishing condition

Of the churches not of the A. M. E. Church, none stand more prominent, nor exert a greater amount of influence than the "Madison Street First Colored Presbyterian Church." The pastor of this church, Rev. H. R Revels, is evidently a Christian and a gentleman. As a minister, it is universally conceded that he has no equal in the city. This church, unfortunately, has labored under many difficulties for the past few years, but apparently at present is enjoying a comparative quiet, harmony having been fully restored thereto; its minister has labored most assiduously since his instalment as pastor for the benefit of the same the fruits of which are clearly discernible, despite the almost superhuman amount of opposition brought to bear against him. He has, however, seemingly acted upon the principle—do right, and bear the consequences with him who rides upon the whirlwind, and directs the storm, hence his success.

The weather here, at present, is excessively warm. To use an expression of the "Baltimore Clipper," (an uncompromising Union journal) "It is as hot as Cayenne pepper." Several have died the past few days from sunstroke. Out-door work, to a considerable extent, is suspended more or less every day

As I may be in Philadelphia shortly for a few days, I shall be happy, if agreeable to you, to call on you. Until then believe me to be

Yours, very respectfully,
ALPHA

For the Christian Recorder.

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. EDITOR:—Wednesday was a day which will be lastingly remembered by every grade of humanity in this city. It had been previously announced through the papers, there would be a grand war meeting held on the east side of the capitol, when and where there would be several distinguished orators who would deliver addresses.

At four o'clock, congruently to announcement, the bells of all the principal places in the city begun to ring. The drums irregularly arraigned through the streets to beat the war notes; and cannons from surrounding summits, to base with iron lungs and powder tongues so terribly loud, that the atmospheres vibrations numbed the drum of every ear, as we listened to their dreadful roar, muttering in tones of desperate vengeance, imaginarily like awe echoing to awe, or that fear, dread, terror, and alarm had shivered the shaft which dared their wrath, and were contestably dialoguing the plans of their desperation, we could but remember that thus speaking stanza:

"When shrivelling like a parched scroll,
The flaming heavens together roll;
And louder yet, and yet more dread
Swells the high trump that wakes the dead."

But notwithstanding this threatening din, every imaginable glade of humanity was soon seen wending their way to the east of the capitol, which, when assembled, constituted such a dense multitude of human beings, that any one interested in the future transpiration of things could hardly hold his lips from uttering:

"When man to judgment wakes from clay,
How great will be the throng that day!"

But on the broad portico and steps on the east part of the capitol building, a large platform had been erected, which was appropriately decorated with the American flag. In view to a display, gas burners had been extended over the arch in front of the platform, and one set of jets consistently taking the form of a star.

The platform was occupied by the President and several of his cabinet, the city council of Washington, invited civil and military guests, speakers and reporters for the press.

The ladies occupied the portico, and the great mass stood in front below the platform, and Mr. colored lady and gentleman mingled in the crowd.

The speakers were generally very eloquent; but the Hon. O. S. Boutwell was the only one out of all, who dared to take a bold stand in favor of the colored man. He took the ground that the states of South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida should be dedicated to the black race, and all along the gulf stream, if necessary; and that the mild power of persuasion should be used to get the intelligent colored people from the north to emigrate there and establish a nationality. Shortly after, some man rose up, who apparently worked his upper jaw instead of his lower, and began a raid of intimations upon the abolitionists.

Last Sabbath was quarterly meeting at Israel church, and I noticed when the reports of the trustees, stewards, and Sabbath school was being read to the congregation, that the following class leaders collected from their classes as follows:

Benjamin Newton,	$18.96
Rev. Chas. Hicks,	18.18
Rev. James Reed,	8 37
Thomas Cyphus,	8 10
James Hames,	10.70
John Hawkins,	9.13
Thomas Bell,	6 24
Lewis Hillary,	8.37
Total amount,	$87.35

Rev. H. J. Rhodes preached the 11 o'clock sermon, which was received with many external demonstrations.

Rev. M. F. Shuly preached in the afternoon, and brought up the rear in triumphant pomp. And the minister who preached at 8 o'clock made a most grand and sublime failure.

Rev. James Lynch is on a visit to this city, and looks remarkably well. It is surmised in very credible circles, that he is soon to confer upon some distinguished miss the title of Mrs Lynch H. M. T

Washington, August 8th, 1862

For the Christian Recorder

ON CHRISTIAN SOCIETY.

First. Influence of Christian society in the world.

There is nothing aside from the gospel itself, that exerts such an influence over the mind, as good society Satan had formed his society in the world long before Christian society was formed. His Satanic influence, therefore, had run through the entire world, spreading devastation and carnage wherever he went.

Now Christian society exerts an influence in an opposite direction. It has, for its object, the happiness of the whole human family. The Saviour said of it, that it was "The light of the world." "Yea," he said, "that it is the salt of the earth" With these illustrations before us, we see the benefit of this society to the world. What would be the state of our own world without light. Think for a moment to be enveloped in thick darkness, without a cheering beam of light. Again, remove all salt from the earth, and you destroy all the savor: yea, you destroy the alkali of all bodies on earth This is one of the principles that preserve the body from the power of nitrogen, which would soon destroy it, were it not for this and other elements of a preserving character.

Thus we represent Christian society, as the health and preservation of the world Drive all these Christians from the world, and we will soon see what the result will be. This is what the matter is now. In our fallen world there are few Christians; therefore, bloodshed and carnage sweep like a flood over our land Had there been ten righteous persons found in four ancient cities, they would have been preserved Thus you see the value of Christian society

But we pass to notice its reciprocal value Great blessings are received, one from another, in this society The whole is mutual; they unite into one spirit, drink all from the same fountain (that is Christ) from whom they derive their name. Therefore, their communion is sweet; 'tis all their business here to love their God, and their fellow-men; and, therefore, they continually labor for the happiness of each other. Oh, what a pleasure it is to live with intelligent and pious Christians! Oh, how sweet to join in the solemn assembly to give praise to Jesus our head. David said of such, "That they were all his delight." Yes, David, in the temple of the Lord, delighted to praise His name upon his harp.

Not only so, but their doing good to each other is another balm to the soul. How sweet, in the hour of trouble, to have a kind brother bind up the broken heart! How sweet, when sick and afflicted, to have kind, Christian friends to administer to our wants! How sweet, when departing this life, to have Christians in the room and around the bed, singing with the angels that have come to bear the spirit home!

B. L. BROOKS.

Louisville, Aug. 9th, 1862.

NOTICE.

TO THE DISTRICTS OF PHILADELPHIA, NEW ENGLAND, OHIO, INDIANA, AND MISSOURI, OF THE A. M. E. CHURCH MINISTERS.

Dear Brethren:—As we have a number of superannuated ministers on the list in said Districts, therefore it will be expected that the ministers and preachers, on their circuits and stations, will do all they can to collect the two cent money; and we also recommend that the Class leaders be instructed to collect and set the amount on the Class book opposite each member's name, as also all the collections called, per Discipline, for the Annual Conference, and publish the same once every quarter, that it may be seen who they are that work for God and his cause. We think it is time to give credit to those of our people who do work, so that God's name may be glorified.

GLEANINGS AND THOUGHTS ON CHURCH MUSIC.

"Tastes are various, but the question about church music is, or ought to be, whether it is properly a matter of taste at all. Is it not rather a matter of duty? There are many good people who go to church for the sake of a good sermon, and many who go for good music, and as a means of attraction the latter may have its utility, whatever is sacrificed to it. But the question is somewhat serious when we consider music as a part of the praise of God. There is a Chinese custom of prayer-wheels, where one does his praying by machinery, each turn of the wheel exhibiting a prayer, and reiterating it. This would hardly accord with our civilized ideas of prayer, but in what respect does it really differ from doing our praise by machinery, or by proxy, and grinding it out at so much a year or a Sunday?"

A Quaker congratulated a clergyman, saying he was pleased to learn that his congregation had got a fine new organ. The clergyman expressed surprise that he should feel an interest in the matter, as Friends never allowed such instruments in their meeting houses.

"Why, no," said the Quaker, "we never use them, but if thy people choose to worship God by machinery, I should like them to have a good machine."

Let it not be imagined that we object to good music in churches. The objection lies to the practice which some churches have of doing all their music by machine, or by a choir which is a machine, and excluding the congregation from any part in that certainly most important portion of the daily or weekly worship. It is, perhaps, desirable to make a judicious compromise, and have some portion of the music such as the entire church can unite in, and another portion such as will be not only an attraction of outsiders into the sacred influences, but also an elevated style of worship, resembling that of the ancient church, and the temple service. But where this is impracticable and the choice is between music done to order by paid singers and performers, and music done by the hearts and voices of the whole people, there can be no question as to the propriety and duty of adopting the latter.

We are inclined to think that the origin of much difference of opinion and practice in this matter has been in the introduction of a false rule into the interpretation of music. This consists in the commonly received idea among educated musicians that the perfection of music is in the higher orders of musical literature and performance. Hence it is argued that church music, being of the utmost importance, should be of the highest order. But the error is radical. The best music is the most effective, and the effect depends on various contingencies, such as time, place, and the education of the listeners, or the state of their minds. A simple ballad may have more of the real power of music than the finest operatic performance, if the occasion serves; and the sound of the church bell may be infinitely more effective than the best effort of the organist. In nine cases out of ten the musical effect of a hymn, sung by the united voices of a great congregation, will be greater on all who hear and join it than the most elaborate and thorough effort of the best drilled choir of educated singers, aided by all the instrumental skill of an orchestra. There is something in the union of voice and thought, and more in the very idea of the union. We recall an illustration of this. On the same Sunday at two different churches, the one depending on a choir and organ, the other on a precentor and congregational singing. In the former, the services concluded with a superb anthem, given in gorgeous style, and the congregation separated with perfect satisfaction that the worship had been well and effectively done. A few hearts were, doubtless, elevated,—a few musically-educated persons were deeply moved, almost if not quite, to tears. The other congregation separated, after singing with united voice and heart, till the old church shook with the thunder of their shout:—

"One army of the Living God,
At his command we law,
Part of the host have crossed the flood,
And part are crossing now."

These went away with bowed heads and solemn yet joyful hearts, and they said few words to each other as they went out of the church doors On the whole, as a matter of religion, we incline to think the latter congregation were most edified, and as to the effect on strangers, or those uninterested in the worship, there can be no doubt that the appearance and the sound of that congregation praising God with such a song was more effective than would possibly be any music of choir or orchestra.—New York "Journal of Commerce."

If it be a question whether church music "is properly a matter of taste," we all know that of late years it has become quite a matter of fashion. "It will scarcely be believed in coming generations," says a late writer, "that many Christians in the United States, in the middle of the nineteenth century, transferred much of the public singing of the praises of God in their houses of worship to choirs, while the members of churches sat quietly in their pews, or, as a good old man in Boston expressed it, thanking God that they could hear singing though public opinion prohibited them from joining in it. Some few congregations in large cities went even beyond this and, at an expense which exceeded the combined average salary of four pastors, employed four persons in their singing gallery: general performers at the opera houses. To praise God for them! For purely musical instruments were rigidly excluded from the churches of the Presbyterians and Methodists. When John Wesley was asked if he had any objection to them in places of worship, he replied, "None at all, provided they are neither seen nor heard."

A good story is told of the late distinguished Dr. Emmons, who was a great lover of sweet sounds,—that is, the sound of the human voice,—and religiously excluded from his meeting house all instrumental music, except a mahogany colored wooden pitch-pipe, about five inches by three. A member of his choir had learned to play the bass-viol, and an itinerant to exhibit his skill, early one Sunday must inadvisedly introduced his big fiddle into the singing gallery After the first prayer was ended, and the doctor began to handle his "Watts," the "bass-violist" lifted up his profanation, and, tying his strings, instantly attracted the doctor's attention He paused, laid down his hymn book, took his sermon from the cushion, and proceeded with his discourse as if singing were no part of public worship, and finally dismissed the congregation "without note or comment." The whole choir were indignant. They staid after "meeting," and all the girls and young men resolved not to go into "the singing seats" at all in the afternoon; and the others who did go there bore the visages of men "whose minds were made up." Services in the afternoon began as usual. The doctor took his psalm-book in his hand, looked over his spectacles at the gallery, and saw only a few there, but, nothing daunted, read a psalm and sat down. No sound followed; no one stirred; and the "leader" looked up in utter unconsciousness. After a long and most uneasy silence, the good man, his face somewhat overflushed, his manner rather stern, read the psalm again, paused, then re-read the first verse, and pushing up his spectacles, looked interrogatively into the gallery The leader could bear it no longer, and, half rising, said, decidedly, "There won't be any singing here this afternoon." Quick as thought, the doctor replied, "Then there won't be any preaching;" and, taking his cocked hat from its peg, he marched down the pulpit stairs, through the broad aisle, and out of the house, leaving the congregation utterly astounded. We need not inform our readers that "the big fiddle" did not appear in "the singing-seats" afterwards.

Something very much like this happened to the Rev. Dr. Adam Clarke at Plymouth Dock in the early period of his ministry. There was a choir, and, he says, "There were some among them who understood music as well as most in the nation." They wished to have a particular seat in the church with which the trustees could not conveniently accommodate them; and when they found they could not have the place they wished, they came to a private resolution not to sing in the church Dr C. knowing nothing of this resolution, gave out, as usual, the page and measure of the hymn. All was silent. He looked to see if the singers were in their place; and behold, the choir was full; even unusually so. He, thinking that they could not find the page, or did not know the measure, gave out both again; and then looked them all full in the face, which they returned with great steadiness of countenance! He then raised the tune himself, and the congregation continued the singing. Not knowing what the matter was, he gave out the next hymn as he had given out the former,—again and again,—still they were silent. He then raised the tune, and the congregation sang as before. They continued this ungodly farce, hoping to reduce the trustees to the necessity of capitulating at discretion; but the besieged, by appointing a man to be always present to raise the tunes, cut off the whole choir at a stroke. "From this time," he says, "the liveliness and piety of the singing were considerably improved; for now the congregation instead of listening to the warblings of the choir, all joined in the singing; and God had hearty praise from every mouth." Upon this subject the Doctor observes: "Though I never had a personal quarrel with the singers in any place, yet I have never known one case where there was a choir of singers, that did not make disturbance in the societies. And it would be much better, in every case and every respect, to employ a precentor, or a person to raise the tunes, and then the congregation would learn to sing,—the purpose of singing would be accomplished,—every mouth would confess to God,—and a horrible evil would be prevented,—the bringing together into the house of God, and making them the almost only instruments of celebrating His praises, such a company of gay, airy, giddy, and ungodly men and women, as are generally grouped in such choirs—for voice and skill must be had, let decency of behaviour and morality be where they will. Everything must be sacrificed to a good voice, in order to make the choir complete and respectable. Many scandals have been brought into the church of God by choirs and their accompaniments." The testimony of many eminent clergymen of all denominations is to the same effect with regard to choirs; and some of them as strongly object to the use of an organ.

Plain congregational singing has had its advocates outside of the body of the clergy. "Lady Mary Wortley Montague, in a letter to Dr Beattie, thus gives her opinion of its influence on a worshipping assembly: "I think psalms written with great and noble simplicity, and sung in the same manner, friendly to devotion; and it is almost an offence to call in the aid of insensible and inanimate things to praise the Giver of life and reason. A psalm decently sung by the congregation always excites my devotion more than the organ. I would employ musical instruments in a pagan temple, but only the voice of man in a Christian church."

Certainly nothing can be more grand and solemn than the good singing of a large congregation, even unaided by musical instruments. Think of the sublime effect which must have been produced by the singing of "Before Jehovah's awful throne," to the tune of "Old Hundred," by eight to ten thousand people in the Music Hall in Surrey Gardens, London, where Mr. Spurgeon preached. The singing in the African congregations has been admired by eminent musical critics, and it has been stated that much of our popular music can be traced to negro origin. The Rev. Dr. Kirkland writes, "You know how sweetly a congregation of plantation negroes can sing the songs of Zion. Tell me not of city choirs. I would rather hear, 'I am passing away,' or 'Give me Jesus,' sung as we sometimes hear them, out of full hearts, by hundreds of these poor people, than their best performances. It is spirit-stirring, there is life and soul in it."

There is majesty and sublimity in "the sound of many waters;"—the sound of many voices, harmoniously united in singing praise to God, where we can say of the singers,

"Melody with their hearts they make,
Melody with their voices,"

is still more sublime and majestic. No musical instrument invented by man can for a moment compare with a finely cultivated musical voice; and no sounds of praise can be more acceptable to the Creator than those produced by instruments of his own workmanship. "O come let us sing unto the Lord; let us heartily rejoice in the strength of our salvation."

"Head of the Church triumphant,
We joyfully adore thee!
Till thou appear,
Thy members here
Shall sing like those in glory.
We lift our hearts and voices
In holy transport
And cry aloud,
And give to God
The praise of our salvation."

But admitting that an organ may be a useful assistant in leading and sustaining the singing of a congregation, some but plain and simple tunes, in which all can take a part, should be allowed; and the introduction of fancy symphonies, and light opera airs or voluntaries before or after the services, should be absolutely prohibited Dr Burney, the musician in speaking of Bach's, a celebrated French organist, says, "When the [illegible] was sung by the congregation between each verse several minuets, fugues, and airs, and every species of music, even to hunting pieces and jigs without surprising or offending the congregation, as far as I was able to discover." This was at the beginning of the present century. We have returned thus in some degree since then; and the introduction of an organ a display of secular music between the verses of the magnificat would now probably both surprise and flood a congregation even in France; but it is no uncommon thing at this day, in the Protestant churches of our own good city of brotherly love, for an organist to enliven the congregation, after the benediction, with an air from "Robert le Diable," "Don Giovanni," or some other favorite opera. This serves to dissipate their serious reflections and to destroy the effect of even the most solemn and impressive discourse: it shocks the feelings of all right minded worshippers; it is sacrilegious,—blasphemous;—"Reform it all together." J. J.

DISAGREEABLE RELIGIOUS PEOPLE.

It must be admitted, with great regret, that some people who make a considerable profession of religion have succeeded in making themselves more thoroughly disagreeable than almost any other human beings have ever made themselves. You will find people, who claim not merely to be pious and Christian people, but to be very much more pious and Christian than others, who are extremely uncharitable, unamiable, repulsive, stupid, and narrow minded, and intensely opinionated and self-satisfied. We know, from a very high authority, that a Christian ought to be an epistle in commendation of the blessed faith he holds. But it is beyond question that many people who profess to be Christians are like grim Gorgons' heads, warning people off from having anything to do with Christianity Why should a middle-aged clergyman walk about the streets with a sullen and malignant scowl always on his face, which at the best would be a very ugly one? Why should another walk with his nose in the air, and his eyes rolled up till they seem likely to roll out? And why should a third be always dabbled over with a clammy perspiration, and prolong all his vowels to twice the usual length? It is, indeed, a most woful thing, that people who evince a spirit in every respect the direct contrary of that of our Blessed Redeemer should fancy that they are Christians of singular attainments; and it is more woful still, that many young people should be scared away into irreligion or unbelief by the wretched delusion, that these creatures, wickedly caricaturing Christianity, are fairly representing it. I have beheld more deliberate malice, more lying and cheating, more backbiting and slandering, denser stupidity, and greater self-sufficiency, among bad-hearted and wrong-headed religionists, than among any other order of human beings. I have known more malignity and slander conveyed in the form of a prayer than should have consigned any ordinary libeller to the pillory. I have known a person who made evening prayer a means of infuriating and stabbing the servants, under the pretext of confessing their sins. "Thou knowest, Lord, how my servants have been occupied this day:" with these words did the blasphemous mockery of prayer begin one Sunday evening in a house I could easily indicate: and then the man, under the pretext of addressing the Almighty, raked up all the misdoings of the servants (they being present, of course) in a fashion which, if he had ventured on at any other time, would probably have led some of them to commit him. "I went to Edinburgh," said a Highland elder, "and was there a Sabbath. It was an awful sight! There on the Sabbath-day, you would see people walking along the street, smiling AS IF THEY WERE PERFECTLY HAPPY!" There was the gravamen of the poor Highlander's charge. To think of people being or looking happy on the Lord's day! And, indeed, to think of a Christian man ever venturing to be happy at all! "Yes, this parish was highly favored in the days of Mr. Smith and Mr. Brown," said a spiteful and venomous old woman,—with a glance of deadly malice at a young lad who was present. That young lad was the son of a clergyman of the parish,—one of the most diligent and exemplary clergymen in Britain. Mr. Smith and Mr. Brown were the clergymen who preceded him. And the spiteful old woman adopted this means of sticking a pin in the young lad,—conveying the idea that there was a sad falling off now. I saw and heard her, my reader. Now, when an ordinary spiteful person says a malicious thing, being quite aware that she is saying a malicious thing, and that her motive is pure malice, you are disgusted. But when a spiteful person says a malicious thing, all the while fancying herself a very pious person, and fancying that in gratifying her spite she is acting from Christian principle,—I say the sight is to me one of the most disgusting, perplexing, and miserable, that ever human eye beheld. I have no fear of the attacks of enemies on the blessed faith in which I live, and hope to die; but it is dismal to see how our holy religion is misrepresented before the world by the vile impostors who pretend to be its friends.

Among the disagreeable people who make a profession of religion, probably many are purely hypocrites. But we willingly believe that there are people, in whom Christianity appears in a wretchedly stunted and distorted form, who yet are right at the root. It does not follow that a man is a Christian, because he turns up his eyes and drawls out his words, and, when asked to say grace, offers a prayer of twenty minutes' duration. But, again, it does not follow that he is not a Christian, though he may do all these things. The bitter sectary, who distinctly says that an humble, pious man, just dead, has "gone to hell," because he died in the bosom of the National Church, however abhorrent that sectary may be in some respects, may be, in the main, within the Good Shepherd's fold, wherein he fancies there are very few but himself. The dissenting teacher, who declared from his pulpit that the parish clergyman (newly come, and an entire stranger to him) was "a servant of Satan," may possibly have been a good man, after all. Grievous defects and errors may exist in Christian character, which is a Christian character still. And the Christian, horribly disagreeable and repulsive now, will some day, we trust, have all that purged away. But I do not hesitate to say that any Christian, by so far as he is disagreeable and repulsive, deviates from the right thing. Oh, my reader, when my heart is sometimes sore through what I see of disagreeable traits in Christian character, what a blessed relief there is in turning to the simple pages, and seeing for the thousandth time The True Christian Character,—so different! Yes, thank God, we know where to look, to find what every professor should be humbly aiming to be: and when we see That Face, and hear That Voice, there is something that soothes and cheers among the wretched imperfections (in one's self as in others) of the present,—something that warms the heart, and that brings a man to his knees!

The present writer has a relative who is a Professor of Theology in a certain famous University. With that theologian I recently had a conversation on the matter of which we have just been thinking The Professor lamented the unchristian features of character which may be found in many people making a great parade of their Christianity. He mentioned various facts, which had recently come to his own knowledge, which would sustain stronger expressions of opinion than any which I have given. But he went on to say, that it would be a sad thing, if no fools could get to heaven,—nor any unamiable, narrow-minded, sour, and stupid people. Now, said he, with great force of reason, religion does not alter idiosyncrasy. When a fool becomes a Christian, he will be a foolish Christian; a narrow minded man will be a narrow-minded Christian; a stupid man, a stupid Christian. And though a malignant man will have his malignity much diminished, it by no means follows that it will be completely rooted out. "When I do good, evil is present with me." "I find a law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and enslaving me to the law of sin." But you are not to blame Christianity for the stupidity and unamiability of Christians If they be disagreeable, it is not the measure of true religion they have got that makes them so. In so far as they are disagreeable, they depart from the standard. You know, you may make water sweet or sour,—you may make it red, blue, black; and it will be water still though its purity and pleasantness is much interfered with. In like manner, Christianity may exist with a good deal of acid—with great many features of character very inconsistent with itself. The

The Social, Civil and Statistical Association of The Colored People of Pennsylvania upon a subscription list to aid the freed men at Port Royal and other points where they may be located, and to [illegible] the [illegible] of Philadelphia.

Any Amount of [illegible] will be thankfully lodged, with the name of the donor, in the Recorder, where a constant record will be kept.

Subscriptions may be sent to Jacob C. White, at the office of the Laborer Cemetery, 711 Lombard Street, and also to William Still, 107 North Fifth Street, and to [illegible] Street.

[illegible]

Statistical Society,	$ 5 00
Clayton Miller,	2 00
William Still,	5 00
Robert Adger,	2 00
Henry Minton,	1 00
Catherine Johnson,	1 00
Youth Leeks,	1 00
Wm. Warricks,	1 00
Harriet Shorter,	1 00
Sarah S. Hawkins,	1 00
Rev. J. Mattison C. Gibbs,	1 00
James P. Clay,	1 00
Benjamin F. Hall,	2 00
R. M. S.,	2 00
Elizabeth Gordon,	1 00
F. J. Greer,	5 00

It affords us pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of ten dollars, the proceeds of Miss Anna E. Dickinson's lecture at Concert Hall for the contrabands, contributed to the S., C. and Statistical Association, to be applied as intended. WM. STILL.

Cor. Sec. of S., C. and Statistical Association of the Colored People of Penna.

Domestic Items.

A Draft.—Washington, Aug. 4.—The following order has just been issued:—

War Department, Washington, D. C., August 4th, 1862.—Order calling for militia from the several States:

Ordered—1st. That a draft of 300,000 militia be immediately called into the service of the United States, to serve for nine months, unless sooner discharged. The Secretary of War will assign the quotas to the States, and establish regulations for the draft.

2d. That, if any State shall not, by the 15th of August, furnish its quota of the additional 300,000 volunteers authorized by law, the deficiency of volunteers in that State will also be made by special draft from the militia. The Secretary of War will establish regulations for the purpose.

3d. Regulations will be prepared by the War Department and presented to the President, with the object of securing the promotion of officers of the army and volunteers, for meritorious and distinguished services, and of preventing the nomination or appointment to the military service of incompetent or unworthy officers. The regulations will also provide for relieving the service of such incompetent persons as now hold commissions.

By order of the President.

(Signed) EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

From General Pope's Army.

Headquarters of the Army of Virginia, August 3—9 A. M.

Major General H. W. Halleck:

No. 4.—The reconnoitring column under General Crawford crossed the Rapidan and pushed forward to Orangetown, which was occupied by two regiments of the enemy's cavalry, under General Robertson.

Eleven of the enemy were killed and fifty-two taken prisoners. Among the latter were one major, two captains, and two lieutenants. Our loss was two killed and three wounded.

The enemy retired in such haste as to leave the wounded in our hands.

The railroad and the telegraph line between Orange Court House and Gordonsville were destroyed.

(Signed) JOHN POPE, Major-Gen.

Richmond Evacuated.

Gen Pope's Headquarters, Little Washington, Va., Aug. 4, 1862.

Information from various sources tend to confirm the belief that the enemy have really evacuated Richmond and taken up the south bank of the James river as the line of their defence.

The rebel cavalry, under General Robertson, are believed to have been withdrawn from the Shenandoah Valley, leaving that portion of the country to the defence of the guerillas alone.

Pestilence at Richmond.—It has been believed in some quarters of Washington for several days that the enemy have been evacuating Richmond, there being a reasonable suspicion that a pestilence has broken out in that city.

The Report on the sanitary condition of the City and County of Philadelphia sets forth the following deaths during the past year.

Apoplexy	102
Casualties	122
Congestion of brain	275
Dropsy of brain	222
Disease of brain	112
Inflammation of brain	305
Convulsions	690
Consumption of lungs	1847
Croup	304
Cholera infantum	616
Diphtheria	502
Debility	826
Dysentery	157
Diarrhœa	183
Dropsy	284
Heart disease	204
Scarlet fever	1100
Typhoid fever	381
Bronchitis	134
Inflammation of lungs	684
Inflammation of stomach and bowels	231
Marasmus	583
Old age	203
Palsy	130
Small-pox	756
Total—10,083

The report states that the atmosphere of Philadelphia is naturally very salubrious, and is deteriorated by the contaminations incident to domestic life. This impurity can only be prevented by hygienic measures, and by removing the offal as it accumulates in the streets.

The increase in the number of deaths, in some of the diseases, is owing to soldiers contracting them in camp, and returning partially cured. Regarding the great mortality resulting from consumption of the lungs, it is stated that, from the observations of medical writers, one-sixth of the human family die of the disease.

Rev. Dr. Storrs, in his address at the anniversary exercises of Mount Holyoke Seminary, said that a returned prisoner lately remarked that while at the South he could easily endure the taunts of the men—but that he had never before realized what and how terrible was the stinging hate of woman, so intense, bitter, and beyond all belief, and he had come back with one additional mercy for which to thank God—that the Devil was not a woman.

Col. Scott, the confidential agent of the Post Office Department, sent to New Orleans in May, returned here last evening, via Fortress Monroe. He states that General Butler is just the man for the place, and that but for the stringent measures adopted by Butler, New Orleans could not have been held at all. Recordy Johnson will not return, probably, for some weeks to come.

Drafting.—The call of the War Department for a draft of 300,000 men from the militia of the United States, which call we publish to-day, has caused considerable excitement among a portion of the citizens, but the majority of the people approve of the act as a necessary measure for the maintaining of that Government which has protected them in their civil and political rights, and they are willing that it should exercise that power which they have given it for the common defence. Every man physically capable owes to the Government service in the field when danger threatens the national existence. None are exempt on account of their political or religious opinions. The laws of the United States state that each and every free, able-bodied white male citizen who is or shall be of the age of eighteen years, and under the age of forty-five years, shall be enrolled in the militia by the captain or commanding officer of the company within whose bounds such citizens may reside. If any person, whether officer or soldier, belonging to the militia of any State, and called out into the service of the United States, be wounded or disabled while in actual service, he shall be taken care of and provided for at the public expense. The militia employed in the service of the United States shall be subject to the same rules and articles of war as the troops of the United States. Court martials for the trial of militia can only be composed of militia officers. The allowance for clothing to each non-commissioned officer, musician, and private of volunteers shall be three dollars and fifty cents per month during the time he shall be in the service of the United States.

When the draft required to be made shall be a number equal to one or more companies in each brigade, such draft shall be made by companies, to be determined by lot, to be drawn by the commandant of the brigade, or his proxy, of the commanding officers of the regiments composing such brigade, from the rosters of the State in their gubernatorial, or general [illegible]

[illegible]

In case such draft shall require a larger number than the whole number composing the military force of any brigade, such additional draft shall be made of an equal number from the military roll of the uniformed militia of such town or ward, filled with the city, village, or town [illegible]

[illegible] the enrollment to them to be filed (in charge) in the [illegible] Office. [illegible] the Mayor or supervisor of the ward, in presence of the regimental commander of the district, drawn by lot from the [illegible] The persons [illegible] called for by the draft. Any male [illegible] drawn may be taken in his stead. No persons of the required age, [illegible] from [illegible] those incapacitated by reason of bodily infirmity.

Physical disability is a good ground of exemption, and should, in all cases of doubt, be established to the satisfaction of the [illegible] by a physician's certificate, as well as the affidavit of the party.

[illegible] applicants [illegible] proper causes of disability.

Wounds of the head, which impair the faculties, or cause [illegible] [illegible] of hearing, speech, or vision; anchylosis, or active disease of any of the larger joints; the presence of pulmonary disease, or organic disease of the heart, [illegible] ruptures, or any large and painful varicocele or varicose veins which extend above the knee; the loss of a limb, or the thumb and forefinger on the right hand, or of any two fingers on the right hand, the loss of the great toe, any marked physical imperfections which would unfit for active service.

The War to be made Aggressive.—The following, from the Richmond Whig of July 19, will pass with our readers for what it is worth.

Movements in Kentucky and Tennessee augur well. The panic in Nashville and Louisville shows the terror with which the enemy always contemplate aggressive action by our armies. We accept the demonstrations in the West as a promise that the war is to be pushed with vigor at all points. The late assurance of the President that our standards are to be borne beyond the confines of the Confederacy sent a thrill through the country. We expect to hear soon that one of the most energetic, intrepid and successful leaders has made good the promise of the Commander-in-Chief. The summer heat, which has driven us [illegible] and made [illegible] has carry and [illegible] to [illegible] our opponents. It will not do for us to sit still because the enemy makes no movement. This is precisely what would suit him best. Time to him may [illegible] thing. We must [illegible] him no rest, prevent concentrations and reinforcements, break up his combinations, and, by carrying the war where we please, instead of where he pleases, strike at his very vitals. Our troops have shown that all they require is to be shown the foe and properly led against him. They know their strength, they appreciate the stake for which they fight, they have measured the peril, and are prepared for it. Opportunity and competent leaders are all they ask. It will be unpardonable as it will be irremediable, if our authorities deny that which they ask.

Successful Reconnoissance to Malvern Hill.—Headquarters of the Army of the Potomac, Wednesday, Aug. 6th.—The army of the Potomac has again assumed the offensive. The reconnoissance made yesterday, under General Hooker, to Malvern Hill, White Oak Swamp Bridge, and in the direction of New Market and Richmond, was, in every respect, a complete success. The troops left camp about dark, night before last, arriving at Malvern Hill at 4 o'clock, yesterday morning, travelling a distance of ten miles. Here they encountered two regiments of infantry and a battery, posted behind earthworks. Fire was immediately opened on them by Captain Benson's battery, and a section of Captain Robinson's. The infantry was not engaged. The firing lasted for about three hours, when the rebels ingloriously fled by the river road towards Richmond, hotly pursued by our troops, who succeeded in taking one hundred of them prisoners. The loss on our side at this point was three killed and eleven wounded. Captain Benson had his thigh broken by a piece of shell. The doctors think the leg can be saved. Lieutenant-Colonel Gamble, of the Eighth Illinois Cavalry, was severely wounded in the breast while driving in the enemy's pickets.

Colonel Averill, with five hundred cavalry, took the Quaker road to White Oak Swamp Bridge. There they found the Tenth Virginia Cavalry drawn up to receive them. A charge was immediately ordered, which broke the rebel lines, when they fled.

Averill followed them three miles, taking 28 prisoners, without losing a man.

Negro Regiment in Rhode Island—Important Order of Governor Sprague—State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations.

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE, Providence, Aug. 4, 1862.

[General Order No. 36.]

The Sixth Regiment, authorized by the Secretary of War under date October 25th, 1861, and ordered mustered therefor from this department, No. 103, Dec. 28, 1861, will consist entirely of colored citizens. Enlistments will commence immediately. Camp will be established under direction of General Robbins, who is directed to organize the regiment.

The Quartermaster-General will furnish rations and equipments on requisition.

Our colored fellow-citizens are reminded that the regiment from this State in the Revolution, consisting entirely of colored persons, was pronounced by Washington equal, if not superior, to any in the service. They constitute a part of the quota from this State, and it is expected they will respond with zeal and spirit to the call.

The commander-in-chief will lead them into the field, and will share with them, in common with the patriotic soldiers of the army of the Republic, their trials and dangers, and will participate in the glories of their successes.

By order of the commander-in-chief.

EDWARD C. MADRAN, Adjt. Gen.

The Subscriptions to aid exiles ments by the citizens of Philadelphia, up till Thursday morning last, amounted to $147,202.

Burning of the Steamer Golden Gate.—The steamer Golden Gate, which left San Francisco, July 21st, for Panama, with 250 passengers, $1,014,000 for New York, and $270,000 for England, was burned at sea, July 20th, and one hundred and eighty lives lost! All the treasure was lost.

Nashville, Aug. 7.—Gen. McCook was shot by a party of guerillas near Salem, Ala., yesterday, while he was riding towards Winchester, Tenn., sick, in an ambulance. His remains reached here this evening. Captain Brooks, who was with the General, was captured. Our forces burned the house of the rebel who led them into the ambuscade.

Pittsburgh Subsistence Committee.—Since its organization, August 3d, 1861, the Subsistence Committee has furnished meals for over 50,000 troops passing through the city. Of this number, about 350 were sick and wounded. These were provided with medical attendance and all comforts which their situation demanded. One sick soldier, from Illinois, died while in the care of the Committee, and was buried by them. During the 9 months, ending July 14th, the following articles were sent to the hospitals at Yorktown, Fortress Monroe, Richmond, St. Louis, Pittsburg Landing, Washington, and other places.

471 comforts, 70 blankets, 100 bed ticks, 1,003 pillows, 1,378 pillow-cases, 870 sheets, 806 pairs drawers, 1,950 shirts, 434 under shirts, 64 dressing gowns, 134 pairs mittens, 1,455 pairs socks, 412 neck scarfs, 247 pairs slippers, 215 finger-stalls, 1,825 handkerchiefs, 240 combs, 754 cans of fruit, 8 bbls. crackers, 111 bottles wine, 846 doz eggs, 1,148 pounds butter, 1,502 pads and rings for wounded, 2,426 rolls of bandages, 1,607 towels, 3,667 books, 575 packages of sundries—making a total of 21,271 articles contributed by the loyal citizens of Allegheny, Lawrence, Mercer, Beaver, Butler, Fayette and Washington counties. At least one half of the articles of clothing were made by the ladies of the Committee.

The receipts and expenditures of cash have been as follows:

Amount of collections in churches,	$7231 10
Amount from societies and individuals,	5760 65
	$12,991 75
Cash paid for materials, muslin, flannel, etc.,	$4992 87
Cash paid for freights,	180 34
" postage stationary,	7 50
" barrels,	10 00
" express,	9 00
" to sick soldiers,	78 00
	$5277 71

Leaving a balance of one dollar and seventy-three cents in the Treasury.

America in the Orient.—The Eastern correspondent of the Philadelphia News writes thus:

The Sultan here passed down the line, addressing a few words to each Minister. When he came to the Representative of the United States of America, his first inquiry was to enquire if Lincoln's proclamation [illegible] Mr. Morris replied that it was not, but that it would terminate with the preservation of the national unions and the Government of the Union; that, calamitous as was the war, all its sacrifices were cheerfully borne for the sake of the great object at stake. The Sultan signified that [illegible] Mr. Morris [illegible] the history of that [illegible] and [illegible] Mr. Morris [illegible] with [illegible]

Republic. This expression of good will was presented with an earnestness of manner indicative not only of great sincerity, but also of unusual warmth [illegible]

On the 4th of July the Americans had their fete, at Hay-ket-keetown, or the Valley of the Sultan, on the American [illegible] Bosporus, nearly opposite to Buyukdere. The scene of the festival of the many nations on the Bosporus, running for several miles, in a fortuous course among the mountains, and shaded by lofty sycamores and chestnuts, and with a sparkling stream of water coursing through it. It is a favorite place of resort with the Turkish women, who pass the entire day on its cool shores, beneath its umbrageous groves, with their children and slaves. Here the little American colony, at Constantinople, of about fifty persons [illegible] and their patriotic presence [illegible] Castle, spread on the grass, were covered with a beautiful display of meats, and the Stars and Stripes overhung the feast from the boughs of old sycamores, which had probably stood here when the Turks first crossed into Europe a few miles below. Some reports of the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

EVENING REVERIE

BY WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

The summer day has closed; the sun is set;
Well have the dew-fall o'er the pleasant hours.
The winds that through the deep woods flow,
Have died away, and in the western sky
The purple light is fading. Through the trees
Flowers of the garden and the wood have blown
And withered, as do hearts which throb and break
For a beating cells, and in their graves await
Their longer return. Insects from the pools
Have filled the air awhile with humming wings
That now are still for ever; painted moths,
Have wandered the blue sky, and died again;
The mice are in their graves. The bee has lost
Their green shade, or shriveled them from the nest.
Pleased them for a summer night. In the tall grass
In woodland cottages with barky walls,
In numerous cells of the tree-burrowing bees,
Mothers have slept with the young in the new-born babe
Gravers, by the lonely forest, by the shore
Of rivers and of ocean, by the wave
Of the thronged city, have been hollowed out
And filled and closed. This day has parted friends
That meet to-day were parted, it may be
New friendships; it hath seen the maiden plight
Her faith and troth, her peace to him who long
Hath wooed; and it hath heard from lips which late
Were cold and mute for love, the first fond word
That told the wedded one her peace was flown.

Farewell to the sweet sunshine! One glad day
Is added now to childhood's many days,
And one gray day to the sad years of quiet age,
Both the first-born and the last. I can
Amid the thickening darkness, lamps are lit
By those who watch the dead, and those who twine
Flowers for the bride. The mother sees the eyes
Of her sick infant shadow the pale light,
And sadly listens to his quick-drawn breath.
O thou great movement of the universe,
Or change or life, of life or time—for ye are one—
That hearest all into the visible scene
Into night's shadow and the streaming rays
Of starlight—which her art thou bearing me?
I feel the mighty current sweep me on,
Yet know not whither. Men foretell afar
The courses of the stars; the very hour
He knows when they shall darken or grow bright;
Yet does the eclipse of sorrow or of death
Come unforewarned. When next of those I love
Shall pass from life, or sudder yet, shall fall
Its curtain? Strife with foes, or bitter strife
With friends, or shame, and general scorn of men—
Which, who can bear? or the fierce rack of pain?
Lie they within my path? Or shall the years
Push me with soft and noiseless pace
Into the stilly twilight of my age?
Or do the portals of another life,
Even now, while I am glowing in my strength,
Inspired around me? O! beyond that bourne,
In the vast cycle of being which begins
At the broad threshold, with what glory for me
Shall the great law of change and progress clothe
Its workings? Gently—as have years of mine taught—
Gently, and without grief, the old shall glide
Into the new; the eternal flow of things,
Like a fair river of the fields of heaven,
Shall journey onward in perpetual peace.

GOOD NIGHT.

Day is past!
Stars have set their watch at last,
Pearls that through the deep woods flow,
Make sweet sounds, unheard till now,
Flowers have shut with tinge light—
Good night!

Go to rest!
Sleep sit, Caroline, on thy breast!
If within thy secret cell
One dark form of memory dwell,
Be it mantled from thy sight—
Quiet night!

Joy be mine!
Kind looks on a sunny shine!
Go, and in the spirit land
Meet thy heart's long parted band,
Be their eyes all love and light—
Good night!

Peace to all!
Dreams of heaven on us unseen fall
Exiles o'er thy couch may gleams
Pass from those own mansion streams;
Heard away to worlds more bright—
Good night!

HOW WORDS ARE ABUSED.

A contemporary complains that some of the noblest words in the English tongue are daily prostituted to ignoble use, and says that "the constant application of great words to small things is gradually undermining the native strength of the language, inasmuch that, in order to make an impressive statement, it is necessary to pile a Pelion of adverbs on an Ossa of adjectives." The complaint is certainly well founded; but whether the nuisance can be materially abated by any force or frequency of rebuke, is questionable. The evil is widely spread, but it may be seen in its most malignant type among half-educated people and—young ladies. The latter class are especially addicted to adjectives of the strong kind; and even these are generally too weak for their use until they have been "raised to the third power" (as a mathematician would say) by being put in the superlative degree. In the intense vocabulary of these excitable damsels, a simply pleasing thing, is "charming," and a disagreeable one "shocking." Whatever is fine is "splendid," at the very least; and nothing that is deemed in bad taste is ever otherwise than "horrid," "awful," "abominable."

In this same hyperbolical strain they speak of a pretty bonnet as "delicious," and describe an agreeable gentleman as "fascinating." But it is not the adjectives alone that suffer; the verbs are tortured quite as mercilessly as their adjuncts. The commonest things are "dosed on and adored," or "abominated" and "detested;" while "love" is lavished alike on objects of taste, appetite, and affection. The same person secures you that she "loves" her mother, her lap-dog, and raw oysters! What more could she say of her Redeemer? We once heard this indiscriminate use of superlatives, which was nearly as follows: 'Don't you think Miss Seaman to perfectly beautiful?' said a young lady to Judge B., apropos of a good looking school-girl whose name had been mentioned. "She is pretty," said the Judge. His fair interlocutor looked puzzled and repeated. "I appreciate your admiration of your friend," said the Judge, "but perfect beauty, my dear girl, is somewhat rarer than you seem to imagine. I do not know that I have ever seen an example of it in man or woman. Pretty girls are plenty enough; good-looking women are not uncommon; decidedly handsome ones are occasionally met with. I have seen (in forty years) half a dozen who were beautiful; but a 'perfectly beautiful' woman is what I have not seen hitherto." The young lady looked a little astonished at first; but having reflected a moment it occurred to her that the judge might be in the right, and that she did not mean anything like the panegyric which she had pronounced—and she said so. "Why judge, you are so awfully critical; I only meant to say she was pretty." "I thought so," said the judge; "but how could I know that your idea was not as extravagant as your epithets? You must excuse me for the mistake, since it was not wholly my fault." And so ended the discourse.

GEOLOGICAL WONDER

About thirty years ago, somebody made the discovery that the ice fields of Siberia contained immense numbers of fossils of elephants and mastodons. Where they came from, or how they got there, is a problem which perhaps may never be solved; their existence, however, was no drawback, and as ivory is one of the most valuable commodities of trade in all nations, some utilitarian Englishmen conceived the idea of turning these vestiges of a former epoch to a profitable account. Accordingly, about the year 1835, Thompson, Benner & Co., a rich London firm, fitted out an expedition to seek for ivory in the Siberian ice Natural and incredible as it seemed, the expedition was crowned with complete success. The ships returned to England richly laden with the choicest ivory; and even to the present time, although the world knows little about it, the ivory market is mainly supplied from the ice fields of Siberia.

THE AMERICAN RIFLE

The famous Springfield rifled muskets most used in the United States army, which are now manufactured in the Government armories at Springfield, Massachusetts from Government patterns, are thus described.—The gun has a barrel forty inches long, and the entire length of the piece, bayonet included, is 73 85 inches. Weight 9 90 pounds. There are three grooves in the barrel, with a twist of one turn in six feet. The bore, coming up from breech to muzzle. This makes the cartridge a little stiff to leave the muzzle, but its shooting is more accurate on that account. The ball has three grooves around it, the cylindrical part and two wedge shaped parts or cones inside. The ball weighs 7 10 grains; the charge of powder 70 grains. Armed with these pieces our soldiers will have had a few months' discipline since any foe, and will always where the enemy is found, more than three times as fast as them.

VAIN REPETITIONS.

At four or five successive Sabbath-school concerts, we have heard the hymn (it we must call it a hymn) sung with great enthusiasm, commencing "We love to sing together." The tune is even more silly than the words, which is saying much. In each stanza, the words "we love," are repeated three times, almost in succession. First the girls sing, then the boys and girls; then again the girls, and after them the boys and girls, then follows the full chorus. The grand, climacteric concluding stanza closes, on a high key, with "We love, we love, we love, we love, we love to be together; we love, we love, we love, we love, we love to be together" Undoubtedly they do. And the hearers have had ample time and hints to think of things which they love. No one can hear the performance without being reminded of the dramas which are played by undertook to "raise the tune," but such time could get on no farther than "I love to steal."

PRESBYTERIANS IN HUNGARY

There are nearly four millions of Protestants in Hungary, and these protestants are Presbyterians, being equal in numbers to all the Presbyterians of Scotland, England and Ireland combined.

In the year 1567, three years after the death of Calvin the Protestants of Hungary became two bands,"—the Lutherans and the Reformed or Calvinistic. The former preferred the Augsburg Confession, compiled by Melancthon, as their standard, and the latter adopted the Second Helvetic Confession and the Heidelberg Catechism as their symbolical books. In their constitution and administration both bodies are Presbyterian; each being composed of four Superintendencies, corresponding to our Synods; each superintendency embracing several Seniorities or Presbyteries; each Seniority containing a number of Congregations, and each congregation being ruled by Presbyters with their presidents, who form a court like our kirk-session.

Each of the ecclesiastical courts has two Presidents and Moderators, the one a clergyman, the other a layman, who are equal in rank and authority, to whom is committed the executive power, but for the proper exercise of which they are accountable to the assembly over which they preside. The General Synod of each denomination is supreme legislative authority, and is composed of delegates, not from the individual congregations, but from the four superintendencies of each body. One half of these delegates are clergymen, and the other half are laymen. This highest ecclesiastical court, like the subordinate courts, has two moderators. No undue proportion of either the clerical or lay element can therefore exist in the Hungarian Protestant Church.

Constitutionally the General Synods or Assemblies cannot act without the sanction of the sovereign and their decrees do not obtain the force of law, nor do they rank among the canons of the Church till they have received his majesty's approval. This he may either grant or refuse, but the resolutions of the General Assembly can neither initiate nor modify, and the ecclesiastical constitution he cannot remodel. The last General Assemblies were held in the year 1792—the Reformed at Buda, and the Lutheran at Pesth. To this day their decrees have not received the Royal approval. They are now, however, out of date. Liberty to convene a General Synod is the great desire of both denominations; but till the present it has been refused.

The Protestant Church of Hungary is, in one sense of the word, a voluntary Church. She supports her own pastors and schools, and provides for all the necessary expenses of her various appliances. Her clergy are chosen by the stipend-payers, whose choice the Superintendency may either affirm or annul. Her professors and teachers are nominated to their respective offices in the colleges and schools by the ecclesiastical corporation which maintains and directs the institution. The Church has thus complete control over all her seminaries, from the highest to the lowest. The only right which the State possesses is that of general surveillance, that nothing be taught prejudicial to her own political interests. And in the election of the pastors her only demand is simply to be informed as to the result. On the other hand, the Church's only claim upon the State is that of protection against the violence of her persecutors. In her own spiritual domain, the Church is almost, if not altogether, free.

But this freedom has not been maintained and secured without many a struggle. Often and nobly has the Hungarian Church, like her Scottish sister, contended for the royal rights of the Redeemer, for the inalienable prerogative to frame and execute her own peculiar laws. In the seventeenth century Protestantism in Hungary was well nigh extirpated, Pope Clement VIII. and the Jesuits and priests encouraging and aiding the harassing persecutions. The people were deprived of their churches and schools. Several of their pastors and teachers were transported to Naples, and sold as galley-slaves for a ducat per head, and many of their nobles were executed on the scaffold. Not till the reign of Leopold II. and the Diet of 1790-91 did the long persecuted Protestants, aided by the laity of the Roman Catholic Church, in opposition to their priests obtain once more the full enjoyment of their legal and chartered rights. From that date till 1849 the Church enjoyed peace and prosperity. During the past thirteen years her trials and sufferings have been repeated. The year after the memorable revolution of 1848 a ministerial ordinance was published, abrogating the Church's control over the education of her own youth, and placing the schools under the sole superintendence of the state and Church. Against this she protested, but in vain. Many of the schools were closed, or deprived of the privileges of public examinations, and some were organized in accordance with the ministerial decree. But a heavier blow was about to be inflicted. In 1850, the commander-in-chief in Hungary issued an ordinance abolishing the entire constitution of the Church, and aiming at the erection of a phobic prelacy in its stead. He introduced the pope's ecclesiastical supremacy, and made the lay presidents and other authority subordinate only to the civil government. Not one of the Reformed, and only a few of the Lutheran pastors complied with the terms of this ordinance.

To harass the Protestants still more, Francis Joseph, the Emperor, published, at the instigation of the Minister of Worship, his Patent of 1st September, 1850. This was little else than a second edition of the obnoxious project which had already been unanimously rejected.

On the 12th of December, 1850, the Cisdanubian Reformed Superintendency had resolved to assemble at Pesth. The Government resolved to prevent this, and threatened all who would take part in the meeting. The garrison was ordered to be in readiness. The day came. All the delegates assembled, and proceeded, in the presence of no immense congregation of every class and creed, to draw up a unanimous protest. Commissioners having been appointed to lay it before the Emperor at Vienna, the Superintendency closed in peace. Their example was followed by the other Superintendencies. Very soon, however, all the members of these interdicted assemblies, along with all the avowed opponents of the patent were summoned before the tribunals as disturbers of the public tranquility. The accused had no difficulty in proving the constitutionality of their proceedings.

In the first month of the following year (1851) Bishop Vay appeared in the capital of Austria, at the head of a large deputation representing the entire Protestant Church of Hungary. They demanded at the hands of the Ministry deliverance from the obnoxious Patent. Their complaints and protestations were reiterated, but in vain; and they had to leave without obtaining a personal interview with the Emperor.

"As regards the present organization of the Church, all the ancient Superintendencies have been restored; the Administrators nominated by the Government have been replaced by Superintendents and High Curators legally selected; the double presidency has been re-established; the self-government of the Church, with regard to the management of her schools, is again what it was of old; but she has not yet obtained the power of convening a general Synod."

The Gospel of Hungary has been, and still is, greatly crippled in its progress by more than ministerial ordinances and Imperial patents. For many years Rationalism blighted its energies and diminished its fruits. Its ministers are few when compared with the population. Only two pastors are found in several instances attending to the spiritual interests of a congregation composed of 20 000 souls. This paucity of pastors is the result of the people's poverty, which may be traced to the undeveloped resources of the country.

THE EVERGREEN MOUNTAINS OF LIFE.

BY JAMES O. CLARK.

There's a land far away 'mid the stars, we are told,
Where they know not the sorrows of time,
Where the pure waters wander through the valleys of gold
And life is a treasure sublime;
'Tis the land of our God, 'tis the home of the soul,
Where ages of splendor eternally roll—
Where the way-weary traveller reaches his goal,
On the evergreen mountains of life.

Our gaze cannot soar to that beautiful land,
But our visions have told of its bliss,
And our souls by the gale from its gardens are fanned,
When we faint in the deserts of this.
And we sometimes have longed for its holy repose,
When our spirits were torn with temptations and woes,
And we've drank from the tide of the river that flows
From the evergreen mountains of life.

Oh, the stars now tread the blue mountains at night,
But we think where the redeemed have trod,
And the day never smiles from its palace of light,
But we feel the bright smile of our God.
We are travelling homeward, through changes and gloom,
To a kingdom where pleasures unchangingly bloom,
And our guide is the glory that shines through the tomb,
From the evergreen mountains of life.

NATURALLY HARD TO TELL THE TRUTH.

"Timothy Titcomb" has a keen scalpel, and he thus dissects men on the subject of truth-telling:—"I have known eminent men who had not the power to state a fact, in its whole volume and in due measure, first, they could not comprehend it precisely, and, second because their power of expression was limited. The lenses by which they apprehend their facts were not adjusted properly, so that they saw everything with a blur. Definite outline, clearly cut edges, exact apprehension of volume and weight, nice measurement of relations were matters outside of their observation and experience. They had broad minds, but hanging; and their language was no better than their apprehensions—usually it was worse, because language is rarely as definite as apprehension. Men rarely do their work to suit them, because their tools are imperfect. There are men in all communities who are believed to be honest, yet whose word is never authority upon any subject. There is a flaw or a warp somewhere in their perceptions, which prevents them from receiving truthful impressions. Every thing comes to them distorted as natural objects are distorted by reading the eye through wrinkled window glass. Some are able to apprehend a fact and state it correctly, if it have no direct relation to themselves; but the moment their personality, or their personal interests, is involved the fact assumes false proportions and false colors. I know a physician whose patients are always alarmingly sick when he is first called to them. As they usually get well, I am bound to believe that he is a good physician; but I am not bound to believe that they are all as sick at the beginning as he supposes them to be. The first violent symptoms operate upon his imagination and excite his fears, and his opinion as to the degree of danger attaching to the diseases of his patients is not worth half so much as that of any sensible old nurse. In fact, nobody thinks of taking it all; and those who know him, and who hear his sad representations of the condition of his patients, show equal distrust of his word and faith in his skill, by taking it for granted that they are in a fair way to get well."

HABITS OF THE SHAD

The habits of our fish have been very little attended to in this country. Our scientific men, it is true, have been very precise in their accurate classification, and in the use of their ponderous nomenclature; they have described our fishes even to the shape of a scale or the number of thorns in the dorsal fin, but they have not condescended to note their habits, their food, their length of life, with all such particulars as would interest common readers and be of use to mankind.

No fish is more valued or more valuable than the shad; yet but few of its habits of life are known. The books are silent, and angling gives no information. It was for a long time a commonly received opinion that the shad spent the winter in the Gulf of Mexico, and then as spring advanced and the snow ceased running, came along the coast and entered the rivers in succession. If this were true, there would be no uniformity, year after year, in the run of shad in each river. The very distinct varieties would all become intermingled. But each river has its own variety. Those of Connecticut River have long been known as possessing superior size and flavor to any others. The variety that seeks the Hudson as a spawning ground is easily distinguished from ours. The fact of the distinctness of the varieties in each river tends to the belief that shad go no farther than the mouth of the stream in which they are hatched.

The habits of the shad are unlike those of other fish. As soon as the snow water has ceased running they press up the river as far as they can reach, in order to deposit their spawn. In following this instinct they never stop for refreshment or food. Whoever found anything in the maw or stomach of a shad that would indicate the nature of its food? Whoever knew them to bite a baited hook? They do not feed from the time they enter the stream until they sink down, thin and exhausted, into the deep pools at the mouth. For this purpose of nature the shad has been preparing itself during the quiet luxuries of a winter, and has become fattened for the use of man, or, if it escape his net, for the reproduction of its species. The shad lives but a single year. It is hatched in the early summer; descends the streams as soon as large enough; feeds and fattens in the winter at the mouth of the stream; ascends in the spring to deposit its spawn, and descends to die at the bottom of the ocean. The fact accounts for the uniformity in the size of the fish. A Connecticut River shad seldom goes beyond seven pounds, and the variation in size is comparatively slight. The bass, on the other hand, which is known to live many years, varies from half a pound in weight to fifty, even in our own river. It has a longer time to grow, and shows a much greater diversity of size. These considerations have led to the conclusion that one year was the duration of the shad's life. What was only a matter of conjecture and inference has been lately proved by the artificial fish-breeders. Somewhere in the state of New York one of these rivers of fish from spawn which he fed in early life with crumbled crackers strewn upon the pond where they were kept, has proved their short hold on existence. He raised them for the purpose of supplying the very large fish he had in his tanks and ponds with food. As the science of breeding fish is known more, the habits of the different species will be more easily described.—Hartford Courant.

An Indianapolis Dr. Cleiburne once asked a woman what could be done to induce her husband to attend the kirk. "I don't know," she replied "unless you were to put a pipe and a pot of porter a the pew."

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS IN THE INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.

The Exhibition building is unfavorable for all pianos, but it is not equally bad for all. The French know best how to locate their pianos, namely, in the gallery; also the Englishmen and the Americans have found out more enclosed and covered places in the hall. Thereby they stand at great advantage, especially compared with the Austrian instruments. It was with difficulty that we recognised pianos here, which had sounded very finely to us in the ateliers of their makers in Vienna. The jury tried all the instruments just where they found them. The Paris jury (in 1855) had every instrument carried from the exhibition to the same hall in the Conservatoire, and there tried them. They carried impartiality so far, as to have the names of the makers covered up beforehand, and then they had the different pianos played by the same virtuosos, who played the same piece on them all. Then it was that the fearful event occurred, which Berlioz has described so humorously. Chopin's Etude in F minor was tried on 200 pianos, one after another. In the course of this proceeding several jurors fainted, and some virtuosos were carried off for dead. When the small surviving remnant approached the three hundredth piano, the instrument, to the general dismay, began to play the piece of its own accord. Nothing could be found to silence it. Finally they called in the priesthood, who operated on the clairvoyant piano with incense and holy water, until the F minor fiend was happily exorcised. "On that day we played no more."—Dwight's Journal.

TRUTH.

The American Tract Society have recently issued a little work, "The Children's Picture Book," of which we find a short criticism in the Chronicle. It says: "The Society which has a holy horror of publishing the most innocent fiction, does not hesitate to issue books disfigured by the grossest falsehoods conveyed in engravings. In this book, not an animal, plant, or flower is correctly drawn; the little girls and boys are hideous dwarfs, with monstrous heads and disproportioned limbs and bodies; and the rules of perspective are disregarded in the landscapes, with a frequency which makes wrong the rule, and correctness the exception. The reading matter is of that dull goodness which little folks find such a weariness to the flesh."

Not having seen the book, we know not how just these strictures are. But the subject deserves careful attention. The Tract Society first set the example of executing beautifully the engravings for juvenile books. Now let it add to this the highest attainable mark in correctness of drawing. Little eyes should not be taught untruths of form. All our publications societies should give especial heed to this matter.—Christian Intelligencer.

A FICTITIOUS THIEF.

A philosopher has said, "Take away interest and vanity from the heart of man, and humanity is perfect."

M. Charles Edmund, author of "Le Florentine," relates apropos of this vanity of our age, a little story of Heinrich Heine.

Heinrich Heine, when very young, set out one fine morning from Hamburg, and started for Germany.

He arrived one evening at Manheim, entered the faubourg of the Golden Lion, and finds, in the dining hall, a man with white hair and a respectable appearance, digesting his dinner by reading a newspaper. From time to time he sighed heavily.

Heinrich Heine moved (remember he was very young) put asked of the unknown the cause of his grief.

"Ah, monsieur!" he groaned, in reply, and ordered a bottle of Johannisberg.

Our two Germans drank together; Heinrich Heine renewed his question, and the unknown, who was always sighing, suddenly yielding to the desire of removing from his heart an enormous weight, said to him:

"Listen to me. My name is Muller; I am a very rich merchant of Nuremberg; I have two hundred thousand livres income, an admirable wife and charming children; my health is excellent, and I am the most unfortunate of men!"

"How is that?"

"Ah! (another sigh.) How to make you so terrible an avowal! I have committed a crime in my life—I have stolen!"

"Rich as you are, what hinders you from restoring the sum you have taken?"

"There does not pass a month that I do not give, in charities, in pious works, the double, the triple, the quadruple of what I have purloined; but the claw of the vulture does not leave me a moment of sweet repose."

"And how has a man like you been able to yield to the temptation of theft?"

"A vertigo. I had the honour of dining with the Duke of Nassau, at his chateau at Biberich; the prince, who has a very particular consideration for me placed me on his right, and we talked during the dinner of one thing and another. 'Monsieur Muller,' said the duke to me, 'how is Madame Muller?' 'Your highness is too good.' 'And the little Mullers?' 'Very well. But your highness does me too much honor.' The Duke de Nassau places me on the footing of a flattering familiarity."

"Suddenly I saw shining before my eyes a little silver gilt spoon. What passed in my brain I know not, but the moment when the duke turned his head, I stretched my hand slyly along the cloth, took the spoon and put it in my pocket.

"This, sir, is what I did at the house of the Duke de Nassau."

And Mr. Muller, who had just finished his third bottle, tumbled off to sleep, and, spite of his remorse, snored like a bass viol.

Some days after this conversation, Heinrich Heine made inquiries in regard to this man. He was truly Mr. Muller, a merchant of Nurnberg, possessed of two hundred thousand francs income, he was surrounded by a large family, but—he had never dined at the house of the Duke de Nassau. He had only invented the fable of the spoon to persuade the people that he was the friend of the duke.

THE BARBER'S RAZOR.

Mr. Dickson, a colored barber in a New England town, was shaving one of his customers, a respectable citizen, one morning, when a conversation occurred between them respecting Mr. Dickson's former connexion with a colored church in that place.

"I believe you are connected with the church in Elm street, are you not, Mr Dickson?" said the customer.

"No, sah, not at all."

"What, are you not a member of the African Church?"

"No sir, sah."

"Why did you leave connexion, Mr. Dickson, if I may be permitted to ask?"

"Well, I'll tell you, sah," said Mr. Dickson, sharpening a concave razor on the palm of his hand, "it was just like dis: I jined de church in good faith; I gave ten dollars toward de stated Gospel de fus' year, and the church people call me 'Brudder Dickson;' de second year my business was not so good, and I put only five dollars. Dat year people call me, 'Mr. Dickson.' Dis razor hurt you, sah?"

"No, the razor goes literably well."

"Well, sah, the third year I feel berry poor; had sickness in my family; and didn't gib nothin' for preachin.' Well, sah, actor dat dey call me 'dat ole nigger Dickson'—and I left 'em."—New York Album.

"Why, Mr Swedenborg, what are you chattering about?" asked one of the party. "Silence, woman! I am holding converse with my spirits." The lady was not to be shut up in that manner. "Spirits, why how many have you on board the boat?" "Twelve, madam, who never have more," and he angrily turned his back on the inquirer. The Dalkullas exchanged glances. On arriving, Swedenborg preferred a certain payment. "Fifteen marks, if you please, sir—not one stiver less." "And why, pray?" remonstrated he. "Did you not say, sir, you had twelve spirits on board? Are we poor girls to pull them over the lakes for nothing?" The great spiritualist, who feared neither ghost nor devil, paid down the fare demanded, another time encounter the clatter of two women's tongues.—Horace Marcent's One Year in Sweden.

The discovery of the disappearance of one or two nebulæ in the heavens has excited the liveliest interest among astronomers. So unlooked for a phenomenon fairly startles the hardest understanding. Objects hitherto regarded as firm, enduring and fixed as the pillars of the universe, have been found as unstable as an autumnal meteor. What great revolution in astronomy is about to be made, no one can conjecture. The awful mystery only brightens on reflection; and vague, shadowy forebodings of the "rottenness of the starred firmament" crowd upon the imagination.

After the first performance of Judas Maccabæus, the Duke of Chandos said to the composer: "Handel, you ought to have armies for your chorus, artillery for your orchestra, and Salisbury Plain for your concert-room."

When a Spaniard eats a peach or pear by the road-side, wherever he is, he digs a hole in the ground with his foot, and covers the seed. Consequently, all over Spain, by the road sides and everywhere, fruit in great abundance tempts the taste.

Dr. M'Clintock, in the Methodist says: The only other thing in Strasbourg which one need care much to see is the monument of Guttenburg the inventor of printing; and it is a pleasant surprise to an American to find that one side of the block which supports the statue is taken up with a bas relief, in bronze, representing the signing of the Declaration of Independence. All the figures are there, and those of Franklin, Hancock, Jefferson, and the other great chiefs of the Revolution are distinctly recognizable.

THE ROBBER'S CASTLE

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN OF H. CLAUREN,

BY B. U. R. LATROBE, ESQ., APRIL, 1849.

This story is said by the author to be "literally true. Combinations, indeed, as unexpected and improbable, have not unfrequently occurred. The tale contains a useful lesson on the folly, indeed wickedness of nurses, who fill the minds of children with stories of ghosts and witches, and thus prepare for them much misery during that period of their lives in which ripening reason and better information is struggling with the habitual belief of childhood." TRANSLATOR.

I was ordered upon service into the neighborhood of the Carpathian Mountains, that lofty, snow-crested ridge which, separating Silesia from Bohemia, proclaims both countries, and has received from superstition,—perhaps from admiration, the name of the Giant's Mountains. In my early youth I had spent a happy year in the house of my aunt, at their seat, and resolved to pay her on this occasion, a visit. I wished also to renew my acquaintance with her two daughters, whom I had seen only as children of two or three years old and who had since attained the bloom of their youth. My uncle was dead, and my aunt lived upon her large fortune and extensive estate in the most enchanting part of the interior chain of these mountains.

At the inn of a little town near my aunt's estate, I inquired more particularly after the present situation of the family; and, to my great sorrow I learned that she had, a few weeks before lost her youngest daughter, Cecilia, by a scarlet fever; and that she was most heavily afflicted at this irreparable misfortune. Nothing could be more just, it was said, than her sorrow. Cecilia was sixteen, beautiful, wise and good, and loved by the whole country round.

The pleasure which my visit, after fourteen years' absence, had promised me, was thus greatly damped; but, on the other hand, I was glad that it had been so timed, as that I might share the sorrows, and, if possible, administer consolation to the bosom of my beloved aunt.

To prevent distressing explanations by apprising her at once that I was acquainted with her loss, I bought some crape, and wound it round the left arm of my uniform. It was noon when I drove out of town. The sun shone fiercely from the zenith, a hot, South wind swept over the waving corn, and dark thunder clouds rested upon the fore-sun of the gigantic mountains before me.

In a few hours I was upon the limits of my aunt's domain. I had long before discovered the majestic ruins that was thrown upon a hill above the mansion, and was known in the whole neighborhood by the name of The Robber's Castle. As I drove along, I saluted, with the most friendly feelings of old affection, all the little recesses and sequestered places which, as a boy, I had so often visited. My aunt had not expected me. Full of the recollection of the sweetest days of my infancy, softened by the melancholy news of her distress, and overwhelmed with unutterable feelings, I received her in my arms, and we mingled our silent tears. She was in the deepest mourning. The crape on my arm told her that I knew her distress. She pressed me to her tortured bosom, and sobbed aloud. "Why, alas!" she cried, "did you not come one month sooner?" Then I was happy and rich; then I stood in the mid-t of both my children. Alas! my friend, God has deprived me of half my worldly happiness. I have murmured, I have complained. Cecilia was an angel! Why was she not spared to me? What crime have I committed? O Almighty Being, if a mother, on the grave of her child, should for a moment doubt thy goodness and thy mercy, oh be not angry! What has a mother but her children?"

At that moment the eldest daughter, Julia, entered. She had heard of my arrival, and coming in, she heard the last words of her mother. With the cordiality of near relationship, and the warmth of ancient friendship, she folded me in her arms, and kissed away the tears from the pale cheeks of her mother. The tears stood in her own large and beautiful eyes.

Words are such as on such occasions. A studied speech cannot touch a broken heart. I suffered them to dwell on everything relating to the departed and thus to pour forth and lighten their grief by sharing it with a sympathetic friend. It gave them a melancholy pleasure to speak of Cecilia, and to dwell on her last moments in their saddest circumstances.

Cecilia had died with full consciousness of her approaching end. She had a horror of being put into the earth, and had begged her mother not to permit her to be buried in the church-yard. It was possible to be buried alive. From the grave there could be no deliverance. Under the Robber's Castle there was a deep, half ruined cellar. She begged her mother to have it repaired and consecrated to herself. In that there would no object of terror to her; she should still appear to be among the living. The unhappy mother had complied with the last request of her child. She and Julia accompanied me to the silent resting place of the departed.

The ruin lay a few hundred paces from the house. It occupied the precipitous termination of a huge rock. The way to it wound through a grove of ancient oaks, which had been drawn into the grounds of the mansion. The immediate neighborhood of the Castle had been converted, by the former possessor into a Park, that bore the character of the ruin that formed its centre, first, a gloomy depth of Pine and Hemlocks gradually sliding into soft lawns shaded by weeping willows. Next to the black precipice, dotted with purple and yellow moss, the birch waved its slender twigs. Lilac, wild Roses, Jessamine, Ivy and a thousand other shrubs, clustered round the ancient towers, to which a narrow and winding foot-path gradually ascended. But a new path, narrow and clean, led off on the left around the rock to the vault, the gate of which, of bronze tastefully designed, was open at a distance.

The distress of my companions had become more moderate during our walk, and I wished not to renew it by a visit to the vault. I therefore turned to the right, into the path that climbed the hill of the Castle, from which I had often gazed over the out lines prospect with pastoral. I was surprised by the alterations which my aunt had made during my long absence. She had availed herself of the walls which were still sound, to fit up several habitable chambers within. A bold staircase, with an iron railing, led up along the wall of an old watch-tower, into a Hall and from thence into two Gothic apartments furnished in the same taste. I opened the window, and it commanded a prospect of the same kind as that from the source of the Elbe, both the snow pits, the whole ridge of this venerable mountain, and a part of the fruitful Silesia bounded the prospect. Immediately before me, a still vale, shut out from all the world; below me, the grated entrance of the rock-vault of Cecilia.

In the chamber hung the portrait of my uncle; and by his side, that of Cecilia, who slept beneath our feet. Fair, beautiful, and blooming as the goddess of health, her smiling cheeks were dimpled to youthful innocence, her silken hair rolled in soft tresses round her head, and a white rose graced her swelling bosom. "That is she!" I said, struck with wonder at the beauty of the withered. "That was she!" said the mother, in a mournful voice. Julia turned away her head to hide the tears that gushed from her very heart. I observed a strong likeness between the sisters; but Cecilia was fair—Julia, a brunette.

The mother and daughter seemed to mourn afresh the loss of their beloved; and I therefore endeavored to lead the conversation away from the subject of their sorrows, and remarked upon the extremely tasteful arrangement of the apartments. In the adjoining chamber stood three beds. The mother had slept here the whole of last summer, with her two daughters. They told how happily they had spent their time here—how, every evening and every morning, new beauties had unveiled themselves in the enchanting prospect; and they gave me so glowing a picture of the pleasure they had enjoyed, that I begged permission, during the few days of my stay, to occupy these apartments, and to sleep in them.

The mother readily consented, but Julia asked whether I should not be afraid to sleep alone in these dreary ruins, and so near to the mansion of the dead? She said, that as often, and as willingly, as she visited the resting place of her sister, still she should find it impossible to spend a night

I answered that I had no fears; that there was nothing terrible to me in the neighborhood of her sister, and that against any living being my sword would protect me.

"Of that kind," said the mother, "you have nothing to dread. The wall extends, as you know, round the whole garden, and the door that leads into the public highway, is bolted in the inside. You have not seen the new road that has been cut through the mountain during your absence?" She opened the window, and pointed out the beautiful road that, issuing from the enormous rock masses above, wound close to the garden wall, and twining through the enchanting valley beneath, was lost in the distance among the deep green of the mountains.

From the bed-chamber a door opened into a long corridor that ran along the back of the Hall of the ancient Castle. In this corridor was the entrance into the Hall. It was yet in perfect preservation. I remembered it well from my youth, though it then appeared much more decayed. The large bow-window had been repaired, it had been now floored, and was furnished in the Gothic style. The enormous, old iron stoves still stood in their places, the four paintings on the wall were there, but had been re-touched, and looked fresher—a wolf hunt, two great battle pieces of feudal times, and a single combat for life or death. In the latter, especially, the character of ancient times was admirably preserved, and the effect was astonishingly grand.

The story told in this picture, has been thus described by the chaplain of the Castle, whose chronicle, written in monastic Latin, still exists: Sir Bruno lay, mortally wounded, by Sir Guithard, on the sand. The helmet was fallen from his head, and the blood flowed in broad streams from the veins in his neck, over his breast-plate. The dying Knight, struggling with the pains of death, raised his clenched fist towards heaven, his left hand grasped the earth, soaked with his life-blood.

The longer this picture was contemplated, the more the terror of the scene featured upon the imagination. The convulsions of the gradually dying limbs seemed visible; the rattling of the throat was almost heard. I stood long before the picture, and remarked its effect to my aunt and to John. They said that such was the impression it made upon them, that they seldom entered this Hall. "Alas!" said the mother, "so did not my Cecilia die. I still hear her dying moans, but they were the moans, the convulsions of a body which the soul had already left. She died a soft, a pious, and a happy death, and felt not the separation of her spirit from its habitation. Come away from this picture. It has never impressed me as it does to-day."

She went back into the corridor. At the end of it I observed a large door of iron. It was fastened with a strong staple and a bar across it, with a hasp, to which hung a large padlock. I observed that I had never seen that before. "In your time," said my aunt, "it was not here; it was put here by my late husband. It leads into an old square tower, formerly the Castle prison. The upper part of it is now a lumber room, in which all manner of furniture and rubbish is kept, which otherwise stood in our way." "But why guard it with an iron door, and such a heavy iron bar and lock? It looks as if my aunt had some treasure hid within." "So I have," replied my aunt, smiling; "it was my husband's idea, that when my daughters were grown up, we should spend the winter in Prague, and, when absent, we might secure our most valuable effects here, because this is the only place which is vaulted, and where they would be secure from fire."

Above this black door hung the portrait of the pallid man, which I had known of old. "And is old Leah still in existence?" said I, looking at the pious face, wan with incurable grief. As a child I had attached myself to this "bride of heaven," and had felt a secret sympathy with her sufferings, the history of which was then a riddle to me.

"Leah was," so says the old chronicler, "the daughter of a rich Count of the mountain. She was secretly betrothed to Sir Guithard, the former possessor of this Castle. Her father had destined her to another. As soon as he discovered this clandestine connexion, sanctioned only by love and by nature, he confined his daughter to a convent, and forced her to take the veil among the sisters of Saint Clara, at Breslau. Guithard enticed her away, and brought her to his Castle, but he could not prevail upon any priest to give her the nuptial blessing before the altar of that God to whom all secrets are known. Leah fell under the torture of a troubled conscience. She strangled her child at its birth, and died of self-administered poison." The story of her suffering and of her despair was written upon her features. It is said by the pain of the picture, and the tortures of hell in her bosom, she raises her murderous hands to the holy Virgin, and prays for mercy. The fruit of her love, a beautiful boy, lies dead at her feet. Bruno, the convulsed knight, in the picture on the wall of the Hall, was her father, the knight who had slain him was Guithard, thus terribly avenging the death of his child, and of his beloved. Ah, it was reported and believed in the whole neighborhood that Leah would not rest in her grave, and that the ghost of Bruno still walked. Persons were found who had heard at still midnight the pious song of the nun; and the groans and the death rattle of Bruno, who had destroyed his daughter, his grand child, and the happiness of Sir Guithard, had often terrified the [illegible]. I [illegible] were always guarded by the clang of arms, and it was the more concluded that Sir Guithard was still busy, and renewed the fatal combat which ended the life of the hard hearted father.

The Imperial Library at Paris, is about to open a [illegible] than the best heated one at the British Museum first sheet missing.

No. 34

The Social, Civil, and Statistical Association of The Colored People of Pennsylvania open a subscription list to aid the freed men at Port Royal and other points where they may be located, and respectfully ask the co-operation of the colored citizens and others in this city, or elsewhere, in money or clothing.

Any amount of value received will be acknowledged, with the name of the donor, in the Recorder, where a constant record will be kept.

Subscriptions may be sent to Jacob C. White, at the office of the Lebanon Cemetery, 711 Lombard Street, and also to William Still, 107 North Fifth street, and to Rev. E. Weaver, 519 Pine Street.

PAID.

Statistical Society,	$50 00
Clayton Miller,	2 00
William Still,	5 00
Rogers Adger,	2 00
Henry Minturn,	2 00
Catherine Johnson,	2 00
Vasti Locke,	2 00
Wm. Warricks,	2 00
Harriet Shorter,	1 00
Sarah S. Hawkins,	1 00
Rev. Jonathan C. Gibbs,	1 00
James P. Clay,	1 00
Benjamin F Hill,	2 00
S. M. S.,	2 00
Elizabeth Gordon,	1 00
F. J. Dreer,	5 00

It affords us pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of ten dollars, the proceeds of Miss Anna E Dickinson's lecture at Concert Hall for the contrabands, contributed to the S., C. and Statistical Association, to be applied as intended. Wm Still

Cor. Sec. of S., C. and Statistical Association of the Colored People of Penna.

Domestic Items.

The Scheme of Colonization—Interview between the President and a Committee of Colored Men—Remarks of the President.

WASHINGTON, August 14th.—This afternoon the President of the United States gave audience to a committee of colored men at the White House. They were introduced by the Rev. J. Mitchell, Commissioner of Emigration.

E. M. Thomas, the chairman of the delegation, remarked that they were there by invitation to hear what the Executive had to say to them.

Having all been seated, the President, after a few preliminary observations, informed them that a sum of money had been appropriated by Congress, and placed at his discretion, for the purpose of aiding the colonization in some country of the people, or a portion of them, of African descent—thereby making it his duty, as it had for a long time been his inclination, to favor that cause.

"And why," he asked, "should the people of your race be ostracised anywhere? Why should they leave this country? This is, perhaps, the first question for consideration.

"You and we are different races. We have between us a broader difference than exists between almost any other two races. Whether it is right or wrong, I need not discuss; but this physical difference is a great disadvantage to us both, as I think your race suffer very greatly, many of them, by living among us, while ours suffer from your presence. In a word, we suffer from each other.

"If this is admitted, it affords a reason, at least why we should be separated. You here are freemen, I suppose. (A voice—yes, sir!) Perhaps you have long been free, or all your lives. Your race are suffering, in my judgment, the greatest wrong inflicted on any people, but even when you cease to be slaves, you are yet far removed from being placed on an equality with the white race. You are cut off from many of the advantages which the other race enjoy. The separation of men is to enjoy equality with the best, when free, but on the broad continent not a single man of your race is made the equal of a single man of ours. Go where you are treated the best, and the ban is still upon you.

"I do not propose to discuss this, but present it as a fact which we have to deal with. I cannot alter it if I would. It is a fact about which we all think and feel alike, you and I. We look to our condition, owing to the existence of the two races on the continent. I need not recount to you the effects upon white men growing out of the institution of slavery. I believe in its general evil effects on the white race. See our present condition!—the country engaged in war—our white men cutting each other's throats, none knowing how far it will extend—and then consider what we know to be the truth. But for your race among us there could not be war. Although many men engaged on either side do not care for you one way or the other, nevertheless, I repeat, without the institution of slavery and the colored race as a base, the war could not have an existence. It is better for us both, therefore, to be separated."

I know that there are free men among you who, even if they could better their condition, are not as much inclined to go out of the country as those who, being slaves, could obtain their freedom on this condition. I suppose one of the principal difficulties in the way of colonization is, the free colored man cannot see that his comfort would be advanced by it. You may believe you can live in Washington or elsewhere in the United States, the remainder of your life, perhaps more so than you can in any foreign country, and hence you may come to the conclusion that you have nothing to do with the idea of going to a foreign country. This is, I speak in no unkind sense a extremely selfish view of the case. But you ought to do something to help those who are not so fortunate as yourselves.

There is an unwillingness on the part of our people, harsh as it may be for your free colored people to remain with us. Now, if you could give a start to the white people, you would open a wide door for many to be made free. If we deal with those who are not free at the beginning, and whose intellects are clouded by slavery, we have very poor material to start with. If intelligent colored men, such as I have before me, would move in this matter, much might be accomplished. It is exceedingly important we have men at the beginning, capable of thinking as white men, and not those who have been systematically oppressed.

There is much to encourage you. For the sake of your race you should sacrifice something of your present comfort, for the purpose of being as grand as that respect as the white people. It is a cheering thought throughout life something can be done to ameliorate the condition of those who have been subject to the hard usage of the world. It is difficult to make a man miserable while he feels he is worthy of himself, and claims kindred to the great God who made him. In the American revolutionary war sacrifices were made by men engaged in it. But they were cheered by the future. General Washington himself endured greater physical hardships than if he had remained a British subject. Yet he was a happy man, because he was engaged in benefitting his race—something for the children of his neighbors, having none of his own.

The colony of Liberia has been in existence a long time. In a certain sense, it is a success. The old President of Liberia (Roberts) has just been with me the first time I ever saw him. He says they have within the bounds of that colony between three and four hundred thousand people, or more than in some of our old States, such as Rhode Island or Delaware, or in some of our newer States, and less than in some of the larger ones. They are not all American colonists, nor their descendants. Something less than twelve thousand have been sent hither from this country. Many of the original settlers have died; yet, like people elsewhere, their offspring outnumber their deceased. The question is, if the colored people are persuaded to go anywhere, why not there? One reason for an unwillingness to do so is, that some of you would rather remain within reach of the country of your nativity. I do not know how much attachment you may have toward your race. It does not strike me that you have the greatest reason to love them. But still you are attached to them. At all events, the place I am thinking about having for a colony is Central America. It is nearer to us than Liberia. Not much more than one fourth as far as Liberia; and within seven days' run by steamers. Unlike Liberia, it is on a great line of travel, it is a high way. The country is a very excellent one for any people, and with great natural resources and advantages, and especially because of the similarity of the climate with your native land; thus being suited to your physical condition. The particular place I have in view is to be a great highway from the Atlantic or Caribbean Sea to the Pacific ocean; and the particular place has all the advantages for a colony. On both sides there are harbors, among the finest in the world. Again, there is evidence of very rich coal mines. A certain amount of coal is valuable in any country, and there may be more than enough for the wants of the country. Why I attach so much importance to coal is, it will afford an opportunity to the inhabitants for immediate employment till they get ready to settle permanently in their homes. If you take colonists where there is no good landing, there is a bad show, and so where there is nothing to cultivate and of which to make a farm. But if something is started, so that you can get your daily bread as soon as you reach there, it as a great advantage. Coal land is the best thing I know of with which to commence an enterprise.

To return: you have been talked to on this subject, and told that a speculation has been intended by gentlemen who have an interest in the country, including the coal mines. We have been mistaken in all our lives if we do not know that whites as well as blacks look to their self interests, unless among those who are entirely beyond the reach of any temptation. Everybody on earth has self interest to serve. You meet with these things here and elsewhere. If such persons have what will be made of advantage to them, the question is, whether it cannot be made of advantage to you. You are intelligent and know that such a one does not so much depend on external help as on self-reliance. Much, therefore, depends upon yourselves. As to the coal mines, I think I see the way made available for your self-reliance. I shall, if I get a sufficient number of you engaged, have provisions made that you shall not be wronged. If you engage in the enterprise, I will spend some of the money intrusted to me. I am not sure you will succeed. The Government may lose the money, but we cannot succeed unless we try. But we think, with care we can succeed. The political affairs of Central America are and in quite as satisfactory condition as I have known them to be in the country for the last year or two. There are contentions in that quarter, but it is true all factions are agreed alike on the subject of colonization, and want it, and are more generous than we are here. To your colored race they have no objection. Besides, I would endeavor to have you made equals, and have the best assurance you should have the equals of the best. The practical thing I want to ascertain is whether I can get a number of able-bodied men with their wives and children, who are willing to go when I present evidence of encouragement and protection. Could I get a hundred tolerably intelligent men, with their wives and children, "to cut their own fodder," as to speak? Can I have fifty? If I could find twenty-five able-bodied men, with a mixture of women and children—good things in the family relation—I think I could make a successful commencement. I want you to let me know whether this can be done or not. This is the practical part of my wish to see you.

These are subjects of very great importance—worthy of a month's study of a speech delivered in an hour. I ask you, then, to consider seriously, and pertaining to yourselves, not merely for your race and ours for the present time, but as one of the things if successfully managed, for the good of mankind, not confined to the present generation, but as

"From age to age descends the lay,
To millions yet to be.
Till far its echoes roll away
Into eternity."

The chairman of the delegation briefly replied that they would hold a consultation, and in a short time give an answer.

The President said, "Take your full time—no hurry at all."

The delegation then withdrew.

The Calm before the Storm.—The reticence of the rebels is attracting much attention, and many are endeavoring to interpret to the cause. With the exception of an occasional reconnoissance on the part of the Federal troops, and a few guerilla raids by the rebels, all is reported quiet along the entire line of the armies, North and South. Whilst we are on the eve of highly-important movements, distrust of the enemy's craft and real strength seems to hold our troops at bay. The rebels are looked for, but are not found. The enemy is making a grand movement, of which our Government is not fully apprised, but is using every endeavor to penetrate the rebs designs. Information from General Pope's headquarters, and that obtained by the recent reconnoissance of General Hooker to within ten miles of Richmond, would seem to indicate the stealthy withdrawal of troops from the front of that city. Evidently aware of the landing of a large force from the Army of the Potomac on the south bank of the James river, and the proximity and strength of the Army of Virginia, the rebels are concentrating upon the peninsula formed by the James and Appomattox rivers, with a view of making these rivers a second line of defence in front and rear, while Richmond and Petersburg are both being placed in a better state of defence, and the enemy is keeping the lines of retreat by railroad to Lynchburg and Danville open and protected. On either hand we hear of continual preparation, but no apparent desire to bring on renewed hostilities on a large scale.

Maryland.—The City Councils of Baltimore have passed resolutions requesting General Wool to administer the oath of allegiance to the residents of that city at as early a moment as possible.

Jefferson Davis and Gen. Pope.—Jefferson Davis has written thus to Gen. Lee:

The general order issued by Major General Pope on the 23d of July, the day after the signing of the cartel, directs the murder of our peaceful inhabitants as spies if found quietly tilling the farms in his rear, even outside of his lines, and one of his brigadier generals, Steinwehr, has seized upon innocent and peaceful inhabitants to be held as hostages, to the end that they may be murdered in cold blood if any of his soldiers are killed by some unknown persons, whom he designates as "bushwhackers."

Under this state of facts this Government has issued the enclosed general order recognizing General Pope and his commissioned officers to be in the position which they have chosen for themselves, that of robbers and of murderers, and not that of public enemies, entitled, if captured, to be considered as prisoners of war.

While these facts would justify our refusal to execute the generous cartel, by which we have consented to liberate an excess of thousands of prisoners held by us, beyond the number held by the enemy, a sacred regard to plighted faith, shrinking from the mere semblance of breaking a promise, prevents our resort in this extremity. Nor do we desire to extend to any other officers of the enemy the punishment merited alone by Gen. Pope, and such commissioned officers as choose to participate in the execution of his infamous orders.

The Rebel Steamer Sumter.—The steamer Sumter, captured at Memphis, is now being repaired at Cairo, and is said to be the fleetest vessel on the Western waters. One of her officers says she is a perfect monster, and, for speed, exceeds anything in the mud-scow line. She is over two hundred feet long—has two heavy guns and splendid quarters. The bulwarks are from thirty inches to four and a half feet thick, all covered with two thicknesses of railroad iron. She has two of the most powerful engines on the river—the cylinders being forty inches in diameter, and eight and a half feet stroke. Her cabins are fitted out in fine style, with carpets, oil-cloths, lounges bath-rooms, etc. The beautiful work about her gives evidences that Northern skill and mechanism have been chiefly employed in her construction. She was built in New Orleans.—Scientific American.

The New Tax Law.—The 1st of September is determined upon as the day on which the Internal Tax bill shall go into practical operation. The collectors and assessors will be appointed,—and whatever other business may be necessary will be done before the date fixed on by this notice, which is officially proclaimed.

Iron Cars.—The New York Central Railroad Company have now in use several iron freight cars, and have under construction an iron passenger car. Should the experiment prove a success, no more wooden cars will be constructed.

Death of an Eminent Divine.—The Rev. J. H. Thornwell, D. D., of Columbia, S. C., breathed his last at Charlotte, N. C., on Friday last, after a brief illness of typhoid pneumonia.

Drafting.—By order of the Secretary of War, drafting will begin on September 1st.

No escape from the Draft.—By the direction of the President of the United States, it is ordered that, until further ordered, no citizen liable to be drafted into the militia shall be allowed to go to a foreign country, and all Marshals, Deputy Marshals and military officers of the United States, are directed, and all police authorities, especially at the ports of the United States on the sea-board and on the frontier, are requested to see that this order is faithfully carried into effect.

The Press remarks:

The order of the War Department, that no citizen liable to military service shall attempt to evade such service by leaving the country, is designed to prevent no merely possible consequence. The evil which it proposes to remedy was, we are sorry to confess, not merely protective of contingent upon the ill-success of voluntary enlistments in any of the States. It is a disgraceful fact, which it would be useless to attempt to deny, that for weeks past—even before the order to draft had been promulgated—scores of wealthy citizens of the United States have been engaging passage to Canada, to avoid the most sacred obligations that can be due any government from its citizens—the duty of defending its assailed integrity.

Distressing Calamity—An Army Hospital Vessel Sunk on the Potomac.—The Herald has received the following despatch from the Potomac

AQUIA CREEK, VA., August 14th.—A collision occurred on the Potomac, last night, off Ragged Point, between the steamers Peabody and West Point, involving a loss of 72 lives.

The West Point was bound to this place from Newport News, with convalescent troops of General Burnside's army. She sank in ten minutes after the collision.

The Peabody brought the rescued soldiers and passengers to this point—and Brig. Lieutenant-Colonel Scott, of the Sixth New Hampshire Regiment, who was on board the ill-fated vessel, and in charge of the troops, I have obtained the following account of the disaster. He says:

We left Newport News on the 11th inst., with two hundred and fifty-four soldiers, four officers, three ladies, and one child. At Fortress Monroe we took on board seventeen men—making, in all, two hundred and seventy-nine souls. On Wednesday evening, the 13th instant, about 8 o'clock, when off Ragged Point, we were startled by a shock, and soon discovered that a [illegible] taken place between our steamer and another named the George Peabody, bound down the river.

The West Point began to leak very fast—and it was ascertained that she would sink in less than ten minutes.

The Peabody, which had been partially disabled by the collision, could render no assistance, except with her small boats.

Valuable assistance was rendered by Captains Biggs and Hall, and their assistants, quartermasters of Burnside, who were passing in the steamer John F. Ames, and by Acting Master Jaslyn, of the gunboat Reliance.

An unknown bark also rendered valuable assistance, and, by their combined efforts, 293 persons were rescued.

The West Point went down in four fathoms water, about one mile and a half from the Maryland shore, and nothing can be seen of her but her smoke-stack, masts, and some wrenched-up planks on her deck.

All her crew were saved, except one fireman, named John Russell.

The brief period during which the West Point remained afloat after striking, and the consternation which prevailed, prevented efforts to save all from being entirely successful.

Capt. Doyle and Lieut. Scott were the last to leave the vessel.

The number missing is 73, of whom a portion may be saved, as a number were picked up by small boats and schooners in the vicinity.

Colonels Corcoran and Wilcox Released at Last

WASHINGTON, August 16.—Colonels Corcoran, of the New York "Sixty-Ninth" Regiment and Wilcox, of the First Michigan Regiment, together with Lieutenant Colonel Brown and Major Rigers, reached Fortress Monroe this afternoon and were expected to start at once for Washington.

From the Army of Virginia—Another Mysterious Disappearance of Jackson.

IN CAMP, NEAR CEDAR RUN, August 18th.

Scouts report that there is no heavy force of rebels within ten miles of this point.

It is believed that Jackson has gone in some other direction, and may appear where he is least expected.

Evacuation of Harrison's Landing McClellan's Advance at Williamsburg.

FORTRESS MONROE, August 16th.—Harrison's Landing was evacuated by the Union troops this morning, and at about the same hour Gen. McClellan's advance arrived at Williamsburg.

All was quiet, and all the public property had been safely removed.

Hon Edward McPherson, of Gettysburg, has been re-nominated as the Union candidate for Congress.

Dr F A Muhlenberg, who presided at the great war meeting in Lancaster, is the only surviving brother of the late lamented Henry A Muhlenberg, of Berks county. It is interesting to note that all the members of the great Muhlenberg family, for many years leaders of the Democratic party, are among the most active and determined advocates of a vigorous prosecution of the war, and among the most determined opponents of Secession sympathizers.

A Severe Rejoinder.—Dr. F. A. Ross, who figured so conspicuously as the advocate of secession from the Constitutional Presbyterian Church, has recently turned up in the presence of General Rousseau, of our forces, as the defender of treason and rebellion. The charge having been sustained, he was leaving the General's tent under guard, when he remarked:

"Well, General, we must each do as we think best, and I hope we shall both meet in heaven."

The General, with a mixture of sternness and pleasantry, replied:

"Your getting to heaven, sir, will depend altogether upon your future conduct before we can reasonably hope to meet in that region, you and I must both become better men."

The effect of this brief rejoinder was irresistible—scarcely any of the spectators could refrain from laughter, and even the face of the reverend rebel relaxed into a smile.

United States Army Hospital at West Philadelphia.—The United States Army General Hospital at West Philadelphia is, in all respects, the most complete and extensive in the Union. Its location is close to the intersection of Forty-fourth and Pine streets—being the very highest position in the city. It is upon an eminence, thereby affording a fine view of the surrounding country, and, at the same time, possessing all that could be wished for it in a sanitary point of view.

There are 28 wards, 167 feet long by 24 wide—each of which will accommodate seventy patients. These wards are in two rows of fourteen each, twenty feet apart, and communicating with each other, and with the central or medical building by means of two corridors parallel to each other, 775 feet long, which are used for dining halls. Connected with each corridor, at the eastern end, are large buildings for kitchens, store-rooms, laundry, &c. There are also separate buildings for baggage, knapsacks, &c., and for guard barracks, besides numerous other out-buildings. There are one hundred and fifty hospital tents on the ground, which will accommodate nine hundred additional patients—also separate buildings for the cooking, laundry, dining-rooms, &c., of those occupying the tents.

The whole establishment covers a space of twelve acres, and will be enclosed with a fence fourteen feet high.

The wards are all on the first floor, being, in fact, a series of one-story buildings, ventilated in the most approved manner. The number of patients that can be conveniently accommodated at present is two thousand eight hundred and sixty.

The hospital is under the charge of Dr. Isaac I. Hayes, commander of the late Arctic Expedition, assisted by Dr. E. C. Iddings. The officers and attendants of each ward are a non-resident or consulting surgeon, who makes his visits every morning at half-past 10 o'clock, a resident assistant-surgeon, a medical cadet, a Sister of Charity, (matron,) a ward master, and a sufficient number of nurses.

The special advantages which constitute the superiority of this hospital may be summed up in a few words:

It has been built for the specific purposes to which it is applied, and is well adapted for such purposes. It is removed from the close air and constant tumult of the crowded city, and is located in a pleasant and salubrious place. It belongs to the Government, and is not merely rented, like other hospitals. It is intended to be a permanent institution. It is capable of being very greatly enlarged—indeed, it will speedily be extended. It is only one story high, all through, thereby having the chances of fire greatly reduced, with the certainty, in the event of such a calamity, of having the invalids readily removable. Its ventilation is of the very first order. Lastly, its situation removes the patients from the temptations of the city, which, in many cases, have been found most injurious to those who have lately risen from a sick bed.—Press.

Conciliating Rebels.—And how do you suppose the people of Virginia look upon the policy of conciliation? They despise it. They have said, in my hearing, that our government does not dare to treat them otherwise. And what course do they pursue in relation to this policy when they have it in their power to act? Let me state a characteristic fact. When in Middletown, in the valley, not many weeks ago, I passed near the residence of William Strother Jones, a major in General Ashby's rebel cavalry. While our forces held the valley, prior to Jackson's raid, a soldier was detached to guard the house and family of this Major Jones.

On the retreat of Banks, Major Jones had an opportunity of visiting his home. He found this soldier there on guard.

"What are you doing here?" demanded the major (with an oath) of the young man who had been defending his wife and chattels for him while he was off engaged in making war upon that Government which protected him.

"I am here as a guard to this property," answered the soldier.

"You are my prisoner," replied the rebel, and so he delivered the young Northerner a prisoner to the rebel soldiers accompanying him. The young man was a prisoner on parole the day I met him in the streets of Middletown, and I saw and read his papers, which corroborated the account given me as above of this transaction. That is just all the thanks we get for these acts of conciliation.—DR. TAPP.

Progress of the War.—There are indications that government is about to infuse new vigor into our military operations—that they are aware that the country is engaged in a real war, one that must be carried on in the usual way of conducting wars, if it is to be brought to a successful issue. The rebels are to be regarded as enemies, and the principle that those who are not for us are against us, is to be applied to all persons in the territory that is within our lines. Hitherto, even within the jurisdiction of our armies, it has been safer for the inhabitants to be sympathizers with the rebels than to be open Union men. But this thing is now to cease. The enforcement of the Confiscation and Emancipation law has been commenced with vigor. General Halleck has ordered General McClellan to impress and use as many negroes as he could get in any military duty for which they could be employed. He instructed him to make no inquiry as to whether they were slaves or free—or, if slaves, whether of disloyal or Union masters. He further directs him to seize every article of rebel property that can be made useful for the purposes of our army.

The government has an eye on the equivocal proceedings of Magoffin, the traitorous Governor of Kentucky. Summary measures will be taken should he make any attempt to "juggle" that State out of the Union.

Measures are being taken to organize a brigade for the defence of Washington from among the employees of the departments there. It is said that thousands of clerks there can be enrolled for that purpose without difficulty.

Beauregard is at Chattanooga, co-operating with Bragg. Their combined force is not less than seventy thousand Obituary.

A EULOGY ON THE LIFE, CHARACTER AND DEATH OF HANNAH VANDYKE,

Late consort of Henry Vandyke, residing near Norristown, was delivered in the Norristown A. M. E. Church, by Rev. Henry Davis, from Revelations—14th chapter and 13th verse.

Sister Hannah was born in New Jersey, in the year 1810, and lived there ten years, and then she removed with her parents to Berks County, and from thence to Plymouth, Montgomery County. In the year 1826 she was married to Henry Vandyke, and in the year 1850 she embraced religion and joined the A. M. E. Church in Norristown, where she continued an honorable and worthy member until her death. She was an industrious, affectionate and an obedient wife. She was a loving and indulgent mother. She was a kind neighbor, a civil citizen, and much beloved by all who knew her—she was an exemplary Christian while she lived.

She was taken with her last illness in December, 1861, and lingered until May the 11th, 1862, when she expired.

She bore her affliction with great Christian fortitude, and then closed the mortal scene in the triumph of faith, in full hopes of a better resurrection and a blessed immortality beyond the grave.

"Write, blessed are the dead which die in the Lord," &c.

HENRY DAVIS.

In Buffalo, August 8th, Mrs. ANN B. BRUCE, wife of the Rev. Charles Bruce, after a short illness, which she bore with patience, and, meeting death with a smile, she fell asleep in Jesus. D. D

BUFFALO, N. Y., Aug. 18, 1862.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

"UNION COTTAGE,"

ATLANTIC CITY, NEAR THE INLET

The subscriber will always be happy to welcome her numerous friends, and the public in general.

TERMS:

Board per week,	$6 00
" a day,	1 25
Single meals,	50

S. H. WAILES, Proprietress.

NOTICE.

To the friends of Religious Literature and human progress of the City and County of Philadelphia

This certifies that Miss Mary Still is a legally authorized agent for the City and County of Philadelphia, Penna., to solicit subscribers and donations for the Christian Recorder of the African Methodist Episcopal Church of America.

We, therefore, take great pleasure in recommending Miss Still to the citizens and friends as a lady every way worthy of such a position, as well as trustworthy, and we do hope, as the enterprise is commendable, that those to whom she may present this writing will not turn her away without either subscribing or contributing to the great cause.

(Signed) ELISHA WEAVER.
Editor & General Book Steward.
No. 619 Pine St., Phila

BOARDING
IN BROOKLYN

MRS. S PLANT, (formerly Richardson,) respectfully announces that she has opened a first-class BOARDING & LODGING HOUSE at No. 97 HIGH STREET, Brooklyn—where she is prepared to accommodate the public on the most reasonable terms.

Her house being located in a very pleasant part of the city, and within five minutes' walk of Fulton Ferry, is made thus a very desirable and convenient place.

BOARDING.

Mrs. AMIA WILLIAM, of Cape May, will open the Banker House for the season, for the accommodation of all who wish to spend the season there, and she will spare no pains to make all comfortable. Those wishing to spend one, two, or three days, will find the Banker House the right spot. Prices very reasonable. 1-sept

COAL, STOVES, &c., &c.

The subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has taken the store,

NO. 107 NORTH FIFTH STREET,

formerly occupied as the Anti-Slavery Office, (where he has been engaged for the last fourteen years,) to occupy it henceforth as a place of business for the sale of

COAL, STOVES, &c

Having made arrangements with one of the first Coal Dealers in the city, to furnish the best qualities of Lehigh, Schuylkill, &c., at the lowest Cash prices, he hopes to give full satisfaction in this branch of his business.

He will also keep constantly on hand a general assortment of good NEW and SECOND-HAND STOVES, FURNACES, &c.

Persons wishing Stoves taken down, stored away, put up, or cleaned, can be promptly accommodated by applying as above.

He hopes by energy and strict attention to business to obtain a fair share of patronage.

WM. STILL,
107 North Fifth Street, Philadelphia

REFERENCES.

J M McKim,	Dr Caspar Wistar,
Samuel Rhoads,	James Mott,
Dillwyn Parrish,	Thomas Williamson,
Prof. C D Cleveland	W H. Furness.

BRUSH AND BELLOWS MANUFACTORY

GEORGE W METZ & SONS,
No. 815 MARKET STREET,
PHILADELPHIA

Blacksmiths', Braziers', Dentists', and Foundry Bellows and Brushes of every description, always on hand.

☞ Particular attention given to Brushes for machine work. Mr 20—1y.

IVORYTYPING & PHOTOGRAPHS
PAINTED IN EVERY STYLE
BY
MISSES C. A. BURROWS & S F DALES,
AT G. W. COR. TENTH AND ARCH.
S. F. Dales. feb. 15-1y

SEWING & GIBBS WILCOX & MACHINES.

Price with Hemmer and Feller,

$35 00.

THIS MACHINE HAS POINTS OF SUPERIORITY PECULIARLY ITS OWN.

Stitching, Hemming, and Felling with a Single Thread

It forms a fast, even, and elastic seam, which is unsurpassed not to rip in wear, even if the seam is cut at frequent intervals, and also under all circumstances "possesses the seaming."

A Patented device of great utility to hemmers, prevents the possibility of the machine being run in the wrong direction, or the balance wheel running a lady's dress.

Another feature which deserves particular attention is the Thread Retainer Spring, causing no set trouble.

Two thousand stitches per minute, can be done on the same minute without dropping a stitch.

These machines are simple and accurate in their construction, as parcels the use of the shuttle; and with one thread perform the most beautiful results of the two thread machines and unite the elastic stitch, making it impossible for the seam to rip unless both the parts of the fabric sewed together rip. These machines they will accomplish double the sewing in a given time.

"It is emphatically the good, low priced Family Sewing Machine that the public have long been waiting for."—Boston Transcript.

"It is indeed a wonderful production, and its family use especially, no other will bear any comparison with it."—Philadelphia Sewing Journal.

"A mechanical wonder"—Scientific American.

"Among the best and most nervous the sewing machines. Light and elegantly finished, and so simple in its construction that it seems almost impossible for it to get out of repair."—Pittsburgh Chronicle.

"It is entitled with its own peculiar merits all the really valuable improvements of the higher priced machines."—Pennsylvanian.

"It is no boy's toy, but a practical machine."—The Pilot.

"It is the most simple of all the machines we have seen, and the range of work it will perform is truly astonishing."—Saturday Evening Post.

"Taking into consideration simplicity, compactness, durability and doing all work, the committee were unanimously in favor of the Wilcox & Gibbs as a single thread machine."—Pennsylvania State Agricultural Society's Report.

"We can not, in justice, express our preference to the merits of the Wilcox & Gibbs Sewing Machine. We consider that age at double reform has been compelled by it, to prove beyond doubt, that two threads are not, as was supposed necessary to a good fastening."—Christian Advocate and Journal Jan 2, 1862.

"We have one of these machines in use, and think more highly of it than any [illegible]."—Saturday Evening Post.

The undersigned having purchased the entire right of the above machine for the State of Pennsylvania, and a part of New Jersey, is now prepared to supply the trade with machines of the best quality, and warrant them to be perfect in every respect. Those wishing to purchase machines for their own use, or to sell again, will find it to their advantage to call at the office, No. 505 Broadway, New York, where they will be shown the machine in operation, and the terms made known. Any machine sold by us, if not entirely satisfactory to the purchaser, can be returned within ten days from the time of purchase, and the money will be refunded.

JAMES WILCOX, Manufacturer
No. 505 Broadway, New York,
Opposite St. Nicholas Hotel.

Advertisements.

THE DAUGHTERS OF HOPE GRAND UNION Temperance Society met, it being the thirteenth convention, April 10th, 1861. Representatives from Lodges are as follows:—

From Garnet Union No 4, D. of T.; from Phœnix Union, No. 8, D. of T.; from Northern Union, No. 16, D. of T.; Webb's Union, of Chambersburgh, Pa.; from Dr Bias' Union, of Carlisle, Pa.; from Mount Olive Union, No. 19, D. of T.; from Vanbrackle Union, No. 15, D. of T., of Norristown, Pa

Officers installed to their several positions are as follows.—

Gr and P., Sister Bennet, Grand Associate, Sister Harris, Grand Treasurer, Sister Fawcett; Grand Conductress, C. Thompson. Grand Sentinel, A. E. Dunbar. Grand Chaplain, Sister Hall

G. P. P.,	Sister E. Rogers,	G. P. P.	Sister Anderson,
"	" E. Bowles,	"	" J. F. Black,
"	" M. H. Bundy,	"	" E. A. Clark,
"	" S. Newman,	"	" C. White,
"	" S. Davis,	"	" S. Hall.

THE DAUGHTERS OF CORNISH SOCIETY

THE STATED QUARTERLY MEETINGS of the Society are held on the first Wednesdays of February, May, August, and November.

The meetings of the Board are held on the Wednesday previous to the regular stated meetings of the society.

Mrs. SARAH CARTER,
President.
Mr. L. R. SEYMOUR, Sec'y.

THE BOOK DEPOSITORY
OF THE
AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH,
No. 619 Pine Street,
PHILADELPHIA.

We keep on hand, in connexion with our other books, Sabbath school books of various kinds, Question Books, Catechisms, Nos. 1, 2, and 3. We have a good assortment of such books as are generally used in the Public Schools. Also, Stationery, Inks, Pens, Paper, Envelopes and Blank Books.

THE DEATH-BED OF THE REV. JOHN WESLEY.

Wanted Canvassing Agents for this splendid large engraving, which should be in every house. For a liberal sum of first class men. The most liberal inducements offered. It is now ready for delivery. Send for Catalogue and Instructions.

WM. SMITH, Publisher,
No. 3 South Third Street, Philadelphia.

WANTED.—The charge of a Public School. Reference as to ability can be given. Apply to
J. W. A., 1641 Helmuth St.

ONE-PRICE CLOTHING,
OF THE LATEST STYLES,

Made in the Best Manner, expressly for RETAIL SALES. Lowest Selling Prices marked in Plain Figures. All Goods made to order warranted satisfactory. Our One-Price System is strictly adhered to. All are thereby treated alike. JONES & CO.,
Dec25-1y 804 MARKET STREET

GOOD NEWS

To Tailors, Dress-makers, and to those wishing to be such. Also, where [illegible] for in one day by printed directions which each Pamphlet has. You can learn to cut and fit perfectly Ladies' Dresses, Boys' and Men's Pants, Vests, Jackets, Sacks and Over-coats.

Local and Travelling Agents Wanted.

Address REV WM. BRADLEY,
Carversville, Bucks Co., Pa.

Or, apply to Mrs Mary C. Weaver, (wife of the Editor of this paper) 619 Pine St., Philada., Pa. Jan12-1y

MRS. E. A. PALMER'S
DRY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS STORE.
NO. 105 NORTH FIFTH STREET.
PHILADELPHIA.

A General Assortment of Hosiery, Trimmings, Dry Goods, &c

Dress, Shirt-making, and Plain Sewing, promptly attended to. Jan12—1y

COAL! COAL!! COAL!!!

The subscriber is selling the best qualities of Lehigh and Schuylkill Coal at the following very low prices

Lehigh Store Coal, per ton,	$4 25
" Egg,	4 25
" Broken and Screened, per ton,	4 25
" Nut,	4 00
Schuylkill, Store, and Egg, and Broken, and Screened,	4 25
" Nut,	3 50

Orders left at the Store Store, No. 107 North Fifth St., will be promptly attended to. WM. STILL.
Jan12—1y 107 N. Fifth St., Philada.

KEELY'S PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY
N W. corner Fifth and Coates.

PICTURE GALLERY AND EXAMINATION FREE ROOMS.

Strangers should not fail to call and examine.

Admission Free.

JAMES DOWNS,
DEALER IN
NEW AND SECOND HAND
CLOTHING,
No. 225 South Second Street.
No. 17—3mo. PHILADELPHIA

WILLIAM STILL'S
STOVE STORE,
107 NORTH FIFTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

The subscriber would respectfully inform his friends and all in want of good stoves, that he has now on hand a general variety of excellent PARLOR, COOK and CHAMBER STOVES, including Gas-burning, as well as other patterns, which he is selling at very low rates. He buys entirely for cash, of the best wholesale fountains, and of course can sell much cheaper than those buying on the usual credit system. At any rate his friends are invited to give him a call and examine for themselves before purchasing elsewhere, as he feels that they would be convinced that it would be to their interest to give him their patronage. Coal orders constantly on hand. WM. STILL.

JOSEPH H. COLE,
CONTINENTAL RESTAURANT,
NO. 717 LOMBARD STREET, PHILA.,
(Above Seventh St., under Philadelphia Institute,)

Where he continues to keep always on hand the very best assortment of OYSTERS and other refreshments—hoping that all his friends and the public in general will favor him with their patronage.

☞ Meals served at all hours. Families supplied with Oysters of the best quality and flavor at the shortest notice.

☞ Also, public and private waiting done on the most reasonable terms. 1y

Mrs. S. Shorter Hawkins
HAS NOW OPENED
NEW SPRING GOODS.

consisting of Bolaines, Brilliants, Cullenes, &c Hoop Skirts of all sizes, from 25 cents to $1 25. A large lot of linen Hdkfs., from 5 to 25 cents. Also, cheap Hosiery and Gloves.

N. B.—Mantuamakers are invited to examine my assortment of Dress trimmings of the latest styles as will be sold cheap for cash at the old Establishment,
615 Lombard Street.

THOMAS CHARNOCK,
GENERAL FURNISHING UNDERTAKER,
NO. 427 SOUTH 6TH ST.,
Second Door Below Bethel Church.

Horses and carriages, with every requisite for the business, furnished at the shortest notice and on the most reasonable terms.

T. C. having purchased the right to Reed's patent corpse preserver, he also prepared to furnish it to undertakers with the best room. May16 1y.

For the Christian Recorder

BUCKS COUNTY SS.—TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS MAY COME

I, the subscriber, a Justice of the Peace, in and for the county of Bucks, do hereby certify that I am acquainted and know Emily Johnson (formerly Rodney, who was married to Samuel Johnson, who was married before William Hawk, Esq., of Bristol, Bucks County, as appears by record on his docket; and after careful examination and mature reflection, I feel myself fully safe in saying that the said Johnson had a wife living at the time he married the said Emily Rodney; and I further say that I have the evidence of Daniel Kemmons, (local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church) Charles Emmons, (Class leader) and Benjamin Cummings, (who is exhorter) that he had one or more wives living at the time he married the said Emily Johnson; and the evidence, on affirmation, of the said Emily Johnson, that he had a wife living at the time she married him, which, at the time she married him, she had no knowledge of Affirmed and subscribed before me, May 5th, 1862. Wm Blakey J P } her Emily X Johnson, mark.

REV. LEWIS S. LEWIS'
FAMILY LINIMENT
IS PREPARED WITH GREAT CARE,
EXPRESSLY FOR FAMILY USE.

In composition is very simple, containing nothing that is injurious in any form, and there is no danger in its use from exposure to the weather. No family should be without it. Having a wish to benefit mankind in general, and those afflicted in particular—and having had recourse to the article in several cases of rheumatism, bunions, chilblains, and other lameness, is proving to be a remedy in every case—I therefore recommend it to the public.

CERTIFICATES.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov 27, 1861.

Rev. L. S. LEWIS—Dear Sir: I have been afflicted with the rheumatism eleven years, during which time I tried almost everything, but received no sure relief. For the last four months my limbs and joints were so swollen, that at times I could not walk or use my slippers. I procured a bottle of your Liniment,

THE MOWING MACHINE AND THE BOBOLINK

As I write the birds are holding forth in musical babble, the children are chirping about, and various sounds of labor are giving base to those lighter sounds. There goes Mr. Turner, on his mowing-machine, riding like a prince in his chariot. It is one of Allen's best, and good enough. Two great white horses walk off with it. Rode like a prince, did I say? Why not? Every blade of grass bows down to him as he comes. The daisies fall before him. Red-top, timothy, blue grass, red clover, eurospsis, and other chance weeds make obeisance to him, as round and round the lot he rides in state, king of grass and grain! It is a strange victory over the meadow that is wrought out by mowing-machines! The poetry of the mower is all dashed. The musical whetting of his scythe is over. He is turned off into corners where the machine cannot go, and whacks up the tangled and lodged spots. Once, haying-time was the agony of the year. The farmer was held at the mercy of men and weather. Now, what cares he for men? His machine epitomizes ten men at the wages of one and a pair of horses. He holds ten acres in the palm of his hand.

I follow with quick steps the rattling, clattering machine. The long scissors-knife is hidden in the grass. The swath is cut apparently without an instrument. The grass rolls over toward the machine as if it were a fluid, and followed the wake of the machine as waves roll astern of steamboats. The air is cool and bright. The grass is wet with yesterday's rain and night dew. It sparkles with million drops of water winking at the sun. I like labor! Haying especially is very pleasant! It does not tire me to walk on this smooth-cut path, nor to look at the nimbly upset grass, nor to rejoice to see that villanous stalk of dock and that old torment of a thistle snapped up in a twinkling and pitched into the swath without a root. Alas! I fear that it is a root. If the stalk shall never find it again, I fear that I shall! These insidious, burrowing, creeping, ramifying, spreading, climbing, propagating and immortal thistle roots!—oh, why were they not put on the gladiolus, or the larkspur, or on some tender flower of much glory, whose hold on life we anxiously watch and nurse! What tough roots evil has in this world, while goodness can hardly be made to hold on to the soil.

Here is a Mrs. Bobolink, who has sailed around me for the last ten minutes, alighting on the ground with nervous tilting of tail and half flutter of wings. Now she springs into the air and sails to yonder apple-tree. Her black and white draped husband sits waiting for her. There is evidently a nest hidden in this grass, and younglings! Poor thing, your wiles and arts are now all against you. You would draw me away from the right spot, when you should show it to me. I would protect it. A stake and a little grove of grass should remain to hide your young till they can fly. But, now, I cannot imagine where the little brood hides, and all your running and flying, and jumping from one blade of grass to another, and trillings and exclamations, serve only to make the doom inevitable! See, the inexorable machine is coming! It spares nothing. Tell me, is the nest along the edge? It will clear a yard's depth close. Fool! to sit on that twig singing "pit-e-e," "pit-e-e!" I know it is a pity, but it can't be helped, if you will not show me! You think I have a prejudice against your husband because he wears a black coat! None in the world! It is because he changes his coat that I blame him! Here he comes to the North, in May, with a black coat faced with white, a great friend of both races, and famous in his public professions. To hear him discourse you would think him a very enthusiast for liberty! He sings on the wing. Few birds do that. That may be called improvisation. He cannot hold his peace. Out of the abundance of his heart he singeth, and can lose no time.

And yet, no sooner has he reared his little family of bobolinks, amid northern institutions, than off he goes to the rice swamps of Carolina and the reeds and fens of the south west, and changes his coat—not a feather of black left, but a russet brown—changes his voice, and his very name—and as a sober rice bird, conforms to the society of southern latitudes. Where are all your high-flown speeches now?—for shame on you! But, my dear Mrs. Bobolink, I don't blame you. You stick to your colors North and South. I believe that you are a dutiful, faithful, and affectionate wife, and I would take hold and help you out of his danger, and all the little future turnoouts in your nest, if you will stop your deluding ways, and come right to the point. For the last time, I ask you, where are they?

It is too late! Even while I was expostulating to you, the blade had cut sheer across the nest, and left you desolate. You know it, I see. Your flutter has stopped. You are mute. I am sorry for you.

But you are not alone in your misery. Just so are we poor wretches cut down every day by inexorable laws that come driving right along over hidden nests. The great globe itself is but a huge rolling machine that shears off to the very roots myriads of plans and hopes. Time carries an unwhetted beam of knives, that seem never to grow dull by shearing all things. Men and cities and nations and generations go down before it, and there is no escape. And did you expect, O poor birdie, to escape? Men have no advantage over you. They, too, are made desolate as in a moment. Nay; you will forget your trouble by to-morrow. Your troubles are only for a day. One sleep will brood on you and you will be well. Alas! men's sorrows will not cure so easily. Time curse some. Some it nourishes and increases. There is but one hospital, in which all can get well. It is the grave. All are healed there of whatever ill they had.—Beecher.

THE ROBBER'S CASTLE.

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN OF H. CLAUREN,

BY D. M. B. LATROBE, ESQ., APRIL, 1819.

CONTINUED.

All these stories, often repeated to me when a child by the villagers, were revived, not without some of their former effect upon my imagination.

"Poor Leah!" said my aunt, "after all, she was less miserable than I am: she lost her child before she knew his value, and she followed him in death!"

I was shocked at this expression of maternal anguish. "Aunt," I answered, "envy not the fate of this pitiable object. Murmur not against God! To you there remains one other lovely child; to her, no relief but a horrible death! Look at that pallid face! At the convulsive wringing of the hands of that kneeling figure. See the burning tears in those eyes, not daring to raise themselves to the sky; see the unutterable anguish painted upon those lips, upon which the last ave Maria seems to tremble, and the heave of that breast bursting with the remembrance of her father's curse! Let us go, let us go; I can not bear it; that miserable woman seems to stand before me, bearing the load of her incurable, eternal distress. Even in the features of the holy Virgin, there is no mercy, no pardon for her."

At that moment a heavy burst of thunder rolled over the ruins, and died away in the echoes of the deep glens of the Black Giant's Mountains. The storm that was collecting at my arrival, had now covered the heavens; the wind rose, and heavy drops of rain began to fall singly. We were obliged to hasten to the house, or we must have awaited the end of the storm in the Castle; and thus our visit to the vault of Cecilia was for this time deferred.

We had scarcely reached the house, before a heavy rain refreshed the parched earth, and cooled the atmosphere. In the court a thousand bubbles played upon the waters and burst as they arose. Broad lightnings flashed athwart the black clouds and glittered in the narrow dale, and an unceasing roll of thunder re-echoed by every rock, filled the air. The mountaineers are accused to this magnificent display of the powers of nature, that they hardly perceive it. To me it was again new: it filled me with an indescribable awe, for every new burst of thunder seemed to tear these eternal rocks from their very foundations. As soon as the rain ceased, my aunt ordered my baggage to be carried up to the ruins. I would now have given much, that I had never expressed a wish to spend the night, during my stay, among those decayed walls. Under me, the vault of Cecilia, next to me, the hall of the knight, the narrow corridor, the pale and miserable Leah, and the heavy barred iron door leading to the dungeons, in which many a tear of despair might have been shed. All this formed so appalling a neighborhood and such a contrast to the neat, cheerful, and friendly arrangements of the morning, that I would willingly have recalled my request. But I had once made it, and my aunt had taken it so kindly, that I proposed to fix my abode near the resting place of her Cecilia, that I could not retract.

"And so you intend to sleep in the ruins," said the old huntsman, as he took up the last articles of my baggage, my light cloak my pistols, and my sword.

"Yes, my good old Nicolas," said I.

"Well! I only had my thoughts, my dear Master. You must have more courage than I. Not that I am a coward, either. A hundred times have I watched alone, in a pitch dark night on the mountain, and have heard the fairies, and the elves, and the mountain spirits at work, and nothing could move me, for I am a good old man, and fear God, but yet I could not venture to sleep up there."

"Why not, old gentleman? Did not my aunt and her daughters sleep there all last summer?"

"Yes, indeed, and I, and George, and Henry, were also obliged to sleep there. But, now! I would not give you any uneasiness, not I, but since Miss Cecilia has been put in there, folks say that they have heard all sorts of things. And, indeed, I don't think all right with that Leah, neither, that murdered her child. And in the convent at Breslau, the convent of St. Clara, they know something about her, too. They say she is busy there, also."

The old man went away. I had attended to every word he said, but, a soldier, and desire my things to be brought back! I should have passed for the most arrant poltroon in the world.

Supper was announced. The steward and two clerks sat down with us: three powerful young fellows. I hoped to persuade at least one of them to give me his company at my quarters in the castle, and, therefore, endeavored to form an acquaintance with them. I led the conversation to the only subject to which their knowledge extended, to agriculture. We communicated to each other our ideas, and I obtained so far my end as to establish a feeling of interest in each other. After supper, while the ladies were for a moment absent, I hinted that it might be time to retire. I told them that I should sleep in the Castle, that beds were there ready, if they would favor me with their company; and that we might talk away an hour or two over a glass of Hungarian wine very agreeably.

But all three excused themselves with the most humble obeisances. The steward had still a good deal to write. One of the clerks always slept close to the strong box, and the other was obliged to be very early upon the farm to set the people to work. It was evident enough that these excuses were invented only to avoid the night's lodging in the ruins, and I was obliged to go up alone.

Then, indeed, I began to feel some degree of timidity. I felt an anxiety that I could not well explain. I abused myself as a fool; but I could not get over a secret dread that had seized me. The clock struck three-quarters past ten, and at last I was obliged to go.

My aunt ordered me a lantern. She said I should find two candles in my chamber, she had also taken care that wine and water were provided me, and in the morning, she and Julia would come up and breakfast with me. I went. The storm was passed. The heavens were overcast, and the moon wandering behind ragged clouds, seldom unveiled herself above the silent mountains whose summits were lost in the dark firmament. In the deep distance played occasionally the faint blaze of lightning. The branches of the trees hung low, weighed down by heavy rain drops, and the night breeze sighed in their tops. I took my way among the dark oaks, through the less dismal shrubbery, left Cecilia's vault on the left hand, and climbed the hill of the ruin, and the winding stairs half hanging in the air, with the lantern in my hand. I opened the small antechamber, stepped into the parlor, and from thence into my chamber. In haste I lighted my two candles, and bolted the door that led into the corridor. I also locked the door that led into the small ante chamber behind me, and now I thought myself safe. I could not sleep. I undressed myself, however, and opened the book case of my late uncle, that stood in the chamber. I hoped to draw off my attention from the anxious dread that had seized me, by reading. The first book I took up was a hymn book. I opened it and read:

"Why shudder'st thou, my anxious soul,
When thought of death assails thee?
O'er thee the grave has no control,
The clay, alone, that veils thee
Is cold corruption's prey; and must
From dust aris'n, return to dust."

I did not choose to read about death, put the book by, took another. It was "Elpinus von Sintenia." In them every book in the case devoted to recollections of mortality I said, and took up a third? It was a small pocket volume: a very curious account of the order of Knights Templars of the 14th century. The first page that I opened contained a description of the ceremonies performed at the sepulture of the brother of the order: a story which many of my readers who are acquainted with the history of Germany in those ancient times, must recollect. While living, the author had obtained the admiration of his contemporaries, as well by his writings as by his virtues and his rigid honor. I have the honor to be a member of the same family, but I never before knew that he was a Knight Templar. In the silence of this anxious night I had little expected that he would be called to my recollection, I therefore read with the deepest interest:

"The temple was hung with black: in the middle stood the coffin that contained the body of the brother that slept in death. Nine skeletons stood by the coffin, and held the lamps that faintly lighted the temple, with grimmering rays. On the coffin, near the head, lay a wreath of white roses, then the decorations of the order of Templars, and the naked sword of the departed. On the table was a death's head, and seven candlesticks in the form of sphinxes.

"The knights stepped forward silently clothed in black and wearing the crape of deep mourning. The Grand Master announced the object of the meeting,—to judge the dead that lay in the midst of them.

"'It is midnight,' he said, 'the grave is ready. Our brother has completed the course of his probation: let us see how he has performed it! Is there any among you who steps forward as his accuser?'

"A deep silence prevailed in the assembly. After a long pause, the oldest Brother stepped up to the head of the departed, prayed leave to speak, and began thus:

"'Brother Grand Master—Brother Knights! To man belongeth not the judgment of the dead! Give God the honor! He alone can reward; he alone can punish! He alone sees into the bottom of our souls, and knows our most secret deeds. If, therefore, Brother Grand Master, you call three times, Who will arise and accuse our Brother,—no Templar,—the column alone will answer your call, for we are all brothers in Christ our Lord.'

"'It is my duty, said the Grand Master, once more to ask, Brother Templars! ye are free members of our order. Speak, if you have aught to speak! Again a long silence, for no one spoke. Then the youngest of the templars stepped forward, and stood at the foot of the coffin, and said with a soft voice to the brothers:

He is gone from us, gone! and forever
Those halls he will never more tread,
He he crown'd with the wreaths that fade never,
Our brother, while here, our brother tho' dead.

"'Then,' said the Grand Master aloud; 'where there is no accuser, there is no judge! Doth none accuse him?' And the brothers bowed their knees, and said one and all, 'God is our Judge!' Then the Grand Master took up a heavy hammer of iron, and struck therewith three heavy blows upon a cross of iron and called to the assembly, 'Open the gates of death!'"

I had read thus far, and, hark! three blows were struck on the outside of my chamber. I started, and involuntarily shut the book. I listened a long time—all was silent. All illusion, said my reason. I had in imagination stood in the ranks of the templars; my fancy was excited, and I had internally heard a knocking which had not reached my external organs. I forced myself to be satisfied with this explanation of the case, and took up again the old book, which had exceedingly interested me, in order to read further.

"And the Brother apprentices rolled away the cap from the left side of the coffin, and behold there was an Ian upon grave. The three youngest brethren then descended the edge of the grave with fresh leaves of white and red roses. While they were thus employed the Grand Master said 'Brother Masters! Answer what I ask you. When will God pronounce judgment upon the dead?'

First Master.—At the last judgment.

Grand Master.—Who will have to be the accuser?

Second Master.—His conscience!

Grand Master.—Who his advocate?

Third Master.—None!

Grand Master.—Who will have mercy?

Fourth Master.—None!

Grand Master.—None?

Fifth Master.—God is our Judge.

Grand Master.—Is not God, almighty?

Sixth Master.—And He is just!

Grand Master.—Hear it, Brother Templars! God is just. Bow down then your will to His law.

Seventh Master.—The grave is prepared. Lay your brother upon the lap of his mother!

Then struck the Grand Master with his iron hammer upon the iron cross. The Brothers kneeled in silence around the grave, and kissed the earth."

Again I heard three knocks, plainer than before, and a low sobbing followed this ominous knocking. I heard both distinctly. It sounded as if iron struck upon iron. I stared wildly at the door leading to the corridor, for the sound had proceeded from thence. At that moment I heard a strong, long drawn, rattling, as if proceeding from the throat of the dying. I became immovable; all my blood seemed to fly to my heart; my breast felt as if ready to burst. Unconsciously I had seized the light, I wanted to rush into the corridor, but a nameless panic held me back.

How can I in this manner lose all self-possession? said I to myself, half aloud. I collected myself and endeavored to compose my thoughts. The knocking, and the sobbing, and the rattling, what is it, after all? It is absolutely nothing. I again took up the book bound in black velvet. I resolved to read through the account of the funeral, and then to go to bed. A cold feeling crawled over my skin, but I pretended to myself not to feel it. I took my book, opened it where I had left off, and read further.

"Then the apprentices lifted the lid from the coffin. There lay the dead wrapped in his white shroud. His hands and feet were bound. His temples were crowned with laurel and with vine leaves, upon his breast lay a golden cross richly studded with diamonds, upon his heart a bunch of fresh violets.

"'Brother Apprentices,' said the Grand Master, 'do as I command you, and answer what I ask. What means that wreath of laurel and of vine leaves?'

First Apprentice.—'Man is created to honor and to joy.'

Grand Master.—'A higher destiny awaits him above the stars. The laurel and the vine leaf fade. Take away the wreath.'

And the Apprentices took the wreath from the temples of the dead.

Grand Master.—'What means the golden cross?'

Second Apprentice.—'Man struggles to obtain riches and splendor.'

Grand Master.—'In what state was man born?'

Third Apprentice.—'Without any metal.'

Grand Master.—'So let him also return to the dark grave, without splendor, as poor as he came hither. Take away the gem.'

And the Apprentices took away the golden, richly studded cross, from the breast of the dead.

Grand Master.—'Why are his hands and his feet bound?'

Fourth Apprentice.—'To signify that none here below is free from the chains of his senses.'

Grand Master.—'Death has broken the chains of his senses. Unbind the dead.'

And the Apprentices unbound him.

Grand Master.—'What mean those violets on his breast?'

Fifth Apprentice.—'The love of his brethren has thus bedecked him. In life he was humble and modest. Such only are rewarded in heaven.'

Grand Master.—'Are ye certain that our Brother is dead and prepared to sleep the sleep of the grave?'

Then the sixth apprentice took him by the hand and said, 'The flesh leaves the bone, the skin slips from the flesh; he is dead!'

Grand Master.—'How is his grave prepared?'

And the seventh apprentice stood on its edge, looked down into the grave and said, 'Dark! deep! narrow! and cold!'

Grand Master.—'Brothers, Companions, pay the last duties to your Brother, give him the fraternal blessing, for he stood in the midst of you!'

Then the first Companion laid his right hand upon his head and said, 'Brother Companion! Fare thee well. If to the best of thy power thou hast collected the fruits of wisdom, rest with God!' The second laid his right hand upon his eyes, and said, 'Fare thee well, if thou hast seen with indulgent eyes the weaknesses of thy fellow creatures.' The third laid his hand upon his face, and said, 'God wrote good upon thy features! Blessed are thou if thy face has never deceived thy brothers.' The fourth laid his hand upon his mouth, and said, 'Silent in the grave! Closed are thy lips! light lie the earth upon thee, if thou hast never injured thy brother with thy tongue.' The fifth folded both his hands upon his heart,—'Alas, this pious heart has ceased to beat. My friend, my brother, fare thee well. We live only to die; to those only who have lived like thee, is death welcome. This is the reward of virtue; to the virtuous, death has no terrors.' The sixth laid his right hand upon his feet, and said, 'He who here walks upon the path of virtue, passes through the night of terrors, safely to the kingdom of grace.' Lastly, the seventh laid hold of the right hand of the dead, and said, 'Painful and toilsome has been thy labor on the rough ashlar. God calls thee to labor in a higher sphere. For the last time thy Brothers grasp thy hand. Sleep softly thy long sleep. Above, in the splendid courts of the temple of God, we shall be again united.'

Then the apprentices put the lid upon the coffin and closed it with seven nails. The Masters in the meantime sing to solemn music, 'se recordare Domine, per tua illius dum venerit judex sæculum per ignem.'* Then the assembly struck up the de profundis, while each in his turn stepped forward and sprinkled the coffin with holy water, and said, 'Dead Brother to this world, thou now livest unto God.'

An invisible choir struck up the Libera. All lights were extinguished but that of the Grand Master. The brethren, masters and companions, laid themselves in the form of a cross upon the earth, and prayed silently. The brothers apprentices in the meantime let down the coffin, slowly, and silently into the grave, and the Grand Master lifted three times the iron hammer and let it fall three times upon the cross of iron, and said, 'I bless thee, to the name of the Triune God, in the name of the ancient and venerable order of Templars; in the name of this Lodge of Masters, Companions and Apprentices.'"

At that moment again, three knocks were heard with out, so loud and distinctly, that I shrunk together with terror, and could scarce move a limb. It sounded like iron upon iron: and this time it could be no illusion, I had heard it too plainly. I lost my breath, my hair stood on end, and a chill ran through all my bones. Hark! another sob, but weaker than before! My eyes became fixed, and my hands were clenched together convulsively. My reason was now overcome. I began to admit the belief that it was possible that the spirits of the dead might appear. I struggled against the opinion, but terror forced me to yield.

* The same ceremonies were performed by the "Pothers of Death," at the funeral of a member of their terrible order.

A SINGULAR DEFENCE.

A gentleman followed by a servant in livery, rode into an inn in the west of England one evening a little before dusk. He told the landlord that he should be detained by business in that part of the country for a few days, and wished to know if there were any amusements going on in the town to fill up the intervals of time. The landlord replied that it was their race and assize week, and that he would, therefore, be at no loss to pass away his leisure hours. On the gentleman's making answer that this was fortunate, for that he was fond of hearing trials, the other said that a very interesting trial for robbery would come on the next day, on which people's opinions were much divided, the evidence being very strong against the prisoner; but the man himself persisted resolutely in declaring that he was in a distant part of the kingdom at the time the robbery was committed.

The guest manifested considerable anxiety to hear the trial; but as the court would probably be crowded, expressed some doubt of getting a place. The landlord told him that there could be no difficulty in a gentleman of his appearance getting a seat; but that to prevent any accident, he would himself go with him, and speak to one of the beadles. Accordingly, they went into court the next morning, and through the landlord's interest with the officers of the court, the gentleman was shown to a seat on the bench. Presently after the trial began.

While the evidence was proceeding against him, the prisoner had remained with his eyes fixed on the ground seemingly very much depressed; till on being called on for his defence, he looked up, and seeing the stranger, he suddenly fainted. This excited some surprise, and it seemed, at first, like a trick to gain time. As soon as he came to himself, being asked by the Judge the cause of his behaviour, he said:

"Oh, my lord, I see a person who can save my life; that gentleman," pointing to the stranger, "can prove I am innocent, might I only have leave to put a few questions to him."

The eyes of the whole court were now turned upon the gentleman, who said he felt in a very awkward situation to be called upon, as he did not remember ever to have seen the man before, but that he would answer any question that was asked him.

"Well, then," said the man, "don't you remember landing at Dover at such a time?"

To this the gentleman answered that he had landed at Dover not long before, but that he could not tell whether it was on the day he mentioned, or not.

"Well," said he, "but don't you recollect that a person, in a blue jacket and trousers, carried your trunk to the inn?"

To this he answered that of course some person had carried his trunk for him, but that he did not know what dress he wore.

"But," said the prisoner, "don't you remember that the person who went with you from the inn had told you a story of his being in the service, that he thought himself an ill-used man, and that he showed you a scar he had on one side of his forehead?"

During the last question, the countenance of the stranger underwent a considerable change. He said he certainly did recollect such a circumstance, and on the man's putting his hair aside, and showing the scar, he became quite sure that he saw the same person. A buzz of satisfaction now rang through the court; for the day on which, according to the prisoner's account, the gentleman had met with him at Dover, was the same on which he was charged with the robbery in a distant part of the country. The stranger, however, could not be certain of the time, but said that he sometimes made a memorandum of dates in his pocket book, and might possibly have done so on this occasion. On turning to his pocket-book, he found a memorandum of the time he landed, which corresponded with the prisoner's assertion. This being the only circumstance necessary to prove the alibi, the prisoner was immediately acquitted, amidst the applause and congratulations of the whole court. Within less than a month after this, the gentleman who came to the inn attended by a servant in livery, the servant who followed him, and the prisoner who had been acquitted, were all three brought back together to the same jail for robbing the mail. It turned out that this clever defence at the trial was a scheme skilfully arranged by the thief's confederates to obtain the release of their accomplice.

THE TIMES ON OUR TARIFF.

Monday's Times contains an article which you will doubtless have seen before this reaches you, on the new American Tariff. After flinging its usual quantity of filth upon the American Government, it depicts the sad condition to which American households, workshops, and farms will be reduced by the want of English implements, in the most lugubrious terms. We are to have knives that will not cut, guns that will not go off, ploughs and harrows that will go to pieces in the first furrow, steam-engines that will burst every day, and locomotives always running off the track. If the Times' capacity for lying were not so well known that we are sure the writer of this article is only seeking to throw dust in the eyes of his English readers, we should laugh at his stupidity and ignorance. The very press on which this diatribe is printed is an American press. The reaping-machines which got in the British harvests are of American invention. The sewing-machines in use in the Queen's apartments and in the tailor shops are American machines. The list might be indefinitely extended; but the British people generally, will nevertheless believe the Times, and imagine that neither cutlery nor cloth can be made in America. Some time since I stepped into a cutler's shop in Liverpool to buy a pen-knife. The knives he showed me had ugly and awkward handles. I took out my own American made pocket-knife, which had a handle of vulcanized India-rubber, beautiful in form, and solid as ebony. "Have you any like that?" "Sir," said he, "that is made of bone; I have gone like it." "It is not bone, but India rubber." The man looked at me, and smiled as though I were cheating him. "It is an American knife," said I, "and the handle is certainly of rubber." "Hah!" said he, "that is no American knife; it was made in Sheffield." I showed him the maker's mark, but it was no use. He stuck to it that no such knife could be made in America, that the American mark was put upon it to order by the Sheffield maker; and that it was a bone handle. Argument was useless; the man knew his own trade, and that was enough.—Dr. M'Clintock, in the Methodist.

CAUSE OF HEALTH AND VIGOR.

The following from the Manchester (England) Alliance News, describes the habits of a distinguished literary veteran, William Howitt, who has maintained remarkable health and vigor, both of mind and body:

"I am temperate, because I have seen and felt the good policy of it. As a literary man, if I had fallen in with ordinary literary habits, I should not have been sitting here to write about the advantages of temperance. If I had lived as a majority of literary men of this age, as "a man about town;" if I had lived in town, and kept the usual late hours, and passed evening after evening in hot, crowded rooms, breathing the deadly poison of physical effluvia, gas and air deprived of its ozone; if I had eat over the bottle at late suppers, fashionably called dinners; and, in short, had "jollified," as my literary contemporaries call it, I should have been gone 30 years ago.

As it is, I have seen numbers of literary men, much younger than myself, dying off like rotten sheep—some of them in their early youth, few of them becoming old. They have acquired great reputations; for, if you take notice, they who collect about the press, and jollify with one another, and cry up one another as prodigies, are the men who become most popular, and "verily they have their reward."

They reap much money and much temporary fame, but at what price do they purchase it? At the cost of bodily as well as mental comfort; at the cost of life itself. For my part, seeing the victims of "fast life" daily falling around me, I have willingly abandoned the temporary advantages of such a life, and preferred less popularity, less gains; the enjoyment of a sound mind in a sound body; the blessings of a quiet domestic life, and a more restricted but not less enjoyable circle of society.

And now a word on work. Those who imagine that I only wag a goose-quill mistake a little. In that department indeed, I have perhaps done as much work as any man living. Often in early years, I labored assiduously sixteen hours a day. I never must walking three or four miles or more, in all weather. I work hard in my garden, and could hire a tolerable man at that sort of thing. During my two years' travel in Australia, when about 60, I walked often under a burning sun of 120 or 130 deg. at noon my twenty miles a day for days and weeks together, worked at digging gold in great heat, and against young active men, my twelve hours a day, sometimes standing in a brook. I waded through rivers—for neither man nor nature had made bridges—and let my clothes dry upon my back; washed my own linen, and made and baked my own bread before I ate it; slept occasionally under the forest tree; and through it all was as hearty as a roach!"

"IVORY BUST.—Louis Philippe. (Executed by Machinery.") "Dear me!" exclaimed a country visitor to the International Exhibition, on reading the above description in the Official Catalogue of the Fine Arts Department, "dear me! I had no idea he was guillotined."—Punch.

Family Circle.

CAPTAIN CHARLIE.

"Mother, mother!" called an earnest voice, "May I drill my company on the lawn out here?" and Charlie Aymar sprang across the piazza to the window where his mother sat at work, impatiently tapping his wooden gun on the floor, as he stood awaiting her answer. Mrs. Aymar looked up; a group of ten or twelve boys, resplendent in paper hats and scarlet-striped trowsers, and bristling with tin swords and bayonets, stood by the gate, anxiously awaiting the desired permission.

It was cordially granted, and Captain Charlie, distinguished by a bright-colored flannel patch on each shoulder, in lieu of epaulettes, sprang lightly down the steps, and placed himself at the head of his company. "Right-about-face—forward—march,"—and in a few moments the "American Guards," as they called themselves, stood on the lawn, drawn up in grand array, the lieutenants indicated by yellow stripes on the shoulder, and the corporal by a flaunting peacock's feather in his hat.

The American Guards performed their evolutions in a wonderful manner, a style peculiar to themselves, Charlie ringing out his orders in a clear, distinct voice: "Shoulder arms—present arms—charge bayonets!" This last movement was to have been executed in a very effective manner; but, unfortunately, the second lieutenant was so carried away with excitement that he mistook the right for the left, a mistake that occasioned some confusion in the ranks. Again and again the charge was given, but every time the little lieutenant went in the wrong direction, followed by two or three others, who thought they were bound to attend him.

Charlie scolded very hard, and at last quite lost his temper, and if his mother had not been within hearing, I fear that he would have given vent to his anger in some very hard words. The soldiers looked quite cross at being spoken to in such a harsh way, and affairs between captain and command were getting doubtful, when Mrs. Aymar's interference restored order and good humor.

"Well," said Charlie, "we will give up the old bayonet charge. Can you execute a grand advance and flank movement?" The boys all cried, Yes. So Captain Charlie formed his plans accordingly, the enemy being represented by a clump of rose bushes. The cry of "Forward," was given, and on dashed the American Guards, threatening destruction to every thing that came in their way; but, from some unknown cause, a panic seized two boys in the rear, and the advance proved a failure.

Captain Charlie's brow looked rather dark, as he formed his company for a new trial; and after repeated directions, again the order to advance was given. He had miscalculated the ground, however, and seeing that they were nearing the fence rather fast, ordered a halt; but the American Guards were dashing on at too rapid a rate to heed the order at once, and, being suddenly brought up by the fence, tumbled one over the other in a most unsoldier-like manner.

The captain's temper got the better of him, then. He scolded right and left, threw his gun at the corporal's head, and there is no knowing how far he might have gone, had it not been for the timely appearance of his mother, who, in a few pleasant words, dismissed the disorganized soldiers, and sent the unfortunate captain to the house to be court-martialled for unofficer like conduct. Charlie followed him in their to the parlor, and flinging his hat and sword in the corner, sat down looking very cross. "My son," said Mrs. Aymar, brushing back the curls from his heated brow "did you know that you are not fitted to command others, until you can command yourself? A little patience would have obviated all your trouble. Do you know this text, 'He that ruleth his spirit, is better than he that taketh a city?' Did you ever read that our Lord was famed for military prowess, for conquered cities, or vanquished countries? Yet how infinitely higher he stands than all the conquerors of the earth, because he obeyed the higher law; he ruled his spirit."

Charlie sat still for a long while, thinking of his mother's words, and I think that they made a deep impression on him.

N. Y. Chronicle.

KEEP THE BRAIN FALLOW IN CHILD HOOD

When we are considering the health of children, it is imperative not to omit the importance of keeping the brain fallow, as it were, for several of the first years of their existence. The mischief perpetrated by a contrary course, in the shape of bad health, peevish temper, and developed vanity is incurable. Some infant prodigy, which is a standard of mischief throughout the neighborhood, misleads them. But parents may be assured that this early work is not, by any means, all gain even in the way of work. I suspect it is a loss; and that children who begin their education late, as it would be called, will rapidly overtake those who have been in harness long before them. And what advantage can it be that a child knows more at six years old than its compeers, especially if this is to be gained by a sacrifice of health, which may never be regained? There may be some excuse for this early book-work in the case of those children who are to live by manual labor. It is worth while perhaps to run the risk of some physical injury to them, having only their early years in which we can teach them book knowledge. The chance of mischief, too, will be less, being more likely to be counteracted by their after life. But for a child who is to be at book-work for the first twenty-one years of its life, what folly it is to exhaust in the least its mental energy, which, after all, is its surest implement!

Pittsburg Markets.

APPLES.—From 75@1.25

ASHES.—Pots, 4@4½; Pearls, 5½@5¾; Soda-ash, 2@2½.

BREAD.—Water crackers, ₱ pound, 6c.; Butter do. 7c.; Sugar do. 8c.

BEANS.—Small white, 1.25@1.50 ₱ bus.

BROOMS.—Common to fancy, 1.25@2.50 ₱ dozen.

BUCKETS, &c.—Buckets, per dozen, 1.50@1.75; Tubs, per do. 2.50.

BUTTER.—Fresh roll, 8@9c. ₱ pound; packed, 7½@8c.

BACON.—Plain hams, 6@7c.; sugar cured, 7½@8c.; sides, sugar cured, shoulders, 4½@5, country 4c less.

CHEESE.—Western Reserve, 6@7. Goshen, 10.

CANDLES & SOAP.—Dipped, 10c.; Mould, —; Adamantine, 18c.; Rosin Soap, 4½c.; fancy, 10c.

COTTON YARNS, &c.—Cotton Yarn, ₱ pound, from Nos. 5 to 10, —— and one cent advance each No.; cotton chain, —— colored do. —— cotton wick, batting, fancy do. ——.

CORDAGE.—Rope, per ton, 150@160.

DRIED FRUIT.—Apples, ₱ bushel, 1.50@2.00. Peaches, 2.50@3.00.

DRIED BEEF.—10@12½ ₱ pound.

EGGS.—Barrel or box, 8c.@c. ₱ doz.

FLOUR.—Superfine, (from store), 4.10@4.15; Extra, 4.00@4.10, Extra family, 4.25@4.37½. Rye, 2.87½.

FEATHERS.—Fresh, 35c@40c. ₱ pound.

FISH.—Large No. 3 Mackerel, 8.00@8.50, Baltimore Herring, 6.00; Lake Fish, ——@——; Codfish, 4c@6c.

FEED.—Sales of feed at 55c@70 ₱ 100 pounds.

GRAIN.—Wheat, Red, 90c@1.00; White, 1.00@1.15. Rye, 45c@46. Oats, 27c@28. Corn, 35c@40.

GLASS.—City brands, sales 2.75 prices 3.00@3.12½. Country brands, sales, 2.25, hold 2.75.

GROCERIES.—Sugar by the barrel, 8c@9; hhd. —@——. N. O. Molasses, 45c@47. Golden Syrup, 75c@——. Coffee, 20c@21. Rice, 7@8c.

HOMINY.—3.00 ₱ barrel.

HAY.—Sales at Scales, $12@15 ₱ ton.

IRON.—Common bar, 2½@2½c; Blooms, ——; Pig Metal, $22@26.

LARD.—No. 1, 7@8c.

LEAD, &c.—Bar, 6c.; Pig, 7c. Shot, ₱ bag, 2.25@2.50.

LEATHER.—Sole, 23@24c.; Upper, per dozen, $28@——.

LIME.—Louisville, ₱ barrel, 1.25@——.

NAILS, &c.—10d. ₱ keg, 3.25, with pro rata advancement. Cut spikes, 4.50 ₱ keg, for 3 to 4½ inch.

NAVAL STORES.—Turpentine, ₱ gallon, 1.50. Rosin, ₱ barrel, ——@——; Tar, ₱ barrel, ——.

OILS.—Linseed, 75 ₱ gallon; Tanners', ——; Lard, ——.

POTATOES.—40@50.

POWDER.—Rifle, 7.25 ₱ keg; Rock, 4.50.

RAGS.—Mixed, 3c.

SALT.—No. 1, 1.75 ₱ barrel; Extra, ——@——.

SHEETINGS.—Nos. 1 and 2, ——@9½ ₱ yard.

SKINS.—Flaxseed, 1.60@——₱ bushel; Timothy, 4.75@2.00; Clover, 2.75@4.50.

TALLOW.—Rough, 5c.; rendered, 6@7.

WHITE LEAD.—No. 1, 2.50 per keg.

WOOL.—Coarse, 42c.

Advertisements.

THE YOUTH'S EVANGELIST

Is published twice every month, and is prepared expressly for use in the Sabbath Schools of the United Presbyterian Church. It is printed on clear, white paper, and embellished with fine engravings in every number.

Every number has a Psalm, or part of a Psalm, set to Music suitable for use in Sabbath Schools.

THE TERMS ARE PER PAYMENT, AS FOLLOWS:

Without postage.			Postage paid.
For a single copy,	50c	25	16 copies to one address,	$1	25
4 copies to one address,	1	00	25 " " "	1	50
10 " " "	2	00	50 " " "	3	00
20 " " "	4	00	100 " " "	6	00
50 " " "	9	00	As by law, the postage must be paid at least 3 months, before they can be forwarded to their postage paid.
100 " " "	16	00

We have secured the services of a number of valuable contributors who will furnish original articles for every number, which will add much to the interest of its columns.

It is the intention of the subscriber to make the Youth's Evangelist a help in parents and Sabbath School Teachers in the work of the truth committed to their care, and a welcome visitor in all the families and Sabbath Schools of the Redeemed and United Presbyterian Churches.

All communications, whether for insertion or on business should be addressed to JAMES M. PRINGLE,
P. O. Box 818, Philadelphia, Pa.

AGENTS.—Thomas Johnston, Monmouth, Illinois. John Fleming, Louisville, Ky. W. J. Martin & Co. United Presbyterian Office, Pittsburgh, Pa. Sproat & Lynde, Alleghany, Pa.

A NEW THEOLOGICAL AND MISCELLANEOUS BOOK STORE IN PHILADELPHIA.

WILLIAM S. RENTOUL,

BOOKSELLER & IMPORTER,

NO. 25 NORTH SIXTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA, PENNA.

Begs to inform his friends and patrons that he has removed his business from Pittsburg to Philadelphia, where he will be found as above.

He trusts that in his new location he will continue to be favored with their orders, as he will have greatly increased facilities for selling them on most favorable terms. Ministers' Libraries supplied at low rates. Books bought and exchanged. Orders for foreign books will be carefully attended to.

☞ A full supply of the Catechisms and other publications of the United Presbyterian Board of Publication will at all times be on hand—also the S. S. Books and Libraries recommended by them all which will be sold at low rates.

☞ Call and see his stock, at the above stand. All orders by letter promptly filled, and inquiries answered. Catalogues mailed free on application. ap15 tf

KURTZ'S CHURCH HISTORY.

NOW COMPLETE.

LINDSAY & BLAKISTON, PHILADELPHIA,

HAVE NOW READY

A TEXT-BOOK OF CH

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Published by the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, for the Dissemination of Religion, Morality, Literature and Science.

Rev. Elisha Weaver, Editor. PHILADELPHIA, AUGUST 30, 1862. Vol. II.—No. 35.—New Series.—Whole No. 86.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

Is published every Saturday on behalf of the

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,

BY

REV. ELISHA WEAVER,

General Book Steward,

No 819 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

Notice.—All letters and matters pertaining to the Book Concern or subscribers, sale of papers, and all matters appertaining to Book Concern, or the paper, must be [illegible] Philadelphia, Weaver & Wayman, 819, Philadelphia, and all matters sent by express, and to our city, must be directed to E. Weaver, No 819 Pine St.

All letters or matter for the Christian Recorder must be directed to E. Weaver, Box No. 820, Philadelphia.

TERMS

Two Dollars a year, payable in advance. Single copies, 5 cents.

ADVERTISEMENTS

We solicit Advertisements of all descriptions, suitable for a religious newspaper which will be published as follows.

Cards or Advertisements, inserted for one year, provided they do not exceed eight lines [illegible] paper intended, for eight lines without the paper,—six months, for six dollars, paper included.—three months, four dollars.—one month, $1.50, paper in each case included.

CORRESPONDING EDITORS OF CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Rev. J. P. CAMPBELL, Rev. A. W. WAYMAN,
" J. M. WILLIAMS, " E. T. WILLIAMS,
" O. H. GRAHAM, " C. BUSCH,
Rev. L. ROSS

Poetry.

SABBATH HYMN.

Glory to the glorious One,
God and great, our God alone,
Who thus day hath glorified,
First and best of all heads,
Making it for every clime,
Of all times the sweetest time.
From the beginning, day of days,
Set apart for holy praise;
When he bade the willing earth
All its hidden stores bring forth,
When he gave the shining heaven,
Then to man this day was given.
On this day the Son of God
Left his three days' dark abode;
In the greatness of his might,
Rising to the upper light.
On this day the church puts on
Glory, beauty, robe, and crown.
On this day of days the Lord,
Faithful to his ancient word,
On his burning chariot borne,
Shall his majesty return.
King of kings, he comes in might,
From his heavenly home of light.
To his own Jerusalem,
Old Judea's brightest gem,
To the hill of Jebus, see,
King Messiah, cometh he;
With his cross to bless and save,
With his cross to spoil the grave.
He shall speak, and earth shall hear;
Reeding rocks shall quake with fear.
And the waking dead shall come
From the silence of the tomb,
Shaking heavens and shattered earth
Then shall rise to second birth.
To the kingdom promised long,
With his shining angel-throng,
Righteous vengeance to fulfil,
Recompense for good and ill,
Adam's race from dust to call,
Lo, he cometh, Judge of all!
Then the glory to his crown!
Then the kingdom and the crown!
Then the sinner's hope shall close,
Then begin his endless woes;
Then he knocks, but knocks in vain;
Who shall break his iron chain;
Earth is fleeing, fleeing fast,
And its beauty fades at last;
O beloved, then, awake,
Bonds of carnal slumber break;
Wake, beloved, watch and pray,
While remains us one hour of day!
Death is cometh—oh beware!
Judgment cometh—oh prepare!
Steadfast, steadfast let us stand,
For the judge is nigh at hand;
Steadfast let us rest each night,
Steadfast wake at morning light.

From the Syriac of Ephraem.

For the Christian Recorder.

A VISIT TO THE SOLDIERS' CAMP.

Last Sunday, two ladies and myself took a walk to the soldiers' camp in Woodbury. It is pleasantly situated at about a quarter of a mile from the A. M. E. Church, fronting the road. The Camden and Bridgeton cars pass near by them. Their regiment was nearly, if not quite, full. A very large number came to see them. There were a number of tents, and all that I could see in the most of them was a bundle of straw for their bed and a small stand in the middle. Some few looked to be more comfortably furnished. The volunteers appeared to be very civil. Some of them were marching around, and others standing and sitting, while some were engaged in preparing their supper. We had not been there long before a great many of them started towards a grove where they were to have a meeting. We thought we would go and hear the sermon. They were addressed by a Methodist minister. He had his text from Proverbs iv. 5. They commenced by singing the hymn,—

"Come, thou fount of every blessing."

After singing they had prayer, and then the sermon, which was very interesting. The soldiers formed a circle, and seated themselves on the ground, seeming very attentive. It reminded me more of Christ preaching to the multitude than anything else that I could compare it to. It is a serious thought to think that these men have left their happy homes and families. Many of them have left to meet with them no more, and came to endure the hardships of a soldier. They have enlisted to fight under the flag of the Union till they fall a bleeding victim of death. They must feel a great deal more bound to the honor of their country than they are to the commands of God.

MARY MANLEY.

Woodbury, August 21st, 1862.

For the Christian Recorder.

HARRISON'S LANDING.

MR. EDITOR:—Brethren and Friends:—The army on the James River received orders to march. Their destination is unknown to me, as I am about leaving this part of Dixie's Land, and am now resting in the General Hospital, Charlestown city, opposite Prince George county, with a sick officer of our camp, waiting for the day when we shall move towards home. I thought it would gladden the hearts of my dear brethren to know my whereabouts. As I am writing, I am informed that the steamer on which the officer and myself are to embark, is going to Fortress Monroe, and not to Boston as was expected. Furthermore, all the Union troops are now starting up the road. This being a fact, I will pause awhile.

On Friday, at 6 o'clock, P. M., I am at Norfolk, Va. I find many contrabands at this place, but they are unsettled. They are like the ancient Israelites, having no continuing city. The poor people are much distressed about it. Some sing and pray, while others dance and swear; some laugh, others cry. As they are thus unsettled, it would profit nothing for me to remain at Norfolk. After passing the night in this beautiful city, I left for Fortress Monroe, which is about 50 miles, or a travel of an hour and a half on the boat from Norfolk. Arriving at Fortress Monroe about half past 6 o'clock, A. M., I find the same state of things with our people. Though they have much religious instruction by our white friends, I am glad to know, from good authority, that the benighted slaves are as much susceptible of education and art as any other race. Many of the head winked slaves have demonstrated one fact; that is, color has nothing to do with intelligence. Amen! praise God.

Our people at this place cannot long remain in such a state, because they have no domestic facilities, and there must be an outlet.

Leaving Fortress Monroe at about 11 o'clock, A. M., we steamed away for Point Lookout, a distance of about 90 miles; arriving at 7 P. M., laying off at anchor in the stream all night. Sabbath morning, 10 A. M., I went on land, where I found many sick and wounded soldiers, and a few contrabands. I could say much about this point, but anon. However, I remained at this place until the following Thursday, 21st inst., when I left by obtaining a pass from Quartermaster Edwards, who is a very fractious man, and arrived in the Monumental City, Baltimore, and in the friendly bosom of the Rev. Alexander W. Wayman, whom I always esteemed as a gentleman and a Christian.

When I left Point Lookout, I was attacked with the camp fever, but reaching the Monumental City in time, I was soon cured of the malady. On Sabbath, the 24th inst., by the assistance of God, I was able to fill one appointment for Rev. A. W. Wayman in Bethel at night. After a good gospel sweat, I think it facilitated my feelings, and I am strengthened again to go on the other part of my field of labour, which is North Carolina. It is very difficult in procuring a pass in these times, but, by the grace of God, I must go through.

While I am thus persevering for God and the conversion of mankind, I hope my brethren in the East will no longer neglect my family. If you do not remember them enough to keep them under shelter, you do not love me as you pretend. Kind words never satisfy the stomach. Those who have done their part towards me are exempt from these latter remarks. Will the brethren awake to duty? I tarried in Virginia as long as it was profitable to myself and the contrabands, they being unsettled in locality. They are a class of people who gladly receive the words of truth; and, were they settled at some spot, much good would be effected. At present they are so closely packed in these small tents that they breed diseases; hence mortality is occasioned. The Lord willing, I shall leave the city of Baltimore this week for North Carolina, hoping at that point to give something more encouraging. I have much to say about Virginia—I mean our people. In my next letter I hope to say what I have never said. After Richmond is taken, it will be well for our people in that vicinity.

I am, dear brethren, your fellow laborer in the gospel field, for the spread of the dear Redeemer's kingdom.

GEORGE A. REE.

Harrison's Landing, Va., August 14th, 1862.

For the Christian Recorder.

THE WORLD ENLIGHTENED BY CHRISTIANITY.

From the earliest period of man's existence there has been a continual advancement in his acquisitions of knowledge. In his rudimental state he was more simple in habit of thought and action, but as he advanced in life he gradually acquired a better understanding of his own nature and wants. Necessity becoming the genius of invention, his accumulating wants suggested the means to be employed surpassing those ends. Nature, with her thousand beauties, was the great book out of which he learned his various relations to the surrounding world. As the child creeps from place to place, wondering at every effort it makes to move—astonished at its own progress—startled at every new discovery—delighted at every new acquisition, yet not knowing why, or for what purpose, these things were created; so man, in his primeval state, beheld the wonders of Almighty power, but could not understand them. But it is the mission of mind to develop all its noble powers, so lavishly bestowed by a beneficent Creator, that man may ascend the scale of high moral, social, political, and religious attainment. He is destined for a lofty station in the economy of God. Without the light which Revelation sheds on his mind, he would wander without certainty, without a helm to guide his tempest-tossed bark amid the surging waves of time.

While the ancients did much to enlighten their fellow men—while they were ardently seeking the means by which to alleviate man's wants, and bring him into the possession of happiness, there was no stone left unturned, nor system unemployed, to accomplish this desire. Some of their wise men had concluded that they had found the long sought means—they had solved the problem which had challenged the mightiest efforts of their predecessors. Egypt, renowned among the nations of the earth, claims priority in her efforts to benefit the world by her lofty attainments. Her energies were exerted to forward man's deliverance from darkness and superstition. First among the nations, she was ever considered the most renowned school of learning in the world, and bestowed its noblest labors and finest arts on the improvement of mankind. Her achievements were great, her progress wonderful; sages were wont to assemble at her academies, and learn from her wisdom and politics. Her laws, the most perfect and equitable, were administered for the good of all, guarding with vigilance the interests of the poor no less than those of the wealthy. Science was made to subserve the good of every class of the inhabitants. No means which tended to elevate and restore humanity were unemployed. With her architecture, literature, and arts, both of sculpture and war, she could not satisfy the immortal mind of man. Though her priests were ever ministering around their altars; though her babbling multitudes made the hills and vales vocal with their songs of joy at finding their long sought god, Apis; though they worshipped multitudinous gods, these were inadequate to the great work of meeting humanity's wants. Egypt's efforts were not crowned with complete success. Greece vied with the world in her glorious attainments, casting a radiance over the Republic of letters, whose genial rays of light are still blessing mankind. The beauty and harmony of her language, the delicate shades of thought, the strength and power of her philosophy, remain as lasting monuments of her greatness; yet, with all these, Greece could not give to the world that for which it longed, and sighed, and waited. Rome, the mighty warrior, enters upon the stage, and with her invincible legions, sought to "conquer a peace" for mankind, but signally failed in the attempt. Turning her attention to religion, she collected the gods of all nations and temples them in her metropolis. Not satisfied with this, she threw around them her shields and swords, accompanied with mandates and seals. Her orators and statesmen, councils and emperors, all gladly lent their aid to sustain the fading glory of the fabled deities, judging that by so doing they would confer lasting blessings on the world.

While humanity groaned for deliverance, man had exhausted his energies in attempts to find a panacea to heal his wounds, the frail bark of human genius was about foundering on the fearful breakers of human reason. Prophetic fire had lit a flame which had been burning for ages, but hid amid the clouds of smoke which arose from the forges of human invention. The arms of the forgers and smiths becoming paralyzed, dropped the sledges with which they had long contended, exclaiming, "Our craft is gone!" Their gods and oracles gave uncertain augaries, their priests were dumbfounded, their temples deserted, their joanses closed, each wandering in his own way. When the eastern Magi directed their gaze toward the rising of the sun, and lo! a star more brilliant than ever mortal ken before descried, attracted their attention, and to it they took their mysterious, but heaven-directed way; bearing with them precious gifts befitting so wonderful a personage as "King Emmanuel," until the shining meteor poised over the dwelling where the young child was. Shepherds watering their flocks reposed in the plains of Bethlehem. The midnight clear and calm, the silence of the hour is broken by angelic salutations, and the heavenly visitant, proclaiming the advent of the mightiest Prince ever born of woman. The world awakes as from a long dream to behold God manifest in the flesh.

R. H. C.

Brooklyn.

(To be continued.)

For the Christian Recorder

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

August 25th, 1862.

MR. EDITOR:—Things in this city have all changed into new activity. Thousands of soldiers are pouring into the city, and thronging the streets,—drums are heard in every direction, and tents are being pitched upon every hill-top and low dale. Seventy-five or a hundred wagons all in a row, can frequently be seen, either loaded with soldiers, tents, or muskets. One would imagine that treason, with all its abominable forms, would necessarily soon have to be crushed out, and that to an eternal non-existence.

But many of us have now concluded, that the judgment of God will never cease its plagues upon this nation, till slavery and oppression shall be foiled, and right, equity, and justice shall be seen in all its grand regalia, leading on in triumphant conquest the victories of humanity.

This has been one of the most excitable weeks with our people, I suppose, ever known in their history.

The desire of the President of the United States to have an interview with a committee of colored men, and a compliance with that desire on the part of our people, very nearly made some of our citizens frantic with excitement. Many seemed to have thought that it was in the voluntary power of the President to transport at his option all the colored people out of the country. And in this state of excitement every imaginable idea, however absurd to common reason it might be, seemed to have gained a respectable idea of currency in the mind of some class of thinkers.

But the great excitement appears to have grown out of a neglect upon the part of many to sit down and properly read the papers in a spirit of characteristic soberness, and then ascertaining to what extent the President's power goes to enable him to put in force what he has proposed.

There is no need of such wild excitements arising from a mere suggestion, unless the parties have an absolute power to effectuate their repugnant schemes and plans. And that the President of the United States has not, and I don't believe that he would use it if he had.

Somehow a report gained currency, that Rev. H. M. Turner was the prime mover of this whole affair, and that he had waited upon the President, in reference to this Central American project, which brought down in the midst of the upstir a heavy tirade of denunciations upon him in every direction. Though none seemed to vent themselves in his presence, yet many seem to be conscientiously persuaded to credit the report. But Mr. Turner has now corrected the false statement, and gave them to understand that he hated the infamous scheme of compulsory colonization as much as they could. Things took a change immediately, and now the great drift of objections appears to be running in another direction.

Last Thursday was the day on which the committee, sent to wait upon the President, was to make their report to the parties who sent them. At 4 o'clock, as had been agreed upon, the committee of five from each of the colored churches in the city, met at Union Bethel church to hear the report of the five who waited on the President. But through some means, the majority of the committee did not appear, for what reason I cannot tell. However, Mr. John T. Costin, one of the committee being present, offered, I am told by several present, to give a minority report, but it was judged best to adjourn, until they could receive information as to the committee's whereabouts, at which time they will again convene to hear the report of the committee, dismiss them if necessary, and I judge lay the contents of the interview with the President before the colored people of the United States, for their consideration and action. I think there never was a time when a better opportunity offered itself to our people to speak to the civilized world than the present. And I believe so soon as this committee will be able to lay the question before our people in an official manner, (as I hope they will take no action before) that the nation will have a chance to hear from the black man in every direction. I suppose no colored man in the nation would have any objection to going any where, if this government pay them for their two hundred and forty years' work.

Rev. Mr. French, formerly of Wilberforce college, Ohio, but now of Hilton Head, S. C., and the distinguished Robert Small, the colored man, who came out of Charleston, S. C., with a war ship, guns, cannons, &c., and a large number of other colored people, paid a visit to Israel church on last Sabbath evening. After the sermon, the pastor introduced the Rev. Mr. French, who spoke of his labors South, and gave great satisfaction about that colored regiment which has been so contemptuously spoken of by so many papers, or pro-slavery sheets. After many interesting remarks, Mr. Robert Small was introduced, and told the history of his escape, which was mixed with some very sensible details, and created some laughter, and raised any quantity of smiles. It was the first attempt of Mr. Small to speak in public, and taking into consideration his unnatural situation, being placed before an intelligent audience of white and colored, numbering twelve hundred, his effort was a great success, notwithstanding his timidity was discernible.

He will accompany Mr. French through the principal cities north, as a living specimen of unquestionable African heroism. This war seems to be destined by Providence to coin out the rare qualities of the depressed humanity of every nation. The German, the Irishman, the Frenchman, and the negro have excited wonder; and though the negro is the last starting out, look out if he does not come out first.

H. M. T.

PLYMOUTH CAMP MEETING

New Bedford, Mass., Aug. 1862.

MR. EDITOR:—Your humble servant was appointed by the committee reporter for the Plymouth Camp Meeting. This Camp Meeting commenced on the 16th day of August, and closed on the 21st inst. This Camp Meeting was conducted by Rev. Wm. Johnson, of Boston, missionary for New England district, assisted by Revs. Mitchell, Chase, Shneeves and Grimes.

The grove was one of the best places for a Camp Meeting that I ever saw, bounded on the south, east and north by a beautiful woods, on the west by a beautiful pond of fresh water five miles around—30 miles from New Bedford on a beautiful turnpike, 40 miles from Boston by railroad, one mile distant from the ancient town of Plymouth. The congregation was principally white. Some of the friends were from Boston and some from New Bedford. We had a good time. The Lord was there to bless.

This was conducted on the old plan. There were no hucksters or shops for trafficking. There were six board tents on the ground to accommodate the friends. Notwithstanding the great rush on Sabbath and every afternoon and night, there was no quarrel or fight or anything else to disturb the meeting. The best order I ever saw on such occasions was observed. The preaching was good. Every speaker spoke with that zeal that characterizes the ministers of the gospel. There were three souls who professed to be happily converted to God, and three more were left wounded, but inquiring of the watchman, "Saw ye him whom my soul desires to love?"

We closed with a love feast, and the God of love was there. There were over three thousand persons present to witness the closing scene. Some three hundred white citizens of Plymouth took great interest in the meeting. They spoke, sung and prayed with us; all distinctions on account of color were lost, and we were all one in Christ Jesus.

The closing scene was very affecting. Many were brought to tears while we took the parting hand. The general cry from the multitude was, Brethren, come next year to see us again. Others cried, Carry on your meeting over another Sabbath, and we will ensure you $50 on Sabbath. Elders Mitchell and Johnson consulted with the brethren. Your humble servant said, No; leave them hungry or with a good appetite, and they will enjoy the next meal that we or somebody else will set before them next year. The majority said close.

May the good Lord bless the citizens of Plymouth Rock and Plymouth Hall, of which Rev. Wm. H. Chase has promised to notice in his epistle to the RECORDER.

Respectfully yours, for Christ,
WM. W. GRIMES,
District Book Steward.

THE "MEAN WHITES" OF THE SOUTH.

Agriculture, when carried on by slaves, being by a sure law restricted to the most fertile portions of the land, and no other form of systematic industry being possible where slavery is established, it happens that there are in all slave countries vast districts becoming, under the deteriorating effects of slave industry, constantly larger, which are wholly surrendered to nature, and remain forever as wildernesses. This is a characteristic feature in the political economy of the slave states of the South, and is attended with social consequences of the most important kind. For the tracts thus left, or made desolate, become in time the resort of a numerous horde of people, who, too poor to keep slaves and too proud to work, prefer a vagrant and precarious life spent in the desert to engaging in occupations which would associate them with the slaves whom they despise.

In the Southern states no less than five millions of human beings are now said to exist in this manner, in a condition little removed from savage life, eking out a wretched subsistence by hunting, fishing, or hiring themselves out for occasional jobs, by plunder. Combining the restlessness and contempt for regular industry peculiar to the savage with the vices of the proletaire of civilized communities, these people make up a class at once degraded and dangerous, and, constantly reinforced as they are by all that is idle, worthless, and lawless among the population of the neighboring states, form an inexhaustible reserve of ruffianism, ready at hand for all the worst purposes of Southern ambition.

The planters complain of these people for their idleness, for corrupting their slaves, for their thievish propensities, but they cannot dispense with them; for in truth they perform an indispensable function in the economy of slave societies, of which they are at once the victims and the principal supports. It is from their ranks that those filibustering expeditions are recruited which have been found so effective an instrument in extending the domain of the slave power; they furnish the border ruffians who, in the colonization struggle with the Northern states, contend with freesoilers in the territories; and it is their antipathy to the negroes that the planters securely trust for repressing every attempt at servile insurrection. Such are the "mean whites," or "white trash," of the Southern states. They comprise several local subdivisions; the "crackers," the "sand-hillers," the "clay-eaters," and many more. The class is not peculiar to any one locality, but is the invariable outgrowth of negro slavery wherever it has raised its head in modern times. It may be seen in the new state of Texas as well as the old settled districts of Virginia, the Carolinas, and Georgia; in the West India Islands no less than on the continent. In the states of the Confederacy it comprises, as I have said, five millions of human beings—about seven tenths of the whole white population.—Prof. Cairns.

GUIZOT ON THE BIBLE.

M. Guizot has lately delivered an address on taking the chair at the annual meeting of the Protestant Bible Society of Paris. He said:—"Historically, the Old Testament and the Gospel contain a fact—a spectacle without parallel. It is the history—if I may be pardoned such an expression—it is the history of God himself in his relations with souls and human societies. It is the spectacle of the one, real, personal God, incessantly present and acting in the world. No other national and religious history presents anything resembling it. Everywhere else, in the traditions and monuments of States, you only meet with gods evidently of human invention. You find the work of human imagination, the recitals of human adventures, attributed to persons pretending to be divine. The Old Testament and the Gospel bear an entirely different character; it is the presence and the action of God who made man and the world, and who governs them. And that great spectacle, that unique spectacle, is first unfolded among a small people shut up and ignored in a little corner of the world. The religion of the Old Testament commenced in isolation and obscurity. Then all at once on a given day, at a determined hour, that religion passes from obscurity to an immense ambition—from isolation to the conquest of the world. It announces that conquest, and advances to it through the most unexpected enterprises, and by contests sometimes the most sanguinary, sometimes the most skilful. And it is evidently attaining its purpose; evidently our earth is belonging to the Christian nations; they are conquering it by mind and strength, and will possess it entirely. Who would not be struck with such a fact accomplished by the Bible? Who would not see in it a proof of their mission and a source of their power? I pass from the historical to the moral order. Since it has existed, and everywhere where it exists, humanity is in the presence of great problems which concern it and which preoccupy it passionately. What are we? Whence do we come? Where are we going? What do our nature and destiny signify? These are questions which naturally and invincibly arise in the human mind. Our sacred books have for these questions precise, positive, and striking solutions; alone they explain to man his present state, and reveal to him that of the future. On the one hand, the presence and constant action of God in the world; and, on the other, the satisfaction of the moral and imperious requirements of humanity. That is what the Bible is, and what it effects—that is why it is only necessary to be spread abroad, and to be kept constantly before the eyes of man to assure its complete empire."

LEND YOUR PAPER.

We commend the remarks below to our readers, reminding them that the plan proposed is one of the cheapest and most effective ways of doing good. If each of our patrons would thus employ their papers after having read them, hundreds of new subscribers could be obtained without difficulty, besides doing incalculable good:

A good instrument should not be lost any more than a good opportunity. A religious newspaper containing impressive paragraphs, admonitions, affecting narratives, showing the power and excellence of religion, cautions against the snares of a wicked world, rousing exhibitions of the value of the soul, and hearty recommendation of the Saviour, is an instrument which should not be thrown away. Do not let each a paper be torn up as soon as your family have read it. You have neighbors who never see a religious paper, and probably never will if left to themselves. These paragraphs will be fresh and attractive to them, and will be read. Mark some of the most striking pieces with your pen, and hand the paper round among your neighbors. See that it goes to a good number of families. This may cost you a little time and attention, but it is one of the most ready ways of doing good. The children in your neighbor's family, the apprentice in his shop, and boarders in his house, may there read that which they never will forget; and the scrap which you throw away might save many souls if it was put in circulation. There are secular papers enough which you can tear up and burn without compunction. But when the press has sent out, in any form, a message of salvation, do not stop it. Send it forward.

WITH CHRIST.

How uniform and majestic the testimony that rises from all the lands and ages of faith to this simple truth—that it is not rules of conduct, not systems of ethics, not patterns of propriety, not eloquent expositions, that inspire the believing and faithful heart with its immortal energy and peace—but the simple, secret, assurance of being as one with the Lord Jesus, and resting in his almighty friendship! Where is the fiery furnace deep enough to burn despair into our souls, if we can see walking with us through the fire the form of the Son of God? What, then, is the tribulation, or famine or sword, or nakedness that shall separate us from the love of God in Christ Jesus our Lord? The mystery of that unity where he who is one with God yet cried, "Not as I will, but as thou wilt," is not for us to understand. Yet the prayer of promise, "They shall be with me where I am," is for us to lay hold of and breathe again and again, when we are aching and alone and troubled. So the believers have found. When the brilliant, amiable and accomplished young Italian woman, Olympia Morata, whose learning and loveliness graced the splendid epoch of Leo X. had become the persecuted victim of Romish tyranny for honoring Christ above a polluted priesthood, then poverty, sickness, desolation, exile, tried their worst upon her constancy. After she who had been the delicate nursling of court and letters had fled across the stony fields of Bavaria, with literally bare and bleeding feet, the strength of the frail body failing, she bent under the roughness of fortune, and quietly laid down to die. To one of her noble friends in Italy she wrote: "Let the word of God be the rule of the life, the lamp upon thy path, and thou wilt not stumble." As the purple flood of life ebbed in her thin, white frame, she said: I desire to die because I know the secret of death. The cunning mechanism is near its dissolution. I desire to die, that I may be with Jesus Christ, and find in him eternal life. Do not be disturbed at my death, for I shall conquer in the end; I desire to depart and be with Christ! With Christ! So, the world over, and through all ages, in the first century or the last, the true heart of faith answers, in its final and glorified hour, to the prayer of Jesus: "With me, where I am."—Dr. Huntington.

MISSIONARIES COMPARATIVELY SAFE.—God's providence is the surest protection of his servants. Rev. Dr. Turner, author of Nineteen Years in Polynesia, said, when speaking in a lecture at Glasgow, Scotland, of the few violent deaths connected with the missions in the South Sea Islands compared with others, that two hundred persons in search of sandal wood had been killed during the last thirty years, while of one hundred and twenty missionaries, who had labored there the last twenty years, only Williams, and Harris, and Mr. and Mrs. Gordon had been killed. The missionaries had rescued 1,250,000 from savagism, and would rescue 500,000 more. How small a sacrifice to secure such results.

HOW DOES GOD GIVE SUCCESS IN BATTLE?—OR A PLEA FOR PRAYER IN BEHALF OF OUR COUNTRY.

Some time ago, we called the attention of the readers of our periodical to the question, "Has God anything to do with success or defeat in war?" and showed that He had much to do with it, viz.: that He gave,

1st. Success in battle to those who rely upon His aid.

2d. That He sometimes produces a panic, in the army of those who disregard His authority, or refuse His assistance.

3d. That He sometimes gives the victory to the few and the weak.

4th. That He gives wisdom to plan an attack to those who ask Him.

And now our inquiry is, "How does He do these things?" Does He work a miracle in behalf of those who trust in Him, or can He accomplish the work without resorting to a miracle? If He can, then the objections generally brought against the agency of God in such matters will at once fall to the ground, and the reasonableness of the Christian's faith in God's providence be at once vindicated.

Pious people, ever since the destruction of the "Spanish Armada," have believed that it was done by God to preserve the liberties of England, and save Protestantism on the continent of Europe. But such belief has been met with sneers similar to that in the well known lines of Pope:

"Think we like some weak Prince the Eternal Cause
Prone for his favorites to reverse his laws!
Shall burning Etna, if a sage requires,
Forget to thunder, and recall her fires?
On air or sea new motions be imprest,
Oh, blameless Bethel, to relieve thy breast!
When the fair fleet in mountain billows foam so high,
Shall gravitation cease if you go by?"

Even Macaulay, the historian, ridicules the idea that God would interfere with the ordinary laws of nature to destroy the Spanish fleet.

But was it necessary thus to interfere in order to secure its destruction? Could God not influence the minds of its conductors, so that they would set sail at precisely the time necessary to meet the storm when they did meet it, and so the result would be all the same, whether the storm was produced by the fiat of God, or came in the ordinary course of nature? And is not the same true of every battle, whether on land or sea? Cannot God, by influencing the mind of a commander or commanders, bring about the same result that interference and miracle would produce? Let us see!

Some twenty-seven hundred years ago, the kings of Moab, Ammon, and Edom conspired against the king of Judah. The king of Judah was sore afraid of their great army—he sought help of God—his prayer was heard, and help was promised. He was required to go forth, and meet the immense host of the three kings, but not to fight; he must "stand still, and see the salvation of God." How will God destroy the host of his enemies? Will He resort to a miracle, and cause lightnings and hailstones to fall upon them? or shall an angel be sent from heaven with whetted sword to destroy them? Nay; it can be done without this, or by influencing the mind of part of the host. Accordingly, God influenced the minds of the men of Mount Seir, who were lying in ambush, so that they fell upon their own camp, instead of the camp of Judah, and the entire army was destroyed, every one fighting against his fellow.

Yes; God can work out all His purposes, first by influencing the minds of men, and now, at least, we think He does so. Thus it is declared in the book of Revelation, in reference to those kings who should assist to build up the Roman Catholic Hierarchy: "God hath put it into their hearts to fulfil His will, and to agree and give their kingdom to the beast."

Indeed, even the Old Testament Scriptures are full of illustrations of this truth. Take, for example the case of Joseph—sold by his brother—brought into Egypt by the Ishmaelites—cast into prison by the accusation of a wicked woman. How without a miracle can he be taken out of his prison-house, and exalted to the second place in the kingdom? Easy enough. God has the hearts of all men in His hand. He inclines the heart of the jailer to Joseph; he is made the keeper of the prison, and, consequently, comes into contact with two of Pharaoh's court prisoners, and is afterward remembered to Pharaoh by one of them, as one able to interpret his dream. Thus God can and will work out all His purposes concerning individuals and nations.

To apply the principle to our own case as a nation. How easy it is for God to influence the mind of our generals, that we would be successful in every battle. Take, as an illustration, our defeat at Bull Run.

I presume the positions taken in Senator Chandler's late speech will, in reference to that battle, generally be admitted, viz: we would have won the battle,

1st. If Patterson had done his duty.

2d. If McDowell had attacked on Friday instead of Sabbath.

3d. If Keyes' brigade had not blocked the way for the passage of troops three hours on Sabbath morning.

4. If our commanders had not made a mistake in reference to a rebel regiment, supposing it one of our own, until too late to save a battery.

5. If the reserves had been brought up at the proper time.

Now, what was necessary to secure any one or all of these things being the opposite of what they were? Simply such a change in the minds of these commanders, as would secure different action. And how easy for God to have produced this change! Is it not true, that "the king's heart is in the hand of the Lord?" He did not do so, doubtless because we were not then (and I fear are not yet) sufficiently humbled as a nation for our sins, and so the rod must be continued.

But that God could have helped us, no one can doubt, and that, too, without interfering with the ordinary course of any of the laws of nature. And if this be true, the conclusion is inevitable.

1st. It is both the privilege and duty of Christians to pray daily to God, that he would thus influence the mind of rulers and generals to take proper measures for the suppression of rebellion, and for the restoration of peace and prosperity to the land.

The wisdom of men is foolish, and if we trust to it, we are trusting to a broken reed. Indeed, God has been teaching us this very lesson. At the commencement of the rebellion, the great mass of our people thought they were safe with Scott as a commander—after his removal, they put their trust in McClellan's wisdom. How easily have they been disappointed! Yes, and they will be disappointed, until they put their trust in God. He can give wisdom. Yes, and He has promised to give it. If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not. Let us, then, have more prayer to God, that He may bestow upon us this much needed gift.

A. R.

AN INCENDIARY SHEET.—CHARLESTON, S. C.

In the Southern Lutheran, published in Charleston, S. C., we find the following sentiment by Rev. Dr. Bachman, author of a Book on the Unity of the human race, in which he maintained that negroes are human beings, and descended from Adam:

"You may fetter the arms and bind a freeman in chains,—you may lay him in a dungeon, and place a gag in his mouth, but the moment he breaks his shackles, he will rise up a man, AND TELL NO TO HIS OPPRESSORS."

Circumstances alter cases. While the practical force of this sentiment is, that when Secessionists get strong enough, they should murder the patriotic men who are loyal to their country, it is considered the very thing in the Confederate States; but this identical sentiment, in these identical words, if they were used in Charleston, on the broad principles of our general humanity, would send a man to the gallows. The fact seems to be that the great Naturalist being a Northerner by birth, and occasionally renewing the old impressions by visits, falls unconsciously into the "wretched cant" about freedom which is current in our section. If the negroes in South Carolina agree with the theory of Dr. B.'s book, and really imagine themselves to be men, the "SOUTHERN LUTHERAN" will be a most dangerous and incendiary document to circulate among them. It will be as mischievous as Uncle Tom's Cabin or Wendell Phillips' speeches. They, poor creatures, not feeling the guilt of their skin, as they should, will understand Dr B. as preaching insurrection, and charge their uprising to his incitement. In that case his superlative devotion to the Southern Confederacy may not save him from the "chains," "dungeons," and "shackles" which figure in his eloquent outburst. The Doctor will, perhaps, find that R would have been safest to stick to "the Quadrupeds of North America." The bipeds of that Continent, black, white, and mixed assorted, are dangerous subjects.

Lutheran and Missionary.

A SURPRISING phenomenon in nature is this that the soul of man, which ranges abroad through the heaven and the earth and the deep waters, and unfolds a thousand mysteries in nature, which penetrates the systems of stars and suns, worlds upon worlds, should be so unhappy a stranger at home and should not be able to tell what itself is, or what it is made of.

WOUNDS FROM BULLETS.

The terrible experiences of the battle-field give our thoughts and inquiries at present a war like direction; and it is well for us to know somewhat of the chances of life which our wounded soldiers may have, after being once hurt. A recent volume on military surgery, by Dr. Appis, informs us that "bullets are sometimes found in the body of the wounded person quite flattened out; sometimes they split in equal halves; and sometimes they will strike against a stone, and be scattered in all directions like a shell. In Algeria, a ball broke into five fragments on a rock five or six paces from a grenadier; the first fragment struck and broke his right ankle, two others pierced further down, the fourth wounded his right thigh, and the fifth lodged in the skin at the back of his head.' During the revolution of 1848, Dr. Appis made many curious observations upon gunshot wounds. The lower limbs, he says, are struck in the proportion of about five to four with respect to the upper. The principal cause of this difference is evidently the greater bulk of the lower extremities, while the movements of the arms presenting a foreshortened appearance to the ball, also probably contribute to it. The following is the relative frequency with which different parts of the body are struck by the bullet: leg, 100; thigh, 97; face, 61; arm, 60; hand, 57; chest, 53; abdomen, 52; shoulder, 42; skull, 37; forearm, 36; knee-joint, 34; foot, 29; elbow-joint, 22; neck, 22; ankle-joint, 25; hip, 6; vertebræ, 10; wrist, 2. The treatment of a gunshot wound is often much complicated by the foreign bodies which the bullet carries in with it—pieces of wadding, of cloth, of shoe-leather, of worsted, of hair, of linen, and of wood. A citizen of Lyon in 1835 had twenty Napoleons in his pocket, which, struck by the ball, were driven into his stomach, and, adds, the practical Laroche, 'all more or less spoiled.'

PRAISE FOR SUCCESS.

Is not the hand of God in this?
Is not this end divine?
Lord of Success, Thee will I bless,
Who on my paths dost shine.
I reap the fruit of God's design,
By Him it was foreseen:
He thought of this as well as I,
Or it had never been.
I blindly guessed; but He foreknew:
I served, He did command;
Wherefore I praise His careful eye,
And His unerring hand.
The bow is drawn by feeble arms,
Aim taken in the dark;
A providential Hand both guide
The arrow to the mark.
As Thou hast crowned my actions, Lord,
With good success to-day,
The crown, together with myself,
At Thy blest feet I lay.
Lord, who art pleased to prosper me,
To bless me in my ways;
Pervade my weak endeavoring heart,
Which smiteth at Thy praise.

JOHN MASON.

LINT.

Fibre by fibre, shred by shred,
It falls from her delicate hand
In feathery flims, as soft and slow
As fall the flakes of a vanishing snow
In the lap of a summer land.

There are jewels of price in her rosette ears,
And gold round her white wrist coils,
There are costly trifles on every hand,
And gems of art from many a land
In the chamber where she toils.

A rare bird sings in a gilded cage
At the open casement near;
A sun-ray glints through a swaying bough,
And lights with a diamond radiance now
The dew of a falling tear!

A sob floats out to the summer air
With the song-bird's latest trill;
The gossamer folds of the drapery
Are waved by the swell of a long, low sigh,
And the delicate hands are still.

"Ah, beauty of earth is naught, is naught!
And a girlish youth is vain!
I have seen a sister's scarred face shine
With a youth and beauty all divine
By the soldier's couch of pain!"

"I have read of another whose passing shade
On their pillows the mangled kissed
In the far Crimea!" There are no more tears,
But she plucks the gems from her delicate ears,
And the gold from her slender wrist.

The bird still sings in his gilded cage;
But the Angel in her heart
Hath stung her soul with a noble pain
And beauty is naught, and youth is vain,
While the patriot's wounds still smart.

* * * * * *

Fibre by fibre, shred by shred
Still fall from her delicate hand
The feathery flims, as soft and slow
As fall the flakes of a vanishing snow
In the lap of a summer land.

There are crimson stains on breasts and brows,
And filets in ghastly coils,
The wails are lofty, and white, and bare,
And moaning echoes roll over there
Through the chamber where she toils.

No glitter of gold on her slender wrist,
Nor gem in her rosette ears,
But a youth and a beauty all divine
In the face of the Christian maiden shine,
And her gems are the soldier's tears.

The Christian Recorder.

Philadelphia, August 30, 1862.

NOTICE.

TO THE DISTRICTS OF PHILADELPHIA, NEW ENGLAND, OHIO, INDIANA, AND MISSOURI, OF THE A. M. E. CHURCH MINISTERS

Dear Brethren:—As we have a number of superannuated ministers on the list in said Districts therefore it will be expected that the ministers and preachers, on their circuits and stations, will do all they can to collect the necessary money, and we also recommend that the Class leaders be instructed to collect and set the amount on the Class book opposite each member's name, as also all the collections called, per Discipline, for the Annual Conference, and publish the same once every quarter, that it may be seen who they are that work for God and his cause. We think it is time to give credit to those of our people who do work, so that God's name may be glorified

Our friend and brother, Rev. W. D. W Schureman, is recovering as fast as the circumstances of his case will allow. It is hoped that he will soon be restored to active service in the itinerant field.

NOTICE.

Mrs. Jane Johnson's card in our advertising columns, giving notice of her business of laying out and shrouding the dead, to her numerous friends and the public, should not go unheeded. She has claims, at least on the members of Bethel Church, of which she has for many years been an active member, and her husband, brother Limas Johnson, was the first colored man that taught singing-school in Philadelphia, and was President and Leader of Bethel Choir till the day of his death. His widow should not be forgotten.

NOTICE.

The twenty-second Anniversary of the A. M. E. Wesley Sabbath School, under the pastoral direction of Rev. A. L. Stanford, and superintendency of Mr. J. H. Hughes, will be celebrated on Thursday, the 4th of September, 1862, at that well-known place of resort, the Washington Retreat. Several distinguished ministers are expected, on the occasion, to favor the audience with their presence and addresses.

All persons leaving Philadelphia to participate with this social gathering, will find it convenient to take the cars from Fifteenth and Willow Sts., at the hours of 8, 10, 9.30, 10.30, 11.30, A. M.; 2, 3.15, 4.15, P. M. Excursion Tickets may be obtained of the Superintendent, 805 Monterey Street, or of Mrs. E Nixon, 742 Lombard Street, or at the Pastorate, No. 247 Currant Alley, above Spruce St., at the following prices:

Adults, 20 cents—Children, 15 cents.

NOTICE.

If there be no preventing Providence, the Rev. Jabez B. Campbell will deliver an address to the members of the United Benevolent Daughters of Rev. Henry Davis' Society, in the A. M. E. Church, in Frankford, Pa., on the evening of the 4th of September, 1862. The doors will be opened at half-past seven o'clock. Admittance ten cents. The proceeds for the above named Society. There will be refreshments to be disposed of, and the profits arising therefrom for the above named Society.

LETITIA BOWSER, President.
ELIZABETH MORRIS, Secretary.

NOTICE.

Several Sabbath schools of the Norristown circuit will celebrate their Sabbath school anniversary, on Wednesday, September 3d, 1862, about one mile and a half from Horstown, Pa., in Mr. Asher's Woods.

The friends of Sabbath schools are invited, and expected to attend, as eminent speakers are expected on the occasion.

W. D. W. SCHUREMAN, Elder in charge
T. H. COOPER, Subordinate.

The A. M. E. Church, in Marietta, was dedicated to the service of Almighty God, Elder J. H. Smith, of Burlington Circuit, officiating. After the reading services were concluded, the name of the church was announced by Rev. Thomas Henry, as follows: The Daughter of Bethel; after which the consecration song was sung, and when concluded the following text was announced by Elder J. H. Smith, Revelation, first chapter and last clause of the twelfth verse. And when this great service was concluded, we proceeded to take up a collection for the benefit of the church, and raised the sum of thirty dollars.

T. H. HENRY,
Elder in charge of Lancaster Circuit.

For the Christian Recorder

A SAD COMMUNICATION.

MR. EDITOR:—I write to inform you and your readers of one of the most horrid accidents incident to life. Our old friend, Thomas A. Brown, late of Pittsburgh, but now of Canada, met with a misfortune, on the night of June 5th, 1862, to lose what he had been for years accumulating. Brother Brown removed to Canada a few years ago, and succeeded in purchasing for himself and family, a piece of ground on which he erected a comfortable dwelling. Brother Brown had now supposed himself secure; but suddenly his hopes were blasted. This once happy family were made miserable, distressed; and in peril of life by the devouring element of fire. Had it not been or the report of a loaded gun which the flames had reached, they must all have perished; but by the report of this gun the inmates were aroused, and to their surprise found that their only escape was through the first window or outlet that they could find. When they had succeeded in making their escape, and, as they thought, the escape of their children, said one of the little ones to the distressed and already maggie-hearted father: "Father, where is Mary?" "Oh, my child!" was the reply. It was with much difficulty that he was restrained from rushing through the flames to the darling child, whose merry voice had so often gladdened his heart. But alas! it was too late. When he had advanced as near as he could to the burning flames, he could not as much as hear her scream amid the devouring elements Finding himself unable to rescue his loved one, he was compelled to be content as best he could, gathering the next day from the ruins some of the ashes of his dear little Mary. I say "dear little Mary"—and truly may she be so called—for none knew her but to love her. In all my extensive travels, I have not met a child with a more amiable disposition than she possessed. She was about fourteen years of age, and was a delight to the family. She, as if guided by some unknown impulse, was often speaking of death, as though looking for its approach.

There is a striking peculiarity connected with the death of this child. She was aroused and got out of bed with the other children, but it is unknown how it was that she did not escape It is, however, cheering to know that the rest of the family came off with but little personal damage. We hope that little Mary has gone to be associated with a purer and higher order of beings than those that can be surrounded with devouring flames. Impressed with this truth, I think that brother and sister Brown should weep no more—sigh not again, but submit to the Lord in whom they have long trusted. Ere long they shall be rewarded for all of their afflictions. Let them remember the language of Job: "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord

Brother Brown has long been a servant of Christ and the church, which service he faithfully performed with his means, as well as with his heart and lips. His house be made the itinerant preacher's happy home, in which they were welcome at all times and under all reasonable circumstances. This is known to the preachers now living, who were present at the conferences of 1844 and 1860, held in Pittsburgh

Now I would recommend the itinerant preachers especially, and Christian friends in general, if they have a word of consolation to administer to these bereaved Christians, or means of any kind to assist them in again erecting and furnishing the minister's home, that they do it cheerfully, and I take the liberty to say that it will be gladly received. They have lost all their furniture, wearing apparel, and everything except such as they had on when aroused from sleep, amid the confusion of smoke and fire. I shall wait to see who will be the second to do what they preach to others.

Direct to Thomas A. Brown, Chatham, C. W., and if desired you will hear of it again.

WILLIS NAZRET

For the Christian Recorder.

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

MR EDITOR:—Since my last letter to the Recorder, the peace and quietude which pervaded and prevailed in our city for some months has become somewhat ruffled and disturbed. Several weeks and months ago, the only things we could see, in a military point of view, were the various squads of the Provost Guard on our different streets arresting straggling soldiers, disloyal and disorderly persons, who infest our city, and breaking up rum mills and whisky-shops, wherein is dispensed the worst and most poisonous kinds of "Jersey lightning" and "Tanglefoot" imaginable, and very often the soft strains of solemn music and the sound of muffled drums sounding a solemn dirge or a sorrowful requiem over the last remains of some officer who has given up his life and his all as a sacrifice and free-will offering on the sacred altar of his country. Our city is all excitement and confusion, incidental to the continual arrival of soldiers; and we could very appropriately at the present time join in with the poet and say:

"The bayonets in the sunlight gleam, and bands brave music pour;
We are coming, Father Abraham—three hundred thousand more."

The Baltimore Depot is constantly crowded with all kinds and classes of people—from the highly-scented and exquisitely-dressed fop, down to the dirty, ragged, little urchin, the white and black, the "grizzly and the gray," whilst, all combined, present to the eye a very mixed and motley multitude.

When we look upon the newly-arrived men as they file through our city, and watch their steady and measured tramp, and skilful evolutions, and see how every face seems to beam with joy and gladness, and every heart swelling and pulsating with animation, as if they were going to participate in a holiday parade or in a grand review, and not in the stern realities of an awful fratricidal war—when we look on these things, it fills our hearts with sorrow and sadness; and when we think of the dangers which they are subjected to, and how many will see their wives and little ones no more forever, it causes us, notwithstanding all the infamous State laws, unrighteous Congressional edicts and God-hating ordinances which have been enacted to oppress us, we find ourselves offering voluntarily a prayer and a willing ejaculation to God to bless this nation, sustain its defenders—and let defeat, discomfiture and destruction be the lot of the traitors who seek its overthrow

There was held in Union Bethel, on the 9th instant, a meeting of the several pastors of the city, which was presided over by Rev. James Mitchell, who styles himself (per advertisement) as the "Commissioner of Emigration" It was resolved at the mid meeting that a delegation of five members of each church, headed by their pastor, be requested to meet in U. B. Church on the 14th instant, at 2 o'clock, P. M., to have a consultation with President LINCOLN. The President failing to appear, a committee of five were appointed to wait on him at the Presidential mansion, at 4 o'clock. The most ludicrous part of the meeting was that the principal and originator of the meeting happened (we suppose unwillingly) to be non est; (a fact, it was rumored, to use a cant phrase, that he had smelt the rat, and had vamoosed or skedaddled in true scotch style!

The greater portion of the most intelligent and influential men of the city are highly incensed and greatly exasperated with the pastors and the delegations for the manner in which they acted The point of dimension is, that it is considered under-handed work—because, they did not consult nor let the people know anything about it but a few selected ones, (assembled, we suppose, at the request of Rev. Mitchell,) and chose a bogus committee to wait on the President. We, for one, should like to know who gave that committee authority to act for us, the fifteen thousand residents of color in this District—and who requested them to represent the interests of the two hundred and ten thousand inhabitants of color in the Free States! Was it because we were possessed of no intelligence, or incapable of acting for ourselves? or was it too great a condescension for the distinguished committee to consult our views relative to the all-important proposition which they had under consideration? And, what makes their doings in a strong sense to be condemned, as well as regretted, was that, this bogus party were ready to give the President an answer for the two hundred and twenty-five thousand Anglo-Africans in the District and to the States—in fact, had written their reply to him before they started for the mansion. But the President refused to receive it, and told them he was in no hurry for an answer, but to take their time and consider the matter. Such actions, by an intelligent body of gentlemen, are decidedly reprehensible, and are almost unanimously reprobated, and loudly and emphatically denounced as acts of usurpation or assumptions of authority

And, as the sequel to this indiscreet act, it is reported that a colony is raising in this city, with every prospect of success, to settle in that cheerless wilderness of Central America—and, to make sure of their transportation, have signed and sealed the following agreement, viz.:

"The undersigned, persons of color, residing in the District of Columbia, hereby agree to emigrate to the settlement in Central America about to be founded by the President of the United States, through the agency of such company as he may select, under the pledges and guarantees uttered by him in his speech to the people of color on Thursday, 14th day of August, 1862 Confiding in the generosity and the power of the government to negotiate with the authorities of Central America, we thus enroll ourselves as candidates for places among the first settlers."

Thus you see by what means our own color are indirectly driving us from the land of our nativity. Colonization will come soon enough, without our hastening its advent. Congress has already made an appropriation for voluntary emigration. We did and do still consider voluntary emigration as simply the stepping stone to compulsory expatriation!

The fact was well known to Congress that we were, as a general thing, anti-emigrationist; and it was unnatural to suppose—unreasonable to think that we would voluntarily leave the land that hath "birthed and reared us," and go and live in the desolate wastes of Central America, or under the scorching rays of Liberia's sun, or with the bigoted and prejudiced Haytiens. The idea is actually absurd and ridiculous; and we know when the subject was before Congress, that it was only a legislative dodge or a Congressional scheme, fraught with the "most contemptible, lowest, cottonest" craftiness and chicanery susceptible of contemplation.

The subject under consideration is one of vital importance, and directly applicable to every person of African descent in these United States. And it is high time for us to arise from this criminal lethargy and suicidal enervation which enthralls us, for ostracism and expatriation under the new name of colonization as just ahead. Let us therefore, then, use every effort to defeat, contravene and oppose this most unreasonable edict that would forcibly eject us from the country for which our ancestors fought, bled and died.

More anon. CERBERUS.

INDIANA CONFERENCE.

The twenty-third annual conference for the Indiana district, met in the city of Indianapolis, Indiana, August 15th, 1862

Bishop Wm. Paul Quinn, the Bishop of that district, opened the conference in the general mode, and the conference proceeded to business in the following consecutive order, viz:

1st. The finances were paid in by the various ministers having charge of the circuits and stations of the district, which resulted in the aggregate to the sum of $423.96 This aggregate sum was appropriated during the year, to the objects following:

1st.	Contingent expenses, which means the support of the annual conference	$40,00
2d.	For the support of missions	29,00
3d.	" " " Sabbath schools	189,38
4th.	" " " Book concern	.63,51
5th.	" " " Bishop	140,24
		$412,13
6th.	" " " Widows	11,83
	Total	$423,96

The conference continued in its business in the order of the discipline, and for particulars of the minute proceedings of the session, we refer all to the published minutes of the Conference, which will be found highly interesting.

On the third day of the session, Bishop Nazrey, from the Philadelphia and New England districts, was introduced to the conference by Bishop Quinn, and he took his seat with the presiding Bishop

Rev. Turner Roberts, of the Ohio conference, and Rev. John M. Brown, from the Baltimore conference, were the visiting members to the Indiana conference, and took a fraternal part in the proceedings—voting excepted.

The general book steward, and editor of the RECORDER, the Rev. Elisha Weaver, arrived at the Conference on the seventh day of its session, and was introduced by Bishop Quinn, and took his seat among the members He brought out a number of useful and instructive books, such as the Disciplines, Schmucker's Popular Theology, Pilgrim's Progress, &c., &c—to the purchase of which, the western community is particularly directed. The usual peace and harmony here prevailed in all the sittings of the conference; and there seems to be a oneness of feeling among the members on all general subjects which have come before them for consideration. One or two subjects of somewhat exciting character have claimed the attention of Conference, but they have been disposed of to the general satisfaction of all.

The subject of the war—the state of the country, and probable future of the colored people of this country, was referred to a committee, the report of whom will be seen in the next number of the RECORDER, as expressive of the sense of the conference in reference to these subjects.

THE ANCIENT ISRAELITE.

ISAAC TAYLOR, in his recent work upon "Hebrew Poetry"—a work full of originality and characterized by force and beauty of style, clearly shows that the Israelites of the Exodus and the Theocracy were people of high culture, more than ordinary intelligence, and far advanced in the scale of civilization. This he infers from their literature, which may be regarded "as the mirror of the national mind." His views on this interesting subject are so striking and novel that we feel that it would be an advantage to our readers to present them even in a condensed form. The Jew, in his estimation, while an Oriental by birth, country, climate, customs and physiognomy, was still more European than Asiatic. Though ever maintaining "a sullen antagonism" to the races of Europe; "by his sympathies, by his intellectual range, by his moral intensity, by his religious depth, and even by his tastes, the Jew has made good his claim to be remembered with those that constitute the commonwealth of western civilization.' Several of the features of his moral and mental character are thus forcibly portrayed. The Israelite of earlier and later ages, was free from that passivism, that inertness which so marks the most of Orientals. He ever made a persistent resistance to his oppressors. "Always and notoriously has he been a dangerous and turbulent subject." In the earliest period, the Israelite was "the genuine representative of constitutional social order." He had no taste for anarchy.

He was not the turbulent brawling citizen, machinating revolution;—he was the sturdy yeoman, and the true conservative." Moreover, the Israelite of that time was one who could hear with intelligence "the sublime theology and the rightful and truthful ethics of the Book of Deuteronomy." Mr. Taylor establishes this position in the following way. He starts with the proposition that this book is either "from Heaven" in its own sense; or it is from men. If the former, then a "great controversy" is settled by the admission of the opponent; if from men, then the people who listened to its momentous teachings, and against whom its threatenings are directed, were "far advanced beyond any other, even of later times, in their religious conceptions, in their moral consciousness, in their openness to remonstrance, and their sensibility toward some of the most refined emotions of domestic and social life. It is a canon open to no valid exceptive instance, that the spoken-to are as the speaker and his speech." It is then shown that this historic canon is true in the case of the generation which had reached maturity when the last songs and warnings of Deuteronomy were first uttered. It was the "product of the religious and social training" developed by the sojourn in Egypt, the wandering in the desert, and the varied influence of the Sinaitic law, of the religious ceremonies of the Tabernacle, and the wise and just administration of the civil power, in connection with the priesthood. The Israelite was not a slave, but a freeman, and had the feelings of a freeman. He was a man of intelligence, and had the capacity to appreciate the sublime and beautiful in his mental and moral lineaments has been kept in the back-ground. But the Israelites with all their faults were a strong, an admirable race of people—full of reverence for religious things, lovers of nature, simple in their habits, capable of deep and tender emotions, sagacious, progressive and enterprising. Mr. Taylor has accomplished a real good for Christianity in undermining the false and unjust notions in regard to their character which have too long prevailed in certain quarters.—Banner of the Covenant.

GOD'S CONDESCENSION

"Who is like unto the Lord our God who dwelleth on high, who humbleth himself to behold the things that are in heaven and in the earth?"—Ps cxiii. 5, 6.

It hath often and very justly been observed, that it is one great recommendation of the Holy Scriptures that they express more justness of thought concerning the nature of God, than any other compositions whatever. They particularly resolve all events into his will and providence, which is the truest philosophy as well as the best divinity. They inform us that God is our Creator and Preserver; that the state and circumstances of every creature, and all events relating to them, are ordered and determined by him. Consequently, it becomes us to entertain just ideas of him, to make those ideas familiar to our minds, and to set the Lord always before us. We have in the text one of the most grand, and, at the same time amiable, representations of the blessed God, which is to be found in Scripture. And I would entreat, my brethren, that you would pay a most serious attention to it, and manifest, even while I am discoursing upon it, how much your minds are affected with it. I shall,

I. Consider the view here given of the unequalled majesty and glory of God. And,

II Of his great and amazing condescension in his regards to his creatures. And then make some natural and useful reflections upon the subject.

I. I am to consider the view here given of the unequalled majesty and glory of God

Now here are two thoughts suggested to us—that he dwelleth on high, and that there is none like him.

1 He dwelleth on high. The margin renders it, "He exalteth himself to dwell," or maketh himself high and sublime in his dwelling. We naturally annex the ideas of grandeur, magnificence, and excellency to what is high above us. Hence princes are called "high," and addressed by the title of "highness." When they appear on their thrones, they are raised above others to denote their dignity, state, and precedence. Hence God is spoken of as "the high God," "the Most High," "the Highest," and the like He is described as "seated on a throne, high and lifted up." Isa vi. 1. As the heavens are high above us, he is said to have prepared his throne in the heavens; to have fixed his seat on high, quite above this earth and all created glory. So in the verse before the text, "the Lord is high above all nations, and his glory above the heavens;" above these visible heavens; beyond the sun, moon, and stars, and higher than the thrones of angels, principalities, and powers. The residence of his glory is in the heavenly world There he appears by some peculiar displays of his presence, clothed with honor and majesty; "thousands of thousands stand before him; ten thousand times ten thousand minister unto him." From thence he beholds the whole universe, reigneth over it; and all creatures and all worlds are under his government and control. In short, we have the noblest description of this, in words admirably sublime and plain, yet not fully to be comprehended even by an angelic mind: "He dwelleth in the high and holy place, and is the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity." Isa. lvii 15. The other thought suggested in the text is,

2. There is none like him. "Who is like to the Lord our God?" which may be either an expression of the Psalmist's great admiration, or a challenge to the whole world to name any being equally great, glorious, wise, and good. There is none like him among the human race; none of the wise men, the nobles and princes of the earth. They are called "gods," but they are but "children of the Most High." They are derived, dependent, dying creatures; owe all their power and authority to him who is "King of kings and Lord of lords, the blessed and only potentate." There is none like him among the gods of the earth. Not their idols, for they are not equal to men. None of those beings or objects of worship which have a real existence, for they are all produced, and can at any time be destroyed by him. "Who, then, is so great a God as our God, the true God, the living God, the everlasting King?" Among the saints in heaven there is none like him. Glorious things are spoken of them; but all their lustre is derived from him and they shine by his rays The angels, though the top of the creation, and though they bear the nearest resemblance to the Father of lights, are not equal to him. They are all formed and supported by him, and derive all their knowledge, power, zeal, and happiness from him. "Who in the heavens can be compared to the Lord? who among the children of the mighty can be likened unto the Lord?" Ps. lxxxix. 6. Such is the nature of the divine Being, that it is impossible any other being should be equal to him. It is impossible, in the nature of things, that there should be any more than one eternal, self existent being. We are likewise taught by Scripture, as well as reason, to argue from his works that there is none like him. No other being can produce such stupendous effects. So Moses addresseth him: "Who is like unto thee, O Lord, among the gods? who is like thee, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders?" Ex xv. 11. So David saith: "Among the gods there is none like unto thee, O Lord, neither are there any works like unto thy works" Ps. lxxxvi 8. The operations of his providence, and especially his appearances for his church and people, prove his unequalled glory. "Thou hast done great things, O God; who is like unto thee?" Ps. lxxi. 19. Nay, the Lord himself appeals to his works as a proof of his supreme, unequalled deity "To whom, then, will ye liken me, or shall I be equal? saith the Holy One. Lift up your eyes on high and behold who hath created these things, that bringeth out their host by number: he calleth them all by their names by the greatness of his might." Isa. xl. 25, 26 So that, upon the whole, we may adopt the words of Moses, and say, "There is none like unto the God of Jeshurun, (or Israel,) who rideth upon the heaven in thy help, and in his excellency on the sky." Deut. xxxiii. 26. But we are chiefly to direct our thoughts to his kindness and goodness, in which, as well as his greatness, there is none like him. Let us, therefore, proceed to consider,

II. The condescension and amazing condescension. After we have been surveying his unequalled majesty and glory, nothing can be more delightful than to view him as stooping to regard his creatures, and manifesting the greatest kindness to them. "He beholdeth the things that are in heaven and in the earth." Here let us observe, what the Psalmist intimates, that it is great condescension in God to behold the things that are in heaven—but greater and more wonderful condescension to behold the things that are in earth.

1. It is great condescension in God to behold the things that are in heaven. By "the things that are in heaven," is to be understood the inhabitants thereof, the saints and angels. And beholding them signifies, not only taking notice of them, but kindly regarding their services, and manifesting himself and his favor to them. He taketh notice of them—is not so wrapt up in his own essential perfections, glory, and happiness, as to overlook them. They dwell in his immediate presence and he doth them the honor to employ them in his service; sends forth his angels to minister to the heirs of salvation, though he could guide, defend, and prosper them by his own immediate power. He likewise graciously regards their services. He beholds them with an eye of approbation, complacency, and delight: he is pleased to see them happy. His presence and love fill them with joy, and constitute their chief felicity. Now it is great condescension in God thus to behold them, for they are creatures, and fall infinitely short of him in perfection. They cannot by searching find out God, nor have they minds capacious enough to receive him. Besides, their best services, though not sinful and polluted, are yet imperfect. They are not equal to his glory; for "he is exalted above all blessing and praise." Were their services more excellent, they could not profit him. He is not worshipped, even by these glorious spirits, as if he needed any thing, or they could make any addition to his happiness. His infinite perfection, sufficiency, and bliss, raise him above them. "Behold he putteth no trust in his servants, and his angels he chargeth with folly;" Job iv. 18; or he maketh no boast of them. It is, therefore a great stoop of condescension and goodness in God to behold the things that are in heaven.

2. It is greater and more wonderful condescension to behold the things on earth. "His eyes run to and fro through the earth, and he beholds all nations." He takes notice of all they say and do Nor is he an unconcerned spectator, for he ruleth over all. His providence continually works for the support and comfort of his creatures. His constant energy holdeth human souls in life; nor can the wisest or greatest of men speak a word or move a finger without him. He "leaveth not himself without witness" of his being and providence in any nation, in that "he doeth good, giveth rain from heaven and fruitful seasons, filling their hearts with food and gladness." Yea, his care stoops so low that "not a sparrow falls to the ground without him, but the hairs of our head are numbered." He manageth the affairs of his creatures, and performeth all things for them. And his care extends to the meanest as well as the greatest of men. He beholds those things which men commonly overlook and despise, and doeth kind and wonderful things for the poor and the helpless. This the Psalmist had immediately in his eye, as a proof of the divine condescension. Therefore he adds, after the text, "He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth the needy out of the dunghill;" From the lowest and most contemptible circumstances; "that he may set him with princes, even the princes of the people" He interposeth "to make the barren woman to keep house, and to be a joyful mother of children." But he views his saints and servants with peculiar complacency and delight. His countenance beholdeth the upright, and he withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous." He regards their poor services; and though they fall so short of the services of angels, and are not only imperfect, but polluted and mingled with sin, yet he taketh notice of them and is pleased with them. He doth not despise the cry of the destitute, but heareth it; and esteems himself glorified when his people offer praise to him. Ps l. 23. He loveth the gates of Zion, where they meet to worship him; and their prayers and praises come up as grateful incense, perfumed with the merits and intercession of Jesus, their High Priest. Yea, farther, this high and lofty Being "dwelleth with him that is of a contrite spirit." He taketh pleasure in his people, delights over them to do them good, and rejoiceth in the prosperity of his servants Some of the heathen philosophers thought it beneath the dignity of God to stoop to such mean affairs; but the great God doth not think it beneath his own dignity to behold the things on earth. This will appear to be great and wonderful condescension and grace, if we consider what mean creatures men are. They derive their being from the dust; dwell in houses of clay; at their best estate they are altogether vanity; will soon be laid in the grave and turned to corruption. And will the great God set his eyes upon such creatures as these, when there are infinite orders of beings above them, much nobler than they; and when all the nations of the earth are in his sight but as the drop of the bucket, and lighter than vanity? In order to enhance this condescension, let it be considered that men are sinners against God, depraved and defiled creatures. They have lost their innocence, and are become unclean; have lost their order, and are become irregular. They often desire, judge, and act wrong, and there is not one that perfectly doeth good, no, not one. By the generality of men God is affronted, neglected, or forgotten. Even the worship and obedience of his saints, of the best of his saints, are imperfect and polluted. Who, then, is like to the Lord our God, that stoops to regard such creatures, and to be so good to a world so full of vanity, sin, and pollution? Let us consider, once more, what his condescension and grace have done. He hath sent his own Son to be a propitiation for sin, and he, in Christ, reconciling this guilty world to himself. He pardoneth the numerous sins of those who repent. And "who is a God like to thee, that pardoneth iniquity, and retaineth not his anger forever, because he delighteth in mercy?" Micah vii 18. He maketh those of the sinful children of men who are penitent and humble, his children and the heirs of glory. He taketh poor sinners out of the dust of death, and sets them among the princes of heaven. He stoops so low, to raise us to the highest dignity and happiness. "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the children of God!" Let us, with the Psalmist, "consider the heavens, the work of God's fingers, the moon and the stars which he hath ordained" Ps. viii. 3. Let us think of those moving worlds, filled with intelligent beings; otherwise, as the prophet argues, had they not been formed to be inhabited, he would have created them in vain. Isaiah xlv. 18. The inhabitants of some of them are, perhaps, of a superior order to man. Reflect how many nobler beings he hath under his government and care, whom it is, nevertheless, a stoop of condescension in him to regard: then we shall be disposed to say, with high admiration and humble gratitude, "Lord, what is man, that thou art mindful of him, and the son of man, that thou shouldst thus graciously visit him?"

Rev J Orton

SALVATION NOT AN ACCIDENT.—It is the signal error of many that they treat salvation as an accident. I repeat it, they treat salvation as an accident—an expedient brought in to remedy evils which turn up in the stream of chance The propitiation of the incarnate Son of God, is not a mere refuge from inevitable necessity, but a glorious mystery foreseen long before the fall, before the world, before creation, and declared in due time as beyond all expressible modes the brightest display of the Godhead.

J. W. Alexander.

LETTER OF BISHOP PHILANDER CHASE

We publish below a most touching and beautiful letter from the pen of the late Bishop Chase It was written to a lady on the death of her first-born child. At the time when so many mothers all over the country are afflicted by the disasters of war, the publication of this consolatory letter may be a comfort to some wounded spirit.

It has never appeared in print, and we doubt whether any epistle of condolence could be more happily expressed:—N. W Church.

Robin's Nest, Nov. 9th, 1839.

VERY DEAR LADY:—Very seldom has my heart been pierced with more pungent grief than when reading the account you gave me of the death of your dear first-born. The whole distressing scene is at once before me. I see you, and all the dear relatives, from the beginning to the end of this struggle of affection, and as I follow in each act of agonizing effort to preserve the loved one from the grasp of death, my whole soul seems to feel as you did; and as you closed his eyes and followed him to the grave, and bent over the coffin and took your last look of that dear countenance, whose smiles had been the source of much comfort to you all, it was and is at this period of reflection, that my tears betray the sympathies of my bosom in your behalf. Yes, dear, best of friends; like the mingling of waters in one river, my feelings become one with yours, and flow on in one channel

But though I am conscious of the most sincere condolence with you all, in your sorrows, I must confess I am by no means satisfied that I have done all which becomes me to do for you in this providential visitation. Were I to leave you here, I should be but following the world; for they have natural feelings and sympathies as well as Christians. They can relate the sad story of human sufferings, and, in the most beautiful language, say with the poet:

"Oh, my sad heart, long abandon'd by pleasure,
Why didst thou dote on so frail losing treasure;
Tears like rain drops, may fall without measure.
But rapture and beauty they cannot recall."

And here the world leaves us; leaves us to mourn without hope or consolation. Cloudy days and weeping skies, without a ray of light are our only portion in this world, and in the grave eternal despair.

But not so the Christian. By the resurrection of the Son of God from the tomb, a brighter prospect is opened. Through the dark valley of the shadow of death, a pathway is made to immortality. Illumed by the Sun of Righteousness, this to the eye of faith "shineth even more and more to the perfect day"

To this pathway, dear lady, I would point you in this hour of affliction. Although your dear son cannot come to you, yet you can go to him. You and I, and all professing Christians, are on the road whither he has gone. Even now time is carrying us onward. There is no stopping, and we shall soon be there, where the wicked cease from troubling, and where the weary are at rest.

This is indeed consolation Who would mourn that his dear relative had passed from one room of the house into another? The door suddenly opened for dear W., and he passed quickly through. It closed quickly while you were yet holding fast his loved garments, and you are thrown back on the world again with many tears in your eyes. And what can we say? Let the hand of faith wipe them all away; for you will see him again—you will—and that soon.

Look then to yourself, that you also be ready Let worldly enjoyments grow less and less valuable in your eyes; regard them only as comforts by the wayside of a hasty traveller, while his eye and his heart are fixed on the home of his fathers. "Set your affections on things above, and not on things on the earth." Be assured that our Heavenly Father chasteneth us in love, to make us more like his Son, whose image of submission we must have before we can be fit for his presence. Bless, then, the rod which makes you feel that the Lord God omnipotent reigneth.

Nothing will certify you of the salutary effects of God's visitations on your moral frame more than a deep consciousness of your sins, and of the necessity of the atoning blood of the Son of God to remove them. He that believeth in this, shall never die; "he hath passed from death into life."

That God may have you, and all yours, in His holy keeping, in this world, and make you all a happy family in heaven, is the sincere and constant prayer of, very dear lady, your faithful friend and servant in Christ,

PHILANDER CHASE

DARKNESS NO REASON FOR DOUBTING

Darkness is a reason for doubting everything but Christ, but a reason for trusting in him, drawing near to him, and keeping close at his side. Darkness is a reason for distrusting one's self, and walking warily in prayer, and crying out for Christ's help, but certainly not a reason for unbelief. When Peter was in darkness—nothing but darkness around him, darkness within him, and the waves opening to swallow him up Christ was shining, and the only light that could be seen that night was in him. It is always so. We may seem to have light in ourselves, but it may be mere ignorance and pride; or if there is real light, it is only because Christ is shining within us and upon us, and some reflection is seen of his own light. Darkness in ourselves, and darkness around us, is no reason for doubting the light, but for believing in it, loving it, and pressing forward to it. "I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life. While ye have the light, believe in the light, that ye may be the children of the light. Walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you; for he that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth" All the real light of the world is in him, and he that followeth him shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life. "Why art thou cast down, O my soul? Hope thou in God."—Dr. Chaney.

In a hot summer, when there is most thirst, there are fewest brooks. So of many people's charities—they are rarest when most needed.

PERSECUTION FOR TRUTH'S SAKE.—"It is folly," said Addison, "for an eminent man to think of escaping censure, and a weakness to be affected by it. All the illustrious persons of antiquity, and, indeed, of every age in the world, have passed through this fiery persecution. There is no defence against reproach, but obscurity. It is a kind of concomitant to greatness, as satire and invective were an essential part of a Roman triumph."

Remember the saying: "It is easy in the world to live after the world's opinion; it is easy in solitude to live after our own; but the great man is he who, in the midst of the crowd, keeps with perfect sweetness the independence of solitude."

CHRIST'S AGONY IN THE GARDEN.

He knelt—the Saviour knelt and prayed,
When not his Father's eye
Looked through the lonely garden's shade,
On that dread agony!
The Lord of all, alone, beneath,
Was bowed with sorrow unto death.

The sun set in a fearful hour,
The skies might well grow dim,
When thus mortality had power
[illegible]
That He who gave man's breath might know
The very depths of human woe.

He knew them all—the doubt, the strife,
The sins to pray for, and,
The cares that hang o'er parting life,
[illegible]
And the dark grave knelt to pray—
Yet passed if not, that cup, away.

It passed not—though the stormy wave
Had sunk beneath his tread;
It passed not—though to him the grave
[illegible]
A gift of strength, for man to die?
And was his mortal hour lower
[illegible]
—How may we meet our conflict yet,
In the dark, narrow way!
How, but through Him, that path who trod!
Save, or we perish, Son of God!

[illegible] strength
[illegible]

MINNESOTA.

Red Wing, Minnesota.

Although jaunting from place to place is absolutely necessary to enable one to report progress in business matters, or, to furnish a description of places and affairs, still the very effort made to this end unfits one, for a time at least, to discharge those duties. The whirl of travelling day and night, the irregular hours of dining and sleeping is, to me at least, a considerable nervous exercises.

How distance dwindles away before the heavy built and well fed "iron horse." Despite the jolting and rocking incident to car travelling, tired nature demands her hours of sleep, and ere our eyes awake hundreds of miles have been left behind, and the morning hour opens upon new sights and scenery. Many things of interest claim the traveller's attention. Leaving Altoona we begin to climb the Alleghany mountains at an ascending grade of 90 feet to the mile As the road winds up the side of the mountain a beautiful view of the magnificent scenery is obtained. Engineering skill of the highest possible talent combined with indomitable labor seems to have found in this locality a foeman worthy to meet in conflict, and skill and labor triumphed.

Connected with this work is the GREAT TUNNEL. Its total length is 3,612 feet, its width 24 feet, its height above the rails 21½ feet, the depth below the summit of the mountain 203 feet. It is necessary to illuminate the cars while passing through, although the time consumed is limited, still a general relief is experienced when one has emerged from the sulphurous atmosphere of the TUNNEL.

Leaving the smoky atmosphere of Pittsburg, we soon enter upon a country teeming with agricultural wealth. Judging from what is noticed along the route to Chicago, the yield of grain this season will be immense. Nearing Chicago, immense surfaces of country open to the sight. We here first notice the "prairie country." Here and there along the road the rude hut of the settler appears, and for miles you see not even these. Chicago is the city of Railroads and lumber. Its streets present a life and activity refreshing to one from the dull atmosphere of Philadelphia. Passing on our journey we come to Milwaukee, a city of considerable dimensions, and possessing buildings quite equal to our own Philadelphia. Entering the territory (state) of Wisconsin, from one end to the other, three facts press upon the mind. The immense fields of wheat, its need of harvesting, and the scarcity of laborers; a gentleman assured me that one farmer, alone, tilled 3,000 acres, all of wheat. Fields of 300 and 400 acres are by no means rare. Many hands, it is said, make work light, but were it not for the labor-saving machines, the farmer would be defeated in his enterprise The most approved reaping and threshing machines are always in demand, and find ready buyers. Either the land in this region is better adapted to wheat growing, or it pays better, for naught but wheat: wheat is seen interspersed, however, with a field of barley. This region is largely occupied by Germans, and I rather suspect that the barley is doomed to the "Lager vat." My suspicions were somewhat confirmed in this, by seeing upon a sign, in not very diminutive letters, "LAGER BEER." To make assurance doubly sure, I hastened from the cars, but just as I placed my foot upon the doorway of the cabin, the shrill whistle of the engine sounded the recall, and going through the double quick movement, I reached the cars in time; so as regards my experience, I am unable to say whether this sign was a dead sea apple or not. It will not do to form an estimate of the comfort and refreshments of the west by the distance from the luxurious east.

Kilborn City, for instance, as well as at Lisbon. The latter is 127 miles or so, west of Milwaukee. The weary traveller is ushered into a splendid dining room, the table fairly groaning under the weight of delicacies—yes, delicacies. And full twenty minutes' time is given to discuss the merits of the various dishes. Those who are fond of fish must come here and partake of the "white fish." They surpass any fish which I have met with—not excepting the bivalves and other fish at "Lood's Landing"

But what about Red Wing? It is a pleasant and a thriving town of 200 or 250 houses, situated upon a rising shore of the Mississippi. It has amongst other fine buildings a very fine county building, built of brick with considerable architectural finish. It cost $25,000. Adjoining the town is a most formidable bluff, or what we would term a hill. Desiring to have a view of the surrounding country, induced me to attempt to reach its summit by a direct course. After advancing or rather ascending some 300 steps, and at an angle consid

THREE HUNDRED THOUSAND MORE

We are coming, Father Abraham three hundred thousand more,
From Mississippi's winding stream and from New England's shore.
We leave our ploughs and workshops, our wives and children dear,
With hearts too full for utterance, with but a silent tear;
We dare not look behind us, but steadfastly before—
We are coming, Father Abraham, three hundred thousand more!

If you look across the hill tops that meet the northern sky,
Long marching lines of rising dust your vision may descry,
And now the wind, an instant, tears the cloudy veil aside,
And flash aloft our spangled flag in glory and in pride,
And bayonets in the sunlight gleam, and bands brave music pour—
We are coming Father Abraham—three hundred thousand more!

If you look up all our valleys, where the growing harvests shine,
You may see our sturdy farmer boys fast filing into line;
And children from their mother's knees are pulling at the weeds,
And learning how to reap and sow, against their country's needs;
And a farewell group stands weeping at every cottage door—
We are coming, Father Abraham, three hundred thousand more.

You have called us, and we're coming, by Richmond's bloody tide.
To lay us down for freedom's sake, our brothers' bones beside;
Or from foul treason's savage grasp to wrench the murderous blade
And in the face of foreign foes its fragments to parade.
Six hundred thousand loyal men and true have gone before—
We are coming, Father Abraham—three hundred thousand more!

N Y Evening Post

THE AFRICAN CHARACTER.

The African character has its own marked and distinctive peculiarities. It is tropical. It has passion deep and pervasive, slumbering within a rounded form, and in deep dreamy eyes. It is ductile and plastic, ready to receive impressions and to be shapen by them. It does not possess the hard, aggressive features of the character of the tribes of Northern Europe; it does not seek by conquest to extend its power, or to mould other people to its form. It is adapted to receive rather than to give. It is, therefore, essentially imitative. From this comes the rapidity with which, under favorable influences, the African advances in civilization. Wherever these influences are numerous and powerful enough to be the most prominent, the negro yields to them with marvellous rapidity.

There is, perhaps, no race that gives up so readily and fully old habits and associations. We find no granite formations of character underlying the race, such as are met with in the tribes and peoples of Asia. Compare, for instance, the plastic mobility of the Pangwee Bakwain with the rigidity of the Hindu or Chinese. Or where the case may be seen in even a more striking way, compare the African negro with the American Indian; take the one from his tropical wild, the other from his forest home, and place them both under the same civilizing influences, and where at the end of a fixed period will you find them? In a single generation the one is nearly at your side, the other is simply a savage still.

The rapid rise of the negro race in the West India Islands, Jamaica, for example, when made free by the British Government, is a very striking illustration, though the time has been too short to bring it out to the full. Taking all the facts as they are given us, we find the people rising almost at once, (for thirty years are usually as nothing in the life of a people) out of the barbarism of slavery, into a nation self-supporting, self-governing to a considerable extent, moral and religious, not, indeed, in the highest degree, but still wonderfully advanced.* We believe that it is without a parallel.

Together with this plastic ductility, the African has another, which at first sight seems in flagrant contradiction;—the race has a peculiar power of resistance and permanence. It is said, probably truthfully, that no race has ever been able to abide a close contact with the Anglo-Saxon. One of two results has always followed:—either it has been swallowed up and lost as a river is as ocean, or it has gone down and been swept away. But this race has neither been absorbed nor destroyed. It has grown under the most adverse influences, and asserts itself in all its peculiar characteristics under foreign skies, and after the lapse of two centuries. The negro of America is a true African still.

This race has not greatly mingled with other races. It is, we are inclined to believe, rather a characteristic of it not to seek an amalgamation with another people; its tendency is to remain apart. We are well aware, indeed, that this is exactly contrary to the views of many, who have built their opinions on popular assertions and prejudice rather than on observed facts. The assumption is, that the negro desires to mingle his blood with that of the white races. The reverse is the fact. There is, though it may seem to some unaccountable, a certain pride of race, which leads the negro to exult in the purity of his blood, and to regard a foreign element in it as not only not desirable, but even objectionable. This feeling does not belong simply to the negro on his own continent; it perpetuates, perhaps magnifies itself, when surrounded by another people. Among them in this country a pure-blooded negro will, with biting sarcasm, taunt the mulatto with the fact that the blood of another race is in his veins.

This feeling, which must have been noticed by any one whose observation has been extensive or intelligent enough to collect the facts, leads the race to remain by itself; and when left to its natural course, such is the result. The statistics of this country show that the free black does not and cannot mingle with the white race. No elevation of freedom can produce such an intermixture. Here and there, but so seldom as to present but perhaps a single case only in widely-separated communities, there is an intermarriage. This seeming want of inclination, coupled with a natural and insuperable repugnance on the part of the white, must ever keep the two races apart when they stand on an equal footing of freedom.—Presbyterian Quarterly Review.

WISDOM, WIT, AND HUMOR.

A good man, who has seen much of the world and is not tired of it, says: "The grand essentials to happiness in this life are something to do, something to love, and something to hope for."

Some men live in their good deeds, and like a beautiful insect, or a delicate moss preserved in a mass of golden aromatic amber, they seem to lie embalmed in the memory of their worth.

Many a man has missed being a great man by splitting into two middling ones. Concentrate your energies in one direction, if you would make a figure to the world.

There is this difference between happiness and wisdom: he that thinks himself the happiest man really is so; but he that thinks himself the wisest is generally the greatest fool.

Those are most valuable that are most serviceable; and those are greatest, not that have the most tal-nts, but that use th they possess most usefully.

*See Sewell's "West Indies, or, the Ordeal of Free Labor in the British West India Islands," an eminently dispassionate and disinterested view of the condition of these islands. An attentive consideration of his statements would go far to relieve the matter of emancipation of some of the difficulties with which to many it seems environed. "These people," he remarks, "who live comfortably and independently, own houses and stock, pay taxes and poll votes, and pay their money to build churches, are the same people whom we have heard represented as idle, worthless fellows, abstaining by oppression to work, and ready to live on an orange or banana, rather than earn the[ir] [bread]."

The Social, Civil, and Statistical Association of Philadelphia, Pa. By vote have opened a subscription list to aid the freed men at Port Royal and other points where they may be located, and respectfully ask the co-operation of the colored citizens and others in this city, or elsewhere, in money or clothing.

Any amount of value received will be acknowledged, with the name of the donor, in the Recorder, where a constant record will be kept.

Subscriptions may be sent to Jacob C. White, at the office of the Underground Railway, 711 Lombard Street, and also to William Still, 107 North Fifth Street, and to Rev E. Weaver, 619 Pine Street.

PAID

Statistical Society,	$ 5 00
Clinton Miller,	2 00
William Still,	5 00
Robert Alger	2 00
Henry Minton	2 00
Catherine Johnson,	2 00
Youti Locke,	2 00
Wm Watrous,	1 00
Harriet Shorter,	1 00
Sarah S. Hawkins,	1 00
Rev. Jonathan C. Gibbs,	1 00
James P. Clay,	1 00
Benjamin F Hill,	2 00
S M. S.,	2 00
Elisabeth Gordon,	1 00
P. J. Dreer,	5 00

It affords us pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of ten dollars, the proceeds of Miss Anna E. Dickenson's lecture at Concert Hall for the contrabands, contributed to the S., C. and Statistical Association, to be applied as intended. WM. STILL.

Our Sec. of S., C. and Statistical Association of the Colored People of Penna

Domestic Items.

Cumberland, Md—The Hospitals—Soldiers' Aid Society—Ingratitude.

We enjoyed camping with the "87th," and pronounced their soups and delicacies (mild bisaup, &c.) hot!

'Tis true, the heat was rather oppressive, and mosquitoes, and bugs, and spiders, more numerous than we thought necessary, but then all these things belong to the life of a soldier, and "are nothing when you get used to them." We could not appreciate the sentimentalism of the young men of the Irish Brigade, who went "to shout mark by moonlight," and thereby caused the signal of alarm to be given, which placed the entire division under arms, and brought before some of us beautiful visions of Richmond prison life, wounds and death.

The alarm, however, was not without its good effects as the conduct of the men under it demonstrated clearly. Every man was at his post, and that, too, in a very few minutes after the call. We had some little idea of how men feel "just before the battle," and can assure our friends that the state of mind is not of the most pleasant character. We were glad to find clean and well-ventilated, and the sick as comfortable as they could well be made without pillows, or bedding, or delicacies. From the great abundance which the "Soldiers' Aid Society of Wheeling" placed at our disposal, we were soon permitted to supply the wants of all, and to see them provided in clean clothing, and good beds and pillows, together with jellies and fruits prepared by kind hands for the feverest lip and burning tongue. Whilst visiting the Hospitals here and in Georgetown, we have had pleasant as well as sad times. It is not always a place of darkness and gloom, for the light of faith is bright in the hearts of many of the inmates. Said a young man very near the grave, "Did I tell you I had a mother in heaven who taught me of Jesus? I did not listen to her then. I became a careless sinner, but since I am in the Hospital, I can see her face and hear her voice, so lovely, as plainly as though she stood before me. Her teaching has not been in vain, for I am seeking Jesus, and hope soon to be his by a living faith." In a few days that dear young man found the Saviour and rejoiced in the hope of meeting his faithful mother in glory. Mother, are you discouraged? Do you sometimes feel as though your teachings and prayers were all in vain? Be encouraged by the young man in the Hospital, this is your sowing time, your harvest is yet to come. Said one of the attendants, "Do not speak to that man to the right. He will curse you to the earth. He is a Universalist." What a miserable condition for a man who is soon to stand in the presence of God, cursing while the minister of Christ is asking for a blessing upon his soul—mocking while the chariot wheels of damnation are rolling beneath him, and a loving Saviour waits to be gracious! Passing along one of the wards, we noticed an interesting but dejected countenance, and a skeleton of what once was a fine, manly form. We said to the young man, "Are you getting better?" when, to our great surprise, he answered, "I am not sick—I am only resting." His mind was gone—the fever had left him a maniac. We met Christians in the Hospitals, suffering pains that would drive the worldly mad. We saw them patient in sickness, and calm in death! A middle-aged convalescent, handing us an ambrotype of his wife and children, said, "These are the dear ones I left at home in the care of Christ and God's people. I know they are safe—for their heavenly Father has said, 'I will never leave you nor forsake you.' I pray for them, and they pray for me." Happy family!

THE HOSPITALS

"Though sundered far—by faith they meet Around one common Mercy-seat."

"Will you pray with us to-day?" said a young man who heretofore seemed to care but little for religious things. His question and request reminded us of our duty, and the promise that "God's word will not return to Him void." We had intended to pass by that room, but the voice and earnestness of the young man rebuked us, and taught us a lesson we shall not soon forget. We had as often been with him, without any apparent good results, that it seemed useless to visit him again. But to act now utterly, and administered us to do our duty and leave the result with him. May He bless all our labors among the sick and needy of the noble Union army

CUMBERLAND, MD.

We were delighted with this city and the pleasant acquaintances we made, and friends we met, whilst in it. We had the pleasure of mounting a "camel-back" at New Creek, and had, therefore, a full view of the beautiful scenery from that place to this. The route is along the valley of the Potomac, which, at the former place, is narrowed to a little stream, and can be crossed by a single leap. Here the road winds around the base of mountain spurs, and though the scenery does not present that sublimity of grandeur which we have in the "Cheat river region," yet it is a happy relief, and adds diversity and beauty to the route. Gladly would we have lingered longer among the pleasant friends at Cumberland, had not an unprepared sermon admonished us to return to Wheeling. Could we have remained in Cumberland a few weeks, we are very certain our health would have been much improved under the prescriptions there administered—plenty of exercise, and plenty of rest from study. One dear, kind family furnished us with delicacies for the sick, and sent encouraging words to those who are absent from home, and mothers and sisters. The mother of Bro. B., of Washington, tendered us an invitation to "spend a week," which we would gladly accept if circumstances permitted. The members of the Synod of Maryland made quite a favorable impression upon the people of Cumberland, as they seem anxious to have them come soon again. Drs. Morris and McCron will not soon be forgotten, as the persons with whom they sojourned are anxiously looking for the time to return when Cumberland will be the place of meeting for the Synod to which they belong. It is gratifying to know that amid all the troubles, and convulsions, and excitements of the times and the place, holds its own—and though it may not be growing as rapidly as the pastor may desire, yet the fact that it is not retrograding should be encouraging to him and his noble flock. We are sorry we could not remain long er with Bro. W., but hope soon to have the pleasure of another visit to Cumberland—more lengthy, but not more satisfactory and pleasant, as that would be impossible. Our friends, Major Boehler and lady of Gettysburg, being here, added much to the pleasure of our visit. Years may pass, and many changes take place, but never will we forget our short visit to Cumberland.

OUR CHURCH

SOLDIERS' AID SOCIETY OF WHEELING, VA.

This noble institution is now in active operation and has its ministers of mercy in almost every camp and hospital in the State. Nearly five thousand dollars have been contributed in money, while benevolent minds have been devising, and tender hands preparing all [illegible] and self-denying laborers in this blessed work will perhaps never be personally known to those whose sufferings they alleviate, but their acts will be written [illegible] a grateful dying prayer. This is not inconsistent for the sake of pay, our praise, not boasting—but such as will be remembered by Him who has said, "Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only, in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward." Could the bright eyes now fixed upon garments for the afflicted follow those garments to the hospitals, and see the smile produced upon the face burning with fever, their possessors would feel amply repaid for all their labor and toil. Could those ministering angels see the [illegible] they would take even more delight in their labor of love.

The liberality of the people of Wheeling in this contest for the maintenance of government has eclipsed by that of any other city in the Union—and we feel glad to-day to be a member of a community so truly loyal, liberal and benevolent.

CONSTITUTION.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company are in the habit of charging soldiers full fare for almost every mile [illegible] they travel. Were [illegible] they charge double fare for every rumpus passing over their line! The soldiers of the Union have opened and are keeping open this entire route—and when they die, guarding bridges and track, the Company shows its gratitude by charging double fare to transport their bodies to parents or friends. Is the right? Is the grateful?

HYPOCRITE.

Revelation of the Census.—Some chapters from the Report of the Superintendent of the Census have been published. They present in a general view a magnificent picture of the progress of the country up to 1860.

MANUFACTURES

which, with the products of the mines and fisheries, amounted to something over one thousand millions of dollars in 1859 are computed at nineteen hundred millions in 1860. The gain in ten years being Sixty per cent. The product per head was over $60; required the labor of over a million of men and two hundred and eighty five thousand women, and gave direct support to near five millions of persons. Of

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS

there were manufactured in 1850 an aggregate valued at $60,-42,000. In 1860 that value had increased to $17,-85,000, or 100 per cent. This increase was most marked in the Western States, where the value rose in the ten years from two to eight millions. Of PIG IRON.

there was produced in 1860, 884,000 tons, worth nineteen millions of dollars, being an increase of over 44 per cent. The bar and other rolled iron of that year was over 400,000 tons, valued at over twenty-two millions of dollars, an increase of nearly 40 per cent. Of

LINEN GOODS

there are a few coarse kinds made in Massachusetts, but the manufacture as a whole, is not worthy of being named among the general statistics of the national industry

There are some

SEWING SILKS

made in the country; a few ribbons and ladies' and coach trimmings of silk. New York and Philadelphia produce two millions' worth of the last named.

Manufactures of

LEATHER

increased from $17,700,000 to $93,000,000—increase 37 per cent. New England produced $10,000,000, the Middle States $18,000,000, and the West $6,000,000. Of

BOOTS AND SHOES,

there were made in 1860 fifty-four millions of dollars' worth, while New England alone made more than this in 1860. The great boot and shoe cities are Philadelphia over five millions; Lynn near that amount; Haverhill over four millions, and New York near four millions. Some shoe manufacturers made in North Brookfield $750,000 worth, and this was one of five establishments belonging to the same proprietors, who turned out over a million of pairs worth $1,300,000.

The increase in

INDIA RUBBER GOODS

is 90 per cent., being, in 1860, near $6,000,000.

The amount of

GAS

made in 1860 is set down at 500,000,000 feet. Of salt there was in 1850 produced $2,000,000 worth, while in 1860, New York, Virginia, Ohio, and Pennsylvania, which are in the order named, the principal salt producing States, made over $2,000,000 worth, at a cost of $1 18 a bushel. The of the real and personal estate in the country was estimated to be, in 1850, $16,000,000,000, representing an increase of 126 per cent. in ten years.

TOTAL VALUE

Jefferson Davis' Message.—We give the most interesting and important points of this Message, sent in Aug. 18, to the Rebel Congress, now in session in Richmond, Va

TO THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES.—It is again our fortune to meet for devising measures necessary to the public welfare, whilst our country is involved in a desolating war. The sufferings endured by some portions of the people excite the deepest solicitude of the Government, and the sympathy thus evoked has been heightened by the patriotic devotion with which these sufferings have been borne. The gallantry and good conduct of our troops—always claiming the gratitude of the country—have been further illustrated on hard fought fields, marked by exhibitions of individual prowess which can find but few parallels in ancient or modern history. Our army has not faltered in any of the various trials to which it has been subjected, and the great body of the people have continued to manifest a zeal and unanimity which not only cheer the battle-stained soldier, but gives assurance to the friends of constitutional liberty of our final triumph in the pending struggle against despotic usurpation.

The vast army which threatened the overthrow of the Confederacy has been defeated and driven from the lines of investment and that enemy, repeatedly foiled in his efforts to fix its capture, is now seeking to raise new armies on a scale such as modern history does not record, to effect that subjugation of the South so often proclaimed as on the eve of accomplishment.

Retaliation in kind, for many of them, is impracticable, for I have had occasion to remark in a former message, that under the excuse of provocation could our humane-hearted defenders be driven to wreak vengeance on unarmed men, on women or on children. But stern and exemplary punishment can and must be meted out to the murderers and felons, who, disgracing the profession of arms, seek to make of public war the occasion for the commission of the most monstrous crimes.

In connexion with this subject I am of opinion that provision [illegible] for the increase of our army, in the event of emergencies not now anticipated. The very large increase of forces recently called into the field by the President of the United States may render it necessary hereafter to extend the provisions of the conscription, so as to embrace persons between the ages of thirty-five and forty-five years. The vigor and efficiency of our present forces, their condition, and the skill and ability which distinguish their leaders, inspire the belief that no further enrollment will be necessary; but a wise foresight requires that if necessity should be suddenly developed during the recess of Congress requiring increased forces for such defensive measures should not be calling regiments into the field without awaiting the Government.

The report of the Secretary of the Navy embraces a statement of the operations and present condition of this branch of the public service, both afloat and ashore; the construction and equipment of armed vessels at home and abroad, the manufacture of ordnance and ordnance stores, the establishment of workshops, and the development of our resources of coal and iron.

We have never-ceasing cause to be grateful for the favor with which God has protected our infant Confederacy. And it becomes us reverently to return our thanks and humbly to ask of his beneficence that wisdom which is needed for the performance of the high trusts with which we are charged.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

Richmond, August 15, 1862.

Movements in Virginia.—Tuesday, August 26.—There are indications that the rebels, having failed in their designs of destroying Pope's army and entering Maryland, are contemplating a retreat, which, from the strong and threatening position of our forces, will be, at least, a dangerous experiment. In the meantime General McClellan's army is reinforcing the Army of Virginia, and every avenue of advance is held in considerable force, so that our troops may be ready to move forward at any time, if it be deemed expedient by the Commander-in-Chief.

The rebels have been unable to keep a very large army on the banks of the Rappahannock from a want of means of transportation and supply, and especially as the source of the latter would be threatened from two points probably. Some attempt will now be directed to the valley of the Shenandoah, as it is understood that a considerable force of rebels passed through Manassasville Gap, with a view of entering and making raids in the valley.

From New Orleans—Rebels Preparing to Attack Baton Rouge Again

An intelligent young gentleman, who left Baton Rouge on Sunday evening, informs us that the Confederate army was stationed ten miles distant from that place, hourly expecting large reinforcements. On being [illegible] of all, it was their intention to renew the attack on Baton Rouge. The United States forces had called in all their pickets, and notified all noncombatants to leave, with such movable property as they chose to take with them, as the [illegible] would shell the city the moment the Confederates renewed the conflict.

Governor Thomas O. Moore, the Chief Magistrate of the State of Louisiana, made his appearance in The Indicator last week on horseback. The moment the fact became known, the people turned out in mob and murder him. Many people were armed. He begged for mercy—cut still, but for hair women who surrounded him he would have been shot. The people dotted him [illegible] strapped him [illegible] strapped him [illegible]

ADVERTISEMENTS.

"UNION COTTAGE,"
ATLANTIC CITY NEAR THE INLET

The subscriber will always be happy to welcome her numerous friends, and the public in general.

TERMS

Board per week,	$6 00
" " day,	1 25
Single meals,	50

S. H. WAITE, Proprietress

NOTICE

To the friends of Religious Literature and human progress of the City and County of Philadelphia

This certifies that Miss Mary Still is a legally authorized agent for the City and County of Philadelphia Penna., to collect subscribers and donations for the Christian Recorder of the African Methodist Episcopal Church of America.

We, therefore, take great pleasure in recommending Miss Still to the citizens and friends as a lady every way worthy of such a position, as well as trustworthy, and we do hope, as the enterprise is commendable, that those to whom she may present this writing will not turn her away without either subscribing or contributing to the great cause.

Signed) ELISHA WEAVER.
Editor & General Book Steward.
No. 619 Pine St., Phila

BOARDING
IN BROOKLYN

MRS S PLANT formerly Richardson) respectfully announces that she has opened a first-class BOARDING & LODGING HOUSE at No. 97 HIGH STREET, Brooklyn—where she is prepared to accommodate the public on the most reasonable terms.

Her house being located in a very pleasant part of the city, and within five minutes' walk of Fulton Ferry, is made thus a very desirable and convenient place.

BOARDING.

Mrs. AMIA WILLIAM, of Cape May, will open the Bonaker House for the season, for the accommodation of all who wish to spend the summer there, and she will spare no pains to make all comfortable. Those wishing to spend one, two or three days, will find the Bonaker House the right spot. Prices very reasonable. 1sept

COAL, STOVES, &c., &c.

The subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has taken the store,

NO. 107 NORTH FIFTH STREET,

formerly occupied as the Anti-Slavery Office, (where he has been engaged for the last fourteen years,) in occupy it henceforth as a place of business for the sale of

COAL, STOVES, &C.

Having made arrangements with one of the first Coal Dealers in the city, to furnish the best qualities of Lehigh, Schuylkill, &c., at the lowest Cash prices, he hopes to give full satisfaction in this branch of his business

He will also keep constantly on hand a general assortment of good NEW and SECOND-HAND STOVES, FURNACES, &c.

Persons wishing Stoves taken down, stored away, put up, or cleaned, can be promptly accommodated by applying as above.

He hopes by energy and strict attention to business to obtain a fair share of patronage.

WM. STILL.
107 North Fifth Street, Philadelphia

REFERENCES.

J. M. M'Kim,	Dr Caspar Wistar,
Samuel Rhoads,	James Mott,
Dillwyn Parrish,	Thomas Williamson,
Prof. C. D. Cleveland,	W H. Furness.

BRUSH AND BELLOWS MANUFACTORY

GEORGE W METZ & SONS,
No. 815 MARKET STREET,
PHILADELPHIA

Blacksmiths', Brasiers', Dentists', and Foundry Bellows and Brushes of every description, always on hand.

☞ Particular attention given to Brushes for machine work Mr 26—1y.

IVORYTYPING & PHOTOGRAPHS
PAINTED IN EVERY STYLE
BY
MISSES C. A. BURROWS & S. F. DALES,
AT S. W. COR. TENTH AND ARCH.
S. F. DALES. feb. 15-1y.

TARRANT'S EFFERVESCENT SELTZER APERIENT.

This valuable and popular medicine has universally received the most favorable commendations of the Medical Profession as the best and most reliable remedy for Sick Headache, Nausea, Loss of Appetite, Indigestion, Acidity of the Stomach, Torpidity of the Liver, Costiveness, Rheumatic Affections, Hysterics, Piles, and all complaints where a gentle and cooling aperient or purgative is required.

It is particularly adapted to the wants of Travellers by Sea and Land, Residents of Hot Climates, Persons of Sedentary Habits, Delicate and Nervous Females, Children of Tender and Feeble Constitutions, and will find it a valuable addition to their medicine chest.

It is in the form of a powder, carefully put up in bottles, to keep in any climate, and merely requires a tea spoonful mixed with water to give a delightful effervescing draught.

Numerous testimonials from professional and other gentlemen, of the highest standing throughout the country, who have thoroughly tested its properties, can be seen at the Depot, and the [illegible] of an unimpeachable character.

TARRANT'S CORDIAL ELIXIR OF THE KEY RHUBARB

This beautiful preparation from the true Turkey Rhubarb has the aperient and stomachic properties of Senna, Jalap, &c., without their griping effects, and may be given to Infants with perfect safety. It is a most delightful preparation for Children, it being in a concentrated form, to enable it to occupy less space than any similar preparation.

TARRANT'S IMPROVED INDELIBLE INK,

for marking Linen, Muslin, Silk, etc., has been proved, by many years' experience, to be the best most permanent and reliable preparation ever offered to the public

The expert wife of this art is to be superseded by all and purchasers and dealers will find it to their interest to give it a preference over all similar preparations.

Manufactured only by

JOHN A. TARRANT & CO., Druggists.
No. 278 Greenwich St., cor. Warren St., New York.

SEWING MACHINES.
WILCOX & GIBBS

Price with Hemmer and Feller,
$35 00.

THIS MACHINE HAS POINTS OF SUPERIORITY PECULIARLY ITS OWN.

Stitching, Hemming, and Felling with a Single Thread

It forms a flat, even, and elastic seam, which is WARRANTED not to rip in wear, even if the seam is cut at frequent intervals, and also under all circumstances "to receive the same tension."

A Pictorial drawing of great interest, however, presents the possibility of the machine being run to the wrong direction, or the balance wheel running backwards.

Another feature which deserves particular attention is the THE WILCOX PATENT NEEDLE GUARD OR KEY HOOK.

You [illegible] stitches [illegible] needle [illegible] can be used in the same [illegible] without [illegible] the needle.

These Machines are simple and [illegible] in their construction, and seem to do the work of the shuttle [illegible] with [illegible] threads [illegible] stitch.

Although at about half the price of the other first class machines they will [illegible] and [illegible] as long as any.

"It is conceded by the general public that the Sewing Machine that the public have long been waiting for." Boston Transcript

"It is indeed a wonderful production, and for family use especially, no other will bear any comparison with it."—Philadelphia Evening Journal

"A most valuable acquisition." Scientific American

"Among the best and most serviceable Sewing machines. Light and simple, it is [illegible] and not liable in its construction that it seems almost impossible for it to get out of repair." Philadelphia Chronicle.

"Has combined with its own peculiar merits all the really valuable improvements of the highest priced machines." Penny Journal

"There can have, in the whole list of the Exhibition, few more nearly the requirements of a perfect family machine than as per exhibition."—Franklin Institute Exhibition Report of 1858

"Having [illegible] to exhibit a machine [illegible] we [illegible] and doing all work [illegible] more pleasing and better [illegible] the Wilcox & Gibbs as a single thread machine."—Pennsylvania State Agricultural Society's Report

"We must, in justice, express our conviction on the merits of the Wilcox & Gibbs Sewing Machine. We consider that a great desideratum has been supplied by it in proving beyond doubt, that for threads are not, as was supposed, necessary to a good instrument." Christian Advocate and Journal, June 21, 1860

"We have one of these machines in use, and think more highly of it than of any of the number we have tried."—Richmond Whig

The undersigned, Missionary to Constantinople, has examined more than twenty different kinds of Sewing Machines, and also six weeks' experience with Wilcox & Gibbs' Patent, he not per-chased one of them, as the best adapted to the wants of his family and as the least liable to require repair. OLIVER CRANE.

Constantinople, July 3, 1860.

The undersigned, during thirteen months, has had in almost constant use, in his family a Wilcox & Gibbs Sewing Machine, upon which has been made the clothing of his large family—from muslin to [illegible] cloth—including the clothing required by his several boys; and he does not know the seams failed, although in hard service. The machine now in use in his family has required no repair, and is, in all respects, well appointed and [illegible] JACOB CHICKERING Boston

☞ Send for a Circular ☜

JAMES WILCOX, Manufacturer
No 505 Broadway, New York.
Opposite St Nicholas Hotel

Advertisements.

THE DAUGHTERS OF HOPE GRAND UNION Temperance Society met, it being the thirteenth convention, April 10th, 1861. Representatives from Lodges are as follows—

From Garnet Union No. 4, D. of T.; from Phœnix Union, No. 8, D. of T.; from Northern Union, No. 16, D. of T.; Webb's Union, of Chambersburgh, Pa.; from Mr Bae' Union, of Carlisle, Pa.; from Mount Olive Union, No. 19, D. of T.; from Vanbrackle Union, No. 15, D. of T., of Norristown, Pa

Officers installed in their several positions are as follows—

Grand P., Sister Bennett; Grand Associate, Sister Burris; Grand Treasurer, Sister Fausett; Grand Conductress, C. Thompson; Grand Sentinel, A. M. Durhart; Grand Chaplain, Sister Hall

G. P. P., Sister R. Roberts, G. P. P. Sister Anderson,
" " E. Bowen, " " J. P. Black,
" " M. H. Bundy, " " E. A. Clark,
" " S Newman, " " White,
" " S. Davis, " " S Hall.

THE DAUGHTERS OF CORNISH SOCIETY.

THE STATED QUARTERLY MEETINGS of the Society are held on the first Wednesdays of February, May, August, and November.

The meetings of the Board are held on the Wednesday previous to the regular stated meetings of the society.

Mrs SARAH CARTER, President
Mr L. R SPENCER, Sec'y

THE BOOK DEPOSITORY
OF THE
AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH,
No. 619 Pine Street,
PHILADELPHIA

We keep on hand, in connexion with our other books, Sabbath school books of various kinds; Question Books; Catechisms, Nos. 1, 2, and 3. We have a good assortment of such books as are generally used in the Public Schools. Also, Stationery, Inks, Pens, Paper, Envelopes and Blank Books.

THE DEATH-BED OF THE REV. JOHN WESLEY

Wanted Canvassing Agents for the splendid large engraving which should be in every home of its admirers of that great and good man The most valuable engraving ever issued from this print. Send for Catalogue and instructions

WM SMITH, Publisher,
702 South Third Street, Philadelphia

WANTED.—The charge of a Public School. Reference as to ability can be given. Apply to
J W A., 1611 Belmuth St.

ONE-PRICE CLOTHING,
OF THE LATEST STYLES,

Made in the Best Manner, expressly for RETAIL SALES Lowest Selling Prices marked in Plain Figures. All Goods made to order warranted satisfactory. Our One-Price System is strictly adhered to. All are thereby treated alike. JONES & CO.,
Dec16-1y 604 MARKET STREET

GOOD NEWS

To Tailors, Dress-makers, and to those wishing to be such. Also, to owners of sewing machines that have not large machines for to sell or to rent and fit perfectly, La'ies' Dresses, Boys' and Men's Pants, Vests, Jackets, Sack and Over-coats

Local and Travelling Agents Wanted.

Address REV WM BRADLEY,
Carversville, Bucks Co., Pa

Or, apply to Mrs Mary C Wester wife of the Editor of this paper, at No Pine St, Phila. Pa. Jan12—1y

MRS. E A. PALMER'S
DRY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS STORE.
NO. 105 NORTH FIFTH STREET.
PHILADELPHIA

A General Assortment of Hosiery, Trimmings, Dry Goods, &c

Dress, Shirt-making, and Plain Sewing, promptly attended to Jan12—1y

COAL! COAL!! COAL!!!

The subscriber is selling the best qualities of Lehigh and Schuylkill at the following very low prices

Lehigh Store Coal, per ton,	$4 50
" Egg "	4 25
" Broken and Screened, per ton,	4 25
" Nut "	4 00
Schuylkill, Stove, and Egg and Broken, and Screened,	4 25
" Nut,	4 00

Orders left at the Store Store, No. 107 North Fifth St., will be promptly attended to. WM. STILL.
Jan1—1y 107 North Fifth St. Philada.

KEELY'S PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY
N W. corner Fifth and Coates.
PICTURE GALLERY AND FRAMES ON THE FIRST FLOOR.
Strangers should not fail to call and examine.
Admission Free

JAMES DOWNS,
DEALER IN
NEW AND SECOND HAND
CLOTHING,
No 225 South Second Street.
No 17—3mo PHILADELPHIA

WILLIAM STILL'S
STOVE STORE,
107 NORTH FIFTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA

The subscriber would respectfully inform his friends and all in want of good stoves, that he has now on hand a general variety of excellent PARLOR, COOK and CHAMBER STOVES, including the burning, as well as other patterns, which he is selling at very low rates. He buys entirely for cash, of the best wholesale houses, and of course can sell much cheaper than those buying on the usual credit system. At any rate his friends are invited to give him a call and examine for themselves before purchasing elsewhere, as he feels that they would be convinced that it would be to their interest to give him their patronage. Coal orders constantly on hand. WM. STILL.

JOSEPH H. COLE,
CONTINENTAL RESTAURANT,
NO. 717 LOMBARD STREET, PHILA,
(Above Seventh St., under Philadelphia Institute,)

Where he continues to keep always on hand the very best assortment of OYSTERS and other refreshments—hoping that all his friends and the public in general will favor him with their patronage.

☞ Meals served at all hours. Families supplied with Oysters of the best quality and flavor at the shortest notice.

☞ Also, public and private waiting done on the most reasonable terms 1y

Mrs. S. Shorter Hawkins
HAS NOW OPENED
NEW SPRING GOODS,

consisting of Dresses, Brilliants, Calicoes, &c. Hoop Skirts of all sizes, from 15 cents to $1 25. A large lot of linen Habits, from 8 to 25 cents. Also, cheap Hosiery and Gloves.

N B.—Mantuamakers are invited to examine my assortment of Dress trimmings of the latest styles: all will be sold cheap for cash at the Old Establishment,
615 Lombard Street.

For the Christian Recorder

BUCKS COUNTY SS.—TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS MAY COME.

I, the subscriber, a Justice of the Peace, in and for the county of Bucks, do hereby certify that I am acquainted and have Emily Johnson, formerly Rodney, who was married to Samuel Johnson, who was married before William Hawk, Esq., of Bristol, Bucks County, as appears by record on his docket; and after careful examination and mature reflection, I feel myself fully safe in saying that the said Johnson had a wife living at the time he married the said Emily Rodney; and I further say that I have the evidence of [illegible] (then preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church) Charles Rowsome, (Class leader) and Benjamin Cummings, (who is exhorter) that he had one or more wives living at the time he married the said Emily Johnson; and the evidence, on affirmation, of the said Emily Johnson, that he had a wife living at the time she married him, which, at the time she married him, she had an knowledge of Affirmed and subscribed before me this March 5th, 1862 Wm Rickey J P.

her
Emily + Johnson.
mark

THOMAS CHARNOCK,
GENERAL FURNISHING UNDERTAKER
NO 427 SOUTH 6TH ST.,
Second Door Below Bethel Church

REV. LEWIS S. LEWIS'
FAMILY LINIMENT
IS PREPARED WITH GREAT CARE,
EXPRESSLY FOR FAMILY USE.

Its composition is very simple, containing nothing that is injurious in any form, and there is no danger in its use from exposure to the weather. No family should be without it. Having a wish to benefit mankind in general, and those afflicted in particular—and having had recourse to the article in several cases of rheumatism, bunions, chilblains, and other lameness, it proving to be a remedy in every case—I therefore recommend it to the public

CERTIFICATES.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov 27, 1861.

Rev. L. S. Lewis—Dear Sir: I have been afflicted with the rheumatism eleven years during which time I tried almost everything, but received no sure relief. For the last four months my limbs and joints were so swollen, that at times I could not walk or use my slippers. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and at the first application was instantly relieved. After using one or two bottles, I was enabled to enjoy the free use of my limbs. Rev. GEORGE A. RUE.

NEWPORT, R. I., October 29, 1861.

Rev. L. S. Lewis—Dear Sir: I have been affected for a number of years, more or less, with a pain and weakness in my chest, arising from some cause unknown to me. I made two applications of your Liniment, and was relieved. I was attacked with the diphtheria, and was cured by using your Liniment. Its worth has proved itself ten times its cost. ANTHONY RANDOLPH.

NEWPORT, R. I., Nov. 19, 1861

Rev. L. S. Lewis—Dear Sir: I have been cured of stiffening in my joints by using your Liniment. I recommend it to all who are thus troubled. RICHARD WHITE.

NEWPORT, R. I., Nov 17, 1861.

Rev. Mr. Lewis—Your Liniment is, truly, all that it is recommended to be. I have tried it, and it has successfully cured my bunions. SOPHIA TAYLOR.

NEWPORT, R. I., Oct 7, 1861.

Mr Lewis—Dear Sir: I have had a pain and stiffness in my neck and back for some time. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and applied it twice, which effected a cure I recommend it to the public
Mrs EVELINA DEMOND

PROVIDENCE, Dec 10, 1861.

Rev. L. S Lewis—Dear Sir: For upwards of three years I have been very lame at times, arising from a sprain I have tried a great many things, without any definite results. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and was effectually relieved. Mrs. PHEBE A MORSE.

NEWPORT, R. I., Dec. 18, 1861.

...ION BRIDGE—CENTRAL PARK AND THE NEW RESERVOIR.

Until December last, the supply of water for this city was brought over the High Bridge at Harlem River, in two cast iron pipes, each 3 feet in diameter; since then, the new wrought iron pipe has been in use. It is a wonderful piece of mechanism. The material is wrought iron plates, each 8 feet by 6, and one half inch in thickness: its interior diameter being 7½ feet. This pipe is sufficient to meet the capacity of the new reservoir, without the aid of the two cast iron ones; should it ever need repairs, the city can depend on the two 8 feet pipes for a sufficient supply.

The new reservoir in Central Park is nearly completed; it is one of the largest in the world, covering a space of 100 acres, and varying in depth from 32 to 38 feet. This reservoir is estimated to hold 1,000,000,000 gallons of water, enough at the present rate of consumption, to supply the city for one month. It is divided into two equal portions by an artificial bank, which is 33 feet high, 411 feet wide at the bottom, and 15 feet wide at the top, being designedly 3 feet below the water line, so that when both parts are full, the surface will present the appearance of an unbroken lake.

The south gate house of this reservoir at Eighty-sixth street, was thrown open for the inspection of the public last week. It is divided into three compartments, known as the "fore bays," "back bays," and pipe vault; the masonry and earth work of each, weigh over 10,000 pounds. These compartments, with the complicated machinery, and ponderous piles of masonry, were necessary to resist the immense sheet of water which presses on each gate-house, with a force of at least 11,600 tons.

The "fore bays" are portions on either side of the reservoir, through which the water first passes to the distribution pipes; there are sixteen entrances for the water into this bay, each provided with an iron gate capable of being raised or lowered by one man. From this bay the water passes into the back bay, and from theses into six pipes, each four feet in diameter; through these it is distributed to all parts of the city below Eighty-sixth street. From a distance of about 30 feet from each distributing pipe, is the pipe vault; here, are six immense stop cocks connecting with the distributing pipes, from either of which, the water may be shut off for repairs, while distribution goes on through the others. This vault is lighted with gas.

Screens of copper wire are placed in grooves in the "fore bays" to prevent the passage of impure substances. To prevent the lake from ever flowing its banks, should the reservoir and the distributing pipes be foiled, there is in each gate house a well hole connecting with the sewer, so that when the water reaches a specified height, the surplus is carried off by a self-acting process. This sewer is 46 feet below the top bank of the reservoir, and 6 feet below the bottom of the reservoir, so that the water can all be drained off. The distance around the outer banks of the reservoir is over one mile and half.

The north gate-house is situated at the north end of the dividing bank of the reservoir, and serves the purpose of an inlet and outlet gate house; from it the water is discharged into the reservoir, and also distributed to all parts of the city above Ninety-Sixth street. The machinery here is more complicated, and the masonry more ponderous than at the south gate house. The ground for the reservoir was first broken in April, 1858; since then, 800 men have annually been employed on it. The entire cost of the reservoir including the land, will be about $7,000,000. Such is a brief sketch of the grand reservoir in Central Park. The Commissioners of the latter are constantly making improvements in it, but the limits of a letter forbid allusion to them; the Park is over 13-000 feet in length, its area 843 acres, furnishing recreation for the poor and the rich, the young and the old. In the heat of summer its arbors and shady rambles, are a relief from the confinement of houses and streets. Amid the fronts of winter, its skating ponds are equally attractive. Central Park should be visited by all sojourners in New York.

THE JAPANESE AT HOME.

Japan is a feudal empire, governed by a military aristocracy. There are nine classes of Japanese; with very rare exceptions no one can rise above the class in which he was born. Every attempt of the kind is unfavorably regarded, and is adverse to public opinion. The absence of ambition and of luxury is the probable cause of the quiet air, the complete satisfaction, the expansive gaiety, which mark the Japanese character. Nowhere else do you meet with people so contented, and so devoid of anxious thought.

The princes or daimio, the nobles, the priests, and the military constitute the four first classes of the nation, and enjoy the privilege of wearing two sabres. The subaltern officials and the medical men form the fifth class, and may wear one sabre. The merchants and wholesale dealers, the retail dealers and artisans, the peasants and coolies, the tanners and the leather curriers, make the four last classes of the population, and may not, in any case, wear any sword. All who deal in skins are reckoned impure; they are not allowed to reside in towns, but dwell in villages especially allotted to them in the open country. They supply the state with executioners, who do not lead an idle life; for the penal laws of Japan are exceedingly rigorous, and inflict the punishment of death for very trifling offences. Whosoever causes his neighbor's death through imprudence, or conceals a criminal, is immediately beheaded. It is to be hoped that further intercourse with Europe may temper the severity of Japanese legislation.

The only sciences cultivated in the empire are medicine and astronomy. There are two observatories in the island of Niphon; one at Yeddo, the other at Meako. The great comet of October, 1858, did not cause the slightest signs of astonishment or uneasiness in the natives countenances. At Shanghai, during an eclipse of the moon, very different manifestations were made. The military mandarins shot their arrows, to kill the dragon who was devouring the moon; from every junk and every pagoda there sounded a deafening din of gongs, intended to frighten the monster away. The Japanese physicians read Dutch medical books and seriously studied their art. Two of them assiduously frequented the embassy, for the sake of consulting the navy surgeons respecting the cholera.

In religious matters the Japanese are tolerant, or rather very indifferent. In the Archipelago, for ages past, several worships have co-existed in peace; Buddhism and the religion of Confucius, foreign importations, share the public favor with the Sinto or worship of the Kamis, the primitive religion of the country. Thanks to this tolerance, the Spanish and Portuguese missionaries had not been many years in Japan before two hundred thousand natives of the highest classes had received baptism and became Christian converts. Such a religious movement was unexampled. But times are changed. For the last two hundred years there has not been a single Christian in Japan. They were all exterminated by the Emperors, Taiko and Yeyes.

There is no standing army in Japan. All the two sabred gentry, who form the suite of the princes and governors in time of peace, act as soldiers in time of war. Individually, they are very brave; but their swords and spears will hardly enable them to resist European tactics. It is asserted, however, that, conscious of their weakness, they carefully read strategetical works. Japan feels that Europe has made the first breach in her exclusiveness, and is tormented just now by a touch of anxious uncertainty respecting the future. She understands fully that with bows and arrows, she can make no head against Minie rifles, and she endeavors to acquire the knowledge of the actual state of naval sciences and military art. To have soldiers worthy of the name, she must at once renounce sandals, puffy trowsers, and long robes trailing behind; but she is ready to make the sacrifice. The Japanese have not, like the Chinese, the stupid prejudice to believe and to boast themselves superior to every other people. They set themselves above the Chinese and the Coreans, but they estimate the Western powers at their real value.—All the Year Round.

SUGGESTIONS FOR HEALTH PRESERVATION

The season is now upon us when, owing to the summer heats and atmospheric influences, fevers prostrate, and diseases exhaust mankind—who, during less debilitating seasons of the year, are comparatively exempt from disease. Yet the class of complaints may generally be avoided. The reader should be well enough acquainted with the subject of Health-Preservation to know that it does not depend upon medicines. These would rarely be necessary, if we were as anxious to take care of our own health, as a thrifty farmer is to take care of that of his sheep and hogs. Men are apt to employ less common sense in their own behalf, in this regard, than in behalf of their swine. They will carefully study and profit by information relative to the ailments of their herd, and how to avoid them, while the preservation of their own health, and that of their children is neglected rarely thought of. Water still sparing, rather pains not expensive to procure the most wholesome food for their animals they debilitate their own stomachs with that which they know to be unwholesome. The general rules and requirements of health are simple and easily learned. In fact, one has but to watch the sensations of his olfactories, skin, and stomach, and heed them, to keep clear of all danger from ordinary diseases. The sense of smell warns him against inhaling impure air; the skin by dryness, feverishness, or irritation, indicates a want of that frequent bathing, which is so essential to health; and the stomach calls for food when needed, repels it when enough has been eaten, and in a natural state, betokes generally that which is unwholesome. A little extra pains to notice these indications will greatly sharpen the perceptions.

It may be set down as a general rule that ordinary diseases cannot obtain a foothold where only pure air is inhaled, the skin is clean and healthy, and the stomach kept in good condition. The latter involves the most difficulty, owing to the depraved habits of diet in "civilized" society. But a few rules, well lived up to, will rarely fail, viz: Be regular as to time of eating; do not exercise violently either immediately before or immediately after meals; and let the last meal of the day be light and easy of digestion, so that sleep may be undisturbed and refreshing. In the morning, any bilious disturbance of the stomach is known by the bitter taste in the mouth. Heed this warning, by restricting diet to plain bread, vegetables, and ripe fruits; and if it increases, go without supper, and take a thorough warm water bath—rinsing off in cool water—just before retiring to bed. As a general direction rule for Summer, persons in any degree delicate should use plenty of ripe, raw, and cooked fruits at meals, and but little, if any, fat meats. Let all dietetic changes be gradual, and for the most part use food that requires chewing, and chew it well, in order to give the stomach the full benefit of the assistance of the saliva in digestion.

Avoid sudden changes in quantity of clothing, cooling off suddenly when heated and perspiring, and all sudden changes. In keeping the skin clean, do not neglect that most important part, the scalp.—American Agriculturist.

THE EAGLE'S FLIGHT

Great as are the distances which these birds sometimes fly, it becomes comprehensible when we know that an eagle, as he sweeps freely through the air, traverses a space of sixty feet in a second of time. To be able thus rapidly to move along is undoubtedly an attribute of power; but there is something far more imposing, far more majestic, in that calm, onward motion when, with wings outspread and quite still, the mighty bird float, buoyantly in the atmosphere, upheld and borne along by the mere act of volition. The length of time he can thus remain suspended without a single beat of his broad, shadowy pinions, is, to me, still an inexplicable fact. He will sail forward in a perfectly horizontal direction for a distance of more than a mile without the slightest quiver of a feather giving sign that the wings are moved. Not less extraordinary is the power the bird possesses of arresting himself instantaneously at a certain spot in dropping through the air with folded wings from a height of three or four thousand feet. When circling so high up that he shows but as a dot, he will suddenly close both wings, and, falling like an aerolite, pass through the intervening space in a few seconds of time. With a burst his broad pinions are again unfolded, his downward progress is arrested, and he sweeps away horizontally, smoothly, and without effort. He has been seen to do this when carrying a sheep of twenty pounds' weight in his talons, and from so giddy a height that both the eagle and his booty were not larger than a sparrow. It was directly over a wall of rock in which the eyrie was built, and while the speck in the clouds was being examined, and doubts entertained as to the possibility of its being the eagle, down he came headlong, every instant increasing in size, when, in passing the precipice, out flew his mighty wings; the sheep was flung into the nest, and on the magnificent creature moved, calmly and unhurried as a bark sails gently down the stream of a river.—Bonner's Forest Creatures.

WONDERFUL INVENTION

We recently witnessed says the New York Express, the type setting and type-distributing machine, invented by Timothy Alden, once a New York printer, but a native of Massachusetts. The invention cost twenty years of labour, the life of the inventor, and $10,000 in money. It is impossible to convey to the uninitiated the utility and genius of this remarkable invention. It is perhaps enough to say that one machine is capable of producing the work of six or eight men, and with its cost placed at the high price of $1500, it will reduce the price of ordinary type-setting, at present rates from one half to two-thirds. Its great simplicity is one of its most interesting qualities. The fruits it produces are as near to thinking and reading as one can imagine. One directing mind, with ordinary care, can produce the most extraordinary results. It may be worked by hand or steam. The printer will comprehend what such a discovery is, when we say that it picks up the type, spells the words, places them properly, amorts the types again after they have been used, into their appropriate channels, and from these again they are drawn out and set up, when needed for a second use. There are one hundred and fifty four types and characters, including capitals, italics, figures, spaces, points of punctuation, and all at once under the control of one person, which has but to touch the keys of this circular machine to produce all these combinations.

A MARVELLOUS MACHINE

The most curious instrument in the great exhibition is that exhibited by Mr. Peters for microscopic writing, that is infinitely more wonderful than Mr Whitworth's machine for measuring the millionth part of an inch, which excited such great astonishment in 1851. With this machine Mr. Peters, it is stated the words "Matthew Marshall, Bank of England," can be written in two and a half millionth of an inch in length; and it is actually said that calculations made on this data show that the whole Bible can be written twenty two times in the space of a square inch. We must leave a detailed description of this most extraordinary instrument to another occasion, and content ourselves with simply saying that the words to be written microscopically are written in pencil, in ordinary characters, on a sheet of paper, at the bottom of the instrument. But the pencil with which this is done communicates, by a series of levers and gimbals, with another minute pencil and tablet at the top, by means of which the ordinary writing of the pencil, and the pencil for the microscopic writing, both move in unison, though the motion of the latter is so graduated that a stroke of a quarter of a millionth of an inch at the top of the shape and character of both marks being nevertheless precisely alike in outline. As a matter of course, the microscopic writing at the top is only visible under powerful magnifiers, and the object of the machine is chiefly to mark bank notes with certain minute signatures for the prevention of forgery. Such a precaution, no doubt, would prove an effectual stoppage to a number of tradesmen supplied themselves with microscopes to examine [illegible] would now detect any forgery.—Liverpool Paper.

SUNDAY DINNERS.

Many a man has the courage to march to the cannon's mouth, and yet fails to resist over-indulgence in eating. He who has an intellect peerless among the generation in which he lives, becomes an imbecile at the dinner table. The great Jonathan Edwards confined for two years to not only as much as would meet the waste of his system, but day after day he found himself conquered; day after day he made the same record of three attempts—"failure!" For two years he went to his meals each day, resolving he would not eat too much; for two years he came away from the table forced to confess his convictions that he had "exceeded." When he had eaten a decent dinner he could resume work in a moderate, but there is an uncommon sense would stop to say, "I shall be somewhat faint if I leave off now." So he would not leave off and "in three minutes afterwards I am convinced of excess." If such great minds have so little control over their appetites, it cannot be wondered at that the less gifted, that the masses should abandon themselves to over indulgence in all their propensities. Excess in eating may be avoided by taking three regular meals a day (nothing between) in a private room—having such an amount sent as observation shows can be eaten, and still leave a desire for more. For fifteen years that was the practice of that beautiful character and eminent philanthropist, Amos Lawrence, of Boston. There is wisdom and health in the practice of some who habitually avoid eating meat of any kind every Friday. A better plan still, quite as sure of religious profit as of physical advantage, is to take nothing for breakfast or supper on the Sabbath-day but a piece of cold bread and butter, with a single cup of weak coffee or tea, or other hot drink, taking at one P. M. a single bowl of any kind of soup, with the crust of cold bread broken into it. This can be taken to the utmost amount desired, for the nutritious material in it is so small that the sense of oppression induced by an equal bulk of a proper dinner meal is not experienced, or if so, it is slight, momentary and harmless. If such a system of eating were adopted in families on the Sabbath, taking not an atom of any thing between meals, an amount of human suffering and sickness would be prevented which to the multitude would be absolutely incredible, could it be expressed in numbers. Let the reader try it for a single day on himself, and see if he will not have a feeling of wellness on that and on the succeeding day, which is delicious in its physical results, and prevents the sickness and weary waiting, sleepiness which is so antagonistic of the profitable and enjoyable service which is proper to the sanctuary. It was an expressive saying of that gifted and model minister and man, the Rev. Dr. James W. Alexander, that "too many of us, by reason of 'Sunday dinners,' were more like gorged anacondas than any thing else, and thus became totally unfit for the afternoon service." He who deprives the body of one day's rest in seven, a Divinity has ordained in wisdom and mercy, will always suffer for it sooner or later, and it is better for that man who cares for himself to rest more and work less for a protracted time, and work to accomplish while he does live.

Dr. Hall.

GOOD ADVICE.

Cold water is used and prescribed much more than formerly, though many would think a physician not worth sending for who should prescribe so simple a remedy. Abernethy's advice to one of his wealthy patients was, "Let your servants bring to you three or four pailsfull of water, and put it into a washtub; take off your clothes, get into it, and you'll recover." "This advice of yours seems very much like telling me to wash myself," said the patient. "Well," said Abernethy, "it is open to that objection."

THE CARE OF HARNESS.

Harness is seldom injured by being wet if hung up to dry instead of being left in a mass on the floor or in a corner, where the drying is so slow as to create mould. For general use, harness should be fairly oiled, and for this purpose either neat's foot oil should be used or the article known by carriers as Lenders, and this should be applied to while the leather is moist, but not wet. The harness should be wrapped up in a wet cloth one day before the applicant of Lenders or neat's foot oil, and should be rubbed in smartly with a brush for a sufficient length of time to insure its entrance into the leather rather than leave it upon its immediate surface. If the leather be positively dry, this substance cannot enter, and therefore the necessity of its being moist and pliant at the time of application. Varnish should never be applied, as this the pores and prevents the necessary access of air, causing the leather to become crisp and rigid, and in a short space of time it is rendered tender, causing it to crack, break, etc. Before applying any oily substance to leather, all dirt should be thoroughly removed from its surface, and no other material than limp black should ever be mixed with oil where it is necessary to blacken the leather. Shoe blacking is sometimes used, and always with injurious effects, it frequently contains sulphuric acid, which when brought in contact with leather rapidly destroys it. When the leather is very dry, as with boots and shoes, the injury from this cause is not so great. Vegetable oils should never be applied to harness of any kind, for after a while they harden the leather and destroy its usefulness. Leather curtains should be varnished, but always kept perfectly pliant by very moderate and frequent application of the oils.—Working Farmer.

Family Circle.

THE ROBBER'S CASTLE

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN OF H. CLAUREN, BY B. H. B. LATROBE, ESQ., APRIL, 1819.

CONCLUDED.

I was well convinced that no living being but myself was in the ruin. A robber would not thus have announced himself. No one could have prepared me a trick of this kind by way of a joke; for, excepting the household of my aunt, not a soul knew of my arrival. My aunt and Julia were in no disposition for a jest, and the rest of the household were in that relative situation to me that they would not have dared to practise one upon me. Neither did the sounds I had heard, the soft sobbing and the dreadful rattle of death, seem to be such as would be the subject of mirth. It was the sound of the last agony of life.

But whence came the sounds? From the sepulchre of the lately departed Cecilia? Was it the last groan of the vanquished Bruno? Was it the last sigh of agony of the miserable Leah? Or was it the repeated moan of a buried Knight Templar? Or were not rather all these conjectures absurd? But not these sounds proceed from some benighted traveller, who coming along the road that would close to the ruins had observed the light in my windows and had knocked at the garden-door in hopes of relief and admittance? That is natural. I spoke to the unknown the explanation. I threw my summer cloak about me, put a light in my lantern, snatched my sword, and I prepared to go out into the yard. A cold stream of air then flowed into my secret chamber. It seemed as the whisper of the lips of an angel. Astonished, I stood still in the midst of the room. The cooler current died away. Nothing moved but they echoed through my inmost soul, and a cold tremor seized me. This could be no terrestrial harp. The sounds seemed to descend from the light fleecy clouds. I tried to persuade myself that this too was illusion, but I had heard the harmonious tones distinctly. I could have repeated the melody upon a harp, so lively was its impression upon my memory. No, it could be an illusion. The heavenly notes now again were heard, and then followed the well known hymn: "Wie sie so sanft ruhen." Two female voices, softly restrained, accompanied the invisible music. I heard the words distinctly:

"How sweetly rest,
In earth's cold breast
Who in the grave, so cold, so deep,
[illegible]
I too haste to that calm bourne
From whence no traveller returns."

I understood every word, as if the invisible choir had stood by my side. These are no spirits, thought I, they are human beings, said I, joyfully to myself, and opened the windows to look whether any one was below. A faint light beamed from the vault of Cecilia, and its rays fell upon the flower garden that was before it. The moon was sunk behind the mountain. Black midnight covered the valley. Feeble lightning played upon the opposite rocks. The clock of the village church struck twelve.

I called, Who is there? No answer, but the echoing converse of the Grand's Mountain, when repeated three times, who is there,—is there—there. Immediately the second verse of the hymn was struck up.

"In their soft bed, no tears are shed,
No short lived joys deceive, no care
Corrodes the heart that harbors there
Where no woeful cypress waves around,
They sleep, till th' angel's trump shall sound."

I will go down, said I to myself: there, below are human beings: and I shut the window. But I could not conquer a secret fear, and I took up my pistols. I trembled. In this state, thought I, I can neither take aim nor hit the mark. I laid them down, and immediately another verse of the hymn of the nuns of Clara, began:

"When by their side,
My youthful pride
Soon withered, like the blushing dye,
Of vernal roses, there shall lie,
Shall tears of love, or friendship shed
Freshen the sod that decks my head?"

Shall they, indeed, said I, slowly, and moved forward. I grasped my sword with force as if some one would wrench it from me, unlocked the door of my chamber, and, wrapped in my light cloak, the lantern in my hand, I descended the staircase. The funeral song accompanied me, but I could no longer distinguish the words. It sounded as if the singers with their invisible harp had moved to a greater distance. When at the foot of the stairs, I turned to the right down the hall, approached the vault on tip toe and stood at the iron grate. The vault was only half illuminated. The music had ceased. In the middle of the vault upon an elevation, in which there were several steps, stood a closed marble coffin. By the coffin knelt a female. Her slender hands covered her face, and her head leaned against the coffin. She was of a clear, fair complexion, but pale as the shadow of beauty. Her silken hair was twisted in soft curls around her small head. A white rose rested upon her swelling bosom. It was Cecilia, just as she was painted in the hall above. I was out of myself with fear. The sullenness of death was around me. The faint, glimmering light in the vault; the chilly air of midnight that breathed upon me through the grate; Cecilia believed to be dead, kneeling by her coffin, and the low rustling of the wind among the trees behind me, appalled me. My blood curdled in my veins. I seized a bar of the iron gate of death, shook it with violence, and called with the voice of despair: Cecilia!

"Lord Jesus!" My Saviour!" cried the figure, wringing her hands against the damp vault, and at once. In the next moment the light vanished, a [illegible] crash shook the interior of the dreary vault. I started back from the dreadful gate and hasted, secure knowing what I did, up the staircase, and was in my chamber again. I flew to the window to see if the vault were again illuminated. All was dark, but in the shrubbery appeared a white form, and vanished. I shut the window.

Now, indeed, all rest, all self-command were gone. I hesitated whether I should spend the remainder of this terrible night in this horrible dwelling of ghosts, or go down to the mansion of my aunt and there solicit admittance. While I stood in doubt, three distinct knocks were again heard without, as if the Grand Master called the brethren to order, and the dull sobbing, and the death rattle again followed. I listened immoveable. But how describe my horror, when I immediately afterwards heard the clang of arms at a distance, followed by a laugh of contempt. I distinctly heard the clash of two swords that struck against each other. I heard them distinctly strike helmet, breastplate and shield, and none but a fiend could laugh such a laugh. The clang of arms seemed to come from the Hall of Knights. I was near fainting. Have all the powers of hell conspired against me, said I, half aloud? Are there secrets in nature by which the dead can be called from their graves? If there are, I will see them. This dreadful night shall solve the riddles of the other world, riddles over which I have long hung in doubt.

More to despair than from resolution, I took a second time my lantern in my hand, and grasped my sword. I opened slowly and tremblingly the door that led to the corridor. I stared down the long, narrow passage and saw nothing. All was silent. I was in a cold sweat. I could hardly hold the lantern. But I seized firm hold of my sharp sword and stepped slowly down the corridor. My teeth would have chattered but I clenched them firmly together. I was determined to solve the mystery had it cost me my life. The door leading into the Hall of the Knights was unlocked and the heavy iron bar, which that afternoon was not as the door, hung down. Here was what my aunt called her lumber room, and I remembered that from it, a winding staircase went to the bottom of the tower to the dungeons. I opened with trembling hand the iron door a little. The vaulted room was slightly lighted. The figures of two tall knights, armed from head to foot, stood before me. Bruno the slain and Gotthard his murderer. They fixed their eyes upon me and one of them dropped his sword. I started back; my breath left me. I had no moisture in my throat; I clapped the door to behind me and made the castle ring again as if a thunderbolt had struck it. The picture of Leah fell down at my heels. The armed knights roared ha! ha! ha! ho! and rattled their black armor close after me. I would have proceeded to my chamber, but something behind grasped and held me fast. In despair I turned my sword and stabbed backwards. I struck it. I pushed the murderous blow a foot deep. At this terrible moment I collected courage enough to turn my head, and woe to me! I saw what I had stabbed.

SECOND PART.

I had stabbed! What had I stabbed? I had stabbed my light summer cloak. The hem had caught and hung in the door of one of the immense iron stoves that stood in the Hall of the Knights.* As I opened the door to release my cloak it creaked and then fell to again. That creaking was the soft sobbing and the rattle of death, and as the door fell to again the latch struck against the hook made to receive it. This was the knocking of the Grand Master. The draft in the stove had opened and shut the door occasionally. The hinges had not been oiled for many years and they creaked and whined in so very peculiar a manner, that on trying it many times, the illusion was such that I could hardly undeceive myself. The door and the latch were iron, the hook was iron, therefore the blow was exactly like that of an iron hammer striking upon iron. The last stroke was strong, strongly, two others followed that were quieter and weaker, as it bounded backwards and forwards. Many of my readers there are, will readily conceive why I believed the mysterious ceremonies to be most solemn.

Bruno and Gotthard had followed me into the Hall in order to see who it was that had disturbed their conduct in the lumber room. They now had pushed up their visors and showed two chubby, rosy cheeked faces of living men. They were at least as much frightened as myself, but we soon understood one another.

They were, in fact, the two under gardeners, George and Henry. It was a regular rule with my aunt that some one should always sleep in the castle, as she did not choose to leave the valuable furniture, which since its repair she had placed there, entirely unguarded. But as no one liked to sleep alone in the ruins, they had agreed to sleep together. They knew nothing of my being there also. It happened on the occasion of my evening that the two clowns took it into their heads to play knights. Old armors, helmets, swords, shields, and coats of mail, hung in plenty on the walls. Whenever one of them had given the other a blow, he burst into a horse-laugh. As their visors were down, this clownish laugh, enclosed in the cavity of the helmet, had a hollow, horrible sound, as if it burst from the throat of a demon. When I broke in between them, one of them dropped his sword for fear, but seeing that I fled, they plucked up courage and followed me. As in my flight I passed by the door of the stove, the draft of the air opened it a little. The hem of my cloak slipped in between and the door shut again. I believed that a monster had seized me, turned my sword and pushed it through my thin cloak.

So far every thing was explained. But the song of the nuns, the light in the vault, the dreadful crash that followed my call to Cecilia, who kneeled by her own coffin, the white figure that vanished in the wood, all this was still a mystery. I asked the gardeners whether they had not heard singing. Oh said one of them, "that often happens," and he lifted up Leah that lay on the ground. "As long as she hangs here it won't be otherwise in this old castle. Since Miss Cecilia's death, the nuns of St. Clara of Breslau, that are dead, come here two or three times a week, and sing sometimes till midnight, masses for the soul of poor Leah." I held the picture nearer to me. It made me shudder, for I fancied that I saw the unhappy murderer of her child before me. The art of the painter had produced a wonderful effect. She looked as if she had prayed to the holy mother of God unceasingly, and found no mercy. For her there appeared to be no hope during the endless course of eternity. I put down the picture and desired the men to go down with me and see whether we could see anything about the vault. They accompanied me. We went without a lantern, which we left burning in my chamber. We saw nothing; all was still and dark in the vault. The nuns, the masses, the light, all had vanished. Cecilia slept again quietly in her coffin.

We went back into the ruin. The gardeners returned to their lumber room, and I was now again alone.

I threw myself on the sofa, listened for two tedious hours, fell at last asleep and waked late in the morning. My aunt and Julia now came to breakfast with me.

"I had almost paid you a visit yesterday evening," said Julia, "but I had no breath or strength to ascend the staircase."

"How so?" I asked in astonishment.

"I have had such a night!" she replied. "I have not been able to close my eyes."

"You, Julia?"

"Only imagine. Yesterday, as you had left us, and just as I was about to undress, in comes Harriet."

"Who is Harriet?"

"Have you forgotten Harriet, the daughter of the steward at Eichberg. She came with a lantern, accompanied by her lover, Albert, as soon as the storm was over. He had received a letter from Prague and was under the necessity of going thither to-morrow, that is, this very morning. He has been here these two months, and has been every day in our house, and I will come and take tea with us. My mother was already in bed. I chatted with them a little while and then accompanied them through the garden in order to let them out at the back door, which would save them a considerable distance. As the path led us near to the ruins, unfortunately the idea struck Albert (the lover) to visit, for the last time the grave of Cecilia. We had often, we three, come hither in the evening; had entered the vault and had sung a pious hymn by her grave. I was pleased with the fancy of this enthusiast to take leave of my sister, and had still the key of the vault in my pocket. We entered without any fear, the still chamber of her rest. We conversed on the state of the departed; on the separation of friends and on their meeting in a happier world. Albert folded his beloved in his arms, and both vowed to be true to each other to the last moment of their lives, and to love each other with the purity and truth of Cecilia. Harriet sank, overcome by the solemnity of the place and of the vow she had uttered, upon her knees by the side of Cecilia's coffin, and prayed softly to the Father of Love, that she might resemble the beloved friend of her youth, her Cecilia. Albert withdrew with me into the small apartment he found which our mother has fitted up, he to play my harp and played a fine old hymn, 'Wie so sanft ruhen.' I sat down by his side and sung the pious words of the hymn. Harriet heard us and joined her silver voice to mine as she kneeled at the coffin. We had sung as far as to the third verse. We could sing no more, tears, burning tears drowned our voices. Suddenly a loud and wild voice called out 'Cecilia.' 'Lord Jesus, my Saviour,' cried Harriet, and rose and flew to us in the small apartment. Closing violently the iron door behind her, she called out Away, Away, and took up the lantern so hastily that the light was extinguished. We found our way out of the chamber, and flew rather than ran, through this shrubbery to the house. Here we recovered a little from our fright, and I then sent a guide with them for it was necessary to be in Eichberg that very night."

Now it was my turn to take up the story. The reader knows it already, and can easily explain the mystery of this extraordinary night.

My aunt presented me with the picture of the unfortunate Leah, and my cousin Julia busied with her needle the cruel wounds I had inflicted upon my cloak.

FINIS.

"I'M TOO LITTLE"

These words reached the ears of Mrs. Wilson, as she came into the parlor, one afternoon. She found her three children seated on the sofa; Anna, the eldest, trying to amuse her younger brother and sister. She had been telling them a story in her own wise way, of some good little girl, who was a great help to her mother, and was showing the example of the excellent child, for the benefit of Ella, when their mother came in.

"Too little for what, Ella?" asked Mrs. Wilson, pausing before the children.

"I was telling her," said Anna, "the story of Katie Lee, and when I said she must be good, and do as Katie did, she told me she was too little."

"Little girls of four years are rather small," said Mrs. Wilson, "but my Ella isn't too little to be good, I hope."

"But Katie was older than I, I'm sure," said Ella; "I can't do such things as she can."

"What things?" asked mamma.

"Why bringing in the milk-pitcher; I'm afraid I'd spill the milk, and then Susan would say, 'Oh, you are a plague.'"

Mrs. Wilson smiled, for poor little Ella was called a "plague" very often.

"If you wouldn't bring the milk-pitcher, darling, you could be useful in other ways," she said.

"Oh, no, I can't, I'm too little," persisted Ella.

Mrs. Wilson sat down and took the child up to her lap. "Now listen to me, you can pick up my ball which is on the carpet, and get paper to chop peas, and fetch me a book or my work basket can't you?"

"Yes, I can do those," said Ella.

"Well, then, are you too little to be useful?"

"Why, is that being useful?" I thought it meant real great things," said Ella, opening her eyes very wide in astonishment.

"It means that older girls are to do great things, and little girls are to do little things," said her mother. "You are a little girl now, and are your Heavenly Father only wishes you to do little things; but then, my darling must try and do them willingly and pleasantly. You should always be ready to do what mamma asks, at once, not say, 'I'm tired,' or 'I don't want to,' because, though you are only four years old, you are not too little to be useful.—Children's Friend.

HARD BEGINNING TO.—Some one was telling an Irishman that a fellow had eaten ten glasses of ice cream, whereupon Pat shook his head. "So you don't believe it?" With a nod, Pat answered, "I believe in the creame, but not in the glasses." "How cold it is," said Pat, as he trudged along on foot one bitter cold day, "that a man niver needs a team going the same way he is."

Pittsburg Markets.

REVIEW FOR THE WEEK ENDING AUG 23D, 1862

[NOTE.—The quotations given in the following Review are the wholesale prices, in the filling of orders to the retailers, of the city and country trade; and the rates paid for country produce, at the wharf, railroad depots, wagons and canes.]

APPLES.—None in market.
ASHES.—Pots, [illegible] Pearls, 5[illegible] Soda ash 3 [illegible].
BREAD.—Water crackers, ₱ pound, 6c., Butter [illegible] Sugar do.
BEANS.—Small white, 1.25@1.50 ₱ bus.
BROOMS.—Common to fancy, 1.25@2.50 ₱ dozen.
BUCKETS, &c.—Buckets, per dozen, 1.50@1.75; Tubs [illegible].
BUTTER.—Fresh roll, [illegible] ₱ pound; packed, 7[illegible].
BACON.—Plain hams, [illegible] sugar-cured, 7[illegible].
CHEESE.—Western Reserve [illegible] Eastern 10.
CANDLES & SOAP.—Tallow dips, 9[illegible]; Adamantine, 18c.; Rosin Soap, 4½c.; fancy, 10c.
COTTON YARNS.—Assorted Nos. [illegible] Yarn ₱ pound, from Nos. 5 to 10, [illegible] and one cent advance each No; cotton chain, [illegible] do. [illegible] cotton wick, [illegible].
CORD AGE.—[illegible].
DRIED FRUIT.—Apples, ₱ bushel, 75@1 00; Peaches, 1.75@2.00.
DRIED BEEF.—10c@10c. ₱ pound.
EGGS.—Barrel or less, 8@9c. ₱ doz.
FLOUR.—Superfine, from store, 3.75@[illegible]; Extra [illegible] Extra family, 5.00@5.25; Rye [illegible].
FEATHERS.—Fresh, 35@40c. ₱ pound.
FISH.—Large No. 3 Mackerel, 8.00@8.50; Baltimore Herring, 5.00; Lake Fish, [illegible]; Codfish, 5@6c.
FEED.—Selected feed [illegible] ₱ 100 pounds.
GRAIN.—Wheat, Red [illegible] White 1.00@1.15. Rye, 45@46. Oats, 29@30. Corn, 35@40.
GLASS.—Assorted sizes [illegible] 10x12, 4.00; Country brands, 8x10, 3.25; 10x12, 3.75.
GROCERIES.—Sugar by the barrel, 10[illegible] hhd. [illegible] N. O. Molasses, 47c@48, Golden Syrup, 75. [illegible] Rice, 7[illegible].
HOMINY.—[illegible].
HAY.—Sales at Scales 8.00@12 ₱ ton.
IRON.—Common bar, 2½@2½c; Blooms, [illegible]; Pig Metal, [illegible].
LEAD, &c.—Bar, 8c., Pig, 7c. Shot, ₱ bag, 2.25.
LEATHER.—Sole, 23@24c; Upper, per dozen, $2[illegible].
LIME.—Louisville, ₱ barrel, 1.20@[illegible].
LARD.—No. 1, 7@8c.
NAILS, &c.—100, ₱ keg, 3.25, with pro rata advancement [illegible].
NAVAL STORES.—Turpentine ₱ gallon, 1.50; Rosin, ₱ barrel, [illegible]; Tar, ₱ barrel, [illegible].
OILS.—Linseed, 75 ₱ gallon; Tanners', [illegible]; Lard, 65.
POTATOES.—50@60.
PORK.—Rifle 7.25 ₱ keg, Rock, 4.50.
RAGS.—Mixed, 3.
SALT.—No. 1, 1.75 ₱ barrel, Extra [illegible].
SHEETINGS.—No. 1 and 2, [illegible] ₱ yard.
SEEDS.—Flaxseed, 1.10@[illegible] ₱ bushel; Timothy, 2.00@2.10; Clover, 3.75@4.00.
TALLOW.—Rough, 5 c.; rendered, 6@7.
WHITE LEAD.—No. 1, 2.50 per keg.
WOOL.—Coarse, 42 c.

Advertisements.

DR. J. GOODWILLIE,
DENTIST,
316 South Eleventh Street, below Spruce,
PHILADELPHIA.

SUPERIOR FRENCH CONFECTIONS,
MANUFACTURED BY
AUGUSTUS TILLMES, No. 1302 CHESTNUT ST.,
Put up neatly for 1, 2 and 5 pound Packages, with an extra charge. A LARGE VARIETY OF BOX CONFECTIONS, suitable for Holiday presents. A fine selection of Fruits and Candies constantly on hand.
A. TILLMES, 1302 Chestnut St.

PIANOS & MELODEONS.
The largest most elegant and cheapest stock in America, and on the most reasonable terms.
All instruments sold are just as represented—guaranteed for ten years.
J. E. GOULD,
No. 324 Chestnut St., Philadelphia.

ESTABLISHED IN 1795.
McALLISTER AND BROTHER,
OPTICIANS,
No. 728 Chestnut Street,
PHILADELPHIA,
Nearly Opposite Masonic Hall,
(Lately removed from the old stand, Chestnut St. above Second)
Spectacles, Mathematical Instruments, Spy-Glasses, Philosophical Apparatus, Opera Glasses, Thermometers, Microscopes, and Microscopic Objects, Tape Measures, Plating Points, Magic Lanterns, Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Pictures. By Wholesale and Retail.
Priced, pictured and illustrated Catalogue furnished on application, and sent by Mail, Free of Charge. 9y1

JOHN COCHRAN & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
Hosiery, Gloves and Fancy Dry Goods,
NO. 12 NORTH FOURTH ST., ABOVE MARKET,
PHILADELPHIA.
Ribbons and White Goods, Undershirts and Drawers, Embroideries and Handkerchiefs, Watches and Jewelry, Combs, Brushes, &c.

CATECHISMS PUBLISHED BY THE U. P. BOARD OF PUBLICATION.
Kept constantly on sale by Wm. S. Pentland, bookseller, 25 North Sixth Street, Philadelphia, at the following low rates for cash:
Dowie's Catechism for young children; 75 cents

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Published by the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, for the Dissemination of Religion, Morality, Literature and Science.

Rev. Elisha Weaver, Editor. PHILADELPHIA, SEPTEMBER 6, 1862. Vol. II.—No. 36.—New Series.—Whole No. 87.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

Is published every Saturday on behalf of the

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,

BY

REV. ELISHA WEAVER,

General Book Steward,

No 619 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

Notice.—All letters and matters pertaining to the Book Concern subscribers sale of papers and all business belonging to Book Concern or for paper must be directed to Rev Elisha Weaver, Box No 630 Philadelphia, and all matters sent for express, and in our City, must be directed to E Weaver No 619 Pine st

All articles or matter in the Christian Recorder, must be directed to E. Weaver, Box No 630, Philadelphia

TERMS.

Two Dollars a year, payable in advance. Single copies, five cents

ADVERTISEMENTS.

We solicit Advertisements of all descriptions, suitable for a religious newspaper, which will be published as follows:—

Cards or Advertisements, inserted for one year provided they do not exceed eight lines, ten dollars, paper included; or, eight dollars without the paper,—six months, for six dollars, paper included.—three months, four dollars,—one month, one dollar, paper in each case denied.

CORRESPONDING EDITORS OF CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Rev. J. P. CAMPBELL, Rev. A. W. WAYMAN,
" J. M. WILLIAMS, " E. T. WILLIAMS,
" O. H. GRAHAM, " C. BURCH,
Rev. L. ROSS.

Poetry.

BABY ROSE.

See! the night is drawing on.
Evening's purple car
Slowly driveth up the East;
Lo! the sunset star!
Twilight sings her lullaby;
Daylight's curtains close;
Twilight gathers on thy face,
Little Baby Rose!

All the little playful wiles
Half imprisoned lie,
Playing bo-peep round the mouth,
In the half-closed eye.
Bring the lights, stir up the fire;
While it cheerful glows,
We must dress thee for the bed,
Little Baby Rose!

See the little outspread hands,
The tiny dimpled feet,
Fashioned by Almighty skill,
Perfect and complete.
Ah! the warm, the living form!
Here all art must close:
Art could never fashion thee,
Little Baby Rose!

Ah! what art thou gazing at
With those open eyes!
Art thou reading in the flames
Of life's mysteries!
Solemn problems, flickering joys,
Wavering into view!
Time enough for thoughts like those,
Little Baby Rose!

Time enough; yet this we know,
Thine the common lot—
Joy and suffering—earth hath none
Sorrow findeth not.
He who ruleth earth and heaven,
All thy pathway knows;
He must mark it out for thee,
Little Baby Rose!

Lullaby—sweet lullaby—
He who never sleeps
Guards the children of his love,
Israel ever keeps.
Lullaby—sweet lullaby—
Soft the eyelids close;
God be with thee—bless my child—
Little Baby Rose!

—Christian Intelligencer.

THE MASTER'S TOUCH.

In the still air the music lies unheard;
In the rough marble, beauty hides unseen;
To wake the music and the beauty, needs
The master's touch, the sculptor's chisel keen.

Great Master, teach us with thy skilful hand;
Let not the music that is in us die;
Great Sculptor, hew and polish us; nor let
Hidden and lost, Thy form within us lie.

Spare not the stroke; do with us as Thou wilt;
Let there be naught unfinished, broken, marred
Complete Thy purpose, that we may become Thy perfect image, O our God and Lord!

—Rev. H. Bonar.

For the Christian Recorder.

ILLINOIS CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. Editor:—It affords us great pleasure to drop a few lines from this spot, made sacred to your correspondent on account of its being the first place where we took charge of a flock of Christ, and found a helpmate to cheer life's gloomy pilgrimage.

The crops from Illinois, we find from observation and reliable reports, are abundant, and promise to successfully defeat war in producing a dearth of provisions.

From the lower part of the state of Illinois, "Egypt," where civilization has hard work to shine, to the northern part where its brightness breaks forth in blazing glory, the people are all aglow with enthusiasm for the crushing out of the rebellion.

Strange to say, the bitter prejudice which the attempt to pass the black laws by the recent legislature indicated, does not exist; and a colored man travelling through Illinois is struck with astonishment by the friendly treatment of the whites, and the absence of that bitter hatred he anticipated. Prejudice exists, it is true, but not to the extent that politicians would have us believe. Truly, indeed, politicians and legislation are not always fair exponents of the opinions of the people: the former may appeal to prejudice—wilfully misrepresent—excite fearful apprehensions of future prosperity, resulting from the residence of Anglo-Africans on the soil; but it only lasts for a time—it comes like the storm, frowning on innocence—threatening with destruction the weak—causing men's hearts to fail within them. But it also goes like the storm; and the Anglo-Africans having felt a shock here and there, lift up their panic-stricken heads in the light of a sunny calm, and thank God that reason is still potent—sympathy still has a dwelling-place in the human heart, and more than all, Divine Providence is still in motion.

So far, we find the people unfavorable to emigration at present. They seem to prefer holding the matter under advisement, until the war is over.

The city of Galena, from whence we write, is a wealthy city built along the base, and on the top of rugged cliffs overlooking the Galena river, about twelve miles from the Mississippi. Behind these cliffs is an undulating country—here and there are hills walled with rugged rocks. Lead abounds in this region, and mining is extensively carried on; bars of lead in large quantities may be seen at any time awaiting shipment on the levee. There is much wealth in Galena among the whites, and an average amount of religion and intelligence. The Sabbath is greatly respected, and there is a strong effort made to make the city a model city by the municipal authorities.

The colored people are doing very well; they are generally employed on the river and in mining—some are wealthy—none are destitute. Their numbers, however, experience an annual decrease—families go farther west—and but few settle here. The only church here of color is the A. M. E. Church. Time was when all our people concentrated upon it, and it was as near to each one as his own house. There they all assembled as one family. Many a time has your correspondent's heart been lifted up at the sight, as the people would move slowly from the sanctuary, wet with the heavenly dew of divine blessings. Changed now is the scene! Zion languisheth—disloyalty to the connexion is manifested, and a cloud rests upon the people. This text was suggested to the mind, when going to the church on last Sabbath,—"How is the mighty fallen!"

There is much intelligence among our people here. There are two highly efficient local preachers, Brothers J. Garrett Johnson and James Embries. These brethren have a liberal education and fine talents. Brother Garrett Johnson is the moderator of this region; his warmth of heart—unflinching boldness—solid integrity, and devotion to Christ, in addition to which he possesses an enormous frame, being over six feet, gives him the position of a leader and umpire.

A class of ten or more was formed from the congregation of our church here, under the tutorship of a highly talented white lady; they have been prosecuting their studies nearly two years—they graduate next Friday night. Each will receive a diploma. The distinguished Mr. Whipple, minister of M. E. Church, will deliver the address to the graduates. A pleasant time is expected, as the matter has created much interest in both white and colored circles. More anon. Hampshire.

Galena, Ill., Aug. 12th, 1862.

For the Christian Recorder.

POWER OF CHRISTIANITY.

(CONTINUED.)

The youth of twelve years confounds the wisest doctors of the law. The carpenter's Son astonishes his parents, and hushes to silence the wisdom of this world. After the lapse of eighteen years, from the date of his first visit to the Holy City, the River Jordan is hal'owed by the baptism of the Mediator; and the land that is overshadowed by darkness and death beheld a great light. Repentance is demanded and salvation offered without money and without price to a bankrupt world. Now, as never before, humanity sees its wants, and looks to the source of all good. And now begins a new era in man's existence. Christianity looms up amid the sea of human contention, casting forth the anchor of hope to desponding and helpless mortals. From this epoch we date the onward march of mind; for it is the office of the Christian system to enlighten and unfold mind, raising it to that exaltation which assimilates it to its Divine Author.

In the proclamation of its doctrines, the world received a legacy which shall fully meet all its wants to the latest generations. The historic page transmits to us what it has done in the past, and the present we know. The magic wand of Christianity has been thrown over all sciences, and each has received a new impetus.

Philosophy has received additions from the Christian which it never could boast of before, so pure, so holy, that the world wondered, and the multitude exclaimed, "We never saw it on this wise before!" The ancient philosophers taught that men should be virtuous, but did not practise it themselves; that men should be kind, but they were cruel; that men should be just, yet they were most unjust; their crimes, notwithstanding their high pretensions to morality, would make virtue hide her face for very shame. Through their sophistry they chained the world to their chariots as conquered slaves, and rushed away on their mad career. The priests with all their cunning and craft pretended to elevate the standard of morality; but their unholy rites only confounded their votaries, and merged them into denser darkness. But, contrasting this state of things with the benefits accruing to mankind by the general diffusion of Christianity, we behold benefits of which the profoundest thinkers among the ancients never dreamed. Modern infidels have sought to invalidate the truth of this system, not comprehending its sublime truths, not realising its vast importance to the world, not knowing that they themselves had been the recipients of its blessings; and, moved by selfishness, pride and arrogance, challenged its Author to continue its propagation, marshalling their champions on the field, they defied the Almighty to combat.

Among the most prominent in the contest are Thomas Paine, Hobbes, Hume, Voltaire, Gibbon, Bolingbroke and Rousseau. A galaxy of noble lords, counts and knights, skilled, indeed, in the use of arms, and victorious in many well-fought battles with men; but when they assayed to measure swords with the despised Galilean, the first onset resulted in their discomfiture and disgrace. Swords broken, shields pierced, and their chariots and horses overthrown forever.

France has realized the benefits of their wisdom. The abolition of the holy Sabbath, the inauguration of the decade, the crowning of the Goddess of Liberty, the destruction of all moral restraint and personal safety, are among the legitimate consequences of their teachings. During the reign of terror in France, when no one was secure of his head for a single hour, it is said that a company of nobility were sitting together in trembling and breathless anxiety, not knowing the minute when they might be summoned to the guillotine, an accomplished lady who had been drawn into the prevailing Atheism by one present, approached him and broke the sombre silence that pervaded the assembly with these emphatic words: "Monsieur, give me back my God!"

But Christianity counteracts these evils. Wherever it is predominant the banner of peace waves: it is destined to bless the world to the remotest generations.

The predictions of God's word being the ground upon which to stand, their consummation is certain. It was the saying of an ancient conqueror, "that while there was a nation to be subdued, he would still rush to the battle-field, that his empire might be the world." Dynasties which he created have long since faded into nothing. His throne has crumbled into dust, and the language which he spake has ceased to be a living language; but it shall not be so under the reign of Christianity. You will never have to record the doctrine of its principles, the fall of its empire, the extinction of its armies, or the destruction of its dominion.

Its principles are eternal, and the language which its people speak is of a heavenly origin, and shall never pass away. To this consummation we are fast hastening. In the natural world all is progression. The sun no sooner begins to pour forth its rays from the chambers of the East than it progresses, until it shines forth on our world in all the splendor of its magnificence and glory. The rill that oozes from the mountain-side progresses in its course until it swells itself into a river, and rolls its waters into the ocean. The acorn that puts forth its stem progresses until it rears its huge trunk, and spreads its lofty branches to the heavens, and bids defiance to the tempestuous elements.

The seasons progress until the landscape swells with its variegated beauties; the hustle of the harvest arrives, and the husbandman thrusts in the sickle to reap the precious grain; the hills and valleys ring with joy as he raises his gladsome song to shout the harvest home. In the spiritual world all is progression; everything is advancing towards its completion, both within and without the believer. Within him no sooner does he enter upon his Christian career than he passes from an infantile state to that of a young man, and from thence to a father in Christ. Without him also everything is progressing in regard to the spread of the truth of Christianity. This is manifest in every country. In this we see the finger of God assuring us of the near approach of Christ's reign. Already the streaming glory of his approach has shot across the deep darkness of our world. Already the thunder of his chariot-wheels is echoing over the distant fields of light. Then the first-born sons of light shall burst forth into songs of joy and praise over a world restored to more than the loveliness of Eden, as they read in the moral regeneration of our species in fairer lines than they have hitherto read, even in the church—"The manifold wisdom of God." Its progress is the pledge of its ultimate realization, as the root is the pledge of the tree, the bud the pledge of the flower. This pledge shall be fulfilled, for the promise has been made to the Son, that "the uttermost parts of the earth shall be his, and the heathen his inheritance, and he shall possess them all."

In its progress it shall triumph over all opposition, as Dagon before the ark, as every obstruction is removed by the pressure of a mountain avalanche in its course; and as the waves of the sea roll back before the blast of the tempest, so will every obstacle that opposes the progress of Divine truth be borne down. And what shall hinder it or arrest it? Any form or species of oppression? No: it cannot, however sanctioned by antiquity; however intrenched in human depravity and prejudice, or supported by human literature or secular power. You cannot arrest it; it is impossible to stay the progress of Christianity in its course; in its progress let us cherish the deepest interest, and taking our stand upon the predictions of God's word, in dependence upon the Spirit for help, according to our ability, help on the cause of Christ. R. H. C.

Brooklyn.

For the Christian Recorder.

LETTER FROM WASHINGTON.

Mr. Editor:—Our city is full of excitement. A report has gained considerable circulation, that Jackson and his rebel army are within nine miles of Washington, which has thrown the populace upon the heels of excitement. Many are of the opinion that they hear the thunder chattering of war implements convening most destructively between the defenders of right and the perpetrators of wrong. Every little piece of information coming from across the Potomac is seized by some newsbungry creature, masticated in the jaws of his own opinion, and devoured world without end. Every available vehicle is packed to overflowing with persons in search of the battle-field, while all the boats engaged between here and Alexandria are incompetent to the task of transporting the eager souls who are desirous of going to the scene of the conflict. But the most sad spectacle upon which I have looked is the thousands of wounded soldiers who are being brought into the hospitals of the city. Severed arms and shattered legs are no unfrequent sights, and holes perforated by bullets through hands, ears, shoulders, and calf of the legs, are as common as they are horrible.

From all accounts, the battle is raging most furiously on the other side of the river. About six hundred thousand men are supposed to be engaged—three hundred thousand on each side. Many who have been in the battle pay the highest encomiums to rebel bravery. Contrabands are pouring in from all quarters, and some bring the most enormous burdens on their backs that were certainly ever conveyed by human muscles. One of the contrabands told me that, beyond Manassas Junction, there was a large body of our people located at a certain place, and that an infamous gang of rebel devils came upon them and shot every one of them, and shortly afterwards two companies of some of the Pennsylvania volunteers surrounded ninety of the secession assassins, and the poor fellows wanted to surrender, but no surrender for such mortal feuds until the Union boys gave death the privilege of a hug at each one. But a synopsis of the inhuman atrocities—the diabolical flagitiousness of the villainous perpetrations done by the snake-hearted squatter-sovereigns of that hydrophobic dropsy-headed oligarchy—is sufficient to shudder a nervous being, but such vile imps of creation God will judge and reward.

The improvements which have been going on in Israel Church for some three months are now complete except frescoing it. They now have one of the largest and finest lecture rooms that is attached to any church in the city, white or colored, besides a most handsome set of portable class rooms, which they can move at their option. Thus, when occasion requires it, turn the entire hall into one, and then in a few moments convert it into several. Last Monday night, several of our distinguished ladies, viz: Mrs Frances Lee, Cassandra Dent, Catherine Hutchison, Catherine Henson, Elisabeth Davis, and others, whose names are not just with me, gave one of the grandest entertainments of the season in the new hall, and cleared something near a hundred dollars.

There is a glorious revival going on at Wesley Zion Chapel every night. The altar is crowded with mourners seeking for that pearl of great price. Rev. J. D. Brooks, the pastor, is regarded as a very eccentric but an able minister, and one who will hold to position though the heavens fall.

Mr. G. F. Cook, a very talented and efficient school teacher, who teaches in Israel school room, resumed his school again this morning, vacation being out.

I see that some inconsiderable piece of humiliation, entitling himself Cerebus, whom you have honored as a Washington correspondent, has been endeavoring to give the details, and exegetically treat the acts and doings of the committee who waited upon the President. Mr. Cerebus is a very easy and fluent writer, and I wish he would take my place, as I have so much upon my mind, that when I sit down to write for the Recorder, I have to do it so hurriedly very often, that what little literary tact I possess is marred for the want of time to revise and correct. But when a writer sits down to scrape up absurdities and brand everybody, I think he should hunt for a different occupation. I know that every one is liable to make misrepresentations now and then, but everything this piece of humiliation referred to is touched with his venom. He allows that the "originator of the meeting smelt the rat and was now out." The President of the United States was the man who originated the meeting, but he has reference to a man that him and all the rest of rats could not have made non est if he had desired otherwise. He makes a great bugbear over the bogus committee representing the fifteen thousand colored persons in the District of Columbia, and then wishes to know who made them the representatives of the two hundred and ten thousand colored inhabitants of the Free States? Now this is the silliest part of the whole. Will Mr Cerebus tell me if he ever knew a colored representative? When did you see one? Who was he? What was he doing? From whence did he hail? What did he say? Of course, I know Mr. Cerebus will not refer to the ministers, for he and his party are generally ready, I presume, to flirt up and ram silence down his throat if he speaks of anything besides heaven and hell. Ministers these days don't know what to talk, preach, or think. I want Mr. Cerebus to remember that colored people have no representative yet in a political point of view; and, while the bogus committee was not authorized to represent the 15,000 of the District, or the 200,000 North, neither was one of those vast numbers authorized to represent the views and sentiments of the committee. And as representation is an individual thing, every man and woman is his or her own representative, and has the right of representing themselves. So let the 15,000 of the District, and the 200,000 North, all go to the President and represent themselves individually, and then they will be satisfied. Besides, the President did not call for colored representation, but truthfully speaking, he called for a committee of ministers, or a committee of intelligent colored gentlemen, and not for a representative. For heaven's sake, see the place, and stop your nonsense. I cannot say that I justify the committee's proceedings in every respect, but then let the clamoring party go and better it. I don't reckon any one will care. Neither am I favorable to Central America, (if I have any proclivities, they are for Hayti,) but should that deter us from hearing what the President has to say? Mr. Cerebus talks as though the President had called a congress of colored representatives, and that they had been in session, and had cast the destinies of the colored man and the 225,000 of whom he speaks, and is endeavoring to assume the representation had no voice nor hearing, and that there was a certain prime mover, or "originator," who had with almost omnipotent power united two of the most antagonistic elements in the world, and then smelt a rat and skedaddled. I have never seen a man who feared the representation of others in my life, that could properly represent himself. Such persons strain at gnats and swallow camels. H. M. T.

Washington, Sep. 1, 1862.

WILL THIS NATION REPENT?

"Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of hosts. But ye say, Wherein shall we return? Such was the remonstrance of Jehovah with his rebellious people of old, as recorded by the last of the prophets. Malachi iii. 7. And in similar language did he often address them, in times of public immorality and impiety, as the pens of Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel have repeatedly recorded. And when Israel persisted in disregarding his repeated calls to national repentance, he let loose upon her agencies that resulted in her utter overthrow and desolation. And such has always been the economy of his providence. "The nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish, yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted." Isa lx. 12. And in regard to the work of chastisement, whether individual or national, he has explicitly declared, "When I begin, I will also make an end!" If there be any value in the lessons of history, whether sacred or secular, we ought to heed them; and no lesson is more explicitly taught than this, that God has a controversy with every sinful nation, and that in such controversies HE IS ALWAYS TRIUMPHANT!

That he has a controversy with our nation, is mournfully evident. That he will accomplish by it one of two results—reformation or destruction—no wise patriot will doubt. Does it not become us, then, to look into this matter, and inquire into the grounds of his controversy with us; and also whether the nation is giving any signs of repentance?

That Sabbath-breaking, covenant-breaking, gross profanity of the name and ordinances of God, and other flagrant violations of the divine law, are so rife and wide-spread as to become national sins, no man, familiar with the great centres of population and influence, and with the habits of representative men on the civil, military, and naval lists, can doubt or deny. Whilst there are many honorable exceptions, it is sadly true that great numbers of our public men—in the halls of Congress, in various civil positions, and in the army and navy disregard God and his day and ordinances, and profane his name. From testimony that we cannot disbelieve, as well as from some unpleasant personal observation, we are constrained to fear that these things are so. Christian gentlemen in the navy confess, with sorrow, that to that service, to use the language of one of them, lately uttered in our hearing, "Things are so arranged, needlessly, that there is always more to do on Sabbath than any other day of the week." The same is true in many parts of the army. Dress-parades and reviews are unnecessarily held on that holy day. Whilst profane swearing of the most shocking character seems to be upon the increase through-out the land—when the people choose notoriously profane men to represent them in civil stations, they take the responsibility of their wickedness.

We say these things in deep sorrow; and would not say them, did not faithfulness require it. We are prosecuting a terrible appeal to the God of battles, in the present righteous war: is it wise to insult the great ARBITER? Can we expect the God of battles to decide in our favor, if, IN OUR PUBLIC MEASURES, and by our PUBLIC MEN, we fling contempt upon his laws? With our eyes fixed upon the righteousness of our cause, have we not been too blind to the crimes associated with its maintenance? Has not the pulpit, whilst doing a noble work in stimulating the patriotism of our people, too much neglected to show the people their sins—the probable causes of God's controversy with us? Can we expect victory, union, and peace, without God's help—and can we expect his help, whilst waging direct war upon the constitution and laws of his kingdom? We are profoundly convinced that our brethren of the ministry can render no more efficient aid to the cause of the Union and the government in their official capacity, than by bravely and earnestly following the direction given in Isaiah lviii. 1, and striving to bring the nation to cease from her multifarious controversy with God. Upon his own avowed principles of action we cannot expect the "Lord of hosts" to return unto us until we return unto him.—Presbyterian.

EMANCIPATION IN RUSSIA.

But the most gigantic undertaking of Alexander II. has been the liberation of the many millions of serfs of the Empire. Of the origin of this portion of the population of Russia, it would be foreign to the nature of the present article to attempt to speak: it is a complicated and difficult subject to treat. Respecting their number in 1857, when the question of their emancipation began to be discussed, as well as their present number, very different accounts are given by the foreign reviews and newspapers. During our second visit to Russia, made in 1840, the Minister of the Interior, Count Stroganoff, and the Minister of the Public Domains, Count Kisseleff, assured us that the serfs of the Crown, (Crown-peasants as they called them,) were in round numbers 20,000 000; those belonging to the members of the Imperial family, as appanages, were 1 000,000; and those who belonged to the nobles were 26 500 000; making a total of a little more than 47,000,000 souls. It is the last named class, the serfs of the nobles and other landed proprietors, whose liberation the Emperor has been aiming to effect. As to the others, their condition has been far better than that of the serfs of the nobles, and in fact they are unwilling to be called serfs, calling themselves freemen, because they belong to the Emperor! Their turn will come by and by.

The Emperor Alexander I., nearly sixty years ago, by a ukase ordained that the serfs in the Baltic Provinces should be set free in three periods of ten years each. The last of these decades ended in the earlier part of the reign of the late Emperor Nicholas. There are, therefore, no serfs in the Baltic Provinces; neither are there any in Finland, nor in the modern kingdom of Poland, the part of old Poland which Russia obtained at the Congress of Vienna, in 1815,—with its 5,000,000 of inhabitants. Thus there have been no serfs on the Western side of Russia, comprising the countries just named, which are the most civilized portions of the Empire, for many years.

The Emperor Nicholas had a heart, at one period of his reign, to free the serfs, and took some steps in that direction; but he was deterred from going farther than recommending to the nobles to set their serfs free, selling them the lands, or a portion of them, which they cultivated, and requiring payment at fixed but reasonable intervals of time. And many complied with the Imperial recommendation. We knew well a nobleman who liberated 7,000 serfs, selling them at a fair price as much land as they could cultivate. His revenue from them, whilst they were serfs, was about $20,000.

After much deliberation in the Imperial Council, and consultation with Governors of Provinces and leading nobles, who were requested to act in committee in relation to the matter, the present Emperor entered in 1857, upon the great but hazardous measure of the liberation of the serfs of the nobles. Of course, it was from the nobles that the chief opposition was to be expected. Some favored the scheme, especially in those western provinces, or "governments," as they are called, in which serfage still existed, but the great majority of the nobles bitterly opposed as much as they dared.

At first, it was proposed to accomplish the measure in twelve years, but it was soon found necessary to reduce the term to six, the last year of which is now passing away. During the first four years, the condition of the serfs was not essentially changed. At the end of that period, they were declared free, but they must remain two years more where they were, and during that period come to an agreement with their former masters with regard to the houses and lands which they occupied. It was provided by ukase that the intervention of the Government should take place, where needed, in the second of these two years, or the sixth of the term, to reconcile the parties where an agreement had not been reached. It is just here that the greatest difficulty has occurred. Some of the nobles are averse to selling their lands to the serfs; in many cases the serfs refuse to give the price demanded; and in many cases also refuse to give anything at all, maintaining that the land is theirs by right of long occupancy and cultivation! In some cases the "communities" of the serfs—for the serfs have extensive communities, or organizations, that have large municipal powers, such as looking after the roads and bridges, caring for their own poor and sick people, and many other objects, and have their saving banks and charitable institutions—have taken up the matter, and lay a claim to the land! The whole object is complicated enough. The nobles have not the power to enforce their views and make the people work for them, and on their terms. When they attempt any thing like this they are soon compelled to fly for safety to the great cities or the military posts; and the serfs resort in such cases to their old practice of burning the houses and other buildings of the proprietors.

Certainly Russia is passing through a fearful process. Great wisdom, and prudence and patience on the part of the Emperor and his ministers are needed, and much time to bring the country through it. There are probably no two men in all the world whose position is more trying than that of Alexander II., Emperor of all the Russias, and Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States. Their positions are even very much alike; for although civil war has not yet actually commenced in Russia, no one can assure us that it may not on any day burst forth. In both cases slavery lies at the bottom of the trouble; in Russia that of 23,000,000 or 25,000,000, less or more, of white people; in the United States that of 4,000,000, or thereabouts, of black or colored people.

PRAYER.

He that would be little in temptation, let him be much in prayer.

Praying only for carnal things shows a carnal heart, and leaves it carnal.

Prayer is a key in the hand of faith to unlock God's treasures.

A family without prayer is like a house without a roof—exposed to every wind that blows, and every storm that rages.

Prayer will compel a man to leave off sinning; or sinning will make him leave off praying.

The greatest and hardest preparation for heaven, is watching, but the spirit of prayer carries that thro.

Do you profess to love any one for whom you have never prayed?

Prayer is heart work. Rhetoric cannot pray, with all his words: but Faith can pray, even when she has no words.

In prayer it is better to have a heart without words, than words without a heart.

Pray not only in the name of Christ, but in the faith of Christ.

The gift of prayer may have praise from men, but the grace of prayer has power with God.—Churchman's Almanac.

WALKING WITH GOD.

Men are proud of the opportunity of walking with those whom they consider above themselves, whether that elevation arises from birth, or intellect, or attainments, or office. A peasant feels honored by being permitted to walk with his lord, and much more to be allowed to walk with his sovereign. We should all feel gratified if we could relate that our father or grandfather once walked with General Washington. Do you suppose that Manoah and his wife were ever tired of relating their angel-visit? And those two disciples who walked with Christ as they were going to Emmaus, do you suppose they ever forgot the gratification which that walk afforded them? If men feel honored by walking with great men or with angels, how much more should they feel honored by being allowed to walk with God.

But have men ever enjoyed that honor? So say the Scriptures; "Enoch walked with God;" "Noah walked with God." They were highly favored, and the record of it is a monument to their honor.

If they could walk with God, what hinders others doing it? Nothing but what may be overcome. Enoch and Noah were men of like passions as other men. And if they were enabled to bring them-elves into subjection so as to walk with God, others may go and do likewise.

Since Christ has died to reconcile us to God, and has become our Mediator and Advocate, the way is now prepared for all to walk with God who are disposed so to do.

But men do not naturally walk with God, but are far from him. Some draw nigh to him with their mouth, and honor him with their lips, whose heart is far from him. There must, therefore, be a change either in God or man, or they cannot walk together. "How can two walk together except they be agreed?" But God is perfect, and cannot change. Man must, therefore, change in order to walk with God. Hence we read, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of heaven." "Ye must be born again."

To walk with God, we must be holy, for without holiness "no man can see the Lord." We are polluted by sin, and must be washed in atoning blood.

To walk with God we must be his friends. But we are by nature the enemies of God, and possess a carnal mind, which is at enmity with him. We must therefore become reconciled to him through the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, or we cannot walk with him.

To walk with God is to be familiar with him, and to have filial feelings towards him, so that we can honestly say, "Abba, Father." To commune with him is to walk with him.

Those who walk with God feel as he does on moral subjects. They love what is right, and what is in accordance with the moral law. They hate what is wrong and what is forbidden in the moral law. They also endeavor to have their conduct agree with their feelings on moral subjects. While they feel that the law "is holy and just and good," they take it for the rule of their lives.

They who walk with God will be careful not to do any thing to offend him. They watch and pray against temptation, and guard their lives and lips and hearts against anything offensive in the sight of a holy God.

The longer men walk with God, the more they become assimilated to him. God's image, which was lost by the fall, is gradually replaced. As in their unconverted state, they bore the image of fallen Adam, now in their renovated nature they bear the image of the second Adam, the Lord from heaven.

Again, those who walk with God will strive to co-operate with him in carrying forward the work of saving a lost and ruined world. They will labor to convert sinners around them, in every practicable way, and do what they can to carry the blessings of redemption to those afar off. Whatever be the sphere in which they move, they seek to glorify God with their bodies and spirits. If they are ministers of the gospel, they will preach the Word publicly and from house to house, warning every man night and day with tears. If they are private members of the Church, they will co-operate with their minister, and make personal efforts in their own families, and among their neighbors, to win souls to Christ. They will invite people to the house of God, and children to the Sabbath-school, and try to gather with Christ.

If we thus walk with God in this world, he will allow us to walk with him through the valley of the shadow of death, and also to walk with Christ, clothed with white robes, in the upper world. The motives which should induce us to walk with God, are such as ought to lead all men to strive for it at once. Let us often sing,

"O for a closer walk with God,
A calm and heavenly frame;
A light to shine upon the road,
That leads me to the Lamb."

Boston Recorder.

JESU DULCIS MEMORIA.

This fine old Latin hymn of St. Bernard, written in 1158, has become widely known and admired, through various renderings. The following is the translation in the "Salisbury Breviary":—

Jesus! the very thought is sweet;
In that dear name all heart joys meet;
But sweeter than the honey far,
The glimpses of his presence are.

No word is sung more sweet than this,
No name is heard more full of bliss,
No thought brings sweeter comfort nigh,
Than Jesus, Son of God most high!

Jesus, the hope of souls forlorn!
How good to them for sin that mourn!
To them that seek thee, O how kind!
But what art thou to them that find!

No tongue of mortal can express,
No mortal write its blessedness;
Alone, who hath thee in his heart,
Knows, love of Jesus, what thou art!

O Jesus! king of wondrous might;
O Victor! glorious from the fight:
Sweetness that may not be expressed,
And altogether loveliest!

THE LAND OF REST

There is a land where beauty will not fade,
Nor sorrow dim the eye;
Where true hearts will not sink nor be dismayed,
And love will never die.

Tell me, I fain would go,
For I am burdened with a heavy woe;
The beautiful have left me all alone;
The true, the tender from my path have gone,
And I am weak and fainting with despair:
Where is it? Tell me, where!

Friend, thou must trust to Him who trod before
This lonely path of sighs,
Must bear in meekness, as He meekly bore,
Sorrow, and toil, and strife.
Think how the Son of God
These thorny paths has trod,
Think how he longed to go,
Yet turned not for woe, the appointed woe;
Think of his loneliness in place dim,
When no man comforted nor cared for Him;
Think how He prayed, sweated and alone,
In that dread agony, "Thy will be done!"
Friend, do not thus despair,
Christ, in His heaven of heavens, will hear thy prayer. (From the German of Uhland.)

POPULARITY.—"I was de most lebular Governor that New York ever had," said the amiable old Dutchman, Governor Yates. "How was that?" asked his friend. "Why, I came in unanimously, and den I went out unanimously, was not dat de popularity?"

TEA BRANDS AND THEIR MEANING.

The following will interest housekeepers: "Hyson" means "before the rains," or "flourishing spring," that is early in the spring; hence it is often called "Young Hyson." "Hyson skin" is composed of the refuse of other kinds, the native term for which is "tea skins." Refuse of still coarser description, containing many stems, is called "tea bones." "Bohea" is the name of the hills in the region where it is collected. "Pekoe," or "Pecco," means "white hairs," the down of tender leaves. "Powchong," "fodder plant;" "Souchong," "small plant." "Twankay" is the name of a small river in the region where it is bought. "Congo" is from a term signifying "labor," from the care required in its preparation.

FARMERS' BOYS.

In the wide world there is no more important thing than farmers' boys. They are not so important for what they are as for what they will be. At present they are of little consequence too often. But farmers' boys always have been, and we presume always will be, the material out of which the noblest men are made. They have health and strength; they have bone and muscle; they have heart and will; they have ambition and endurance, and these are the materials that make men. Not buckram and broadcloth, and patent leather and beaver fur, and kid gloves and watch seals, are the materials of which men are made. It takes better stuff to make a man. It is not fat and flesh, and swagger and self-conceit; nor yet smartness, nor flippancy, nor foppery, nor fast ness. These make fools, not men; not men such as the world wants, nor such as it will honor and bless. Not long hair, nor much beard, nor a cane, nor a pipe, nor a segar, nor a quid of tobacco, nor an oath, nor a glass of beer or brandy, nor a dog or gun, nor a pack of cards, nor a novel, nor a vulgar book of love and murder, nor a tale of adventures, that makes a man, or has anything to do with making a man. Farmers' boys ought to keep clear of all these idle, foolish things. They should be employed with nobler objects. They have yet to be men of the clear grit—honest, intelligent, industrious men.—Valley Spirit.

A FINE BARN.

The flourishing community of Shakers at Canterbury, N. H., have recently completed a barn which is probably the largest and most completely furnished in the state. It is two hundred feet long, exclusive of covered drive ways at either end, through which teams are driven to the second floor. There is a wing to the main barn which is thirty feet long, and another of the same size is in process of construction. Over two hundred tons of hay can be stowed in the barn, which has accommodations for a large number of cattle, including separate rooms for cows with calf, and for weaning calves. The arrangements for tying up the cows are perfect. By a single motion of a lever all the cows in one row are fastened or released at once. Grain is fed to the cows from a truck which can be run before each animal. The barn is a model of neatness, like everything else about the premises of the Shakers.

A SETTLER.

Some years since, a black man called on a clergyman in Western New York, and avowed himself a fugitive slave, and asked for food and shelter, which were freely accorded. Two or three persons being cognizant of the fact, called to see the "runaway nigger," when the following interesting dialogue took place:

"S'pose you had plenty of hard times down South; looking a plenty?"

"No—never was whipped."

"Wa'n't! Well, you had to work most awful hard?"

"My work was very light."

"I guess your clothes were not very nice?"

"I was well clothed—a good servant."

"I reckon your victuals were not uncommon fine?"

"As good as I desired."

"Well, I should give it as my opinion, that you were a mighty big fool for running away from such a place as that, just for the sake of shirking for yourself."

"Gentlemen, my place down South is vacant. Any of you can have it by applying for it."

That remark settled the question.

A CURIOUS HOG STORY.

The correspondent of the Cincinnati Times, with General Mitchell's command, is responsible for the following yarn

The hogs in this part of the country are musically inclined, and all come up to breakfast to the tune of Dixie. On every plantation, the oldest "darkey" has the honor of playing music to the hogs for about an hour every morning, and from the very moment when he first commences, till the end of the piece, the shrill, piercing notes of the hogs are heard coming from all directions, and blending with the music of the darkey, from the very full grown sow to the smallest of the litter; these notes are audible a mile distant. I can never forget when I first witnessed the scene, and for the life of me I could not tell or make out what it meant.

I was on my way from Shelbyville, Tennessee, to Huntsville, Alabama, and being alone, I started very early, so as to overtake the army, who were a day in advance of me. Riding up a very steep hill I heard a shrill sharp sound, and thought it must be a locomotive. At this time I was surrounded by trees on either side—sound continued. Finally I heard such a terrible rumbling in the woods among the trees, that I put spur to my horse, and started off as fast as I could go, and the farther and more swiftly I sped, the greater the rumbling. At last I came to the serious conclusion that I was "played out," and must surely fall into the hands of the rebels.

I halted, and in less than five minutes, I saw hogs of every grade, color and species, making the tallest kind of tracks down the hills toward where the music came from. There were black hogs, white hogs, yellow hogs, speckled hogs, and gray hogs—all running in one direction. I paused for a moment, and surveyed the scene, and, finally, I followed in the train, and as I descended, there stood before me a nigger, as black as ebony, blowing away on an old horn, surrounded by at least five hundred listeners, in the shape of hogs. As I approached, the old darkey saluted me with a "Good morning, Massa."

"Well, my friend," I remarked, "what in creation are you blowing that old horn for?"

Ebony opened his wide mouth, displaying at the same time as fine a set of white teeth as I ever looked at, and laughed as loudly as he could, and then said:

"Massa, you'se bein' from the Norf, where none of these things is gwine on."

I answered, "Yes, but what does it all mean?"

"You see, Massa," responded the old man, 'all dese hogs ther; before I commenced playin', dar wasn't one hog here, but when I first blowed this horn, they all started from every part of the woods, and come up here. Ise been at dis business for many years, and I has brought in millions of hogs with dis music. I set to play every morning at daylight, alongside dis fence, and den stop for one hour, and at de end ob de hour all massa's hogs are in from de woods. Ise a good music man, massa, I is."

I then asked him what tune he liked best, and played most to rally the hogs? he responded, "Dixie." Well, I thought to myself, can it be possible that the Southern chivalry and Southern hogs march to the same tune?

The Christian Recorder.

Philadelphia, September 6, 1862.

NOTICE.

TO THE DISTRICTS OF PHILADELPHIA, NEW ENGLAND, OHIO, INDIANA, AND MISSOURI, OF THE A. M. E. CHURCH MINISTERS.

Dear Brethren:—As we have a number of superannuated ministers on the list in said Districts, therefore it will be expected that the ministers and preachers, on their circuits and stations, will do all they can to collect the two cent money; and we also recommend that the Class leaders be instructed to collect and set the amount on the Class book opposite each member's name, as also all the collections called, per Discipline, for the Annual Conference, and publish the same once every quarter, that it may be seen who they are that work for God and his cause. We think it is time to give credit to those of our people who do work, so that God's name may be glorified.

NOTICE

Arrangement of the Burlington Quarterly Meetings:—Snow Hill, 3d Sabbath in September; Burlington, 4th Sabbath in September; Mount Holly, 1st Sabbath in October; Evesham, 2d Sabbath in October; Milford, 3d Sabbath in October; Jordantown, 4th Sabbath in October.

J. H. SMITH, Elder.
J. H. LONG, Assistant.

NOTICE.

Arrangement of the Bordentown Circuit Quarterly meetings:—Allentown, September 20th and 21st; Bordentown, September 27th and 28th; Cranberry, October 4th and 5th; Cookstown, October 11th and 12th. On the Freehold Circuit the Quarterly Conference will be at Rioeville, October 19th, 1862.

REV. JER. YOUNG, Elder in Charge.

NOTICE.

Arrangement of the Quarterly Meetings of the Reading Circuit:—Quarterly Conference at Reading, Sept. 13th; Quarterly Meeting at Pottsville, Sept. 21st; Birdsborough, Sept. 28th; Downingtown, Oct. 5th; Valley Hill, Oct. 12th; Centreville or Lower Valley, Oct 19th

J. G. BULAUGH, Elder in Charge
R. NORRIS, Assistant.

CAMP MEETING.

The camp meeting of the Zion M. E. Church, (Big Wesley) now being held at Judge Peters' Farm, will be continued until next Tuesday, the 9th inst. Revs. A. L. Stanford; J. P. Campbell; Rev. Bishop Ross, and others, will preach on Sabbath, the 7th inst. Cars leave 15th and Willow streets at 8 o'clock, A. M., and continue to go and return every hour during the day. Excursion tickets reduced to 12 cents.

JOHN A. WILLIAMS,
Minister in Charge.

OUR WESTERN TOUR.

Indianapolis, Ind.

We left home on the 20th day of August, and can say that we had a very pleasant trip. The night we left, we met with the best treatment from Mr. Green, the conductor, and instead of being forced in the way passenger and smoking car, we were put into a car in common with other through passengers.

We arrived in Indianapolis, the seat of Conference, on Friday morning at half past 8, A. M. On approaching the inner court of the church our eyes were attracted to Bishop Quinn, the President of the Conference, who appeared as well as we ever saw him, and by his side sat Bishop Nazrey. All eyes were directed toward us, and a pleasant smile could be discovered upon the countenances of all the brethren and others. After shaking hands with the Bishops, Bishop Quinn arose and introduced the brethren and friends to us. The Conference passed off very well. A motion was passed for the Conference to meet in Chicago in 1863. Two brethren were received into the itinerant field on probation. We were very glad the Conference appointed a reporter for the Recorder in the person of Rev. M. M. Clark, which has saved us a great deal of writing we would have had to do. After the adjournment of the Conference, Bishops Quinn and Nazrey left the next day for St. Louis, to meet the Conference which is to assemble on the 28th day of August. Indianapolis is a perfect thoroughfare; soldiers are encamped nearly around the city, and some of them are very unruly and very overbearing.

APPROPRIATIONS.

INDIANA PREACHERS

Rev. James Bass,	$1 00
Rev. J. B. Dawson,	1 00
Rev. W. C. Treven,	1 00
Rev. Richard Bridges,	1 00
Rev. H. B Smith,	1 00
Rev. Wm. J. Davis,	1 00
Rev. Thomas Strother,	1 00

INDIANAPOLIS—NEW SUBSCRIBERS

Geo. H. W. Steward,	1 00
J. W. Pettiford	1 00
William Franklin,	1 00
J. W. Steward, formerly of Vincennes, Ind.,	1 00
Mrs. Ann Spencer,	1 00
Mrs. Julia Colesby,	1 00
Mrs. Amanda D. Hill,	1 00
John W. Brown,	1 00
Mrs. Elizabeth M. Steward,	1 00
Mrs. Mary F. Harrison,	1 00
Miss Mary E. Gavle,	1 00

NOBLESVILLE, INDIANA.

Archibald Freeman,	1 00

MADISON, INDIANA.

Miss Sarah E. Gray,	1 00

JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS

Miss Minerva Redd,	1 00

VERMONT STATE.

Ex Gov Ryland Fletcher,	1 00

ADDITIONAL MONEY.

Mr. Reading B. Johns,	1 00
Mr. Geo. Y. Watkins,	1 00
Rev. H. M. Turner,	4 00
Mr. Redmon Fawcett,	1 00
Mr Jacob Haslett,	1 00
Mr. Joseph Banks,	1 00
Mrs. Margaret Bornet, paid,	$1 00
Mr. A. J. Bellows, paid,	1 00
Rev. R. H. Hall, paid,	5 00

MRS JANE JOHNSON, No. 618 South Eighth Street, desires to inform her friends and the public that she continues the business of laying out and shrouding the dead. She hopes, by strict and careful attention to business, to merit a share of public patronage. All orders promptly attended to

CAMP MEETING

The camp meeting of the Zion Wesleyan M E church, Rev. John A Williams, Pastor, which commenced on Friday last, 29th ult., is now in progress and will be continued till Tuesday, Sept. 9th. A most interesting and attentive audience on Sabbath listened to the able and eloquent sermons delivered by men who showed that they had followed the injunction of the apostle, "Study to show thyself approved unto God." The exercises of the day were opened by a sermon from Rev. H. A Gibson. Text:—Matt 9th and 12th, under three leading propositions

1. Christ as the sovereign Physician of souls

2. All men need an acquaintance with God through the healing power of this great Physician

3. Men must confess their spiritual maladies in order to be healed.

In the afternoon, the Rt. Rev. John Ross delivered a most able and forcible sermon from Mark viii. 22. Proposition 1. All sinners are ashamed of Christ. 2. The folly and madness of men being ashamed of Christ. 3. The awful consequences of a persistence in such a course; and the condition of those who do nothing for their redemption

At night, Rev. T. J. Biddle preached from Exodus xxxiii. 14. Treating principally upon the nature and character of the rest to be obtained, &c., 1. Rest from perplexity. 2 Rest from oppression. 3. Rest from anxiety, sorrow and affliction. 4. The place of rest, heaven. All these sermons were delivered in the most logical style of reasoning and with a masterly zeal and eloquence which took hold of the auditory with irresistible power.

An efficient police force were on the ground during the day and evening; but we have to acknowledge (much to the credit of our citizens) that although many of our people apprehended difficulty and bloodshed in abundance because of the meeting being held so near the city; and though many even acted so as to positively invite interference from some of the less considerate of our white population; yet not the slightest disorder was manifested during the day or evening. Better order never prevailed at a camp meeting; several prominent ministers will preach during the remaining exercises of the meeting.

ST. CYPRIAN.

For the Christian Recorder

At a called meeting of the male members and congregation of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, held in the Bethel meeting-house, Rev. Jabez P. Campbell was called to the chair, and Lewis R. Seymour was appointed Secretary. The President, on taking the chair, stated the object of the meeting, which was to state our own position in the present crisis upon the country, when the following preamble and resolutions were read and, on motion, adopted:

Whereas, The position assumed by the people of the United States with respect to the employment of colored men as soldiers, to assist in the suppression of the present rebellion, is, that it will degrade the whites to fight by the side of the negro; and

Whereas, We have been made to understand that in no case, at the present, will the negroes be armed or employed as soldiers in defence of the Government; and

Whereas, Certain restless spirits among our people in this city, who compose part of the floating population, and are therefore turning up in every community without any apparent means of living, except by quartering on the benevolence and forbearance of the citizens; and

Whereas, Among those are persons who press themselves on the patience of the authorities as being representatives of the sentiment and wish of the colored people of Philadelphia and Pennsylvania, with the assumption that they desire to thrust themselves on the Government as soldiers, unasked or unsolicited; therefore

Resolved, That while we feel—keenly feel the unfortunate troubles that are upon the country, yet the better class of colored people have too much self-respect to intrude themselves where they are not wanted.

Resolved, That any person, or persons, representing otherwise, do not represent the colored people, but act solely on their own responsibility and without any authority whatever.

Resolved, That the colored people, no more than any other class, are exempt from the restless and mischievous, who, having nothing to lose and seeking nothing to do, are constantly fermenting difficulties and invariably escape responsibility.

Resolved, That as a loyal and a peace-loving community, the colored people of Philadelphia desire by no act of theirs to increase disorder or intensify evil feelings; but if by order and quiet they can assist in restoring peace to the country, they desire to practise that.

Resolved, That the foregoing preamble and resolutions be published in several of the daily and weekly papers, and that Rev. J. P. Campbell, L. R. Seymour, and Abraham Field, be a committee to publish the same.

REV J. P. CAMPBELL, President
L. R SEYMOUR, Secretary.

For the Christian Recorder

ANNIVERSARY.

The Union Sons and Daughters of Henson Society, located in Bensalem, Bucks county, Pennsylvania, held their second anniversary, August, 21st, which was considered to be one of the noblest and grandest displays that ever was witnessed from any benevolent society in a country village.

The members all formed themselves into a procession, in their full uniform of "Red, White and Blue," and marched from their place of meeting to the renowned and commodious woods of Mr. George Pickering's, where there was a large concourse collected, waiting to view the grand spectacle approach.

On their arrival, the Society was most ably and eloquently addressed by the very Rev. H. Davis, of Frankford

The Society is now in the fifth year of its existence, wherein they formed themselves into a body to assist each other in distress, such as in cases of sickness and death. It is now in a very prosperous way, and the Society is conducted by managers that endeavor to see the rules and laws faithfully carried out in reference to each member according to their well-planned Constitution Their motto is, "Justice to all that join the Sons and Daughters of Temperance"

And the more that join us,
With a free good-will,
Will make our bands
Grow stronger still

PHILADELPHIA.—Dr. Turner, from Samoa, reports that in seven years 7,000 copies of the Old Testament, and 20,000 of the New, have been sold in the Samoan [illegible]

(Reported for the Christian Recorder)

INDIANA CONFERENCE

Monday Morning, Aug 25, 1862.

Among the appointments for Sabbath, August 24th, three of the white congregations of this city were supplied with preaching from our Conference

The business of the Conference is now coming rapidly to a close, in great harmony and peace, and the Bishop has just announced the time of holding the Missouri Conference, on the 28th of August, in the city of St. Louis, Mo.,—the place of holding its sessions having been changed from Louisville, Ky., to that city, for prudential reasons

The General Book Steward Rev E. Weaver, is now reading a report of his business in Philadelphia to the Conference.

The Bishops gave their opinion of that section of our Discipline relating to the admittance of serious persons, and strangers, into our class-meetings and love feasts. Discip. p. 119. They explained this section to mean, that all persons belonging to the Methodist family, in good standing, may be admitted indefinitely; and, that members of orthodox churches may be admitted, in accordance with the usage of the church, on credible evidence of their good standing. All others are excluded by our discipline, after the twice and thrice admittance, till membership.

A resolution has just passed by which the Conference pledge themselves to patronize and encourage the circulation, among our people, of the Christian Recorder and the Repository.

The Rev. J. M. Brown, from the Baltimore Conference, is now making an eloquent speech in favor of the Repository, of which he is the editor If that publication is not patronized by the preachers and people, it will not be for the want of an eloquent appeal.

The following was adopted, approving of the publication of the Recorder, and Repository:

That since universal attention is intensely directed to our community, those times, and especially to the doings of our Annual Conferences, respecting the encouragement we give to intelligence among our ministry and people—therefore,

Resolved, That we, the ministers of this Conference, will pledge ourselves anew to encourage the publication of our church organ, the Christian Recorder, subscribe for it ourselves, according to our abilities, even at the sacrifice of some worldly comforts—and also patronize the Repository.

M. M CLARK

Bishop Nazrey made a statement of his episcopal difficulties, and the Conference referred the subject to the coming General Conference

The Conference Financial Committee reported $75.88, collected during the session of the Conference, for its contingent expenses, such as Bishop's salary—to the preachers, &c.

After some concluding exercises, the Bishop proceeded to read out the appointments, as follows:

APPOINTMENTS.

Indianapolis.—W B. Revels.
Springfield.—B. Bridges.
Chicago.—E M'Intosh, Bethel; Quinn's, W. A. Dove.
Richmond.—Wm. Trevan.
Keokuk.—A. T. Hall
Terrehaute.—T. Strother.
New Albany.—F Myers
Salem.—J. D Bass.
Quincy.
Muscatine.—E. C. Joiner.
Newport Circuit.—D. Wendslow
Bloomington.—W. J Davis
Evansville Circuit.—G. N Black
Galena.—H. Brown.
Grant Co. Circuit
Blue River Circuit.—Wm Jackson.
Lafayette Circuit.—W. S. Lankford.
Vincennes.—H B Smith
Charleston Circuit.—L. W. Bass
Shawneetown Miss
Jacksonville.—H. Green
M. M Clark transferred to the Missouri Conference

The following report was received and adopted:

TO THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE ASSEMBLED.

We, your committee, to whom was referred the important duty of drawing up a declaration expressing the sentiment of this Conference on the "present war," the "state of the country," and the "probable future of our people in this country," would respectfully report, that we have given to the important subject as much time as the opportunity would allow, and have unanimously come to the following conclusions; to wit:

1st. That the present war was undoubtedly brought about, on the part of the South, by disaffected and designing politicians, not for the purpose of conquering the North, but for the purpose of separation from the North, and establishing a Southern Confederacy, the corner stone of which should be human slavery.

2d. That entertaining, as we do, a tolerably fair conception of the attributes of the Almighty, we are not prepared to say that it meets His approbation, He being not a God of "confusion but of peace." Yet, at the same time, we believe that in the order of His providence He often causes the wrath of man to praise Him, and we have full faith that, in the present crisis, He will overrule all things to the glory of His name, and the ultimate good of all.

3d Claiming, as we do, to be a part of the vast number that compose the citizens of the great North, we are free to declare, that in the present struggle for the maintenance of the constitution and laws, our sympathies good wishes, and prayers, are with them. And we earnestly hope, that when the last gun shall be fired for the Union, with it may fall the shackle from the last slave.

4. We are now, as ever, unalterably, inflexibly, and determinedly opposed to all and every plan and scheme of colonization, and think it is due to us, as it is to others, to live where we please, so long as we sustain the character of law-abiding, industrious, and peaceable citizens.

5. That one of two things, we think, will be our probable destiny in this country. We will, from a just appreciation of our worth, as moral, intelligent, and law abiding citizens, be put in possession of those rights that are now withheld from us; or, we will by the further enactment of cruel, unjust, and oppressive laws, be compelled to seek shelter in a more congenial clime.

6th And lastly, we recommend to our people, everywhere, to continue to educate themselves and their children, possess themselves of property, "live soberly, and righteously, and godly, in this present evil world," and with unfaltering devotion, trust in the Judge of all the earth who will assuredly do right

Conference adjourned hence to Chicago, 1863.

REV WM PAUL QUINN, District Bishop, and REV WILLIS NAZREY, Visiting Bishop

E. M'INTOSH, Secretary

M. M CLARK, Reporter

Our Editor and General Book Steward, is company with the Bishop, and probably some of the brethren of Indiana Conference, left Indianapolis, August the 27th, for St Louis, Missouri, to attend another Conference

LONDON PREACHERS.

If the national can boast of the best buildings, the independent bodies can boast of the most famous preachers. After especial and frequent inquiry, I could not hear of unexceptionable preacher in all these exclusive churches. I ought to except Dr. M'Neil, who was spoken well of by one or two of the officers of the Tower. But his church was close beside them, and I could not learn that his fame had got beyond that neighborhood. Mr. Melville is very feeble, and preaches but seldom. All the live, drawing working men seem to have long freed themselves from this state church, which, in its effects on its clergy, is but a state prison. I judged from the many handbills announcing special sermons by incumbents of these Established Churches that they were not idle; but I could not hear that any stood out marked and powerful as a preacher of the Word.

Dean Trench, the dean of Westminster Abbey, frequently preaches there. This elegant scholar has but little appearance of elegance in his address He is a large framed man, above the middle height, with large features, and a bushy head of hair like Choate His voice is harsh, and his manners boisterous—the very opposite of what one would have expected from his writings. But he was intensely in earnest. He seemed tied down by his notes, and struggled as a lion in a net between his parchment and his gown. His subject was Ezekiel's vision, having reference to Whit Sunday, or the day of Pentecost. His language had his usual force, finish, and sincerity. He impressed me as being greatly burdened for souls. He is said to be an indefatigable worker, and the crowds who are drawn to the abbey could not be more faithfully dealt with.

By an odd coincidence I heard Dr. Cumming that same evening on the same text; there the similitude ends. In matter, manner, everything except the unity of the Spirit, they are totally unlike. The doctor is tallish, slim, very genteel, nice to softness in voice and manner—saying exquisite, exquenessets, and such like Miss Nancy-isms. Yet the dandy glove hides a grip of steel. He, more than any one I have heard here, discussed doctrinal questions. This was probably owing to his Scotch training and ancestry. He referred to the "Essays and Reviews," denouncing them for their laxity on the question of inspiration. His subject was the universal triumph of Christ. His millenary views were dwelt upon, and prophecies repeated.

The conduct of France and Russia, in refusing to aid the Sultan in restoring the Holy Sepulchre, showed that they intended to wrest it from him. He had some neat and novel thoughts, and some fine touches of eloquence. He is one of the sort whom it is very easy to hear. It was the most purely conversational of any I have heard. No note or paper, but full and fervid talk. I was not surprised at his popularity. Even that very tendre would increase his attractiveness

Messrs. Landell and Brock, Baptist preachers, are very unlike in themselves, and probably in the sphere of their popularity. Mr. Brock is a thorough-going Englishman; stout, sturdy, honest, simple-hearted, striking, easy, and instantly at the conscience of his hearers. He is just the man for a mass meeting with no assumption, no fine phrases, yet easy, off-hand, apparently inexhaustible; he is made for the crowd, and knows it. His sermon on "Behold my elect whom I have chosen," was earnest and affectionate.

Mr Landell is of the upper-ten class—a sort of aristocratic preacher of an aristocratic church. His chapel looks like a dwelling-house outside, but is tasty and even elegant within; though being built, as most are, in a semicircle, with enormous galleries covering half the house, it is far from being a gem of architecture. He is very British in his pronunciation, the most so of any one I have heard. His sermon was "Be ye steadfast," etc Like nearly all that I have heard, it was purely textual. Each word and thought was a theme for plain and often elegant comment and vigorous application The successive steps of a Christian life were set forth, and the incentives to faithfulness.

Newman Hall, the successor of Rowland Hill, is the most zealous one that I have seen, except Spurgeon. He is about forty, dark, with dark eyes, very pleasant voice, and a very impassioned manner. Like Mr. Brock, he evidently feels "Tis all his business here below to cry, Behold the Lamb." He leans over the pulpit in the most entreating manner, and sets forth the richness of the Gospel promises and the necessity of embracing them. There was a total absence of formal sermonizing, though he had his manuscript before him. It was only an easy, eloquent, intense exhortation

Richard Weaver I heard in the Tottenham Court Chapel, built by Whitefield. He is an oddity, a ministerial vagrant. The house was crowded almost after the Whitefield fashion. He is much like the eccentricities which fly off from every church, and feel themselves greater than all their brethren. Men and boys were round the doors hawking his sermons, songs, and portrait, while he was busy within in describing, with great vigor of gesture and but little vigor of thought, his experience and his labors. I should judge him to be well meaning, but unregulated. He has power with the masses, as out of them he has just come, being a converted and still uneducated collier. It is not impossible that he may be at his appointed work, for a great multitude of poor people hang upon his lips that night with the most intense interest. The Lord has a great many kinds of works to be done in his vineyard, and it is not for us to criticise the out-of-the-way services to which some are put

After all, London fame settles on two men, Punshon and Spurgeon. Arthur would divide the honors with Punshon were he well. I have heard no sermon more tender and fervent in spirit, more neat, concise, yet rich in thought, than one I had the pleasure of hearing from him on "I behold, and lopa Lamb in the midst of the throne, as it had been slain." From these words with great skill he led us step by step along the highway of the Gospel. He seemed feeble, but showed what power was his in his better days I trust that strength may again be his

Punshon and Spurgeon are very different sort of men. Punshon reminded me of Bascom. He reads fast, has but few gestures, is no orator, at least in the pulpit, and carries his crowds by the splendor of his language more than by all other gifts At least, so I judged from hearing one sermon. He rushes with such impetuosity, that you are swept along as in an express train. His subject was Jeremiah's complaint against the Jews for abandoning the living fountains, and hewing out to themselves cisterns, broken cisterns that can hold no water. Like the others, it was textual, seizing each word, and showing its force and application; addressed to unconverted persons of a Christian nation—here he enlarged on the difference between the work Jeremiah and Paul had to do—one to warn, entreat and lament a falling church—the other to build up the church out of the ruins of heathendom. His description of the Jews was masterly. So was his portrayal of the labor of man to save himself. Hewing out to themselves cisterns, broken cisterns—that can hold no water. His sermons are exegetical orations. His house was full, and were it known where he preached, his crowds would be enormous. He ought to be advertised, unless he could have a stated place, which the Wesleyan policy forbids. He is a large, full-faced man, of about forty, I should judge. His voice is pleasant, but not striking His forte is in those rushing tides of gorgeous rhetoric, not overdone, but full to the brim Reading his sermon spoils it for oratory, but does not seem to conflict with his style, which might not be helped but marred by abandoning the manuscript. He may break away from these leaky letters on the platform; if so, his sweep must be grand

But the pulpit orator of London is Spurgeon I confess to a previous prejudice against him; but he disarmed me. I heard him twice; and though I dislike to admit any one into the circle where my three greatest preachers—Olin, Durbin, and Beecher—dwell, yet I have to acknowledge he has a seat beside if not above them. He has none of the purely rhetorical manners of Punshon, and yet he has its results He is a very remarkable man; the greatest preacher, I think, that I have ever heard. Let me try to give you some idea of him. First, his building. This is a handsome theatre—two galleries going clear round. In front of the first gallery, in a line with it, projects a platform, railed in by common altar railing. Below, and half way between the pulpit and the lower floor, is a platform, in the front of the pulpit, full of singers Beside the pulpit rails is a table. He stands on this table to read his Scripture lessons. He opens the meeting with animating singing, then makes running, witty, and spiritual comments on his Scripture readings. He begins his sermon by imploring the presence of the Holy Spirit, and through every word and moment this seems uppermost in his thoughts. He is very dramatic, delighting to hold imaginary conversations with persons in the house. The night I heard him he imagined himself preaching one of Paul's sermons in the streets of Corinth, to show what the apostolic preaching was. He refers to the current heresies of the day, and annihilates them with a bayonet charge. His subject was the Gospel He took off the books on divinity in fine style Then he answered objectors. This is a good specimen of the quickness of his wit. A class objects to the atonement, because it is so bloody It smells of the shambles. "Of course it does," he exclaimed. "He shall be led as an ox to the slaughter." These words give no idea of the dramatic manner in which he leaps on his antagonists. He was very positive in his Calvinism. Yet, holding an animated dialogue with an inquirer in the gallery, he makes him ask: "How do I know that I may be saved?" "Do you trust him?" he exclaims. "If you do, you are one of those who are bought with his blood." A nice dodge, but not Scripture.

He glories in the simplicity of his preaching, and seems to think that he is nothing remarkable, but only an earnest, straightforward evangelist, who speaks before sinners

> With cries, entreaties, groans to save,
> And pluck them from a burning grave."

He differs from all great preachers that I have ever heard in his singleness of aim. His every sermon is a battle begun with a charge of bayonets. His voice is strong and pleasant, except it breaks on the high notes. He is the perfection of English preaching, embodying in their finest expression all the leading peculiarities of that school. They are less disputatious than in the Scotch or American. They are averse to mere rhetoric, or anything which seems to savor of it. I think they would condemn some of Beecher's gorgeous word-paintings for this reason. Punshon comes nearest to us, and yet is pure English; his rushing language being only enforcements of the lessons of the text.

I cannot call this style superior or equal to the American. Ours recognises intellectual activities in the minds of our auditors; skepticisms, discussions, difficulties, which we as their spiritual guides must discourse upon. This preaching does not seem to know that there is any conflict of mind in England. It is evident from its character that the mass of hearers are orthodox, and their aim almost entirely is to make them reduce their orthodoxy to right bounds. The skeptical fever has reached the upper classes here. It will reach the masses when they shall become intelligent and thoughtful. Meantime the preachers and preaching in both England and America are wisely adapted to the peculiar needs of each region. Each shall bring forth their appointed work with shoutings, and Christ be all in all.

Christian Advocate and Journal

A STARTLING RECORD.

The Boston Transcript quotes from the Harvard Magazine a statement in regard to the last class graduated at Harvard College, to the effect that of the number composing the class, "fifty-one smoke, sixty-five drink, fifty-seven do both, and twenty neither" We must confess our surprise that such a statement could be made concerning a class of but ninety members, more than two thirds of the whole number are known to use intoxicating drinks! This is stated on the authority of a magazine which could command the knowledge of the fact

What would the founders of Harvard College, could they again appear on the scene, say to such a statement? When, from their limited resources, they generously, and at the cost of no little self-denial, contributed the means to establish the institution, and with prayers to Heaven for its benediction on the enterprise, consecrated it "to Christ and the church," it was assuredly in the fond hope that through a long succession of generations, it should be a "school of the prophets," and that they who gathered there to enjoy its privileges, should be not only early trained in sound learning, but educated to pure morals, and imbued with a true devotion to the work of Christ

Yet, in the most venerable educational institution of the venerable commonwealth of Massachusetts, we are told out of the ninety composing the class just graduated, sixty-five "drink." They will go forth unquestionably to show their influence in years to come against the cause of temperance. In the high places of the land, in positions of power and authority in the courts, on the rostrum, on the bench, in their varied professional pursuits, they may be found on the side of those who are at best indifferent to the evils manifold occasioned by the use of intoxicating drinks.

Such facts are of ill omen for our country's future. Drunken politicians have been the curse of the land. Repeatedly have they brought upon us national disgrace. No true patriot can be indifferent to the character of the candidates for political eminence, and yet we may discern beforehand what that character must be, if two thirds of our college graduates give promise by present habits of the profligacy that is usually allied with a free use of the intoxicating cup.

Is it not time that the alarm were sounded? Our literary and collegiate institutions are, to a large extent, the hope of the land. Let them become the scenes of dissipated habits, and the very fountains of national influence and character are poisoned. As their streams flow forth over the land, carrying a curse with them, public calamity will be added to private grief. While parents mourn over the blighted morals of their sons, the community will struggle vainly against tides of influence which come upon it with the prestige of learning, education and high position. Surely it is time for us to know the moral character and social influences of the institutions that educate our children. If they are becoming schools of dissipation rather than sobriety, if they are to be crowded with those who "drink," till temperance, in the vast majority, shall become disreputable—the question will not be difficult whether it is safe to patronize them. The common sense of the community will be apt to settle down to the conclusion that they are rather a nuisance to be abated, than institutions to be patronized

THE CLERGY AND "THE DRAFT."—We learn from the Cincinnati Inquirer, that Governor Tod has decided that in the draft for troops about to take place in Ohio, clergymen are not exempt

By the State laws of Indiana, Quakers are exempted from draft while ministers are not. In New York, the Shakers and all preachers are exempted. We see statements that many of the young rioters of New York city are shunning the Shaker uniform, with hope of being successful in [illegible] they are [illegible]

BOSTON.

The first point to which a stranger is taken on "drawing" in Boston Common. We confess to have failed to anticipate all the merits of the famous Yankee "institution" The very name is poorly calculated to give any just idea of its real character. It is not a "common" in the familiar sense of that word, but a "grand old park" rather, resembling what we imagine the parks of Europe and England to be. It has an undulating surface, hills and valleys, gentle slopes and broad level plains, all thickly studded with trees, noble elms, of more than a half century's growth, and last, but not least, the famous pond and fountain

We marvel no more that the "Common" is the pride and boast of Bostonians. It is utterly unlike anything observable in any other city in this country. Lying but a few moments' walk from the commercial heart of the city, it is accessible to all, and a place of daily resort for multitudes of old and young. It is a great breathing-place for the citizens of Boston—immense lungs for this solid, substantial city

Whether because of this most efficient inhaling apparatus, or of the undulating surface of the city, or yet because of the better sanitary relations, we are not prepared to say, but certain it is, Boston is the cleanliest city we ever visited. A walk through what was affirmed to be the worst portion of the city revealed nothing but good order, pure air, and cleanly homes. Some tenant-houses were densely packed, but, to all appearances, neat and comfortable. Squalid wretchedness and filth, such as meets one at every turn in New York, are not to be found in Boston. What a monument to the enterprise and faithfulness of the city fathers are the wholesome streets and cleanly homes of the city!

The pond in the Common is a famous resort for children and dogs, the former playing about the margin, the latter plunging boldly in. We gave Boston dogs credit for intelligence as well as agility, after watching their afternoon manœuvres for half an hour. But as we turned away we were [illegible] we had [illegible] their acquirements, on observing a printed placard—posted rather high for small dogs to read—giving notice, "Dogs not allowed in the pond on Sabbath."

Another local institution, modern, not ancient, of which Bostonians have reason to be proud, is the Free Library. An immense collection of books, rare and standard, with periodicals and late publications arranged in an elegant and spacious building just opposite the Common, to which every resident of the city has free access, and from which he may draw books at any time by simply recording his name. A large and commodious public reading room for ladies and gentlemen is attached.

To this library did Theodore Parker bequeath the most of his large collection, and here we saw his old writing-table—a noble relic of the olden time, once the property of his grandfather, and handed down from generation to generation.

THE WEALTH OF BOSTON

One cannot fail to be strongly impressed with a sense of the solid wealth of Boston. A visit to the business streets more recently built up, conveys an idea of solidity, permanence, and strength, scarcely found in any portion of New York. Take one circle embracing Franklin street, and we believe Winthrop square, comprising blocks erected since the crash of '57, and we have a collection of massive, magnificent architectural piles, solid, capacious, and costly, unsurpassed, we dare say, in magnitude and real evidence of wealth, by any similar area in any city of the world

The difference between New York and Boston appeared to us something like this: New York has wider commercial strength, greater acquired and delegated power: Boston vaster inherent resources. New York builds on her prospective trade; Boston from wealth already accumulated. New York depends on the world; Boston on herself! We know not if this be true, but such impressions flowed irresistibly upon us as we gazed upon her new business streets on that quiet Sabbath morning, and measured the extent of those monuments to New England's wealth

Room is left us for expended gratification in the future, in exploring the many delightful resorts surrounding Boston. It was our privilege, however, to ascend to the top of the State House and map out the objects of interest visible at all points, and afterward some of the charming parks on Boston Neck, and to view the harbor, city, and surrounding country from the famous Dorchester Heights—a point commanding an unrivalled city and country view.

The peculiarly close proximity of pleasant country towns, and, indeed, the semi-rural character of a large part of the city itself, renders Boston more a city of homes than New York can possibly be. It is an important, perhaps inevitable objection to this metropolis, that little, comfortable houses, for men of moderate salaries, easy of access from place of business, are very rare.

When progressive architects and social reformers shall have devised a plan for affording cheap rents to comfortable rooms, and at the same time a fair income on invested capital, New York may be made tenfold more attractive to its multitude of clerks, mechanics, and laborers, and the cause of intelligence and good morals receive a much needed impetus. Now we wait with all possible patience the experiments of inventive reformers, who are surely at work, and whose labors are destined to greatly bless mankind.

DISSOLUTION IMPOSSIBLE

It is easy to write the word "separation." But we no longer have an Alexander VI to trace the boundaries of empires upon the map of the world. Who shall claim Washington, situated as it is in a slave-holding district? Who shall fix the frontiers? Will Tennessee, Virginia, North Carolina, compel the portions of their territories which have declared for the North to come with them into the Southern Confederacy? Will free Kansas be given up as a bloody offering into the hands of the surrounding states, all eager to pounce upon it? Will the inhabitants of the West, of those States which form the basin of the Mississippi, the Missouri, and the Ohio, be told that they must give up the navigation of three rivers, that New Orleans and Texas must belong to another, a hostile country, a country, perhaps, soon to be under the protection of Europe? Imagine this great American Republic divided, deprived of its Southern frontiers, and of its ports in the Mexican Gulf, of Louisiana, which she bought from France, of Florida, which she bought from the Spaniards and Indians, of Texas, whose debts she paid, and settling as best she could all these accounts with an insolvent neighbor, establishing the rate of damages due for Federal property, for repudiated debts, and for reciprocal requestrations. North, South, are words easily uttered; but where begins the North, and where ends the South? Does the North end at the Chesapeake which runs in two the loyal State of Maryland? Does the South stop at Tennessee, beyond which the slave-holding insurrection has found supporters? The fact is, that from the Gulf of Mexico to the Canadian lakes we find but one nation. To separate North and South it were necessary to draw I know not what indelible line through the loyal States, through the insurgent States, through the slave States, across rivers and mountains, an endless line, every point of which would have to be guarded by a custom house officer and a soldier And do not tell me that the two sections would be at peace, that absolute liberty of commerce would be proclaimed, that custom house officers and soldiers would therefore be useless, and the natural weakness of the frontiers of no importance? Who does not see that such a division would be war; war everywhere and forever! And at last the South, miserable, ruined, dependant, forced to rest on some other power, would seek and find a protector It will be a great misfortune to America, and, I fear not to say, as great a one for Europe.—Count De Gasparin.

ANDOVER PROFESSORSHIPS.—The Trustees of Andover Theological Seminary, made choice of Prof. J. H. Seelye of Amherst College, to fill the Professorship of Ecclesiastical History, recently made vacant by the resignation of Prof. Shedd. Prof. Seelye graduated at Amherst College, and studied theology at Auburn and in Europe

PRESENT STATE OF THE CHURCH OF ROME

The organs of the Roman Catholic Church point with high gratification at the large increase of episcopal sees, of monastic orders, and of foreign missions during the pontificate of Pius IX. They find in this fact some consolation for the loss of temporal power and of privileges, which the Church is just now suffering much against her own will, though undoubtedly to her own great spiritual advantage.

A full account of the present number of episcopal sees in the Roman Catholic Church, and of their increase since the accession of Pius IX., is given in the Statistical Year Book for 1862 The new volume, which has been compiled by Professor Ciccolini, the editor of the official Giornale di Roma, is much more complete than any previous one, and the only official source of information of this kind. At the time the Year Book was published, the College of Cardinals, which is styled the "Sacred College," consisted of sixty-one members, one cardinal had been reserved in petto, (not yet publicly announced,) and eight seats were vacant. The oldest member of the college, Tosti, was 86 years old; the youngest, Ferretti, 45. Of the members made cardinals by Leo XII., only one, Barberini, survives; from the time of Gregory XVI, 18; and 42 have received the "red hat" from the present Pope. No less than 50 cardinals have died during the pontificate of Pius IX. As to the nativity of the cardinals, it is well known that the great majority of them are Italians. France has 6, Austria, (exclusive of its Italian provinces,) 5, Spain, 2, Belgium, Prussia, England, Portugal, each, one

The episcopal sees consist of 12 patriarchates, 145 archbishoprics, and 677 bishoprics Of these, 80 have been erected by Pius IX., and at the time of the compilation of the Year Book, 85 (3 patriarchates, 7 archbishoprics, and 75 bishoprics) were vacant. Beside the actual bishops, there are 236 merely titular archbishops and bishops, called in partibus infidelium, because some diocese, now extinct, is assigned to them. They are mostly members of ecclesiastical and civil boards in Rome, and coadjutors of bishops whose health is impaired, and who have very extensive dioceses. The total number of men having received the episcopal ordination was therefore 985, which number would be raised to 1070 if all the vacant seats were filled

Many of the missionary districts have not yet been organized into bishoprics, but are placed under superiors bearing different names. There were in 1861 thirty-nine apostolical vicars, three apostolical delegates, and eighteen apostolical prefects. Eighteen of these offices have been created by Pius IX., and seventeen were vacant.

The monastic orders have for many centuries not prospered as much as since the beginning of the pontificate of Pius IX, who, like many laymen and priests of the Church, is a member of the so-called "Third Order," which binds its members, though not living in convents, to the observance of the order of prayers, special festivals, etc., of the order to which they are attached. Pius proclaimed it, at the beginning of his pontificate, as one of his greatest wishes, to effect a reformation of the monastic orders, many of which were still generally known to be in a state of great degeneracy and corruption. Considerable results seem to have been achieved in some countries, as France and Germany, although the numerous legal proceedings in the former country and Belgium against monks and nuns indicate that in many instances upon corruption has been succeeded by a secret one. Yet it cannot be denied that the number of monks and nuns is rapidly increasing, and their services in behalf of their Church are very effective. The completest account of the present number of monastic institutions is given in a "Statistical Year Book of the Church," published by a German monk. It gives an alphabetical list of all the orders now extant, and under each order, likewise in alphabetical order, a complete list of all the houses which the careful and extensive research of the editor could ascertain. According to his account, there were in 1860: male orders and congregations, 83, with 7,065 establishments and 100,000 members; female orders and congregations, 94, with 9,247 houses and a little

The Statistical Association of the Colored People of Philadelphia, and other points where they may be located, and respectfully ask the co-operation of the colored citizens and others in this city, or elsewhere, in money [illegible]

All [illegible] will be thankfully acknowledged, with the name of the donor, in the Recorder, where a constant record will be kept.

Subscriptions may be sent to Jacob C. White, at the Rev. [illegible] Corner of Lombard Street, and also to William Still, 107 North Fifth Street, and to Rev. E. Weaver, 619 Pine Street.

Paid.

Statistical Society,	$[illegible]
Clinton Miller,	2 00
William Still,	5 00
[illegible]	2 00
[illegible]	2 00
[illegible]	1 00
Asti Locke,	1 00
Wm. Warricke,	1 00
[illegible]	1 00
[illegible]	1 00
Rev. Jonathan C. Gibbs,	1 00
James P. Clay,	1 00
Benjamin F Hall,	2 00
S M. S.,	2 00
[illegible]	1 00
F. J. Dreer,	1 00

It affords us pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of ten dollars, the proceeds of Miss Anna E. Dickinson's lecture at Concert Hall for the contrabands, contributed to the S. C. and Statistical Association to be applied as intended. WM. STILL.

Cor. Sec. of S. C. and Statistical Association of the Colored People of Penna.

Domestic Items.

The Recent Battle in Virginia

MANASSAS JUNCTION, August 29th—10 o'clock, P. M.

To Major General H. W. Halleck, General-in-Chief:

As soon as I discovered that a large force of the enemy was turning our right toward Manassas, and that the diversion I had ordered to take post there two days before had not yet arrived there from Alexandria, I immediately broke up my camps at Warrenton Junction and Warrenton, and marched rapidly back in three columns.

I directed McDowell, with his own and Sumner's corps, and Reno's division, to march [illegible] by the Warrenton and Alexandria pike—Reno and one division of Heintzelman to march on Greenwich; and, with Porter's corps and Hooker's division, I marched back to Manassas Junction. McDowell was ordered to interpose between the forces of the enemy, which had passed down to Manassas through Gainesville, and his main body, which was moving down from White Plains through Thoroughfare Gap. This was completely accomplished, Longstreet, with [illegible] passed through the Gap, being driven back to the west side. The forces sent to Greenwich were designed to support McDowell, in case he met too large a force of the enemy.

The division of Hooker, marching towards Manassas, came upon the enemy near Kettle Run, on the afternoon of the 27th, and, after a sharp action, routed them completely, killing and wounding three hundred, and capturing their camps and baggage, and many stand of arms.

This morning the command pushed rapidly to Manassas Junction, which Jackson had evacuated three hours in advance.

He retreated by way of Centreville, and took the turnpike towards Warrenton.

He was met when six miles west of Centreville by McDowell and Sigel.

Late this afternoon a severe fight took place, which has been terminated by the darkness.

The enemy was driven back at all points, and thus the affair rests.

Heintzelman's corps will move on him, at daylight, from Centreville, and I do not see how he is to escape without heavy loss.

We have captured a thousand prisoners, many arms, and one piece of artillery. [illegible]

Major-General.

HEADQUARTERS FIELD OF BATTLE, Groveton, near Gainesville, Aug. 30th, 5 A. M.—Major-General Halleck, General-in-Chief:—We fought a terrific battle here yesterday, with the combined forces of the enemy, which lasted with continuous fury from daylight until after dark, by which time the enemy was driven from the field, which we now occupy. Our troops are too much exhausted yet to push matters, but I shall do so in the course of the morning, as soon as Fitz-John Porter's corps comes up from Manassas.

The enemy is still in our front, but badly used up.

We have lost not less than eight thousand men killed and wounded, and, from the appearance of the field, the enemy lost at least two to one. He stood strictly on the defensive—and every assault was made by our forces.

Our troops behaved splendidly. The battle was fought on the identical battle field of Bull Run, which greatly increased the enthusiasm of our men.

The news just reaches me from the front that the enemy is retreating towards the mountains. I go forward at once to see.

We have made great captures, but I am not able yet to form an idea of their extent.

John Pope,

Major-General Commanding.

WASHINGTON, Aug 31.—The rebels were heavily reinforced yesterday, and attacked Pope's army before the arrival of Generals Franklin and Sumner. The attack was boldly met, and a severe battle followed. The advantage, on the whole, was on the side of the enemy, and Pope fell back to Centreville with the whole army in good order.

He has now been joined at Centreville by General Franklin, and Sumner was upon the march to him last night.

He occupies the strongest position in the neighborhood of Washington, and is expected promptly to renew the contest and the successes of Friday.

Every effort should be used to hasten the forwarding of our troops.

WASHINGTON, August 31, 1862.—According to all accounts, Gen. Jackson yesterday succeeded in forcing his way through the Federal troops surrounding him, and effected a junction with the remainder of the Confederate forces. This result was not attained without fearful loss on both sides, and the most desperate fighting occurred.

From all that can be learned, in the absence of any regular report, the corps of McDowell, Porter, Heintzelman and Sigel were engaged—the former having the left, the latter the right, and the others operating about the centre. The principal fighting seems to have been on the left and centre. The left was thrown up from Manassas Junction towards Thoroughfare Gap, the right at and about Centreville, and the centre on the old Bull Run battle-field not from Manassas.

The action was commenced by the enemy opening his batteries upon our left, between one and two o'clock. Their guns were strongly and advantageously posted upon a ridge, while our batteries had to fire from the open plain. Morell's division supported the batteries at the point. After some severe cannonading, General Butler's brigade of cavalry, comprising the First Michigan, First Virginia, and First Vermont, were ordered to our extreme left, to reconnoitre and guard against any attempt to turn the left flank, which movement was threatened by the enemy.

Riding beyond our left, where the infantry were formed close behind on batteries which were playing with great precision upon the enemy, while our troops were cheering vociferously, the cavalry reached a slight eminence, and were about to send out a detachment to explore, when the enemy were seen coming up in force along the line of the adjacent woods. A battery was observed to wheel into position, and then came shell, thrown into their midst, followed by canister and grape.

Time was discovered the intention of the enemy to attempt a flank movement. Long lines of infantry could plainly be seen hurrying up to take position, and soon other batteries were brought up and opened upon our left. The cavalry, forced to retire, retreated behind a low ridge, but the clouds of dust revealing their place of retreat the rebels continued shelling them—and another change of position was made. Here a body of cavalry were observed riding towards them, and sabres were drawn to meet the charge.

The advancing squadron proved to be friends—the Fourth New York Cavalry, attached to Sigel's corps. Where they had come from, as Sigel was on the right, was and is a mystery. They reported Stuart's cavalry as about making a charge. The New York cavalry fell in behind Buford's brigade, the bugles sounded, and over the hill galloped our horsemen to meet the advancing foe.

As our men approached, the rebel cavalry discharged double-barrel-d shot-guns, and then met in full charge. Our men broke the enemy's line and pursued them. The foe rallied in splendid style, and dashed forward again to meet the charge. Again their line was broken, and the cavalry [illegible] Centreville and with musketry, compelling them to retire. Meanwhile, the left had given way, and was on the retreat, passing our cavalry.

A battery which had run short of ammunition was on the point of being captured, but under the determined resistance of the cavalry, was safely brought off. The troops fell back upon Franklin's division, which had just come up, and were formed in line to prevent straggling and anything like a panic. Had General Franklin's corps arrived two hours earlier upon the field, the result of the day's fighting would have been different.

The Adjutant-General's office is receiving reports with the names of the killed and wounded in the late battles. Among the killed are Brig.-Gen. [illegible] Brig.-Gen. Mahlon D. Manson was wounded and taken prisoner. Lieutenant [illegible] Morrison was wounded and taken prisoner. Lieutenant [illegible] Morrison was wounded and taken prisoner. Lieutenant [illegible] Morrison

HUGH MILLER'S DESCRIPTION OF CHALMERS' FUNERAL

Never before did we witness such a funeral, nor, never before, in at least the memory of man, did Scotland witness such a funeral. It was a solemn tribute spontaneously paid to departed goodness and greatness by the public mind. In the Cemetery the procession was at once seen for the first time, and the appearance was that of an army. The figures decided in the distance, in receding toward the open grave along the long, winding walks seen in those magnificent pictures of Martin, in which even the littleness of men is made to enhance the greatness of their works, and the array of their aggregated numbers. And still the open gateway continued to give ingress to the dingy, living tide, that seemed to flow unceasingly inwards, like some perennial stream that disemboguies its waters into a lake.

"The party-colored thousands on the eminence above, all in silence, and many of them in tears—the far-stretching line of the mourners below—the effect, amid the general black, of the scarlet cloaks of the Magistracy of Edinburgh, who had come, with much good taste and feeling, in their robes of office, and attended by its officials and insignia, to manifest their spontaneous respect for the memory of the greatest of their countrymen—the slow, measured tramp, that, with the rustle of the breeze, formed the only sounds audible in so vast an assemblage—all conspired to compose a scene solemn and impressive in the highest degree.

There was a moral sublimity in the spectacle. It spoke more emphatically than by words, of the dignity of intrinsic excellence, and of the height to which a true man may attain. It was the dust of a Presbyterian minister which the coffin contained; and yet they were burying him amid the tears of a nation with more than kingly honors.

JEFFREY.

There was a noble simplicity as well as transparency of mind and character about Jeffrey, his conversational powers were marvellous, his vivacity, and also his musical, clear, ringing voice, were charming (once I listened to its cadences;) while as a judge he was impartial, honest and able. In stature he was small, but both in figure and features, handsome, and almost spirituelle.

"The mind, the music, breathing from the face," were emphatically his own. He lived long years, probably a stranger to vital personal religion. His literary associates had no sympathy with the doctrines of the Cross, and in the pages of the "Edinburgh," Christian missions to the heathen were treated as fanatical enterprises—at least in its early days. But if Jeffrey ever was a skeptic or a latitudinarian, there is reason to believe that he was a lover of Christ in his closing days. When at Edinburgh, I had a statement made to me, the authenticity of which, from the source whence it came, seems undoubted. Probably it has not appeared in print before. It was to the following effect; namely, that Lord Jeffrey, in his last days, in relating to an intimate friend how he nightly had a warm bath in his own house, which he found very soothing and salutary, added: "That is to me a time of the greatest enjoyment; for some one, I know not who he is, sends me, every week or month, beautiful little publications, and when alone in the city bath, at night, I read them with the greatest profit and pleasure." I believe it to be more than probable that the publications referred to were those of the "Monthly Tract Society," of London, which sends by post to persons of the upper and middle classes, both at home and on the Continent, little books with colored paper covers, and bearing evident traces of talent and taste, as well as rich in evangelical truth.

BOOKS.

Books may be divided into four kinds:—

1. Of the Hand,
2. Of the Table,
3. Of the Shelf,
4. Of Desolate Islands, (see Mr. Lowell.)

The first sort is for reading, the second for reference and study, and the third for show. The first should be borrowed, if possible, from your accommodating friend, or the circulating library, or the book-club. The second should be owned and used. The third stands behind handsome glass doors, and looks fine. We know of really good books condemned to that imprisonment; poets, artists, philosophers, in prison dresses of morocco and gold, magnificent to see, caged in silent uselessness in gay dungeons of plate glass and mahogany. Libraries for such owners should be of blocks, backed with shiny bindings and fine names. Then let the happy possessor lose the key of his book-case, and all will be well. The fourth includes poor poetry, printed at the urgent request of partial friends; the novels of the late G. P. R. James, Esq., and of Mr. W. Gilmore Simms, and, in fact, at least nine-tenths of all the novels ever printed; ex-parte ante-mortem inquisitions, known as "campaign biographies;" the Koran and the Book of Mormon, (considered as books for reading,) and many more,—too tedious to mention.

In the second class, Books of the Table, belong dictionaries, encyclopedias, Biographical collections, a few histories, a set of the American Almanac, 1830–62, (which reminds us that it is an actual disobliging of students, for the editor of that annual compend to delay its coming as he does this year; a thing not merely inconvenient to us, but positively unfair in the editor, unless he has some good reason for it;) a gazetteer, a universal atlas. We would be glad to bargain with some eminent capitalist in this wise: We to name a collection of books of reference satisfactory to us, and he to buy them and give them to us. Does any capitalist bid? First, we should name the names of a set of books for the Chronology of the History of Literature, to enable us—so far as the work has been done—to ascertain when, where, and by whom, all books have been written, edited, and published, from 1455, when the preternatural splendors of the great Mentz Bible appalled all the doctors of all the faculties, down to this present. A sufficiently complete bibliographical library might reach 7,000 or 8,000 volumes But we, in our moderation, would let the capitalist off for half so many.

Independent.

BOOKS AND READING.

Read not to contradict and refute, nor to believe and take for granted, nor to find talk and discourse, but to weigh and consider. Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested; that is, some books are to be read only in parts; others to be read, but not attentively; and some few to be read wholly, and with diligence and attention. Some books also may be read by deputy, and extracts made of them by others; but that would be only in the less important arguments, and the meaner sort of books; else distilled books are, like common distilled waters, flashy things. Reading maketh a full man, conference a ready man, and writing an exact man; and, therefore, if a man write little, he had need have a great memory; if he confer little, he had need have a present wit; and if he read little, he had need have much cunning, to seem to know that he doth not

Lord Bacon.

WAR SONG.

Hurrah! hurrah! a glorious strife
And freedom be the word:
Come, brothers! hand in hand,
Fight for your father land.

Quit the counter,
Go where your sires have gone;
Their pulse is in our veins.

Rest will be sweet anon!
The slave may yield, may fly,
We conquer, or we die.

O Liberty! thy form Shall
Away with fear, away!
Let justice win the day

SNAILS

We [illegible] are informed by the Baltimore [illegible] that they are there fast going to decay. As a crop of [illegible] is reported to be about to [illegible] we extract the following account of the [illegible] from a very old belief. Borlase asserted it in his "Natural History of Cornwall," a hundred years ago Mr. Jeffries gives the passage:—

"The sweetest mutton is reckoned to be that of the smallest sheep, which usually feed on the commons, where the sands are scarce covered with the green sod, and the grass is exceedingly short such are the downs of Sand Hall [illegible] Sand, Gwithian, Phillis, Senan Green near the Land's End, and elsewhere in like situations From these sands come forth annils of the turbinated kind, out of distinct species [illegible] from the adult to the smallest just from the egg. These spread themselves over the plains early in the morning, and whilst they are in quest of their own food among the dews, yield a most fattening nourishment to the sheep."

SNAILS AS FOOD

But it is not only sheep to whom snails are palatable. Every one knows that they formed a very common dish with the Romans, who fed them up to an enormous size in their snail preserves —cochlearia—and that they are still eaten in many parts of the Continent. We have heard a story of some shipwrecked Frenchman clearing the spa side gardens in Devonshire Even in England they are still considered a remedy for consumption; but perhaps few are aware that they may be bought at any time in Covent Garden Market; we were of forced some the other day at sixpence a quart—very excellent snails, we were assured, not professing ourselves to be judges of the quality The glass men at Newcastle indulge themselves in a snail-feast once a year, and collect them from the fields and hedgerows on the Sunday previous. If any reader wishes for a receipt for their cookery, there is one to be found, says Mr Jeffreys, in old Martin Lister's book, "Historiæ Animalium;" and it may be useful to add that, in the opinion of connoisseurs, Helix nitidula is "the most tender and delicate; the best tasted and most digestible." But the species which is to be seen in the restaurant windows in France is the Helix Pomatia

DRIED SNAILS COMING TO LIFE

But the poor snail has been the victim, from time to time, of other besides culinary experiments He has—fortunately or unfortunately for himself—extraordinary powers of vitality "Some of them," says Mr. Jeffreys, "have been known to live many years shut up in boxes and drawers, and even affixed to tablets as specimens." Dr Johnston in his most interesting "Introduction," which professor Kingsley has not unaptly characterized as a "collection of true fairy tales," speaks [illegible] belonging to a Mr. Simon of Dublin, which revived when placed in the water, after having been dried for a period of certainly fifteen years—probably much longer; but another account, which he quotes from Silliman's American Journal sounds like a fairy tale indeed. The men employed in cutting the Erie Canal, "near Rome village, sixteen miles west of Utica," found several hundred live mollusks forty-two feet deep, in a diluvial deposit. How many thousand years they have been there, it is not easy to say They might be alive now, but that "the workmen took the animals, fried, and ate them." The same tenacity of life is shown under circumstances even more abnormal—Mueller relates "that some snails, from which he had cut off their heads, lived more than a year in this state without food, crawling about, and at the usual time forming their winter epiphragms" In the case of Mueller's unfortunate pets, the power of reproducing the mutilated parts, which this class of animals has been proved to possess, does not appear to have been exercised. But that they have been known to reproduce feet, tentacles, eyes, and even the whole head, after amputation, seems an established fact, thanks to the unscrupulous experiments of science

Blackwood.

PETROLEUM.

EXPERIMENTS TO DETERMINE ITS COMPARATIVE ILLUMINATING POWER WITH GAS AND CANDLES

It is not the difference in price per gallon between two burning fluids, or other agents employed in artificial illumination, that determines their respective cost for use. One burning fluid such as a mixture of alcohol and turpentine, that costs only sixty cents per gallon, may be more expensive than sperm oil, costing one dollar and a quarter; because the latter possesses three times the illuminating power of the former. It is well known that refined petroleum has lately driven all other burning fluids out of use, and one reason for this is its very low price. But, as we have already stated, this cannot determine its economy—its comparative illuminating power must also be known to form a just estimate of its cost. Heretofore this has been unknown, but now we have a most valuable contribution to science in the record of a series of experiments conducted by Professor James C. Booth and Mr Thomas H. Garrett, of Philadelphia, and published in the last number of the Journal of the Franklin Institute.

Their experiments were chiefly instituted to test the comparative illuminating power of petroleum and the common coal gas used in Philadelphia. The gas was measured by a water meter, and the jet used was a Suttail burner attached to the top of the meter, and fixed at the uniform distance of six feet from the photometer. The lamp for burning the fluid and giving equal light to the gas jet, was measured on the opposite side of the photometer. Messrs Booth and Garrett first determined by experiment the relative economy of several coal and mineral oils, and common burning fluid, (alcohol and turpentine.) Of four kinds of mineral oils, or refined petroleum, there was but little difference in their illuminating power. It was found that 2,380 gallons gave a light equal to 1,000 cubic feet of gas, and it required no less than 11,000 gallons of burning fluid to produce an equal amount of light; thus proving that one gallon of petroleum is equal to four of burning fluid for giving light. Various experiments were also made with flames of different shape in the petroleum lamp, to determine which form gave the most intense light with the least quantity of oil. It was found that a clear straight cut of the wick gave the best results The most common way of trimming such lamp wicks is with an arched cut, to produce a flame shaped like a bow. With a flame from a wick cut straight across, 2,570 gallons of oil gave a light equal to 1,000 cubic feet of gas, while with an arched flame, 2,846 gallons of oil were required. Very great care must be observed in trimming the wicks of oil lamps, so as not to leave them ragged at the edges. A loss, varying from four to twenty per cent was observed with different trimmed wicks. Messrs Booth and Garrett say on this head: The best method of obtaining the fullest amount of light is to trim the wick straight across, and test the shape of the flame until it present as even a top as practicable —Scientific American.

FAMILY COURTESY

Family intimacy should never make brothers and sisters forget to be polite and sympathizing to each other. Those who contract thoughtless and rude habits toward the members of their own family will be rude and thoughtless to all the world But let the family intercourse be true, tender, and affectionate, and the manners of all uniformly gen[illegible]

[illegible]ly thus trained will carry into the world and [illegible] spire in their associates similar qualities; they will not be satisfied without mutual esteem and the cultivation of the best affections; and their own character will be sustained by that faith in [illegible]

Dr. Alexander on Mor.

COMPLEXION OF THE HUMAN RACE

Mr. [illegible] states the complexion of the human race is entirely dependent on the mode of [illegible] who, from the entire un[illegible]

as fine a carnation as the inhabitants of Europe. In Algeria it has long been the subject of remark that butchers, generally negroes of Kalo, are as fair in complexion as the European settlers, although still preserving their woolly hair.

A CLERGYMAN'S JOKE

I was spending the night in a hotel in Freeport, Illinois After breakfast I came into the sitting-room, where I met a pleasant, chatty, gentlemanly traveller, who, like myself, was waiting for the morning train from Galena. We conversed freely and pleasantly on several topics, until seeing two young ladies meet and kiss each other on the street, the conversation turned on kissing, just about the time the train was approaching. "Come," said he, taking up his carpet bag, "since we are on so sweet a subject, let us have a practical application I'll make a proposition to you. I'll agree to kiss the most beautiful lady in the cars from Galena, you being the judge, if you will kiss the next prettiest, I being the judge." The proposition staggered me a little and I could hardly tell whether he was in earnest or in fun; but as he would be as deep in it as I could possibly be, I agreed provided he would do the first kissing, though my heart failed somewhat as I saw his black eye sparkle with daring. "Yes," said he, "I'll try it first. You take the back car and go in from the front end, where you can see the faces of the ladies, and you stand by the one you think the handsomest, and I'll come in from behind and kiss her."

I had hardly stepped inside the car when I saw at the first glance one of the loveliest-looking women my eyes fell on. A beautiful blonde, with auburn hair, and a bright sunny face, full of love and sweetness, and as radiant and glowing as the morning. Any farther search was totally unnecessary. I immediately took my stand in the aisle of the car by her side. She was looking out of the window earnestly, as if expecting some one. The back door of the car opened, and in stepped my fellow-traveller. I pointed my finger slyly to her, never dreaming that he would dare to carry out his pledge; and you may imagine my horror and amazement when he stepped up quickly behind her, and stooping over, kissed her with a relish that made "my mouth water" from end to end. I expected of course a shriek of terror, and then a row generally, and a knock-down; but astonishment succeeded astonishment when I saw her return the kisses with compound interest

Quick as a flash he turned to me and said, "Now, sir, it is your turn;" pointing to a hideously ugly wrinkled old woman who sat in the seat behind. "Oh, you must excuse me! you must excuse me!" I exclaimed. "I'm sold this time I gave it up. [illegible] me why you have been kissing" "Well," said he, "since you are a man of so much taste and quick perception, I'll let you off" And we all burst into a general peal of laughter as he said, "I knew my wife I have been waiting here for her I knew that was a safe proposition." He told the story to his wife, who received her cold sweetest as she heard it

Before we reached Chicago we were introduced and I discovered that my companion was a popular Episcopal preacher of Chicago, whose name I had frequently heard. When I got to Chicago I always got to hear him, and a better more natural, and more eloquent preacher it is hard to find. He was then but a young man, he is now well known as one of the ablest divines of the Episcopal denomination in the West.—Harper's Monthly.

GREASE SPOTS.

A grease spot on many delicate fabrics is a difficult thing to remove, on others it comes away very easily. When first made, before the fibres have thoroughly absorbed the grease, soap of almost any kind will often quickly remove it; after a few days, a soap of peculiar quality is required The hardest and whitest is commonly best, and soft-soap is the most powerful, but liable to change the color or weaken the texture of the goods. Turpentine, kerosene, and other carbonaceous liquids, have a great affinity for grease, and dissolve it, but are themselves so difficult to remove from cloth that by their use we are apt to only diffuse the grease over a larger surface. Ether, chloroform, and to a limited extent alcohol, dissolves grease, and though they do not remove it any better than turpentine, yet they bring it into a condition to be easily washed away by soap and water. On fabrics not injured by alkalies, ammonia water used to wet the spots, renders them easy of removal [illegible] a soapy solution, and then [illegible] ter It will sometimes remove grease, and other spots from silks, and other delicate fabrics, without injury to the colors, when everything else fails; it is itself easily washed off. Almost any very fine soft substance will absorb grease. The articles most in use and very effective are, potter's clay, [illegible] pipe-clay, powdered [illegible] wet up to a paste and laid upon it, and then by application of a hot iron in close proximity, the grease, even though it may be wax or spermaceti, is absorbed by the [illegible] may be washed away and [illegible] after a few patient applications. In the absence of clay or French chalk, or on fabrics likely to be injured by them, any bibulous paper (such as will quickly absorb water, like blotting paper) may be laid upon the spot, and a hot iron being applied, a great part of the grease will be taken up by the paper, and the rest chiefly diffused so as not to be seen.

CHARACTER OF THE GENTLEMAN.

I have stated already that the forbearing use of power in a sure attribute of a gentleman; indeed, as we may say that power—physical, moral, purely social or political is one of the touchstones of gentlemanship. The power which the husband has over his wife, in which we must include the impunity with which he may be unkind to her; the father over his children; the old over the young, and the young over the aged; the strong over the weak; the officer over his men; the master of a vessel over his hands; the magistrate over the citizens; the employer over the employed; the rich over the poor; the educated over the unlettered; the experienced over the confiding; the keeper of a secret over him whom it touches, the gifted over the ordinary man; even the clever over the silly—the forbearing and inoffensive use of all this power or authority, or a total abstinence from it where the case admits it, will show the gentleman in a plain light.

Every traveller knows at once whether a gentleman or rude officer is searching his trunk But the use of power does not only form a touchstone; even the manner in which an individual enjoys certain advantages over the others, is a test. No gentleman can boast of the delights of superior health in the presence of a languid patient, or speak of great good luck in hearing of a man beset by habitual misfortune. Let the man who happily enjoys the advantages of a pure and honest life, speak of it to a fallen fellow being, and you will soon see whether he be, in addition to his honesty, a gentleman or not. The gentleman does not needlessly and unnecessarily remind an offender of a wrong he may have committed against him. He can not only forgive, but he can forget; and he strives for that nobleness of soul and manliness of character which impart sufficient strength to let the past be truly past He will never use the [illegible] step, or an unfortunate exponent of weakness gives him, merely to enjoy the power of humiliating his neighbor. A true man of honor feels humbled [illegible]

Dr. Lieber.

A FEW WORDS TO A FATHER

Take your son for a companion whenever you conveniently can

1st It will relieve the already over burdened, and anxious mother of so much care

2d It will gratify the boy; it will please the mother, it certainly ought to be a pleasure to [illegible] bosom when her child is kindly cared for? And when his father," does she not share her little boy's happiness, and is not her love deepened by her husband's consideration, so just, and yet too often so exceptional

3d It will keep him and you out of places and [illegible] not sleep any more that night, and all day he felt [illegible] was more exalted afterwards than he had been the day before What could he do? He believed he would certainly could never leave a But Vienna was a long way off—many a hundred miles—and poor Christopher would have to work hard for three months to get money enough to take him there and back He was in great anxiety all day. But he resolved that if he dreamed again about the enchanted pocket-knife being in Vienna, he would certainly begin to save money to pay his travelling expenses

Sure enough, that very night he dreamed the same thing that he had done two nights before Now his mind was fully made up. He would go to Vienna cost what it might, just as soon as he got money enough But he said nothing to his wife about his dreams or his resolution. He worked hard afterwards. His children asked him why he made toys so late at night; and some of his sheep had caught severe colds because he sheared the wool off so close. But Christopher knew what he was about. He was going to Vienna to bring home the enchanted pocket-knife Then the great and noble would honor him, and he would be a prince in the land.

Night and day he toiled on, until at last he examined a traveller's guide-book, and found he had enough money to pay his expenses to Vienna He told his wife one beautiful spring morning, that as he had never been to the great city of Vienna, he thought he would take a journey there.

"Why, Christopher, what is the matter?" she asked him. "You have no friends there, and you could not reap enough profit from such a long and expensive journey to pay for the trouble and cost."

"True, Martha, I have no friends in Vienna; but I hope to find success there, and come home in a better state of mind, and with more wealth than when I started. I think I shall, for I have good reason to believe that I shall be prospered in my enterprise. Do not ask me what I am going to Vienna for. I trust that the sequel will prove my good judgment."

"You can do as you please, of course, Christopher. But I fear your continual travelling in foreign lands after the enchanted pocket-knife, will come to nothing. I wish you could feel contented to stay at home, and toil in an humble way. But if you will go, farewell, and may God's blessing attend you."

Some Christopher was on his long journey to Vienna. Days and weeks passed by before he got there. At last he reached the beautiful city But he did not care for the lovely gardens and great palaces and fine shops. He stopped in a plain, cheap little hotel, and took supper. After he had finished it, he went out to the great bridge that crosses the wide Danube, and walked up and down. The dream said he must be in the middle of it, as the great city clock struck twelve What was the middle of the bridge? Was it just equally distant from the two sides, or was it as equal distance from the two ends? In order to be sure, however, he found the middle between the ends, and then between the sides. There he stood. It was only ten o'clock; but better too soon than too late. By and by it was eleven.

Christopher's heart began to beat as it came near twelve. Many people were still passing, and he began to look out for the little boy who would come along with the enchanted pocket knife wrapped up in a blacksmith's leather apron The great clock struck twelve Christopher was standing right in the middle of the bridge The stars were shining bright, and he could see very badly but alas! there was no little boy that came up and handed him anything. He stood till two o'clock But no enchanted pocket knife dazzled his eyes.

The next night he did the same thing, but he was subjected to the same sore disappointment Now he began to be almost despairing, and knew not what to do. He had a half-mind to cast himself down in the river and drown himself. But that would not mend the matter any. He thought he would stay another night. He did so; but no little boy handed him the enchanted pocket-knife wrapped up in a blacksmith's leather apron.

He started home with a heavy heart Days and weeks passed, and at last he reached his little affectionate family in the mountains. His wife met him kindly, but she could read in his countenance that he had been disappointed

"Don't say anything," said he to her, "about the enchanted pocket knife I feel very badly to think I have trusted in dreams and spent my money in searching for what I have been deceived about so many times. I have formed a resolution never to go from home for wealth and enjoyment I have been teaching my children a bad lesson Here in the bosom of my little family, and trusting in God, will I spend the rest of my life"

Christopher was cured of his evil propensity.

Now, children, I am going to tell the sequel Open wide your eyes and ears my closing words. [illegible] Christopher split off a piece of soft wood from his log in the garret, and took it away into the grazing field to make it up into toys through the day When the log was getting small, he split the balance of it into two pieces.

What should roll out as the pieces fell apart but the shining enchanted pocket-knife! It had a gold handle and bright silver blades! He picked it up, and made a little horse and wagon in two strokes! Here he had been for many years seeking in foreign lands, digging in cellars, walking on bridges [illegible] in steeples on the one hand, boats—all to find what was all the time at his own little home.

He called his little children to him, and taught them a lesson. He said: "Seek for enjoyment and success at home, not in the street, or in other lands, far away from your friends. You may search all over the world for success, but remember that almost always the enchanted knife can be found at home."

Henceforth Christopher and his family were honored, prosperous, and happy.

Methodist

SABBATH SCHOOL CHILDREN.

On Sabbath morn how sweet to see
A group of children bright and free,
To the Sabbath School repair
To learn of God and Jesus there

Their teachers with a smile they greet—
With joy and pride they run to meet
Those who lead them on the way
To realms of everlasting day.

O! how pleasant to behold
Those little lambs of Christ's own fold
Ask of the Saviour who did give
His life that sinners all might live

Those little flowers—so young and fair—
Should all be trained with tender care.
To fit them for that home above,
Where nought can dwell but peace and love

How pleasant, then, it is to think
Those little ones will form a link
In that bright chain of saints who've been Washed in Christ's blood from all their sin.

If we to Him are faithful here,
They'll shine as stars in yonder sphere,
Forever round the throne of God,
In that bright world, and blest at last.

Messiah

Philadelphia Markets.

APPLES —Green, 62½@1 50, dried, 3@6.
ASHES —Pots, —(a —; Pearls, —@—
Soda Ash, 2½@3¼
BARK.—Quercitron, first quality, 32,50@33 00; second quality, 30,50@31 00; third quality, 24,00@[illegible]
[illegible] Oak, 17@19
BERY —Moss, barrel, 12 00@15 00; Prime, 6@7
dried berl, 9@10.
BEESWAX —Yellow, 25@26,50
BEANS —[illegible]
Ball, 11@14; Goshen, 14@15.
CANDLES —[illegible]
17; Tallow moulds, 11½@12; dipped, 10@11
COAL —[illegible]
CRANBERRIES.—(a —
DRIED BEEF.—9@10.
FEATHERS.—American, 37@40
FISH —Mackerel, No. 1, 8 00@10 00, No. 2, 6 00 —, No. 3, 4 75@6 00; No. 4, 3,50@4 00. Herring, pickled, barrel, 2 00@4,50; box, 12@14.
[illegible]
FLOUR.—Penna, 5 00@5 12, extra, 5,25@5 75; [illegible]
meal, 4,87½@5 00
FRUIT.—Raisins, box, 3 10@3 37, quarter boxes, 60, Oranges, 2 25@4 00, Lemons 4 00@[illegible]
rants, 10@11 Figs, 18@20, Almonds, [illegible]
@25, hard, 12

GRAIN —Wheat, Penna red, 1,[illegible]@1 32 white, 1,35@1,45; Southern red, 1,20@1,35; Southern white, 1,40@1,50. Rye, Penna, 75@78 Southern, 63@64; Corn, yellow, 70@73, white, 68@68; Oats, Penna., 54@56; Southern, 38@39. Beans, white 2,75@3 00

GUANO.—Nothing doing. Season over

HOPS —16@20

LARD —Jersey, 8@8¾; Western, 8@9.

LUMBER.—White Pine, Susq., 14@15; Yellow Pine, Virg., 13@14; Hemlock, Lehigh, 9 00@9 50; Albany White Pine, 25@28. Shingles, cedar, M., 2,[illegible]

MOLASSES —Cuba [illegible], Port Rico, [illegible] 40; New Orleans, 43@46, Sugar House, 25@35

OILS —Olive, gallon, 1,50@1,55, Linseed 90@95; [illegible]
Sperm, winter, 1,50@1,60; spring and fall, 1,35@1,40, Lard oil, spring, 70@75, winter, 75@76; petroleum, 28@30.

PEACHES.—Dried 6@7. Pared, 11@20.

PLASTER —Ste ft, 3,25@3,37

PORK.—Mess, 12 00@[illegible], Hams, smoked, 7@9, in pickle, 5@6; Sides, 6@6½, in salt, 5@5½

POTATOES —[illegible]

RICE —[illegible]

SALT.—Liverpool in sacks, 1 10@1,15; sacks, fine, 1 60@1,92, St. Martin's, 2,25@2,31, Turk's Island, 31@32

SEEDS.—Clovereed, 4,75@5 12, Flaxseed, 1,85@2,06; Timothy, 1,70@1,75; Herd Grass, 80@90; Canary Seed [illegible]

SUGARS.—Havana, white, 10 50@11 75; yellow, 9,00@[illegible]; Manila, [illegible]; Cuba [illegible] 9 00; D. R. loaf, 11½; crushed, 12½; pulverized, 12½

WOOL.—Prime or Saxony, 55@60; American, No. 1, pulled, 56@61, Merino, 50@53.

Advertisements.

MANY EFFORTS HAVE BEEN MADE TO PRESERVE THE [illegible] by excluding the air, but all have proved unsuccessful. This difficulty has been overcome by Dodd's Air Tight PATENT EXCELSIOR. Cold air is [illegible] and a perfect preservative. In the warmest weather, and for any length of time required. Likewise, bodies may be [illegible] Sold by [illegible] Street

N. B.—Veal, Matelle and other Cutlets [illegible] the shortest notice. Harness and carriages of the best quality. Lots, half lots, and single graves, in the different cemeteries, also carefully cut in Marble Work to order; one, two, three, or four hundred feet, and [illegible] and by Dodd & Co., No. 232 North Second Street. Price, 25 cents

DR. J. GOODWILLIE,
DENTIST
311 South Eleventh Street, below Spruce,
PHILADELPHIA.

SUPERIOR FRENCH CONFECTIONS,
[illegible] TIFUL ASSORTMENT [illegible] INSTANT ST.,
Put up neatly in 1 & 2 lb papier boxes, without extra charge. Also, A LARGE VARIETY OF RICH BONBONS, suitable for [illegible] A FULL LINE OF [illegible] always on hand.
A. THILNEY, 1307 Chestnut St.
Dec 1-6m

PIANOS & MELODEONS.
The largest, most elegant and cheapest stock in America, and on the most reasonable terms
All instruments sold warranted 5 years and guaranteed for two years.
J. E. GOULD,
7th and Chestnut sts. Philadelphia.

ESTABLISHED IN 1796
McALLISTER AND BROTHER,
OPTICIANS,
No. 728 Chestnut Street,
PHILADELPHIA,
Nearly Opposite Masonic Hall,
(Lately removed from the 1st Stand, Chestnut St., above Second.)
Spectacles, Mathematical Instruments, Spy-Glasses, Philosophical Apparatus, Opera-glasses, Thermometers Microscopes, and Microscopic Objects, Tape Measures, Photos Prints, Magic Lanterns, Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Pictures. Gold Watches, Jewelry and Silver Ware.
Their price list and Illustrated Catalogue furnished on application, and sent by Mail, Free of Charge. 6y!

JOHN COCHRAN & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
Hosiery, Gloves and Fancy Dry Goods,
NO. 13 NORTH FOURTH ST., ABOVE MARKET,
PHILADELPHIA.
Ribbons and White Goods, Undershirts and Drawers, Embroideries and Handkerchiefs, Watches and Jewelry, Combs, Brushes, &c.

CATECHISMS PUBLISHED BY THE U P BOARD OF PUBLICATION.
Kept constantly on sale by Wm S Pentland, bookseller, 23 North Fifth Street, Philadelphia at the following low rates for cash
Brown's catechism for young children, 75 cents per 100. (If mailed 12 cents more.)
Brown's catechism in German, [illegible]
[illegible] per 100; per dz one, 12 cents. (If mailed, 10 cents more.)
The Assembly's Shorter Catechism, per 100, eighty cents. (If mailed, 85 cents more.)
[illegible] Congregational Catechism, per 100, [illegible] per dz [illegible]
[illegible] Proof Catechism
Texts with proofs in words at length, per 100 $2,50. (If mailed, 67 cents more.) per dozen, 30 cents (If mailed, 11 cents more.)
The New Proof Catechism, being the Assembly's Shorter Catechism with Scripture Proofs, Explanatory Notes and Hymns, pp 70, 75 cents per dozen (If mailed, 16 cents more.) [illegible]
mail post paid, 9 cents. Of this Catechism, the editors of the Evangelical Repository say "We are very highly pleased with this pamphlet of one Board. We are sure it will be a favorite with parents of the kind which has appeared. It should go by dozens into every Sabbath School."
Patterson on the Shorter Catechism, per dozen, $2,50. (If mailed, 60 cents more.) Single copy, 25 cents. (If mailed, 7 cents more.)
Also, the following Catechisms, published by others:
Boyle's Explanation of the Shorter Catechism, with the Scripture Proofs in words at length; $1,50 per dozen (If mailed, 36 cents more.) Single copy, manual free, 10 cents.
Mc Leod's Catechism, per dozen, 25 cents. If mailed, 10 cents more.) Single copy, mailed free, 5 cents
Watson's Young Communicant's Catechism, 25 cents per dozen; mailed free. Single copy by mail free, 3 cents
Thompson's Young Communicant's Catechism, 30 cents per dozen; mailed free. Single copy by mail free, 4 cents.
Also, Alexander's Words to Young Communicants, 25 cents. Bridges on [illegible] (5 cents more.) Boyce's Communicant's Companion, 30 cents. Single copy, (if mailed, 11 cents more.)
[illegible] Please remember this for reference. Orders are respectfully solicited from congregations for all of the above.
WM S RENTON, Bookseller and Importer, mp1 28 North Sixth St., Philada.

TO THE READERS OF THE CHRISTIAN INSTRUCTOR.

A CARD.

Having been appointed by the [illegible] proceedings to obtain CLERGYMEN'S DARK CLOTHING AT MODERATE PRICES, and finding that many gentlemen would prefer their clothing MADE TO ORDER if they could procure it at the same time REALLY FIRST-CLASS STYLES, and at REALLY REASONABLE PRICES, we have, at the earnest solicitation of our patrons, organized, in connection with our extensive Ready Made Sales-Rooms, a complete CUSTOM DEPARTMENT, in which the prominent features are, [illegible]
All PRICES FAR LOWER THAN HAS BEEN CUSTOMARY.
A corps of the most celebrated cutters in this country
An extensive assortment of the choicest imported and domestic fabrics from the New York and Philadelphia markets, suitable for [illegible]
In our Ready Made Sales Rooms you always be found every variety and style of well made fashionable clothing. Spring stock now ready. [illegible]
Gents' visit is solicited
WANAMAKER & BROWN,
MERCHANT TAILORS AND CLOTHIERS,
"OAK HALL,"
S E Corner SIXTH AND MARKET STREETS
ap 20-42 JAMES FERGUSON, Salesman

1862 1862
THE PENNSYLVANIA CENTRAL RAILROAD.
THE GREAT DOUBLE TRACK ROUTE
THE CAPACITY OF THE ROAD IS NOW EQUAL TO ANY IN THE COUNTRY
THE GREAT SHORT LINE TO THE WEST
[illegible] A M
Pacific Train " [illegible] 11.30 A M
Express Train " [illegible] 10.30 P M
Harrisburg Accommodation leaves Philadelphia at [illegible] 5.40 P M
Harrisburg " " " [illegible] 2.00 P M
Lancaster " " " [illegible] 10.00 P M
Trains for West [illegible] at 8 45 A M, at 12 noon, and at 5 P M
Fare to Pittsburg [illegible]
Fare to Harrisburg [illegible]
Fare to Lancaster [illegible]
Fare to Columbia [illegible]
Fare to Reading [illegible]
Fare to Norristown [illegible]
Fare to Manayunk [illegible]
Fare to Germantown [illegible]
Fare to Chestnut Hill [illegible]
Fare to Fort Washington [illegible]
Fare to Jenkintown [illegible]
Fare to Willow Grove [illegible]
Fare to Hatboro [illegible]
Fare to Doylestown [illegible]
Fare to Newtown [illegible]
Fare to Langhorne [illegible]
Fare to Bristol [illegible]
Fare to Morrisville [illegible]
Fare to Trenton [illegible]
Fare to Bordentown [illegible]
Fare to Burlington [illegible]
Fare to Florence [illegible]
Fare to Beverly [illegible]
Fare to Delanco [illegible]
Fare to Riverside [illegible]
Fare to Riverton [illegible]
Fare to Palmyra [illegible]
Fare to Edgewater Park [illegible]
Fare to Cinnaminson [illegible]
Fare to Delaware

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Published by the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, for the Dissemination of Religion, Morality, Literature and Science.

Rev. Elisha Weaver, Editor. PHILADELPHIA, SEPTEMBER 13, 1862. Vol. II.—No. 37.—New Series.—Whole No. 88.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

Is published every Saturday on behalf of the

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,

BY

REV. ELISHA WEAVER,

General Book Steward,

No 619 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

[illegible] TERMS.

[illegible] Single copies five cents.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

[illegible] Cards or Advertisements, [illegible]

CORRESPONDING EDITORS OF CHRISTIAN RECORDER

Rev J. P. CAMPBELL, Rev. A. W. WAYMAN

" J. M. WILLIAMS, " B. T. WILLIAMS,

" G. H. GRAHAM, " C. BURCH.

Rev. L. ROSS.

Poetry.

WATCH, MOTHER, WATCH!

Mother, watch the little feet
Climbing o'er the garden wall,
Bounding through the busy street,
Ranging cellar, shed, and hall.
Never count the moments lost,
Never mind the time it costs
Little feet will go astray;
Guide them, mother, while you may

Mother, watch the little hand
Picking berries by the way,
Making bonnets in the sand,
Tossing up the fragrant hay.
Never rise to question ask,
"Why to me the weary task?"
These same little hands may prove
Messengers of light and love.

Mother, watch the little tongue
Prattling eloquent and wild,
What is said and what is sung
By the happy, joyous child;
Catch the word while yet unspoken,
Simple lore before the broken
This same tongue may yet proclaim
Blessings in a Saviour's name.

Mother, watch the little heart
Beating out and warm for sin;
Wholesome lessons now impart.
Keep, Oh, keep that young heart true:
Extirpating every weed,
Sowing good and precious seed,
Harvest rich then you may see
Ripening for eternity.

THE FUTURE OF THE COLORED RACE IN AMERICA.

At the request of a highly esteemed friend, we give below an extract from an article on the above subject in the Presb. Quarterly Review. The argument is, that by the attractions of the just developing resources of Africa, we may look for emigration as marked as that to California or Australia.

Taking it for granted, then, that a great change is about to take place in the social state of the South, and taking it for granted that slavery on which it is based must, under the pressure of the forces which are bearing upon it, pass sooner or later away, a point which we are not disposed just now to consider even debatable, a great question comes up, What shall be the future condition of the colored race in this land? How shall the problem be solved? What shall be done with the slave? Hasty and inconsiderate persons may find ready answers, but it seems to us that just now there is no question of so great intricacy, and certainly no one of equal moment to which an American can address himself. We propose in the remainder of this article to discuss it. It is not a subject on which it is well to dogmatize; we have learned that there is room for a very wide diversity of opinion; the most that any one can hope to do is by discussion to endeavour to elicit light. After all, the Providence of God will do the work; it is for us to be abreast of that Providence, ready to accept the trust and do the work which it assigns us.

We have dwelt thus long on the causes, and what we consider to be the true meaning of the war, because only by a right apprehension of them can we be prepared to deal with this great question. Those who are at the head of the government appreciate it most fully, and the President in his message frankly intimates that the only true hope of a lasting settlement of our national difficulties must be found in the ultimate emancipation of the blacks. But aware of the objections which must arise to the setting free of four millions of slaves and their remaining in the country, he proposes that a system of colonization shall be inaugurated by which they may be removed. Emancipation with colonization in lands provided for the freed slaves, is the scheme.

Without dealing with this proposition of the President in detail, let us look at the state of the case, and ask, Is colonization possible; and if possible, is it necessary, or even desirable? By colonization we mean, of course, the removal or deportation of the blacks to another country. We do not mean emigration; that is an entirely different thing.

We may ask at the outset, Have we a right to send out of the country the emancipated slaves? However it may have failed to be his country, this is his home, and by what law of morality shall you compel him to abandon not only his, but his father's and his ancestors' home? It is his by a line of descent stretching, in most cases, far back of theirs who talk so glibly of his colonization: and after, by a great act of justice, you have raised him from chattelhood into citizenship, and have given him a country, by what rule of right do you propose at the same time to banish him from it? A right-minded man will hesitate before he leaves the feelings of four millions of hearts out of his calculations. It is, we think, an element somewhat to be considered, and yet one utterly ignored by the most of those who talk on this subject. If it be answered, the colonization is to be voluntary, they only going who choose to go, we have only to say that that is not the true meaning of the term, nor what is by common consent understood by it. If merely emigration is intended, and it is made no part of the scheme of emancipation, the case is altered radically. But of this more by and by.

On the passage of the slaves out of the freedmen, a thoughtful man will have many doubts. The shipment of the natural increase for one year of our present slave population, sixty thousand, (60,000,) would tax the energies and resources of the nation to an extent which they who talk of it have not very fully measured. And then the original 4,000,000 to advocate the removal of the colored race from this country, we recommend a matter-of-fact calculation in ships and money and time. It will be both interesting and profitable; possibly it will impart some new ideas on the matter. For ourselves, we may say that we deem the proposition for the deportation of a race of four millions with a yearly increase of [illegible] of the emptiest that a sane man cares to entertain. The history of the race has never known [illegible] tion of millions, but the sending of them, never.

But passing this, is the colonization of the [illegible] necessary? For the entering upon a work so gigantic, even were it possible, there ought to be [illegible] and pressing. Mere opinions, theories, or prejudices, will not be sufficient; the demand for it must be made to appear with sunlight clearness.

What are these reasons? To us it does not seem easy to exhibit them. It is easy to declaim about the inferiority of the race, the impossibility of their ever living on an equality with the white race, their lack of ability to support themselves, and the like, but in the end it is very difficult to perceive the logical consecutiveness of the argument. The inferiority of a race can hardly be shown to be a valid reason for its banishment from the presence of the superior, and by its power; the inability of a people to care for or to elevate themselves, does not seem a precisely good argument for sending them to a new land, and to a naked dependence on their own resources; the invincible prejudice of the white does not at once give a very potent, at least a very just reason why the black should be expatriated.

We will not assert it, but there is good cause to suspect that while in the minds of perhaps the majority of those who for a few years past have been active supporters of the colonization scheme, the good of the black and of Africa have been prominent motives, yet it had its birth and its chief support in the way in which it bore upon the interests of slavery. The presence of free blacks among slaves is an element of weakness in the system, and though it may not have been openly avowed, yet there is too much reason to suspect that colonization was intended vastly more for them than for freed slaves. It was a scheme to strengthen slavery, and it ceased to elicit sympathy or generous support as soon as it appeared to give no promise of that result.

Asking the reasons for colonization, we apprehend that when the argument is pressed, it will be found to terminate, if on any thing substantial, upon the benefit which it will confer on the black race. Without volunteering the details of that argument, which, indeed, we do not profess to see clearly, we may say that there is at least a preliminary question, whether or not that end cannot be better attained without colonization than with it? Is it not possible better to elevate and do good to the colored race in this than in any other land to which they may be sent?

But we are writing coolly, as if this were an open question whether the four millions of blacks are to remain for many years to come in this country or not. It is no open question. They are here, and here they must remain for a period which no man is competent to limit, even in his argument. They cannot, or to speak mildly, they will not be transported across the sea or to any foreign land. They may eventually, as we shall endeavour to suggest, go, but they cannot be sent away. In this assertion, we leave the inclinations and the will of the black man out of the question. There are reasons which must operate on the side of the white to make it impossible. The colored race is necessary, and will be so for a period indefinitely long, to the southern country. It constitutes its labor; it is the productive force of that land; it has been for the past two hundred years. It is the foundation element of the whole social state. Now by what power shall there be a speedy removal of the whole labor of a country? How shall the entire producing element be suddenly abstracted? Were that possible to be done, the whole state would plunge at once into poverty and ruin. Once or twice the experiment has been tried, in historic times, of banishing or destroying a producing element of a state, and though done on a comparatively small scale, the results are sufficiently marked to teach all after time. Spain did it when she drove the Moors from her Castilian lands. France did it when she murdered and banished the Huguenots, and they both have scarcely, after two and three centuries, recovered from the shock and the ruin.

But we need not spend our space in discussing the point. However any one may deem the colonization of the whole colored race desirable, still it will remain an impossibility; there are natural and economic forces which would be omnipotent to prevent it. They are needed here, and where a race is needed, there, in this age of the world, it will abide. There is work to be done; they can do it, they have done it; there is no one else at present to take their place, and so a power above wishes, prejudice, or argument, holds them here—the power of an economic necessity.

The colored race is here, here for a long time it will remain; it will not—the events bewildering us by their rapid march all point one way—it will not remain in slavery; it will and must by-and-by be free. We, as an American people, must accept this double truth with all its difficulties and perplexities; we must like men, in God's fear and with many a cry for his help, bravely deal with it. We need not now go back and stand sighing over the past, and mourning that we did not a century ago meet it and escape the mighty work and sorrow of to-day; we cannot put it away any longer; the great questions rise up before us with a menace upon their brow; they demand and they will have an answer now, to-day. No scheme of deportation or colonization shall open any easy door of escape; let no man console himself that the question of emancipation is to be solved by any such short and simple process; here on this continent, within the borders of these States, slavery has done its work, and just here freedom is to have her greatest and most glorious triumph. This American State has given some examples to history, it has given some demonstrations of the power of free institutions for the white, it is giving to-day its [illegible] that it will yet give to the world a more glorious, because more difficult, demonstration of the same power in the black race? What if it should remain, for it, after having completed its work for the one, it should crown it in the other, by lifting it from deepest slavery, and by self-sacrifice and toil make it a bl[illegible] ing to the world! So we believe it will yet be. The way is not clear now, the people do not see their work: but by-and-by it will of itself be before them, and they will address themselves to it, bringing every quickened power which marks them among the nations, and, under God, they will complete it.

How it shall be done we do not feel competent to intimate, and it was not the purpose of this paper to attempt to indicate. No man, perhaps, is sufficient for that. The Providence of God we believe will mark the path, and events will hurry us if we be ready to follow them in the right line of the work.

There are some things, however, which may be said that may possibly cast some light upon the supposed difficulties of the matter of emancipation without colonization. These difficulties, we think, arise in many cases from a mistaken estimate of the negro character and capabilities.

It is not our design to enter upon the question of the inferiority of the race or the impossibility of its ever living on an equality with the white; while we are not ready to grant the first, certainly not to the extent to which it is pushed, we are disposed to believe the latter. It is doubtful, we are inclined to believe it impossible, that the two races can ever on this continent abide on terms of social equality. We are, too, inclined to believe that this country is not to be the ultimate home of the colored race. It will go out from it. We think that there is that in the character of the African race which makes this probable, perhaps certain. In the strange workings of Divine Providence this race has in a marvellous manner been brought to this land, and put under a tutelage for a great future, and that Africa, its home, may become the recipient of blessings, the foundation and preparation for which were made in this country. The bondage of the Israelites in Egypt was not an accident, but a divinely ordered procedure, which had a striking bearing upon the character of the Jew and shaped his whole after history. It was a work of preparation, and it was not done in a short time, but took two or three centuries to be brought to perfection. American slavery, like this Egyptian bondage, will have its results on the future of Africa.

In saying this, of course no reader will suppose that there is in the thought a justification of slavery, any more than when speaking of the great benefits which flowed from the bondage in Egypt to the Jew, we justify the selling of Joseph, or the tyranny of Pharaoh. It is God's wonderful work to bring the greatest good out of the deepest evils; the Fall to issue in Redemption.

It is impossible to foresee the future of the black people in this country without immediately tracing it back into connection with the future of Africa. The one is closely connected with the other. The [illegible] Providences are synchronous. How wonderfully events are prepared in distant places, that they may be brought together at the appointed moment! The fact that at just the time when the great and absorbing questions which relate to this people in our own land are forcing themselves upon our attention, the continent of Africa is presenting more of interest in the way of discovery and travel than any other portion of the earth, has, we think, a meaning.

Geographical research has almost exhausted other lands, while here almost a continent, at least till within a few years, has remained unexplored. This has not been because no efforts have been made to break through the thick veil that has always hung over it. Travellers have been unceasing in their attempts to penetrate into the interior, and have failed, not from want of energy, but because of the insuperable difficulties in the way. If they have escaped this death, and pressed towards the interior, it has been only to fall victims to savage beasts or more savage men. So that African exploration has been, until perhaps within the last fifteen years, a history of melancholy disaster and sacrifice of valuable life.

Of late, new and marked success has crowned the efforts made to lay open this continent to the knowledge of the world. What has been accomplished will strike with surprise any one whose attention has not before been called to the facts of the case. Let the reader take a well prepared map of to-day and compare it with that from which he studied his lessons a score of years ago. He will remember how simple and easy to be remembered was the information to be conveyed by that wide and lightly-colored track which bore the words, "Unexplored Regions." It embraced the largest portion of the whole continent. But this has been encroached upon year after year, on the South by Livingstone and Cumming, on the North by Barth, on the East by Barton, and on the West by Wilson and Du Chaillu, until the discoveries have almost touched each other. Wide stretches of thousands of miles, given up hitherto in the thoughts of men to perpetual desolation and drought, have been shown to hold vast inland seas, deep navigable rivers, and to be teeming with animal life, populous with men and fruitful of all the products of tropical luxuriance. So Africa begins to be known; by-and-by it will be opened up, made ready, we think, to link its history with a people on the other side of the ocean.

Leaving the point as proved, that the blacks are to remain, at least for an indefinite period in this country, we do not say that it will be forever, but of this we shall speak in another place,) we naturally ask whether there is any thing in the African character that is possible of future progress and elevation. We answer unhesitatingly, there are natural characteristics which will in a very marked and peculiar way be a means of their speedier rise.

It has been the misfortune, if so we may call it, of the African continent and the African people, to present their worst and most repulsive aspects first. This is the case with the country. The coast to which the voyager comes, for the most part lies low, and everywhere in its teeming bottoms disease and death are lurking. If he escapes the one he never avoids the other. The "African Fever" on the West Coast is the certain welcome of the new comer, the only question is whether he will survive it. The incidental mention which the missionary traveller, Livingstone, makes of his thirty-seventh attack of fever, and Du Chaillu of his fiftieth, and the exhaustion of the last of fourteen ounces of quinine which he had taken on his journey, are omnions of the inhospitable reception which the country gives. But as soon as the traveller passes inland he comes into an entirely different region. Towering mountains, snow-capped and forest-crowned rise before him, and down through their passes healthful and bracing winds are blowing, wide champaigns already full of uncultivated fruitfulness, grass and [illegible] tracts, which nature seems to exult in filling with animal life, in its most beautiful, as well as gigantic and ferocious forms, everywhere appear. While at first it would seem as if here were a continent capable of doing little or nothing for the world, fit only to give, as in the past, a little indigo, ivory, and palm oil, borne on the backs of degraded natives to the coast, we find that it is in reality a continent already producing unassisted harvests of cotton and sugar, and some of the products most necessary to man, and only needing that development which Christian civilization can give, but has never given, to bring it into the closest sympathy, and for good, with the rest of the world.

What is true of the African continent has been emphatically true of the people. The world has always seen the African race in its lowest form. This seems true as far back as Egyptian monumental times. One is struck, when looking at copies of ancient hieroglyphics, with the degraded type of negro features which always appears when these captive people are delineated. The African race seems to have been fated to be always represented by a slave, and, as was inevitable, it has been judged by the example seen. But the researches of travellers have, of late, compelled us to reverse many, if not all these conceptions. Africa, gives us, indeed, perhaps the lowest types of humanity in the Bushman* or Hottentot, yet the explorations of travellers have also shown these are not the true and normal examples of the African stock.

It can readily be seen that wherever the African character is measured by the standard of an African slave, the judgment must necessarily be an erroneous one. The best tribes are not, in the nature of things, those out of which slaves are made. The bolder, more energetic and intelligent are those who make slaves. War and conquest are the fruitful sources of slavery; they have been in all ages, and in every country, and are so to-day in Africa. But the abler tribes are the warriors and the conquerors, while the weaker and the lower are the captives. Thus at the outset the slave declares by the fact of his servitude his inferiority of lineage.

To this we are also to add the pretty well-known fact that the poorest of these captives are those who come into the hands of the slave-dealer on the coast, while the better made and the more intelligent are reserved for the service of their captors. Thus, with this further reduction, you have in the African as he comes to the slave-ship, the lowest specimen of the [illegible] people. But even these have been [illegible] of the African coast and country, [illegible] but even a cursory view that a [illegible] should be [illegible] [illegible] which [illegible] negro family.

What we would infer, the explorations of recent travellers show to be actually the case. Within the limits of a single article such as this, it is of course impossible to traverse the whole ground. We might, however, refer to the Caffres in the south, close upon the regions where the Hottentot is found, a race of stalwart and noble men, who have had skill and bravery enough to resist the power of the Dutch, and even to wage a determined war with the English power itself. To the east of these, Dr. Lindley, one of the missionaries of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, found tribes among whom he lived for a quarter of a century, and whom he describes as being physically inferior to no race, the men in some districts averaging nearly six feet in height. "They might be called stupid," says Livingstone, (page 21,) speaking of Bakwains, a people with whom he was much associated in South Africa, in "matters which had not come within the sphere of their own observation, but in other things they showed more intelligence than is to be met with in our own uneducated peasantry." Two of the missionaries of the American Board, Messrs. Preston and Adams, speaking (Missionary Herald, 1858,) of a visit to the Pangwees, a very extensive tribe of people living just under the Equator and back from the coast, and who are described by other writers as an every way superior race, tell us of natives whom they saw from places still farther inland "which we had heard of, but as yet had been unable to reach." "The variety," say they, "of complexion presented to us was quite an object of curiosity. Some were of a jet black, others with their braids of soft, black hair, one and a half, or two feet in length, might be easily mistaken for quadroons." The New American Encyclopedia treating of the Mandingoes, a West African race, says: "They are remarkable for their industry and energy. They are mostly Mohammedans. The principal trade of that part of West Africa which lies between the equator and the great desert is in their hands. They are not only active and shrewd merchants, but industrious agriculturists, and breeders of good stock of cattle, sheep and goats. They are black in color, tall, well-shaped, with regular features and wooly hair. In character they are amiable, hospitable, imaginative, credulous, truthful, fond of music, dancing and poetry. They are adventurous travellers, extending their commercial journeys over a greater part of Africa. The Mandingoes are the most numerous race of West Africa, and have spread themselves to a great distance from their original seat, being found all over the valleys of the Gambia, Senegal and Niger." Such quotations and testimonies might be multiplied, were it necessary, but enough have been exhibited to demonstrate the fact that there are superior races of men in Africa, that these are even the characteristic races of the continent. Every new discovery exhibits this more clearly. The negro as he has been seen in the slave transported to other countries is no true type of the African man, but the continent is peopled by races capable of high attainments and indefinite civilization.

Though the negro of this country may not be of the best races of Africa, yet he is not of the worst, and as we shall have occasion to remark, he has had influences exerted, both as to race and character which much more than compensate for any possible inferiority of descent. We may fairly take the estimate of the native African as we find him at his best estate at home, and build a promise of the future of the African here upon it.

The African character has its own marked and distinctive peculiarities. It is tropical. It has passion deep and pervasive, slumbering within a rounded form and in deep dreamy eyes. It is ductile and plastic, ready to receive impressions and to be shaped by them. It does not possess the hard, aggressive features of the character of the tribes of Northern Europe; it does not seek by conquest to extend its power, or to mould other people to its form. It is adapted to receive rather than to give. It is therefore essentially imitative. From this comes the rapidity with which it [illegible] favorable influences, the African advances in civilization. Wherever these influences are numerous and powerful enough to be the most prominent, the negro yields to them with marvellous rapidity.

There is, perhaps, no race that gives up so readily and fully old habits and associations. We find no granite formations of character underlying the race, such as are met with in the tribes and peoples of Asia. Compare, for instance the plastic mobility of the Pangwee and Bakwain with the rigidity of the Hindu or Chinese. Or where the case may be seen in even a more striking way, compare the African negro with the American Indian; take the one from his tropical wilds, the other from his forest home, and place them both under the same civilizing influences, and where at the end of a fixed period will you find them? In a single generation the one is nearly at your side, the other is simply a savage still.

The rapid rise of the negro race in the West India Islands, Jamaica, for example, when made free by the British Government, is a very striking illustration, though the time has been too short to bring it out to the full. Taking all the facts as they are given us, we find the people rising almost at once, (for thirty years are usually as nothing in the life of a people,) out of the barbarism of slavery, into a nation self-supporting, self-governing to a considerable extent, moral and religious, not, indeed, in the highest degree, but still wonderfully advanced. We believe that it is without a parallel.

Together with this plastic facility the African has another which at first sight seems in flagrant contradiction:—the race has a peculiar power of resistance and permanence. It is said, probably truthfully, that no race has ever been able to abide a close contact with the Anglo-Saxon. One of two results has always followed;—either it has been swallowed up and lost as a river in an ocean, or it has gone down and been swept away. But this race has neither been absorbed nor destroyed. It has grown under the most adverse influences, and asserts itself in all its peculiar characteristics under foreign skies, and after the lapse of two centuries. The negro of America is a true African still.

This race has not greatly mingled with other races. It is, we are inclined to believe, rather a characteristic of it not to seek an amalgamation with another people, its tendency is to remain apart. We are well aware, indeed, that this is exactly contrary to the views of many who have built their opinions on popular assertions and prejudice rather than on observed facts. The assumption is that the negro desires to mingle his blood with that of the white race. The reverse is the fact. There is [illegible] which leads the negro to revolt in the [illegible] of his blood, and to regard a foreign element in it as not only not desirable, but even objectionable. This feeling does not belong simply to the negro on his own continent; it perpetuates, perhaps magnifies itself when surrounded by another people. Among them in this country a pure-blooded negro will, with lofty sarcasm, taunt the mulatto with the fact that the blood of another race is in his veins.

This feeling, which must have been noticed by any one whose observation has been extensive or intelligent enough to collect the facts, leads the race to remain by itself; and when left to its natural course, such is the result. The statistics of this country show that the free black does not and cannot mingle with the white race. No elevation or freedom can produce such an intermixture. Here and there, but so seldom as to present but perhaps a single case only in widely separated communities, there is an inter-marriage. This seeming want of inclination, coupled with a natural and insuperable repugnance on the part of the white, must ever keep the two races apart when they stand on an equal footing of freedom.

The often repeated argument against emancipation, founded on the notion that it would be necessarily followed by amalgamation, is the product of the grossest ignorance and thoughtlessness, while at the same time it betrays a shameful want of confidence in the white race itself. It surely argues no great power or stability in a people when they are not able to keep themselves from being mixed up with a confessedly inferior race. But facts point in a wholly different direction: so far from freedom promoting this intermixture, the only condition in which these two races are found mingling is where the negro is in a state of servitude. Here the process goes on freely and under the working of natural causes. The influences which on either side under other circumstances make it impossible, here become inoperative, and are overborne by other and more powerful ones. The close intimacies, beginning with infancy and extending over the whole life, destroying what under other circumstances might seem to be a natural separation; a servile desire to please on the part of the slave, lust and cupidity on the part of the master, all combine to make the blood of the two races flow in the same veins. Slavery is the source of amalgamation. The mulatto and the quadroon tell you unerringly of a present or a former servitude.

With this pliant ductility and this permanence of race, there is another striking characteristic:—the negro's attachment to place. It is probably a natural trait, but from easily perceived causes it is perhaps intensified in the case of the American negro. He loves his home and seldom goes willingly away from it, whether slave or free. The number of fugitives from bondage would be prodigiously multiplied were this feeling more easily overcome. Many a poor bondman has turned back to slavery when the hard alternative has been forced upon him to remain in it or go forever away from the familiar and dear scenes of his childhood's home. It is a necessity scarcely less powerful than death that compels him to leave them behind. The efforts which philanthropy has made to promote their colonization have met with an insuperable obstacle here, and will be compelled to contend, more or less unsuccessfully with it, till there shall be strength and education enough given the black to rise above it.

Among the many objections which have been urged against emancipation, this has been a very common one, and has had great force in the popular mind;—it will flood the Northern States with free blacks. The objection is vulgar and thoughtless. If the simple economic law of supply and demand, as powerful over men as materials, were not sufficient to keep this people where they are needed, and to prevent them from going where they are not, the love of home would be strong enough to bar such a result. The slave needs all the mighty stimulus of a prospective deliverance from slavery to induce him to leave the place of his birth, and that even is often not enough: why, then, when he has that boon in his hand, and walks the old haunts a freeman, with work requited and enough, why should he now go away to strangers and a strange land? No, the States which have meanly and disgracefully passed their laws excluding the freed black from a home within their borders, might have spared themselves the dishonor. The dreaded calamity would never have occurred. The enactments were the assumption of a gratuitous infamy.

The effect of emancipation will be the reverse of this fear. Instead of the freed slaves flocking northward, the free blacks of the North will gradually go South; in place of Northern States being overrun with the one, they will, in process of time, be stripped of the other. With slavery out of the way, the black will naturally bend his steps to the region where climate, congenial employments, habits, associations, all welcome him; he will go away from a people who do not understand him, and whose prejudices keep him down, to [illegible] a people who have grown up with him, who know him, and are better able to do him good. This consolidation of the race in one part of the land will have an important bearing on its future. Emancipation only will fully accomplish it.

MISQUOTATION.

They are the following kinds: Those which resemble Holy Writ—mere imitations; those which have additions—falsely called emendations; and [illegible] Scripture misapplied.

"God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb," is a smooth line of Sterne's. The nearest approach to it in Scripture is Isa. xxvii 8, "He stayeth his rough wind in the day of the east wind."

"In the midst of life we are in death." Common Prayer. Yet it is said the celebrated Robert Hall chose it as a text for a funeral sermon.

"Not to be wise above what is written." Used to express no low anxiety to comprehend the higher mysteries of Christianity. Has no place in the Word.

The oft-quoted phrase, "Seals to his ministry, and seals for his hire." A metaphor; whether approved or otherwise it is not Scripture.

An objectionable form is often used in prayer, "That the Spirit of the Lord would go from heart to heart, as oil from vessel to vessel." This phrase, if properly considered, would tend to lower our conceptions of the omnipresence of God, and does not convey a correct idea of the influences of Divine grace in the hearts and minds of men. It is not Scripture.

Kindness to animals is often enforced by—"The merciful man is merciful to his beast." Something like this may be found in Prov. xii 10. "A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast."

A curious [illegible] is often met with in the Old Testament Now. The [illegible] passage [illegible] "Shall a man be born [illegible]

"Iron sharpeneth iron, so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend." Prov. xvii 17; is by no means improved by the common version, "As iron sharpeneth iron, so doth the countenance of a man his friend."

"That he who runs may read," conveys a notion that the writing is so distinct that a man sees it by the wayside while he is running. That is not the lesson Scripture teaches. Hab. ii. ii. 2: "Write the vision and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth." You perceive that the reading is to be deliberate—previous to running, and in order to it.

"Owe no man any thing but love," is a mangled quotation of Rom. xiii 8: "Owe no man anything, but to love one another."

Matt. xviii 20: "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them," is often used with the addition, "and that to bless them." This is a superfluous addition, and is out in harmony with the Redeemer's promise, and when attributed to him is incorrect. It may have its origin—Exodus xx 24: "In all places where I record my name, will I come unto thee, and I will bless thee."

2 Thess iii 1: "That the Word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified," is often quoted with the addition of "run" after the words "free course."

Eph. iii. 20: God "is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we can ask or think," has often appended to it "or are at all worthy to receive," which, in this connexion, is without sense and unscriptural.

Psalm cxxx. 7, "With the Lord there is mercy, and with him is plenteous redemption," has often appended to it, "that he may be sought unto."

As to the liberties taken with the Lord's Prayer and the Apostolic Benediction, 2 Cor. xiii. 14, their name is legion, and all persons who, up to the time of reading this article, have been in the habit of digressing from the authorized version would do wisely by making sure of a better, before they do so, and not tack on the conceits their own vanity may suggest. It may be well to remember in regard to all the works of Deity—Prov. xxx 6, "Add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee."—Biblical Review.

THE FIRST ENGLISH BIBLE.

A copy of the first complete English version of the Holy Scriptures, of extreme rarity, was sold lately by Messrs. Sotheby & Wilkinson, in dispersing of the effects of the late Miss Richardson Curzon, of Ashton Hall, Yorkshire. It is entitled, "The Bible; that is the Holy Scriptures of the Olde and New Testament, faithfully and truly translated out of Douche and Latyn into Englyshe, MDXXXV. Angular Gothic letter; folio, printed in the year of our Lorde MDXXXV., and fynished the fourth daye of October." The entire volume was superintended by Miles Coverdale, but portions of it had previously undergone revision by William Tyndall and others. The present is regarded as one of the best copies extant, being quite perfect from the first chapter of Genesis to the last of Revelation, the only portions supplied being the title, address of the translator to King Henry VII., the prologue, table of the books, and the map, all of which have been admirably facsimiled by Harris; blue morocco, extra, gilt edges, by C. Lewis. A fac-simile of a letter from Miles Coverdale to Thomas, Lord Cromwell, respecting his translation, and a portrait of William Tyndall are also inserted. It was bought by Mr. Willis for £280!

COLERIDGE

"Mr. Wilson mentioned a report that Coleridge was engaged on a translation of the Faust. 'I hope it is so,' said Scott. 'Coleridge made Schiller's Wallenstein far finer than he found it, and as he will do by this. No man has all the resources of poetry in such profusion; but he cannot manage them so as to bring out any [illegible] He [illegible] with gas, which [illegible] expending itself in puffs and gleams, unless some shrewd body will clap it into a cast iron box and compel the compressed element to do itself justice. His fancy above all his contemporaries, had they been under the direction of a sound judgment and a steady will. I don't now expect a great original poem from Coleridge but he might easily make a sort of fame for himself as a poetical translator. That would be a thing completely unique and our [illegible]

Lockhart's Scott.

THE REV. SYDNEY SMITH

Of all the estimates which have been written of the genius and character of the Rev Sydney Smith, none exceeds in truthful illustration that which Earl Russell has given to the Memoirs, &c., of Thomas Moore: "(His Sydney Smith's) great delight was to produce a succession of ludicrous images: these followed each other with a rapidity that scarcely left time to laugh; he himself laughing louder, and with more enjoyment than any one. This electric contact of mirth came and went with the occasion; it cannot be repeated or reproduced. Anything would give occasion to it. For instance, having seen in the newspapers that Sir Kenne Mackintosh was come to town, he drew such a ludicrous caricature of Sir Kenne and Lady Dido, for the amusement of their namesake, that Sir James Mackintosh rolled on the floor in fits of laughter, and Sydney Smith, striding across him, exclaimed: 'Rust Justicia.' His powers of fun were, at the same time, united with the strongest and most practical common sense. So that, while he laughed away seriousness at one minute, he destroyed in the next some rooted prejudice which had braved for a thousand years the battle of reason and the breese of ridicule. The Letters of Peter Plymley bear the greatest likeness to his conversation, the description of Mr. Isaac Hawkins Brown dancing at the court of Naples, in a volcano coat, with lava buttons, and the comparison of Mr. Canning to a large blue-bottle fly, with its parasites, must resemble the pictures he raised up in social conversation. It may be averred for certain, that in this style he has never been equalled, and I do not suppose he will ever be surpassed.

Sydney, says Moore, "is, in his way, inimitable, and as a conversational wit, beats all the men I have ever met. Curran's fancy went much higher and also much lower. Sydney, in his [illegible] is unobtainable, is never vulgar."

It was for the first time learned from his daughter's book, in what poverty Sydney Smith spent many years of his life, first in London, afterwards at a Yorkshire parsonage. It was not, however, that painful kind of poverty which struggles to keep up appearances. He wholly repudiated appearances, confessed poverty, and only strove, by self-denial, frugality, and every active and economic device, to secure as much comfort for his family as could be legitimately theirs. In perfect conformity with this conduct, was that most amusing anecdote of his preparations to receive a great lady—paper lanterns on the evergreens, and wooden pegs with notices tied on to represent deer in the adjacent paddock. He delighted thus to mock pretensions. The writer has heard the following incidental anecdote of him, with regard to an over-flourishing family nouveau in a newspaper, which would have made him out to be a man of high grade in society. "We are not great people at all," said he, "we are common honest people—people that pay our bills." In the like spirit was his answer to a proposing county historian, who inquired for the Smythe arms. "The Smythes never had any arms but have always sealed their letters with their thumbs." Even with a little gleam of proper conceit, from at last to think that his family went to a carriage, observe the philosophy of his pretensions. After diligent search, I discovered in the back settlements of a York coachmaker, an ancient green chariot, supposed to have been the earliest invention of the kind. I brought it home in triumph to my admiring family. Being somewhat dilapidated, the village tailor lined it, the village blacksmith repaired it; nay, (but for Mrs. Sydney's earnest entreaties,) we believe the village painter would have exercised his genius upon the exterior; it escaped this danger, however, and the result was wonderful. Each year added to its charms, it grew younger and younger; a new wheel, a new spring; I christened it the 'Unexpected;' it was known all over the neighborhood; the village boys cheered it, and the village dogs barked at it; but 'Fiducit meæ fortunæ' was my motto, and we had no false shame."

Book of Days.

THE POWER OF SHORT WORDS

The late Professor Addison Alexander, D. D., is the author of this remarkable composition, which appeared in the Princeton Magazine:

MONOSYLLABICS

Think not that strength lies in the big round word,
Or that the loud and plain must needs be weak,
To whom can this be true who once has heard
The cry for help, the tongue that all men speak,
When want, or woe, or fear is in the throat,
So that each word gasped out is like a shriek
Pressed from the core heart, or a strange wild note,
Sung by some fay or fiend. There is a strength
Which lies in simplest tone so far, or span too fine,
Which has more height than breadth, more depth than length—
Let but the force of thought and speech be mine,
And he that will may take the sleek, fat phrase,
Which glows and burns not, though it gleam and shine—
Light, but no heat—a flash, but not a blaze!

Nor is it mere strength that the short word hints
It serves of more than fight or storm to tell,
The roar of waves that clash on rock-bound coasts,
The crash of tall trees when the wild wind's swell,
The roar of guns, the groans of men that die
On blood-stained fields. It has a voice as well
For them that far off on their sick beds lie;
For them that weep, for them to that mourn the dead;
For them that laugh, and dance, and clap the hand;
To joy's quick step, as well as grief's slow tread,
The sweet, plain words we learnt at first, keep time,
[illegible] in sad, or gay, or grand,
With each, with all, these may be made to chime,
In thought, or speech, or song, in prose or rhyme.

"MULLER'S LIFE OF TRUST."

And now as to the effect of the book. There are those who can separate the true from the false, and to such the book may be quickening and profitable. It suggests the need and the beauty of a more positive trust in God. Though the author's fancy often runs away with his reason, his heart is childlike and pure; and any one who, avoiding his errors, can catch the flow of [illegible] and feel kindled anew. But the book has fallen, and will yet fall into the hands of many whom it will seriously injure. They will not sift the little good wheat from the mass of chaff. We do not speak merely of those who seem always ready to receive any novel proposition in religion, especially if it seem devout. But there are multitudes of earnest souls that are yearning for a deeper trust in God, who, as they read this book, will fancy they may gain it in the way here laid down. They may, perhaps, conclude that they ought to live in this way. And yet they will not—partly because it is so new and strange a theory, and partly from a half conviction that it is all wrong. Such persons will be much perplexed and much hindered in their Christian course. There is nothing more damaging to Christian character than for men to resist their convictions of duty. It matters not if these con[illegible] is wounded and [illegible] it is obeyed. And of the great number who are now pointing to Muller's as an [illegible] of the life of faith we have not yet heard of one who has followed his example. All such are refusing to obey their convictions of duty. And it is because we believe that these convictions which many have formed upon reading the book, are [illegible] that we must heartily wish [illegible] the press. We have good books among [illegible] of the good this [illegible]

Boston Recorder.

Professor SEELYE, of Amherst College, has declined the professorship tendered him by the Trustees of Andover Theological Seminary, and will retain that of Mental Philosophy at Amherst

The Christian Recorder.

Philadelphia, September 13, 1862.

NOTICE

TO THE DISTRICTS OF PHILADELPHIA, NEW ENGLAND, OHIO, INDIANA, AND MISSOURI, OF THE A. M. E CHURCH MINISTERS

Dear Brethren:—As we have a number of superannuated ministers on the list in said Districts, therefore it will be expected that the ministers and preachers on their circuits and stations will do all they can to collect the two cent money, and we also recommend that the Class leaders be instructed to collect and set the amount on the Class book opposite each member's name, as also all the collections called, per Discipline, for the Annual Conference, and publish the same once every quarter, that it may be seen who they are that work for God and his cause. We think it is time to give credit to those of our people who do work, so that God's name may be glorified.

NOTICE.

On next Sunday morning, the 14th inst., at 10½ o'clock, in the Wesley A. M E Church, Hurst St., the Pastor's 11th lecture of the course, namely, "The Christian in the Grave," will be delivered.

QUARTERLY MEETING.

My Second Quarterly Meeting will be held, on Saturday and Sunday, the 20th and 21st insts., at the Macedonia Church, Camden, N. J., and the following Saturday and Sunday, the 27th and 28th insts., at Woodbury.

PETER GARDINER, Preacher in charge

QUARTERLY MEETINGS OF THE FREEHOLD CIRCUIT.

September 27th and 28th, at Fairhaven.
October 11th and 12th, at Manalapan.
October 18th and 19th, at Ricesville.
October 25th and 26th, at Freehold.
November 8th and 9th, at Englishtown.

WM. H. WINDER, Minister in charge.

A WORD.

We call the attention of our numerous readers to an article to be found in this number, under the caption of, "The Black Men in the Revolution and the War of 1812." It is a piece fraught with interest, and speaks loudly for the bravery and loyalty of black men. Let every reflecting person read this article.

THE HAYTIEN SCHEME.

We learn from our Boston correspondent that the Haytien Bureau is to be closed forthwith, and the paper stopped

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS FOR NEW AND OLD SUBSCRIBERS.

Rev. Wm. P. Quinn,	$2 00
Rev Page Tyler,	1 00
Rev. Liberty Ross,	1 00
Rev. John M. Wilkerson,	1 00
Rev. J W. Earley,	1 00
Rev. John Turner,	1 00
Rev. Wm. Winder,	5 00
Mr. Rhemus Adams,	1 00
ST. LOUIS, MO., CONTINUED
Mrs. M. D. Petiford,	1 50
Mrs. Clarinda Butler, No. 95 Ninth St.,	1 00
Mrs. Melia Chavious,	1 00
John G. Prather, No. 29 Orange St., successor to D. G. Taylor, No. 65 Lovee to John Sexton,	1 00
Geo. B. Wedley, No. 25 Sixth St.,	1 00
Rev. Wm. H. Grey,	1 00
Mrs. Mary Thomas, No. 104 Eleventh St.,	1 00
Mrs. M. E Dickson, No. 104 Eleventh St., care of Thos Boyd,	1 00
Mrs. Charlotte Rhidout, No 56 Tenth St.,	1 00
Mr. H. Turner, No. 111 Thirteenth St,
Mrs. Esther Smither, 106 North Fourth St	1 00
Mrs. Mary Jones,	1 00
John Petiford, No 68 Orange St	1 00
Mrs. Isaiah Gordon, No 111 North Thirteenth St.,	1 00
Mrs. Ellen Cole, No. 60 Orange St,	1 00
IOWA STATE.
Mrs. Deborah Pritchard,	2 00
ILLINOIS STATE.
Mrs. Letitia Johnson, to Upper Alton,
Stephen Walden, to Sparta,	1 00
Rev. M. T. Newsome, to Quincy,	75
Rev. Charles Burch, of the Indiana Conferences,

It will be seen that Bishop Quinn has paid his two dollars for the Recorder, and it is due to him to my that he is in love with the Recorder, and recommends it, wherever he goes now, as being just the paper for us; and the Conferences out West, over which he presides, take high ground in behalf of the Recorder, which this letter will show,—that not only the Bishop and members of Conference feel interested in the work, but the members and friends are, too.

Bishop Nazrey also commends the Recorder. So we are in great hopes now of the Recorder's living, since the Bishops are at work. The Lord be praised. WEAVER

THE MISSOURI ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

This Conference met Aug 28th, at 9 o'clock, P. M., in St. Paul's Chapel, St. Louis, Missouri. Bishop William Paul Quinn opened the Conference by singing the verse of the Hymn commencing,—

"Father, I dare believe thee merciful and true"

He then addressed the throne of grace. On motion of B. L. Brooks, Rev. John Turner was elected Secretary of the Conference. On motion, Conference decided to sit with open doors, and to have two sessions per day. A motion prevailed that the Bishop appoint all committees. Bishop Quinn then arose and made some remarks to the Conference, and also of the very pleasant session of the Indiana Annual Conference, &c. Conference then adjourned to meet at 9 o'clock, A. M.

Friday morning, Conference met per adjournment. Bishop Quinn in the chair. Conference was opened by singing and prayer by Bishop Nazrey. The minutes were read and approved. The Bishop took up the Discipline page 69, in relation to the financial affairs. At 12 o'clock, M., Conference adjourned to meet at 2 o'clock, P. M.

Conference met pursuant to adjournment, and proceeded to business. Nothing of much importance transpired. Conference adjourned to meet on Saturday morning at 9 o'clock, A M.

Bishop Quinn in the chair, assisted by Bishop Nazrey Conference was opened by singing and prayer by E. Weaver Minutes read and approved Conference proceeded to the unfinished business It now being 11 o'clock, Bishop Nazrey arose and gave some brief remarks in relation to the church, and his connexion with it, &c. Bishop Quinn also arose and made some remarks. Conference adjourned to meet at 2 o'clock, P M

At 2 o'clock, P M, Conference met per adjournment, and took up unfinished business The Bishop caused the transfer of Rev. M. M Clark. After the reports of the Sabbath School, the appointments were read for the Sabbath as follows:—At 10½ o'clock, A. M, Rev. Bishop Willis Nazrey, at 3 o'clock P M Rev Liberty Ross; and at 7½ o'clock in the evening, Elisha Weaver Brethren were sent to some of the other churches Conference adjourned to meet on Monday morning at 9 o'clock, A. M

Monday, September 1st, Conference met per adjournment, Bishop Quinn presiding, assisted by Rev. Bishop Nazrey. Roll called. Minutes read and approved. After the Conference had despatched some of the business, adjourned to give committees an opportunity to prepare matters for the Conference; after which Conference adjourned to meet at 2 o'clock, P M

Conference met. Bishop Quinn in the chair, assisted by Rev. Willis Nazrey. Nothing of much importance transpired. Bishop Quinn arose and made some statements in relation to the affairs of the Canadian Church and Brother Green's position, those who ordained him, &c The Bishop spoke of the deception palmed upon the church, and warned the brethren to be wide awake and guard against all such After the Bishop had made his statement, Conference adjourned to meet on Tuesday, the 2d inst

Tuesday morning, Sept. 2d, Conference met Bishop Quinn in the chair, assisted by Bishop Nazrey Conference was opened by singing and prayer. Minutes read and approved. Conference proceeded to unfinished business. The District Book Steward made his Annual Report. Several committees made their reports on Bishop Nazrey's Episcopal relation, &c The Sabbath School Report was read, which was quite encouraging. There was much peace and harmony. The General Book Steward and Editor read his report, which was received very cordially; when on motion by B. L. Brooks, the Report be received and printed in the minutes of the Conference

Wednesday morning, Sept. 3d, 1862. Conference met per adjournment. Bishop Quinn in the chair, assisted by Bishop Nazrey. Conference was opened by singing and prayer. The previous minutes were read and approved. Some several committees made their report. The Financial Committee reported the amount paid to Bishop Quinn—$110 15 cash. The Rev. John Turner offered the following preamble and resolutions, which were received and unanimously adopted:—

That, whereas, we have listened with interest and satisfaction to remarks, and the General Book Steward, therefore,

1 Resolved, That the success which has crowned the labors and efforts of our Editor and General Book Steward is impressively gratifying to us

2. Resolved, That we have the most implicit confidence in his abilities, honesty, and moral courage, believing that if he receives the assistance and encouragement due him, we will continue to have the pleasure of reading the Recorder

3. Resolved, That it shall be the duty of each preacher in his charge in this District to urge our members to pay the two-cent money; and in lieu of old members who are not able to pay, that a public collection be taken up and added to the two-cent money.

On a motion, the Conference resolved itself into the Paul Quinn Missionary Society. There were several interesting reports read to the society.

The motion for the Conference to be held in Louisville, Ky., was rescinded, and appointed to meet in St. Louis, Mo. The Conference resolved itself into the Preachers' Aid Society, and performed the business of the society, &c after which the Conference adjourned to meet Thursday morning, Sept. 4th.

Thursday morning, Sept. 4th, 1862. Conference met per adjournment. Bishop Quinn in the chair. Conference was opened by singing and prayer. Minutes read and approved. Conference attended to all the unfinished business, and at 12 o'clock, M., Bishop Quinn arose to read the appointments. After making some very interesting remarks to the brethren, congregation, &c, he caused the appointments to be read, which were as follows:—

